In DEEDS. The recitals in a deed of conveyance bind parties and privies thereto, whether in blood, estate, or law; Whart. Ev. 1039; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 23; Tayl. Ev. 119; and see 3 Ad. & E. 265; 4 Pet. 1. See ESTOPPEL. Recitals in a deed bind parties and claimants under them, but not strangers claiming by an adverse title, or those who claim by title anterior or paramount to the deed; 124 U. S. 261. Recitals of preliminary proceedings in tax deeds are not evidence of the facts recited; 61 Vt. 530; 101 N. C. 35; 69 Tex. 103.

Recitals are deemed to be made upon suggestion of the grantee; 4 Pet. 87; and are part of the title; 4 Binn. 231; they are evidence against the grantee; 58 Pa. 304; and parol evidence is not admissible to contradict them.

If the recitals of a patent nullify its granting clause, the grant falls; 104 U. S. 644. See 39 Fed. Rep. 70. If the operative parts of a deed are ambiguous, the recitals may be referred to as a key to the intention of the parties; 5 Russ. 344; but not if the operative parts are clear; 19 L. J. Q. B. 462; and the same rule applies to statutes; 4 Ch. D. 592. If they are at variance, the operative parts must be effective and the recitals ineffective, but the latter may explain ambiguities; L. R. 1 Eq. 183; in such case, in a conveyance, if the recital is clear as to what is meant and the operative parts go beyond the recitals, the conveyance must be restricted; L. R. 1 Eq. 301; 29 Ch. D. 514. See, also, 17 Q. B. D. 286. A misrecital in a deed may influence its construction; Elphinst. Interpr. of Deeds 139.

The recital of the payment of the consideration money is evidence of payment against subsequent purchasers from the same grantor; 54 Pa. 19; but not against third parties, when it is necessary for the party claiming under the deed to show full payment before receiving notice of an adverse equity; 28 Pa. 425. A deed of defeasance which professes to recite the principal debt must do so truly; Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 7, § 25. See 3 Pa. 425; 3 Ch. Cas. 101; Co. Litt. 352; Com. Dig. Faint (E 1).

In STATUTES. A mere recital in an act, whether of fact or of law, is not conclusive, unless it is clear that the legislature intended that the recital should be accepted as a fact in the case; 150 U. S. 483.

IN BONDS. The recitals in corporate bonds may constitute notice to holders of facts which will affect their rights. See 90 U. S. 434; 173 Pa. 318. One who buys bonds which recite that they are for the principal and interest of other bonds, is chargeable with notice that the former indebtedness was overdue; 154 Ill. 801. It has been held by the supreme court of the United States that recitals in county bonds prescribed by statute and subject to the determination of county officers, have been complied with; 170 U. S. 593. In that case, the court said:—"By a long series of decisions such recitals are held conclusive, in favor of a bona fide holder of bonds, that precedent conditions, prescribed by statute and subject to the determination of those county officers, have been fully complied with. For instance, whether an election has been held, whether at such an election a majority voted in favor of the issue of bonds, whether the terms of the subscription have been complied with, and matters of a kindred nature which either expressly or by necessary implication are to be determined in the first instance by the officers of the county, will in favor of a bona fide holder be conclusively presumed to have been fully performed, provided the bonds contain recitals similar to these in the bonds before us." The court applied the doctrine of the conclusive effect of such recitals not only to matters transpiring before the placing of the bonds in the hands of the trustee, such as the election, etc., but also to conditions which it was urged were to be performed subsequently to the execution, such as that the bonds should not be binding until the railway should have been so completed through the county, that a train of cars had passed over it. See, also, 92 U. S. 484; 97 id. 96; 102 id. 273; 110 id. 608; 133 id. 523; 156 id. 692; 158 id. 312; BONDS; MUNICIPAL BONDS.

IN JUDICIAL RECORDS. A recital in the record of a court imports absolute verity, and all parties thereto are estopped from denying its truth; 15 So. Rep. [Ala.] 450; and the recitals of the record of a trial court are conclusive on the parties as to the term at which a decree was rendered; and if the record is incorrect, the remedy is by a proper proceeding in the trial court to secure a correction; 35 Neb. 822.

IN PLEADING. In Equity. The decree formerly contained a recital of the pleadings. This usage is now mostly abolished, though it obtains largely in New Jersey.

At Law. Recitals of deeds or specialties bind the parties to prove them as recited; Conn. Dig. Plead. (2 W. 18); 4 East 585; 3 Den. 356; 9 Pa. 407; Hempst. 294; 18 Md. 117; see 6 Gratt. 130; and a variance in an essential matter will be fatal; 18 Conn. 395; even though the variance be trivial; Hempst. 294; 1 Chitty. Pl. 424. The rule applies to all written instruments; 7 Pa. 401; 11 Ala. n. s. 529; 1 Ind. 209; 32 Me. 233; 6 Cush. 508; 24 N. J. L. 218; 16 Ill. 495; 36 N. H. 252; not, it seems, where it is merely brought forward as evidence, and is not made the ground of action in any way; 11 Ill. 40. See 31 Me. 290.

Recitals of public statutes need not be made in an indictment or information; Dy. 155 a, 346 b; Cro. 187; 1 Wms. Saund. 135; nor in a civil action; 6 Ala. n. s. 289; 16 Me. 69; 3 N. Y. 188; but, if made, a variance in a material point will be fatal; 4 Co. 48; Cro. Car. 135; 6 Blackf. 548; Bac. Abr. Indictment ix.

Recitals of private statutes must be made; 10 Wend. 75; 1 Mo. 593; and the statutes proved by an exemplified copy unless admitted by the opposite party; Steph. Pl. 347; 10 Mass. 91; but not if a clause be inserted that it shall be taken notice of as a public act; 1 Cr. M. & R. 44, 47; 5 Blackf. 170; contra, 1 Mood & M. 421. Pleading a statute is merely stating the facts which bring a case within it, without making any mention, or taking any notice of the statute itself; 6 Ired. 352; 7 Blackf. 359. Counting upon a statute consists in making express reference to it, as by the words "against the form of the statute [or "by force of the statute"] in such case made and provided." Reciting a statute is quoting or stating its contents; Steph. Pl. 347; Gould. Pl. 44.

Recital of a record on which the action is based must be correct, and a variance in a material point will be fatal; 9 Mo. 749; 3 Paine 209; 29 Ala. n. s. 112; 80 Miss. 126; 17 Ark. 371; 19 Ill. 637; otherwise where it is offered in evidence merely; 12 Ark. 760, 766, 768.

RECITE. In a statute requiring that a sheriff's deed recite the execution, names of the parties, etc., it was held that the word recite does not mean to copy or repeat verbatim, but only to state the substance of the execution. 12 Kan. 282; 8 Ohio 128; 10 id. 433.

To state in a written instrument facts connected with its inception, or reasons for its being made. Abbott. See RECITAL.

In pleading, reciting a statute is quoting or stating its contents. Anderson; Gould. Pl. 4th ed. 46, n.

RECKLESS. Heedless, careless, rash, indifferent to consequences. 95 Ala. 412. It implies heedlessness and indifference. 139 Ill. 536.

RECKLESSNESS. An indifference whether wrong is done or not. An indifference to the rights of others. Recklessness and wantonness are stronger terms than mere or ordinary negligence. 89 Kan. 531.

RECLAIM. To demand again; to insist upon a right; as, when a defendant for a consideration received from the plaintiff has covenanted to do an act, and fails to do it, the plaintiff may bring covenant for the breach, or assumpsit to reclaim the consideration. 1 Caines 47.

RECLAIMING BILL. In Scotch Law. A petition for review of an interlocutor, pronounced in a sheriff's or other inferior court. It recites verbatim the interlocutor, and, after a written argument, ends with a prayer for the recall or alteration of the interlocutor, in whole or in part. Bell, Dict. Reclaiming Petition; Shaw, Dig. 394.

RECLAIMER (L. Fr.). To reclaim; to make a claim; to challenge.

RECOGNITION. An acknowledgment that something which has been done by one man in the name of another was done by authority of the latter. See AGENCY; RATIFICATION.

(1) The old form of real action, called an assize (q. v.). (2) The trial or hearing of an assize. Hence the jury summoned upon an assize were called recognitors.

In International Law.

As a general rule international law is not concerned with internal changes within a sovereign state. The government may change from a democracy to a republic or monarchy without any change in the identity of the state in the family of nations. But the ruler of an independent state may call upon other states and nations to recognize a new title he has assumed or new territory which he has acquired by conquest and wishes to have recognized as part of his domain, and often part of a nation separates itself from the rest by revolution and claims to be recognized as a new member of the family of nations. In the latter case the new state is never recognized until the mother country has ceased military operations against it and its government has the appearance of stability; Snow, Lect. Int. L. 28. The recognition of the independence of a revolted state is lawful only when its independence has been de facto established. See 1 Kent 25. As to recognition of belligerency, see NEUTRALITY; BELLIGERENCY; INSURGENCY.

United States Recognition of Foreign Powers. The recognition by the United States of a status of belligerency, or the recognition of the sovereignty and independence of a foreign government are political acts, not subject to judicial review and are performed by the President.

It is to be presumed, however, that when the recognition of a status of belligerency or of the independence of a revolutionary government is likely to institute a casus belli with some other foreign power, the President will be guided in a large measure by the wishes of the legislative branch. Upon the other hand, it is the proper province of the Executive to refuse to be guided by a resolution on the part of the legislature if, in his judgment, to do so would be unwise. The legislature may express its wishes or opinions, but may not command. Willoughby, Const. Law 461.

RECOGNITION OF BELLIGERENCY. See BELLIGERENCY.

RECOGNITORS. In English Law. The name by which the jurors impanelled on an assize were known. 17 S. & R. 174.

RECOGNIZANCE. An obligation of record, entered into before a court or officer duly authorized for that purpose, with a condition to do some act required by law which is therein specified. 2 Bla. Com. 341. See 49 Fed. Rep. 776; Troub. & H. Pr. 2028.

The liability of bail above in civil cases, and of the bail in all cases in criminal matters, must be evidenced by a recognizance, as the sheriff has no power to discharge upon a bail-bond being given to him in these cases. See 4 Bla. Com. 297.

The object of a recognizance is to secure the presence of the defendant to perform or suffer the judgment of the court. In some of the United States, however, this distinction is not observed, but bail in the form of a bail-bond is filed with the officer, which is at once bail below and above, being conditioned that the party shall appear and answer to the plaintiff in the suit, and abide the judgment of the court.

In civil cases they are entered into by bail, conditioned that they will pay the debt, interest, and costs recovered by the plaintiff under certain contingencies, and for other purposes under statutes.

In criminal cases they are either that the party shall appear before the proper court to answer to such charges as are or shall be made against him, that he shall keep the peace or be of good behavior. The presence of witnesses may also be secured in the same manner; 6 Hill 506.

Who may take. In civil cases recognizances are generally taken by the court; 15 Vt. 9; 7 Blackf. 221; or by some judge of the court in chambers, though other magistrates may be authorized therefor by statute, and are in many of the states; 6 Whart. 359; 4 Humphr. 213. See 2 Dev. 555; 3 Gratt. 82.

In criminal cases the judges of the various courts of criminal jurisdiction and justices of the peace may take recognizances; 6 Ohio 251; 19 Pick. 127; 14 Conn. 206; 6 Blackf. 284, 315; 18 Miss. 626; 26 Ala. n. s. 81; 3 Mich. 42; see 2 Curt. C. C. 41; 44 La. Ann. 905; the sheriff, in some cases; 5 Ark. 265; 11 Ala. 676; but in case of capital crimes the power is restricted usually to the court of supreme jurisdiction. See BAIL.

In cases where a magistrate has the power to take recognizances it is his duty to do so, exercising a judicial discretion, however; 7 Blackf. 611. In form it is a short memorandum on the record, made by the court, judge, or magistrate having authority, which need not be signed by the party to be found; 5 S. & R. 147; 9 Mass. 520; 4 Vt. 488; 1 Dana 523; 6 Ala. 465; 2 Wash. C. C. 422; 6 Yerg. 354. It is to be returned to the court having jurisdiction of the offence charged, in all cases; 7 Leigh 871; 9 Conn. 350; 4 Wend. 887; 14 Vt. 64. See 27 Me. 179.

Discharge and excuse under. A surrender of the defendant at any time anterior to a fixed period after the sheriff's return of non est to a ca. sa., or taking the defendant on a ca. sa.; 1 Hawks 51; 6 Johns. 97; discharges the bail (see FIXING BAIL); Arch. Cr. P. by Poin. 184; as does the death of the defendant before the return of non est; Bish. Cr. Proc. 204; 1 N. & M.C. 251; 8 Conn. 84; see 14 Daly 333; or a loss of custody and control by act of government or of law without fault of the bail prior to being fixed; 3 Dev. 157; 18 Johns. 335; 5 Metc. Mass. 380; 2 Ga. 83; 14 Gratt. 698; see 8 Mass. 264; 5 Sneed 629; 2 Wash. C. C. 464; including imprisonment for life or for a long term of years in another state; 18 Johns. 35; 6 Cow. 599; but not voluntary enlistment; 11 Mass. 140, 284; or long delay in proceeding against bail; 2 Mass. 485; 1 Root 428; see 4 Johns. 478; or a discharge of the principal under the bankrupt or insolvent laws of the state; 2 Bail. 492; 1 Harr. & J. 101, 156; 21 Wend. 670; 1 Mass. 292; 1 Harr. Del. 367, 466; 1 McLean 226; 1 Gill 259; and see, also, 2 Pa. 492; and, of course, performance of the conditions of the recognizance by the defendant, discharges the bail. And see BAIL-BOND; FIXING BAIL.

The formal mode of noting a discharge is by entering an exoneration; 5 Binn. 332; 1 Johns. Cas. 329; 2 id. 101, 220; 7 Conn. 439; 1 Gill 526; 2 Ga. 331. A culprit giving a recognizance to appear to an indictment, and not to depart from the court without leave, is not discharged from his obligation, nor is his surety thereon, by the quashing of the indictment; 54 N. J. L. 393.

The remedy upon a recognizance is by means of a scire facias against the bail; 1 H. & G. Md. 154; 1 Ala. 34; 7 T. B. Monr. 130; 4 Bibb Ky. 181; 7 Leigh 371; 4 Ia. 289; 3 Blackf. 344; 6 Halst. 124; 19 Pick. 127; 2 Harr. N. J. 440; or by suit, in some cases; 13 Wend. 33; 5 Ark. 091; 14 Conn. 329. A surety on a recognizance may defend by showing the invalidity of the indictment against his principal; 78 Ga. 188; contra, 25 Tex. App. 351.

Without notice to the principal, a recognizance cannot be legally amended against objection of the sureties; 28 Tex. App. 28.

It is indispensable to a legal default and declaration of forfeiture of a recognizance, that the principal in the recognizance should have been regularly called, and, upon such call, failed to appear; 24 Ill. App. 72. See SURETYSHIP; SUBROGATION.

RECOGNIZE. To try; to examine in order to determine the truth of a matter. 3 Sharaw. Bla. Com. App. No. III. § 4; Bracton 179.

To enter into a recognizance.

RECOGNIZEE. He for whose use a recognizance has been taken.

RECOGNIZOR. He who enters into a recognizance.

RECOLEMENT. In French Law. The reading and re-examination by a witness of a deposition, and his persistence in the same, or his making such alteration as his better recollection may enable him to do after having read his deposition. Without such re-examination the deposition is void. Pothier, Procéd. Cr. s. 4, art. 4.

RECOLLECTION. Discovery—Distinction. "Recollection" is not "discovery." The former deals with the known; the latter with the unknown. A want of recollection of a fact which, by due attention, might have been remembered, cannot be a reasonable ground for granting a new trial; for want of "recollection" may always be pretended, and may be hard to disprove. 49 S. W. 340.

RECOMMEND. As Used in Will. The word "recommend" as used in a will is considered sufficient to raise a trust where the subject and object are sufficiently certain. 78 Ky. 128.

RECOMMENDATION. The giving to a person a favorable character of another.

When the party giving the character has acted in good faith, he is not responsible for the injury which a third person, to whom such recommendation was given, may have sustained in consequence of it, although he was mistaken.

But when the recommendation is knowingly untrue, and an injury is sustained, the party recommending is civilly responsible for damages; 3 Term 51; 7 Cra. 69; 7 Wend. 1; 14 id. 126; 6 Pa. 310; whether it was done merely for the purpose of benefiting the party recommended or the party who gives the recommendation. See PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

And in case the party recommended was a debtor to the one recommending, and it was agreed, prior to the transaction, that the former should, out of the property to be obtained by the recommendation, be paid, or in case of any other species of collusion to cheat the person to whom the credit is given, they may both be criminally prosecuted for the conspiracy. See CHARACTER; Fell. Guar. c. 8; 6 Johns. 181; 18 id. 224; 1 Day 22; 5 Mart. La. N. s. 443.

RECOMMENDATION, LETTER OF. See CLEARANCE CARD.

RECOMPENSATION. In Scotch Law. An allegation by the plaintiff of compensation on his part made in answer to a compensation or set-off pleaded by the defendant in answer to the plaintiff's demand.

RECOMPENSE. A reward for services; remuneration for goods or other property.

In maritime law there is a distinction between recompense and restitution. When goods have been lost by jettison, if at any subsequent period of the voyage the remainder of the cargo be lost, the owner of the goods lost by jettison cannot claim restitution from the owners of the other goods; but in the case of expenses incurred with a view to the general benefit, it is clear that they ought to be made good to the party, whether he be an agent employed by the master in a foreign port, or the ship-owner himself.

RECOMPENSE OF RECOVERY IN VALUE. A phrase applied to the matter recovered in a common recovery, after the vouchee has disappeared and judgment is given for the demandant. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2093.

RECONCILE. While etymologically not synonymous with "harmonize," reconcile is so nearly equivalent as not to mislead a jury instructed as to the reconciliation of conflicting testimony. 3 S. Dak. 134.

RECONCILIATION. The act of bringing persons to agree together, who before had had some difference.

A renewal of cohabitation between husband and wife is proof of reconciliation; and such reconciliation destroys the effect of a deed of separation; 4 Eccl. 238. See Bish. Mar. & D. § 1707.

RECONDUCTION. In Civil Law. A renewing of a former lease; relocation. Dig. 19. 2. 13. 11; Code, Nap. art. 1737-1740.

RECONSTRUCTION. This term has been widely used to describe the measures adopted by congress, at the close of the civil war in the United States, to regulate the admission of the representatives from the Southern states, the re-establishment of the federal authority within their borders, and the changes in their internal government, in order to adapt them to the condition of affairs brought about by the war. See 1 Am. L. Rev. 238.

RECONSTRUCTION OF COMPANY. In England, a company which is being wound up voluntarily may be reconstructed under s. 192 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, by a transfer of its undertaking to another company. A company which is being wound up either voluntarily or by the court may be reconstructed by arrangement with its creditors under s. 120 of the same act. Byrne.

RECONVENTION. In Civil Law. An action brought by a party who is defendant against the plaintiff before the same judge. 4 Mart. La. N. s. 489. To entitle the defendant to institute a demand in reconvention, it is requisite that such demand, though different from the main action, be nevertheless necessarily connected with it and incidental to the same. La. Code of Pr. art. 875; 11 La. 809; 7 Mart. La. N. s. 282. The reconvention of the civil law was a species of cross-bill. Story, Eq. Pl. § 402. See RECOURFMENT.

RECOPIACION. The laws enacted in Spain for the government of the Indies, and promulgated at different periods, were compiled by order of Philip IV in 1661, in the "Recopilacion" of the Laws of the Indies, of which a subsequent edition was published. This is the only authentic collection of the ordinances and decrees governing Spanish-America prior to the year 1860. 210 U. S. 315; 9 Alcubilla 936.

RECORD. A written memorial made by a public officer authorized by law to perform that function, and intended to serve as evidence of something written, said, or done. 6 Call 78; 1 Da. 595.

Records may be either of legislative or judicial acts. Memorials of other acts are sometimes made by statutory provisions.

Legislative acts. The federal and state constitutions, acts of congress, and of the several legislatures are the highest kind of records. The printed journals of congress have been so considered. See Dougl. 568; Cowp. 17. And public documents transmitted to congress by the president are at least records so far that copies of them printed by the public printer are evidence; 7 Johns. 38.

A record in judicial proceedings is a precise statement of the suit from its commencement to its termination, including the conclusion of law thereon, drawn up by the proper officer, for the purpose of perpetuating the exact state of facts; or in the language of Lord Coke, "records are memorials or remembrances, in rolls of parchment, of the proceedings and acts of a court of justice, which hath power to hold plea according to the course of the common law." See 13 Conn. 216.

The proceedings of the courts of common law are records. But every minute made by a clerk of a court for his own future guidance in making up his record is not a record; 4 Wash. C. C. 698. See 10 Pa. 157; 2 Pick. 443; 4 N. H. 450; 5 Ohio St. 545; 3 Wend. 297; 2 Vt. 573; 5 Day 863; 8 T. B. Monr. 63; 146 Ill. 189; 57 Me. 107; 115 Mass. 201.

Proceedings in courts of chancery are said not to be, strictly speaking, records; but they are so considered; Greul. Ev. 101. And see 8 Mart. La. N. s. 303; 1 Rawle 381; 8 Yerg. 143; 1 Pet. C. 352.

It is within the power of any court of general jurisdiction to restore its lost records or to expunge false or fraudulent interpolations therein; 61 Ill. App. 454; 69 Mo. App. 501; 49 La. Ann. 1012; or where the record is silent, or where it suggests as a fact something contrary to the fact, to correct the record by an order nunc pro tunc; 70 Ga. 153. See 134 U. S. 138. The power of a court to amend its own records is limited to the correction of actual mistakes and omissions; 65 Hun 619. A court may always, after the expiration of the term, amend the record nunc pro tunc to conform to the facts, where there are sufficient data; 8 N. Mex. 448. If there has been a failure to file a record within the time required, a subsequent filing cures this defect; provided no motion to docket and dismiss has been made; 24 U. S. App. 627.

In criminal proceedings all parts of the record must be interpreted together, and a deficiency in one part may be supplied by what appears elsewhere therein; 154 U. S. 134.

Altering records of a court is a crime punishable at common law; 2 East, P. C. 885, 886. See 38 Mich. 218; 30 Me. 464. See 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 468 (6).

A form of entry signed by the judge, and intended to be entered in the journal of the court, is not a public record, the mutilation or changing of which is prohibited by Cr. Code § 1833; 48 Pac. Rep. (Ore.) 717.

An attorney may be disbarred for alteration of the record by falsifying the stenographer's transcript of the evidence to deceive an appellate court; 129 Mo. 391; and the proceedings for that purpose may be properly instituted in the appellate court on relation of the attorney-general; id.; but it was held that the senior counsel who was not connected with the mutilation of the record, would not be disbarred for arguing the appeal from the record as filed; id. 331.

The fact of an instrument being recorded is held to operate as a constructive notice to all subsequent purchasers of any estate, legal or equitable, in the same property; 1 Johns. Ch. 394. And even if not recorded, if it has been filed for record and its existence is necessarily implied from the existence of another instrument already of record, purchasers will be deemed to have had notice of its existence; 14 Cent. L. J. 374.

But all conveyances and deeds which may be de facto recorded are not to be considered as giving notice: in order to have this effect, the instruments must be such as are authorized to be recorded, and the registry must have been made in compliance with the law, otherwise the registry is to be treated as a mere nullity, and it will not affect a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer unless he has actual notice; 2 Sch. & L. 68; 4 Wheat. 466; 1 Johns. Ch. 390; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 403; 5 Me. 272; but where a statute makes it discretionary to record an instrument, the effect of recording is in no wise lessened, but is deemed a constructive notice the same as if the recording had been required; 77 Pa. 373. The record of a deed is not constructive notice of its contents when it is not entitled to be recorded under the recording acts; 7 C. C. App. 293. Where a proper book is kept for the purpose of showing when an instrument is left for record, delay or negligence in entering it in other books will not affect it as a lien upon the property; 82 Pa. 116. See, as to recording acts, 3 Law Mag. & Rev., 4th ser. 412; Judge Cooler's Paper in 4th Rep. Am. Bar Assn. (1881); Lecture of W. H. Rawle before the Law Dept. Univ. of Pa., 1881; as to mortgages, see MORTGAGE; as to courts of record see that title; as to falsification of a record see FORGERY.

As to giving full faith and credit to judicial proceedings, under the United States constitution, see FOREIGN JUDGMENT. The constitutional provision applies in terms to public acts, records, and judicial proceedings, and it is held that the term records in the Judiciary Act of May 26, 1790, which provides how they shall be proved and admitted in evidence, includes all acts, legislative, executive, judicial, and ministerial, composing the public records of the state; 20 How. 250; 16 Tex. 508.

Questions as to what is or is not a part of the record have arisen, principally on writ of error or appeal, as to what parts of the record and proceedings of the court below are to be considered as parts of the record before the appellate court. In many of these cases matters which were actually a part of the record below are only such in the court above when made so by being embodied in the bill of exceptions. Among the matters and things which have been held not to be a part of the record, but to be considered with reference to the foregoing qualification, are: Trial list; 1 Pa. 129; bond for costs; 5 Ark. 284; 8 Mich. 81; writing sued on; 7 Hunphr. 255; 2 Ark. 109 (unless made so by oyer or otherwise; 4 Ark. 202); an affidavit made to supply a part of the record which has been lost; 4 Ill. 119, 259; papers presented to a court and acted upon merely as matters of evidence; 16 Me. 81; the registry of a mechanic's lien; 1 W. & S. 240; the statement of demand, in the court for the trial of small causes; 8 Green N. J. 224; a warrant of attorney to confess judgment and an affidavit showing the death of one of the signers of it; 13 Ill. 379; instructions to the jury; 1 La. 226; 11 id. 454 (contra, where they were signed by the judge and filed; 16 Ind. 418); letters copied into the transcripts as exhibits; 28 Ala. 416; papers filed after an appeal prayed, taken, and signed by the judge; 1 Ark. 557; a plea stricken from the files; 5 id. 166, 233; 29 Ind. 130; minutes of the court taken at the trial; 23 Cal. 103; or clerk's minutes; 33 id. 171; a bill of particulars; 24 Ill. 262; a summons or other writ; 1 Morr. 489 (otherwise where there was no appearance; 19 Ind. 273).

The following have been held to be parts of the record: A stipulation as to sale of mortgaged premises and solicitor's fee; 15 Wis. 211; depositions in a probate court; 38 Miss. 476; affidavits filed in opposition to an application for an injunction; 22 Cal. 383; motions, notices, and rulings of the court; 4 Greene (La.) 123; a finding of the court; 20 Wis. 350; 21 Mo. 157; 11 Ind. 314; a submission and award filed; 27 Ill. 874; a bill of exceptions settled on an appeal from an order; 20 Wis. 518; an instrument of which oyer is craved; 6 Ark. 116. The opinion of the trial court as to the facts was held a part of the record; 98 La. 501; but in Pennsylvania it is said to be not a good principle so to treat the opinion; 183 Pa. 155.

Under recording acts. Statutes of the several states have required enrolment of certain deeds, mortgages, and other instruments, and declared that the copies thus made should have the effect of records. An instrument lodged for record is considered as recorded from that time, whether it was actually copied in the book or not, or in the proper book or not; 172 Pa. 234.

Inspection of Records. At common law, there was no general right of inspection, but the right depended entirely upon the question whether the party seeking to exercise it had an interest. If he had, he was entitled to exercise the right upon the payment of the usual fees; 7 Mod. 127; 1 Stra. 304; 2 id. 260, 954, 1005; but a mere stranger who had no such interest had no right of inspection at common law; 8 Term 390; and the custodian might permit or refuse the inspection at his discretion without any control by a court; 6 Ad. & El. 84; 9 Cent. L. J. 425. At a comparatively early period, this distinction between those who had and those who had not an interest became obliterated; 1 Wils. 297; 47 Barb. 329. The effect of modern recording acts making the public records notice, has aided to accomplish this result, and, indeed, makes the right of inspection and of enforcing the privilege an essential one; 4 D. & R. 820; 61 Ala. 310; 71 id. 290; 45 Ill. 224; 66 Me. 305; 90 Mich. 643. It does not extend in England to merely quasi-public records, such as court rolls of a manor; Bunb. 269; or to records of a justice of the peace; 66 Vt. 485; or to a marriage license docket; 4 D. R. (Pa.) 284; contra, id. 162.

The right of inspection will not exist as to the record of private suits, at least before trial, where it is sought only to gratify malice or curiosity, or to make profit by disclosing private affairs and making public scandalous matters; 72 Mich. 560; 85 id. 1; nor does it extend to records required by law to be kept secret, as the proceedings of a county electrical board; 25 S. E. Rep. (Va.) 552. The right of inspection is secured by statute in most of the states, and is not dependent on interest, though in some cases it is denied if detrimental to public policy or is sought by a citizen of another state; 51 Mich. 145; 61 Ala. 310. In case of refusal, the right may be enforced; 44 Fed. Rep. 788; 39 N. J. L. 287; 37 W. Va. 208; even though the rules of the office require the records to be kept secret. The right when denied is enforced by mandamus; 58 N. J. Eq. 158, reversing 49 id. 474; 71 Ala. 290; 60 Mich. 643; 66 Me. 305. Injunction is usually held not to be a proper remedy; 73 Md. 280; 51 Ga. 391; 51 Mich. 145; 27 Ill. App. 36; 53 N. J. Eq. 158. The right of inspection is very much drawn into question in cases where the right is sought to be exercised by abstract and title insurance companies. Objections to the use of public offices by the agents of such companies are made upon the ground of interference with the legitimate fees of the public officers, with the business of the office, and of possible injuries to the records. The right has been sustained in 44 Fed. Rep. 786; 17 Colo. 248; 17 id. 546; 38 Hun 429; 99 N. Y. 620; 13 W. N. C. (Pa.) 291; and, after some fluctuation, in 53 N. J. Eq. 158; 78 Mich. 383; 102 id. 55; 17 Colo. 248; 78 Ala. 49; 82 Ala. 527; 7 Colo. 200; 51 Ga. 391; 73 Md. 289 (the statute having been passed as a result of a previous decision otherwise).

Where the right is permitted, the custodian may make reasonable rules; 99 N. Y. 620; 96 Mich. 600; 17 Colo. 546; and charge reasonable fees; 102 Mich. 55. The right to inspect has been held to include the right to copy; 69 Wis. 538; 37 Minn. 372; contra, 39 Kan. 301; 82 Ala. 527.

As to parish and church registers and records, see REGISTER, PUBLIC RECORD.

RECORD BOOKS. The docket book or the minute book of the county court are not "record books." 140 Ky. 747, 131 S. W. 998.

RECORD, CONTRACT OF. See CONTRACT.

RECORD, CONVEYANCES BY. Extraordinary assurances, as private acts of parliament and royal grants.

RECORD OF NISI PRIUS. In English Law. A transcript from the issueroll: it contains a copy of the pleadings and issue. Steph. Pl. 105.

RECORD OFFICE. This English office was established by the Public Record Office Act, 1838, which placed it under the superintendence of the Master of the Rolls, and provided for the appointment of a Deputy Keeper of the Records, who is, for practical purposes, the head of the office. The office, the full title of which is the Public Record Office, has been accommodated since 1900 in a building in Chancery Lane popularly known as the Rolls Office. Byrne. See PAPER OFFICE.

RECORDARE. A writ to bring up judgments of justices of the peace. 3 Jones N. C. 491.

RECORDARI FACIAS LOQUELAM. In English Practice. A writ commanding the sheriff that he cause the plaint to be recorded which is in his county, without writ, between the parties there named, of the cattle, goods, and chattels of the complainant taken and unjustly distrained as it is said, and that he have the said record before the court on a day therein named, and that he prefix the same day to the parties, that then they may be there ready to proceed in the same plaint. 2 Sell. Pr. 166. Now obsolete.

RECORDATION. The act of recording; also, a record. Stand. Dict.

RECORDATUR (Lat.). An order or allowance that the verdict returned on the nisi prius roll be recorded. Bacon, Abr. Arbitration, etc. (D).

RECORDER. A judicial officer of some cities, possessing generally the powers and authority of a judge. 8 Yeates 300; 4 Dall. 290. See 1 Const. S. C. 45.

Anciently, recorder signified to recite or testify on recollection, as occasion might require, what had previously passed in court; and this was the duty of the judges, thence called recordeurs. Steph. Pl. note 11.

An officer appointed to make record or enrolment of deeds and other legal instruments authorized by law to be recorded.

RECORDER OF LONDON. One of the justices of oyer and terminer, and a justice of the peace of the quorum for putting the laws in execution for the preservation of the peace and government of the city. Whart. Law Lex.

An officer appointed by the corporation, but he cannot perform any judicial functions unless the crown also appoints. He is not disqualified by office from being a member of the House of Commons; but it may be taken as having been now settled that he should not seek election or re-election as member of that House, although he may retain his seat until the general election next following his appointment to the office, if he happens to have been a member at the time of his appointment. The salary is, at present, £4,000 a year. Byrne.

RECORDING ACTS. Statutes which regulate the official recording of conveyances, mortgages, bills of sale, hypothecations, assignments for the benefit of creditors, articles of agreement, and other instruments, for the purpose of informing the public, creditors and purchasers, of transactions affecting the ownership of property and the pecuniary responsibility of individual persons. See RECORD.

RECORDS, EARLY ENGLISH. For discussion, see 2 Selected Essays in Anglo-American Legal History, 169, et seq.

RECOURDUM. A record; a judicial record. It is used in the phrase procurat per recordum, which is a formula employed, in pleading, for reference to a record, signifying as it appears from the record. 1 Chit. Pl. 355; 10 Me. 127.

RECOUPMENT (Fr. recouper, to cut again). The act of abating or recouping a part of a claim upon which one is sued by reason of a legal or equitable right resulting from a counter-claim arising out of the same transaction. The right of the defendant, in the same action, to claim damages from the plaintiff, either because he has not complied with some cross obligation of the contract upon which he sues, or because he has violated some duty which the law imposed upon him in the making or performance of that contract. 4 Wend. 483; 22 id. 155; 10 Barb. 55; 13 N. Y. 151; 3 Ind. 72, 205; 9 id. 470; 7 Ala. n. s. 753; 27 id. 574; 12 Ark. 699; 17 id. 270; 6 B. Monr. 528; 15 id. 454; 3 Mich. 281; 39 Me. 392; 16 Ill. 495; 11 Mo. 415; 25 id. 430; 83 Ga. 212.

Recoupment is the right to set off unliquidated damages, while the right of set-off, as distinguished from recoupment, comprehends only liquidated demands, or those capable of being ascertained by calculation; 32 N. J. Eq. 225. Both these terms have a technical meaning and both are included in the same general term, counter-claim, which see.

This is not a new title in the law, the term occurring from the 14th to the 16th centuries, although it seems of late years to have assumed a new signification, and the present doctrine is said to be still in its infancy; 7 Am. L. Rev. 390. Originally it implied a mere deduction from the claim of the plaintiff, on account of payment in whole or in part, or a former recovery, or some analogous fact; 3 Co. 65; 4 id. 94; 5 id. 2, 31; 11 id. 51, 52. See note to Jelly v. Grew, 6 Nev. & M. 467; Viner, Abr. Discount, pl. 8, 4, 9, 10; 28 Vi. 413. This meaning has been retained in many modern cases, but under the name of deduction or reduction of damages; 11 East 328; 1 Maule & S. 318, 323; 2 M. & G. 241; 7 M. & W. 314; 12 id. 772; 20 Conn. 204; 21 Wend. 610; 3 Dana 469; 14 Pick. 356. The word recoupment has also been applied to cases very similar to the above; 4 Den. 227; 20 Wend. 237. See 7 Am. L. Rev. 398, where recoupment is fully treated.

Recoupment as now understood seems to correspond with the Reconvention of the civil law, sometimes termed demanda incidentis by the French writers, in which the reus, or defendant, was permitted to exhibit his claim against the plaintiff for allowance, provided it rose out of, or was incidental to, the plaintiff's cause of action. Œuvres de Pothier, vol. 9, p. 30; 1 White. New Rec. 285; Vocat. tit. de Judicia, n. 78; La. Code Pr. art. 375; 4 Mart. n. s. 499; 6 id. 671; 12 La. Ann. 114, 170; 6 Tex. 408.

In England, as well as in some of the United States, the principles of recoupment as defined above have been recognized only in a restricted form. Under the name of reduction of damages, the defendant is allowed to show all such violations of his contract by the plaintiff as go to render the consideration less valuable, but he is compelled to resort to an independent action for any immediate or consequential damages affecting him in other respects; 8 M. & W. 858; 3 Campb. 450; 1 C. & P. 384; 6 Barb. 387; 6 B. Monr. 528; 12 Conn. 129; 11 Johns. 547; 12 Pick. 330; 8 Humphr. 678; 9 How. 231. See 84 Ala. 496; 65 Miss. 315. But these restrictions are all gradually disappearing, and the law is assuming the form expressed in the cases cited under the definition of modern recoupment, the main reason upon which the doctrine now rests being the avoidance of circuity of action.

In Pennsylvania a defendant may avail himself, by way of recoupment or equitable defence, of a breach of warranty or of a fraudulent representation, and show that the goods sold were worth less than they would have been if they were such as they were warranted or represented to be; 120 U. S. 648.

There are some limitations and qualifications to the law of recoupment, as thus established. Thus, it has been held that the defendant is not entitled to any judgment for the excess his damages in recoupment may have over the plaintiff's claim, nor shall he be allowed to bring an independent action for that excess; 6 N. H. 481; 14 Ill. 424; 3 Mich. 281; 12 Ala. n. s. 643; 3 Hill N. Y. 171; 17 Ark. 270. See 83 Ala. 333. If recoupment is put upon the ground of a cross-action and not a mere defence for the reduction of damages, there is no reason why he should not have judgment to the extent of his injury. Such seems to be the practice in Louisiana, under the name of reconvention; 12 La. Ann. 170; and such will probably be the practice under those systems of pleading which authorize the court, in any action which requires it, to grant the defendant affirmative relief; 2 E. D. Sm. 317. See, also, 3 W. & S. 472; 17 S. & R. 385; 12 How. Pr. 310.

The damages recouped must be for a breach of the same contract upon which suit is brought; 3 Hill N. Y. 171; 4 Sandf. 147; 10 Ind. 329; 74 Mich. 424. See 77 Mo. 345; 95 Ill. 476; 54 Miss. 503. For example, when chattels have been sold with an express or implied warranty, and there were latent defects unknown to the purchaser, he may retain the goods without notifying the vendor, and either sue for his damages or recoup the same in an action against him for the price; 67 Wis. 129; 13 Ohio C. C. 99; even if the sale were on approval, but the contract did not limit the purchaser to the return of the property, if unsatisfactory; 56 Conn. 489; or one who has pledged stocks as collateral to a note, if sued on the note, may recoup the damages resulting from wrongful appropriation of the stocks by the pledgee; 36 U. S. App. 248; 6 S. C. 71 Fed. Rep. 102. The surety on a note, in an action by the payee, may set up, by way of recoupment, the breach of warranty of the property sold to the maker for which the note was given; 15 App. Div. N. Y. 498; but if a surety is sued alone, he cannot recoup for a warranty in favor of his principal, without the consent of the latter; 40 S. W. Rep. (Tenn.) 482. It may be for a tort; but it seems that the tort must be a violation of the contract, and it is to be measured by the extent of this violation, and no allowance taken of malice; 10 Barb. 55; 17 Ill. 39; 4 S. & R. 249. The language of some cases would seem to imply that recoupment may be had for damages connected with the subject-matter or transaction upon which the suit is brought, but which do not constitute a violation of any obligation imposed by the contract, or of any duty imposed by the law in the making or performance of the contract; 14 Ill. 424; 17 id. 38. But these cases will be found to be decided with reference to statutes of counter-claim. And even in the construction of such statutes it has been doubted whether it is not better to confine the damages to violations of the contract; 8 Ind. 309; 2 Sandf. 120.

It is well established, in the absence of statutory provisions, that it is optional with the defendant whether he shall plead his cross-claim by way of recoupment, or resort to an independent action; 14 Johns. 379; 13 Wend. 277; 12 Ala. n. s. 643; 3 Ind. 59; 21 Mo. 415. Nor does the fact of a suit pending for the same damages estop him from pleading them in recoupment, although he may be compelled to choose upon which action he shall proceed; 3 E. D. Sm. 135; 5 Watts 116. Payment after action brought, although never pleadable in answer to the action, was usually admitted in reduction of damages; 4 N. H. 537; 6 Ind. 20; 2 Bingh. n. c. 88; 7 C. & P. 1; 1 M. & W. 463. But the defendant can never recoup for damages accruing since action brought; 20 E. L. & E. 277; 4 Barb. 256; 2 Binn. 287.

The right of recoupment will usually be allowed to sureties and indorsers in cases where it would be permitted for the benefit of the principal debtor, as, for example, a successful recoupment by the maker of a note will enure to the benefit of the indorser when sued with the maker; 21 Misc. 86.

It has been maintained by some courts that the law of recoupment is not applicable to real estate. Accordingly, they have denied the defendant the right, when sued for the purchase-money, to recoup for a partial failure of title; 11 Johns. 50; 2 Wheat. 13; 12 Ark. 709; 17 id. 254. But most of these cases will be found denying him that right only before eviction. A confusion has been introduced by regarding failure of title and failure of consideration as convertible terms. The consideration of a deed without covenants is the mere delivery of the instrument; Rawle, Cov. 588. A failure of title in such case is not a failure of consideration, and it therefore affords no ground for recoupment. The consideration of a deed with covenants does not fail till the covenantee has suffered damages on the covenants, which in most cases does not happen till eviction, either actual or constructive. After this has happened, his right to recoup is now pretty generally admitted. This is nothing more than allowing him to recoup as soon as he can sue upon the covenants; 21 Wend. 131; 13 N. Y. 151; 3 Pick. 459; 14 id. 293; 6 Gratt. 305; Dart, Vend. 381; Rawle, Cov. 583.

It has been more generally admitted that where there is a failure of the consideration as to the quantity or quality of the land, the purchaser may recoup upon his covenants; 12 Ark. 699; 17 id. 254; 2 Kent 470; 18 Mo. 368; 20 id. 443; 71 Wis. 54.

Under the common-law system of pleading, the evidence of a recoupment, if going to a total failure of consideration, might be given under the general issue without notice, but if it went only to a partial failure, notice was required to prevent surprise; 6 Barb. 336; 2 N. Y. 157; 6 N. H. 497; 3 Ind. 265. This is the only way it could be admitted, for it could not be pleaded, a partial defence constituting neither a plea in bar nor in abatement. Under a notice it was admitted to aid in sustaining the general denial.

But under the new systems of practice there being no general issue to which the notice was subsidiary, the defendant is required to plead his defence whether it is in answer of the whole demand or only in reduction of damages; 6 How. Pr. 433; 11 N. Y. 352; 12 Wend. 248; 18 Mo. 368.

The effect to be given to the law of recoupment will depend, in many of the states, upon the statutes of counter-claim and offset in force. In Missouri, for instance, it is provided that if any two or more persons are mutually indebted in any manner whatever, and one of them commence an action against the other, one debt may be set against the other, although such debts are of a different nature; 1 R. S. § 3867. The term counter-claim under this statute is held to include both set-off and recoupment; 49 Mo. 570; the distinction between the two terms being important only from the fact that the former must arise from contract, and can only be used in an action founded on contract; while the latter may spring from a wrong, provided it arose out of the transaction set forth in the petition, or was connected with the subject of the action; id. In the case of actions arising out of contracts it has been held that nothing would be allowed by way of recoupment unless it worked a violation of some obligation imposed by the contract, or some duty imposed by the law in the making or performance of it; 2 Sandf. 190; 8 Ind. 899.

RECOURSE. To recur. As to indorsement without recourse, see INDORSEMENT.

RECOVER. To obtain by course of law; to obtain by means of an action; or by the judgment rendered in an action; to succeed in an action.

RECOVERED. See JUDGMENT RECOVERED.

RECOVERER. The demandant in a common recovery, after judgment has been given in his favor, assumes the name of recoverer.

RECOVERY. The restoration of a former right, by the solemn judgment of a court of justice. 3 Murph. 189. See 28 L. J. C. P. 312; 8 Q. B. D. 470.

In its general use, recovery signifies a collection of a debt by process and course of law. 76 Cal. 269.

The phrase right of recovery is used to express the possession of a right of action under the existing facts.

A common recovery is a judgment obtained in a fictitious suit, brought against the tenant of the freehold, in consequence of a default made by the person who is last vouched to warranty in such suit. Bacon, Tracts 148.

A true recovery, usually known by the name of recovery simply, is the procuring a former right by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction: as, for example, when judgment is given in favor of the plaintiff when he seeks to recover a thing or a right.

Common recoveries are considered as mere forms of conveyance or common assurances: although a common recovery is a fictitious suit, yet the same mode of proceeding must be pursued, and all the forms strictly adhered to, which are necessary to be observed in the freehold; whence such tenant is usually called the tenant to the precipe. In obedience to this writ the tenant appears in court, either in person or by his attorney; but, instead of defending the title to the land himself, he calls on some other person, who upon the original purchase is supposed to have warranted the title, and prays that the person may be called in to defend the title which he warranted, or otherwise to give the tenant lands of equal value to those he shall lose by the defect of his warranty. This is called the voucher, vouchio, or calling to warranty. The person thus called to warrant, who is usually called the vouchee, appears in court, is impleaded, and enters into the warranty, by which means he takes upon himself the defence of the land. The defendant then desires leave of the court to impair, or confer with the vouchee in private, which is granted of course. Soon after the demandant returns into court, but the vouchee disappears or makes default, in consequence of which it is presumed by the court that he has no title to the land demanded in the writ, and therefore cannot defend them: whereupon judgment is given for the demandant, now called the recoverer, to recover the lands in question against the tenant, and for the tenant to recover against the vouchee lands of equal value in recompense for those so warranted by him, and now lost by his default. This is called the recompense of recovery in value; but as it is customary for the creditor of the court to act, who is hence called the common voucher, the tenant can only have a nominal and not a real recompense for the land thus recovered against him by the demandant. A writ of habeas facias is then sued out directed to the sheriff of the county in which the lands thus recovered are situated; and on the execution and return of the writ the recovery is completed. The recovery here described is with single voucher; but a recovery may be, and is frequently, suffered with double, treble, or further voucher, as the exigency of the case may require, in which case there are several judgments against the several vouches.

Common recoveries were invented by the ecclesiastics in order to evade the statute of mortmain, by which they were prohibited from purchasing, or receiving under the pretence of a free gift, any land or tenements whatever. They have been used in some states for the purpose of breaking the entail of estates. See, generally, Cruise, Digest, tit. 20; 3 Wms. Saund. 48, n. 7; 4 Kent 467; Pigot, Comm. Rec. passim. See Chail. Real P. 379; Big. Estop. 418.

All the learning in relation to common recoveries is nearly obsolete, as they are out of use. Ray, a French writer, in his work Des Institutions Judiciaires de l'Angleterre, tom. ii. p. 231, points out what appears to him the absurdity of a common recovery. As to common recoveries, see 8 B. & R. 495; 9 id. 830; 1 Yeates 244; 4 id. 413; 1 Whart. 130, 151; 2 Rawle 198; 6 Pa. 45; 5 Halst. 47; 5 Mass. 498; 8 id. 398; 8 id. 84; 8 Harr. & J. 328.

RECREANT. A coward; a poltroon. 8 Bla. Com. 840.

RECRIMINATION. In Criminal Law. An accusation made by a person accused against his accuser, either of having committed the same offence or another.

In general, recrimination does not excuse the person accused nor diminish his punishment, because the guilt of another can never excuse him. But in applications for divorce on the ground of adultery, if the party defendant can prove that the plaintiff or complainant has been guilty of the same offence, the divorce will not be granted; 2 Bish. Mar. & D. 840; 1 Hagg. Cons. 144; 4 Eccl. 860. The laws of Pennsylvania contain a provision to the same effect. See 1 Hagg. Eccl. 790; 8 id. 77; 1 Hagg. Cons. 147; Dig. 24. 8. 39; 48. 8. 13. 5; 1 Add. Eccl. 411; 2 Colo. App. 8; COMPENSATION; CONDONATION; DIVORCE.

RECRUITING. In the Espionage Act, § 8: The gaining of fresh supplies of men for the military forces, by draft as well as otherwise. 249 U. S. 53.

RECTIFIER. As used in the internal revenue laws, this term is not confined to a person who runs spirits through charcoal; but is applied to any one who rectifies or purifies spirits in any manner whatever, or who makes a mixture of spirits with anything else, and sells it under any name. 8 Ben. 73; 8 C. 2 Am. L. T. Rep. 23.

RECTOR. In Ecclesiastical Law. One who rules or governs: a name given to certain officers of the Roman church. Dict. Canonique.

In English Law. He that hath full possession of a parochial church. A rector (or parson) has for the most part the whole right to all the ecclesiastical dues in his parish; where, as in theory of law, a vicar has an appropriator over him, entitled to the best part of the profits, to whom the vicar is, as it were, perpetual curate, with a standing salary. Cowell; 1 Bla. Com. 384; 2 Steph. Com. 677. See PARISH PRIEST.

RECTORY. In English Law. Corporate real property, consisting of a church, glebe-lands, and tithes. 1 Chitty, Pr. 163.

RECTUM (Lat.). Right. Breve de recto, writ of right. In Old English Law. Right; law. A term peculiar to the law of England. What in the written (civil) law is called jus, in the law of England is said to be rectum. Burrill; Fleta, 6. 1. 1.

Also, an accusation or charge of crime; suspicion of crime. Id.; Spelman. In the Register, rectum occurs as a form of this word, closely resembling the French recte, from which it is undoubtedly derived. Id.; Reg. Orig. 77 b.

RECTUS (Lat.). Right; upright; straight; straightforward; direct. See RECTUM.

RECTUS IN CURIA (Lat. right in court). The condition of one who stands at the bar, against whom no one objects any offence or prefers any charge.

When a person outlawed has reversed his outlawry, so that he can have the benefit of the law, he is said to be rectus in curia. Jacob, Law Dict.

RECUPERATORES (Lat.). In Roman Law. A species of judges originally established, it is supposed, to decide controversies between Roman citizens and strangers concerning the right to the possession of property requiring speedy remedy, but gradually extended to questions which might be brought before ordinary judges.

After the enlargement of their powers, the difference between them and judges, it is supposed, was simply this:—if the praetor named three judges, he called them recuperatores; if one, he called him judex. But opinions on this subject are very various. Colman, De Romano judicio recuperatorio. Cicero's oration pro Caelio, 1, 8, was addressed to recuperatores.

The result of the latest investigation of this subject is that, while ordinary cases were referred to the college of centumviri, in cases where the praetor wished to obtain a speedy decision he had power to appoint an extraordinary college of three or five recuperatores whose instructions required them to find a verdict within a designated time. Such a course was often required in cases involving personal liberty, and the result was that the jurisdiction of the centumviri over all such actions became displaced by the court of recuperatores. The latter were also appointed to cases to which aliens were parties. Like the judices the recuperatores were private persons; Sohm, Inst. Rom. L. 150, n. 8.

RECUSABLE. See IRRECUSABLE; CONTRACTUAL OBLIGATION.

RECUSANTS. In English Law. Persons who willfully absent themselves from their parish church, and on whom penalties were imposed by various statutes passed during the reigns of Elizabeth and James I. Whart. Dict.

Those persons who separate from the church established by law. Termes de la Ley.

RECUSATIO TESTIS (Lat.). Rejection of a witness, on the grounds of incompetency.

RECUSATION. In Civil Law. A plea or exception by which the defendant requires that the judge having jurisdiction of the cause should abstain from deciding, upon the ground of interest, or for a legal objection to his prejudice.

A recusation is not a plea to the jurisdiction of the court, but simply to the person of the judge. It may, however, extend to all the judges, as when the party has a suit against the whole court. Pothier, Procéd. Civ. 1ère part. ch. 2, s. 5. It is a personal challenge of the judge for cause. See 2 La. 390; 6 id. 134.

The challenge of jurors. La. Code Pract. art. 499, 500. An act of what nature soever it may be, by which a strange heir, by deeds or words, declares he will not be heir. Dig. 29. 2. 95. See, generally, 1 Hopk. Ch. 1; 5 Mart. La. 292.

RED BOOK OF THE EXCHEQUER. An ancient record, wherein are registered the holders of lands per baroniam in the time of Henry III., the number of hides of land in certain counties before the conquest, and the ceremonies on the coronation of Eleanor, wife of Henry III., compiled by Alexander de Swenford, archdeacon of Salop and treasurer of St. Paul's, who died in 1246. 81 Hen. III.; Jacob, Law Dict.; Cowell.

RED TAPE. In a derivative sense, order carried to fastidious excess; system run out into trivial extremes. 55 Ga. 434.

REDDENDO SINGULA SINGULIS (Lat.). Referring particular things to particular persons. For example: when two descriptions of property are given together in one mass, both the next of kin and the heir cannot take, unless in cases where a construction can be made reddendo singula singulis, that the next of kin shall take the personal estate, and the heir-at-law the real estate. 14 Ves. 490. See 11 East 513, n.; Bac. Abr. Conditions (L).

REDDENDUM (Lat.). That clause in a deed by which the grantor reserves something new to himself out of that which he granted before. It usually follows the tenendum, and is generally in these words, "yielding and paying." In every good reddendum or reservation these things must concur: namely, it must be in apt words; it must be of some other thing issuing or coming out of the thing granted, and not a part of the thing itself nor of something issuing out of another thing; it must be of a thing on which the grantor may resort to distrain; it must be made to one of the grantors, and not to a stranger to the deed. See 3 Bla. Com. 399; Co. Litt. 47; Shepp. Touchst. 80; Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 24, s. 1; Dane, Abr. Index.

REDDIT SE (Lat. he has rendered himself). In English Practice. An indorsement made on the bail-piece when a certificate has been made by the proper officer that the defendant is in custody. Com. Dig. Bail (Q 4).

REDDITION. A surrendering or restoring; also, a judicial acknowledgment that the thing in demand belongs to the demandant, and not to the person surrendering. Cowell.

REDDEM. To purchase back; to regain, as mortgaged property by paying what is due; to receive back by paying the obligation. 47 Ohio St. 156. See 47 N. J. Eq. 170.

REDEMPTION (Lat. re, back, emptio, a purchase).

A purchase back by the seller from the buyer. It is applied to denote the performance of the conditions upon performance of which a conditional sale is to become ineffective as a transfer of title, or, more strictly, a right to demand a reconveyance becomes vested in the seller. In the case of mortgages, this right is a legal right until a breach of conditions, when it becomes an equitable right, and is called the equity of redemption. See MORTGAGE; EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

REDEMPTIONES (Lat.). Heavy fines. Distinguished from Misericordia, which see.

REDHIBITION. In Civil Law. The avoidance of a sale on account of some vice or defect in the thing sold, which renders its use impossible or so inconvenient and imperfect that it must be supposed that the buyer would not have purchased it had he known of the vice. La. Civ. Code, art. 2496.

This is essentially a civil-law right. The effect of the rule expressed by the maxim carere emptor is to prevent any such right at common law, except in cases of express warranty. 2 Kent 374; Sugd. Vend. 222.

REDHIBITORY ACTION. In Civil Law. An action instituted to avoid a sale on account of some vice or defect in the thing sold which renders its use impossible or so inconvenient and imperfect that it must be supposed the buyer would not have purchased it had he known of the vice. La. Civ. Code 2496.

REDHIBITORY DEFECT (OR VICE). A defect in an article sold, for which the seller may be compelled to take it back; a defect against which the seller is bound to warrant.

REDISSEISOR. See DISSEISIN.

REDITUS ALBI (Lat.). A rent payable in money; sometimes called white rent, or blanché farm. See ALBA FIRMA.

REDITUS NIGRI (Lat.). A rent payable in grain, work, and the like; it was also called black mail. This name was given to it to distinguish it from reditus albi, which was payable in money.

REDITUS QUIETI. Quit rents. 1 Steph. Com. 676.

REDMANS, or RADMANS. Men who, by the tenure or custom of their lands, were to ride with or for the lord of the manor, about his business. Domesd.

REDOBATORES (L. Lat.). Those that buy stolen cloth and turn it into some other color or fashion, that it may not be recognized. Redubbers, q. v. Barrington, Stat., 2d ed. 87, n.; Co. 3d Inst. 134; Britton, c. 29.

REDOUND. "Redound" signifies to conduce, in the consequence, to contribute, to result. 3 Met. (Ky.) 526.

REDRAFT. In Commercial Law. A bill of exchange drawn at the place where another bill was made payable and where it was protested, upon the place where the first bill was drawn, or, when there is no regular commercial intercourse rendering that practicable, then in the next best or most direct practicable course. 1 Bell, Com. 406. See RE-EXCHANGE.

REDRESS. The act of receiving satisfaction for an injury sustained. For the mode of obtaining redress, see REMEDIES; 1 Chitty, Pr. Anal. Table.

REDUBBERS. In Criminal Law. Those who bought stolen cloth and dyed it of another color to prevent its being identified, were anciently so called. Co. 3d Inst. 134. See REDOBATORES.

REDUCTION. In Scotch Law. An action for the purpose of setting aside or rendering null and void some deed, will, right, etc. Bell, Dict.

REDUNDANCY. Matter introduced in an answer or pleading which is foreign to the bill or article.

The respondent is not to insert in his answer any matter foreign to the articles he is called upon to answer, although such matter may be admissible in a plea; but he may, in his answer, plead matter by way of explanation pertinent to the articles, even if such matter shall solely in his own knowledge, and to such extent incapable of proof; or he may state matter which can be substantiated by witnesses; but in this latter instance, if such matter be introduced into the answer, and not afterwards put in the plea, or proved, the court will give no weight or credence to such part of the answer. Per Lushington, 8 Curt. Eccl. 543.

A material distinction is to be observed between redundancy in the allegation and redundancy in the proof. In the former case, a variance between the allegation and the proof will be fatal, if the redundant allegations are descriptive of that which is essential. But in the latter case, redundancy cannot vitiate because more is proved than is alleged, unless the matter superfluously proved goes to contradict some essential part of the allegation; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 67; 1 Stark. Ev. 401.

RE-ENTRY. The act of resuming the possession of lands or tenements in pursuance of a right which the party exercising it reserved to himself when he quit his former possession.

Conveyances in fee reserving a ground-rent, and leases for a term of years, usually contain a clause authorizing the proprietor to re-enter in case of the non-payment of rent, or of the breach of some covenant in the lease, which forfeits the estate. Without such reservation he would have no right to re-enter for the mere breach of a covenant, although he may do so upon the breach of a condition which, by its terms, is to defeat the estate granted; 2 Bingh. 13; 1 M. & Ry. 694; Tayl. Landl. & T. § 290; Woodf. Landl. & T. § 310.

When a landlord is about to enforce his right to re-enter for the non-payment of rent, he must make a specific demand of payment, and be refused, before the forfeiture is complete, unless such demand has been dispensed with by an express agreement of the parties; 18 Johns. 451; 6 S. & R. 151; 6 Halst. 270; 7 Term 117; 5 Co. 41. In the latter case, a mere failure to pay, without any demand, constitutes a sufficient breach, upon which an entry may at any time subsequently be made; 3 N. Y. 147; 2 N. H. 164; 2 Dougl. 477; 2 B. & C. 490. The demand may be in the form of a notice to quit; 35 Neb. 766.

The requisites of a demand upon which to predicate a forfeiture for the non-payment of rent, at common law, are very strict. It must be for the payment of the precise sum due upon the day when, by the terms of the lease, it becomes payable; if any days of grace are allowed for payment, then upon the last day of grace; Co. Litt. 208; 7 Term 117; 2 N. Y. 147; see 55 N. J. L. 217; at a convenient time before sunset, while there is light enough to see to count the money; 17 Johns. 66; 1 Saund. 287; at the place appointed for payment, or if no particular place has been specified in the lease, then at the most public place on the land, which, if there be a dwelling-house, is the front door; 4 Wend. 318; 18 Johns. 450; 1 How. 211; Co. Litt. 203a; notwithstanding there be no person on the land to pay it; Bac. Abr. Rent (1); and if the re-entry clause is coupled with the condition that no sufficient distress be found upon the premises, the landlord must search the premises to see that no such distress can be found; 15 East 286; 6 S. & R. 151; 8 Watts 51.

A re-entry, at common law, for condition forfeited in a lease, is void unless the evidence shows that the common-law forms have been complied with. A mere taking possession of the premises, when unoccupied, is not sufficient; 15 Wall. 475.

But the statutes of most of the states, following 4 Geo. II. c. 28, now dispense with the formalities of a common-law demand, by providing that an action of ejectment may be brought as substitute for such a demand in all cases where no sufficient distress can be found upon the premises. And this latter restriction disappears entirely from the statutes of such of the states as have abolished distress for rent.

The clause of re-entry for non-payment of rent operates only as a security for rent; for at any time before judgment is entered in the action to recover possession the tenant may either tender to the landlord, or bring into the court where the action is pending, all the rent in arrear at the time of such payment, and all costs and charges incurred by the landlord, and in such case all further proceedings will cease. And in some states, even after the landlord has recovered possession, the tenant may in certain cases be reinstated upon the terms of the original lease, by paying up all arrearages and costs; Tayl. Landl. & T. 302. See, generally, Wms. R. P. 285.

The acceptance by a landlord, after his right of possession is fixed, of property from the tenant in payment of rent that had accrued, is no waiver of his right to enter; 44 Ill. App. 61; but the acceptance of rent accruing after breach of a condition in a lease, with full knowledge of the breach, is a waiver of the right to declare a forfeiture and re-enter; 12 So. Rep. (Ala.) 61. See 6 Misc. Rep. 408.

But the courts will not relieve against a forfeiture which has been wilfully incurred by a tenant who assigns his lease, or neglects to repair or to insure, contrary to his express agreement, or if he exercises a forbidden trade, or cultivates the land in a manner prohibited by the lease; for in all such cases the landlord, if he has reserved a right to re-enter, may at once resume his former possession and avoid the lease; 2 Price 206, n.; 2 Mer. 459; 9 C. & P. 703; 1 Dall. 210; 9 Mod. 112; 3 V. & B. 29; 12 Ves. 291.

Where the landlord is justified in re-entering and taking possession of the premises, the lessee can recover no damages for the loss of the portion of the term, or for injury to the business, but may recover for property destroyed or any unnecessary damage thereto; 73 Wis. 559.

RE-EXAMINATION. A second examination of a thing. A witness may be re-examined, in a trial at law, in the discretion of the court; and this is seldom refused. In equity, it is a general rule that there can be no re-examination of a witness after he has once signed his name to the deposition and turned his back upon the commissioner or examiner. The reason of this is that he may be tampered with, or induced to retract or qualify what he has sworn to; 1 Mer. 180.

RE-EXCHANGE. The expense in-occurred by a bill being dishonored in a foreign country where it is made payable and returned to that country in which it was made or indorsed and there taken up. 11 East 363; 3 Campb. 65. 1 Pars. Notes & B. 648. See Danl. Neg. Inst. 1443.

The loss resulting from the dishonor of a bill of exchange in a country different from that in which it was drawn or indorsed.

It is ascertained by proof of the sum for which a sight bill (drawn at the time and place of dishonor at the then rate of exchange at the place where the drawer or indorser sought to be charged resides) must be drawn in order to realize at the place of dishonor the amount of the dishonored bill and the expenses consequent on its dishonor. The holder may draw a sight bill for such sum on either the drawer or one of the indorsers. Such bill is a "redraft"; Benj. Chalm. Bills, art. 231. See L. R. 3 App. Cas. 148; Byles, Bills 444.

The drawer of a bill is liable for the whole amount of re-exchange occasioned by the circuitous mode of returning the bill through the various countries in which it has been negotiated, as much as for that occasioned by a direct return; 11 East 283; 8 B. & P. 335. And see 10 La. 562; 24 Mo. 65; 8 Wats. 548; 10 Metc. 376; 7 Cra. 500; 4 Wash. C. C. 310; 2 How. 711, 784; 9 Exch. 25; 6 Moo. P. C. 314.

In some states legislative enactments have been made which regulate damages on re-exchange. These damages are different in the several states; and this want of uniformity, if it does not create injustice, must be admitted to be a serious evil. See 23 Pa. 137; 4 Johns. 119; 4 Cal. 395; 3 Ind. 53; 8 Ohio 292; MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

RE-EXTENT. A second extent on lands or tenements, on complaint that the former was partially made, etc. Cowell.

REEF. A large vein of auriferous quartz;—so called in Australia. Hence, any body of rock yielding valuable ore. Webster.

REEVE. An ancient English officer of justice, inferior in rank to an alderman.

He was a ministerial officer appointed to execute process, keep the king's peace, and put the laws in execution. He witnessed all contracts and bargains, brought offenders to justice and delivered them to punishment, took bail for such as were to appear at the county court, and presided at the court or folcmote. He was also called gerefa.

There were several kinds of reeves: as, the shire-gerefa, shire-reeve or sheriff; the heh-gerefa, or high-sheriff; tithing-reeve, burghor or borough-reeve.

REFALO. A word composed of the three syllables re. fa. lo., for recordari facias loquelam. 2 Sell. Pr. 160; 8 Dowl. 614.

REFARE. To bereave, take away, or rob. Cowell.

REFECTION. (Lat. re. agn. facto, to make). In Civil Law. Reparation; re-establishment of a building. Dig. 19. 1. 4. 1.

REFEREE. A person to whom has been referred a matter in dispute, in order that he may settle it. His judgment is called an award. See ARBITRATOR; REFERENCE.

In England. Official referees are paid and permanent officers of the court. Byrne.

REFEREES, COURT OF. In the passage of private bills through the house of commons, the practice was adopted in 1864 of the appointment of referees on such bills, consisting of the chairman of ways and means and not less than three other persons to be appointed by the speaker. The referees were formed into one or more courts, three at least being required to constitute each court, a member in every case being chairman, but receiving no salary. The referees inquired into the proposed works, etc., and reported to the house. The committees of the house on any bill might also refer any question to the referees for their decision. It was also ordered in 1864 that the referees should decide on all petitions as to the right of the petitioner to be heard, i. e. his locus standi. A court of referees was specially constituted for the adjudication of this right, called locus standi. A series of reports of the court of referees on private bills in parliament, called Locus Standi reports, has been published since 1867.

Also, in England, the National Insurance Act of 1911 provides for the appointment of "courts of referees" in connection with that act, and enacts that each such court shall consist of one or more members chosen to represent employers, an equal number chosen to represent workmen, and a chairman appointed by the Board of Trade. Byrne.

REFERENCE. In Contracts. An agreement to submit to certain arbitrators matters in dispute between two or more parties, for their decision and judgment.

In Mercantile Law. A direction or request by a party who asks a credit to the person from whom he expects it, to call on some other person named, in order to ascertain the character or mercantile standing of the former. See PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

In Practice. The act of sending any matter by a court of chancery, or one exercising equitable powers, to a master or other officer, in order that he may ascertain facts and report to the court.

That part of an instrument of writing where it points to another for the matters therein contained. For the effect of such reference, see 1 Pick. 27; 15 id. 66; 17 Mass. 443; 7 Halst. 25; 14 Wend. 619; 10 Conn. 422; 3 Me. 383; 4 id. 14, 471. The thing referred to is also called a reference.

REFERENDARIUS (Lat.). An officer by whom the order of causes was laid before the Roman emperor, the desires of petitioners made known, and answers returned to them. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

A king's chancellor at the time of the conquest. 1 Social England 136. See CANCELLARIUS.

REFERENDUM (Lat.). In International Law. A note addressed by an ambassador to his government, submitting to its consideration propositions made to him touching an object over which he has no sufficient power and is without instructions. When such a proposition is made to an ambassador, he accepts it ad referendum; that is, under the condition that it shall be acted upon by his government, to which it is referred.

In Municipal Law. The submission of a proposed law to the voting citizens of a country for their ratification or rejection. A mode of appealing from an elected body to the whole body of voters.

The laws are first passed upon by the legislature and then referred to the people for their final ratification.

This method of government is supposed to have originated in Switzerland; but it has in effect been employed in the United States since the revolution, in country, city, township, and school district governments, especially in New England. It has also, during the same time, been the practice in the United States for new state constitutions to be submitted to popular vote after they have been prepared by a convention of delegates elected by the people.

The referendum has been introduced in some local communities in Belgium, and is advocated by some of the minor political parties in the United States and in England. The system of submitting liquor laws to the decision of the people concerned, which has long been practised in the United States, is steadily extending and is usually held to be constitutional by the courts; 42 Conn. 364; 54 Ga. 317; 8 La. Ann. 341; 109 Mass. 27; 4 Cal. 385; 72 Pa. 491; 7 Cra. 392.

A correlative of the referendum is known as the initiative, which is an authority given to the people to propose legislation.

An act has recently been passed in Nebraska which enables the voters of cities and towns to adopt the referendum and also the initiative under the following principles: Fifteen per cent. of the voters may propose ordinances by petition, and twenty per cent. of the voters may compel the city council and mayor to submit proposed ordinances to a popular vote. As for ordinances passed by the city council, of its own initiative, they are not to go into effect for thirty days, and if, meantime, five per cent. of the voters petition for the submission of any ordinance so passed to the people, the same must be so submitted and must receive the approval of a majority of the voters before going into effect. A petition from ten per cent. of the voters obliges the city government to submit the proposed ordinance at a special election held within twenty days. Only ordinances relating to the immediate preservation of the public peace and health, and items of appropriations for current expenditures, are excepted from the provisions of the referendum law. 56 Alb. L. J. 33.

See Oberholtzer, The Referendum in America: LOCAL OPTION; DELEGATION; LEGISLATIVE POWER.

REFORM. To reorganize; to rearrange. Thus, the jury "shall be reformed by putting to and taking out of the persons so impanelled." Stat. 3 Hen. VIII. c. 12; Bacon, Abr. Juries (A).

To reform an instrument in equity is to make a decree that a deed or other agreement shall be made or construed as it was originally intended by the parties, when an error or mistake as to a fact has been committed. A contract has been reformed although the party applying to the court was in the legal profession and he himself drew the contract, it appearing clear that it was framed so as to admit of a construction inconsistent with the true agreement of the parties: 1 S. & S. 210; 3 Russ. 424. But a contract will not be reformed in consequence of an error of law; see 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 109; 1 Russ. & M. 418; 1 Chitty, Pr. 124; 159 Pa. 531; nor unless the mistake is mutual: 49 Mo. App. 255; see 142 U. S. 417; and only as between the original parties, or those claiming under them in priority, including purchasers with notice; 81 Me. 525. Equity will not reform instruments which express an intention of the parties at the time they are made, based on the knowledge then possessed by them, though their intention would have been different if they had been better informed; 69 Miss. 891.

A person who seeks to rectify a deed on the ground of mistake must establish in the clearest and most satisfactory manner, that the alleged intention to which he desires it to be made conformable continued concurrently in the minds of all the parties down to the time of its execution; and also must be able to show exactly and precisely the form to which the deed ought to be brought: 4 De G. & J. 265; 68 Hun 299; 16 Or. 412; 142 U. S. 417. See 50 Ark. 179; 31 Fla. 73; 78 Hun 462. Before commencing an action to reform a deed a demand must be made on the grantee; 133 Ind. 19; 77 id. 74. Where the mistake has been on one side only, the utmost that the party desiring relief can obtain is rescission, not reformation; Ad. Eq. 171; 14 N. H. 175. But if there is mistake on one side and fraud on the other, there is a case for reformation; 44 N. Y. 325; Bisph. Eq. § 469; 142 U. S. 417.

A lease will not be reformed in equity, so as to make it conform to another lease, where both leases have the same legal effect, as judicially construed; 159 Pa. 350.

Where a deed does not express the intention of the parties at the time of its execution, equity will afford relief and decree a reformation; 39 U. S. App. 162.

A clerical mistake by one party at the time of executing the contract, unknown to the other, for which the latter is not responsible, will be sufficient ground for such relief and decree; 60 Fed. Rep. 46.

Where a policy of insurance was issued to a receiver of property, there being a contest as to the title to the property held by the receiver, the real owner, having established his title, may have the policy reformed, or, if the intent of the parties appears on its face, no reformation is necessary in order to enable the real owner to maintain an action on it; 7 U. S. App. 835.

The correction of a written instrument for fraud or mistake in its execution requires clear, unequivocal, and convincing evidence; 144 U. S. 154.

Reformation will not be decreed against bona fide purchasers for value; 15 U. S. App. 79.

Where a bid for certain public work contained an error in the amount for which it was offered to do the work, and the bidder sought to rescind his offer, it was held that equity would not reform a written contract unless a mistake is proved to be the mistake of both parties, but may rescind and cancel a contract upon the ground of a mistake of one party as to facts material to the contract; 83 Fed. Rep. 253.

SEE MISTAKE.

REFORM ACT. A name given to the Stat. 2 Wm. IV. ch. 45, passed to amend the representation of the people in England and Wales. This statute introduced extended amendments into the system of electing members of the House of Commons. Abbott.

REFORMATORY. An institution or place in which efforts are made, either to cultivate the intellect or instruct the conscience or improve the conduct where the inmates voluntarily submit themselves to its instruction or discipline or are forcibly detained therein. 49 Conn. 84. See PRISONER.

The most famous reformatory is at Elmira, New York, under the control, for years, of Z. R. Brockway. Its annual reports contain much valuable matter on the subject of criminology.

REFRESHING THE MEMORY. To revive the knowledge of a subject by having a reference to something connected with it.

In the ascertainment of facts of which judges are bound to take judicial notice, as in the decision of matters of law which it is their office to know, they may refresh their memory and inform their conscience from such sources as they deem most trustworthy; 137 U. S. 216; Gresley, Eq. Ev. pt. 8, c. 1; 17 How. 557; 91 U. S. 37; 61 Me. 178. As to witnesses, see MEMORANDUM.

REFUND. To pay back by the party who has received it, to the party who has paid it, money which ought not to have been paid.

On a deficiency of assets, executors and administrators cum testamento annexo are entitled to have refunded to them legacies which they may have paid, or so much as may be necessary to pay the debts of the testator; and in order to insure this they are generally authorized to require a refunding bond. See Bac. Abr. Legacies (H).

REFUNDING BOND. See REFUND.

REFUSAL. The act of declining to receive or to do something.

A grantee may refuse a title, see ASSENT; one appointed executor may refuse to act as such. In some cases, a neglect to perform a duty which the party is required by law or his agreement to do will amount to a refusal.

The word is often used to indicate an option; as, the refusal of a house. See OFFER; CONTRACT.

REFUSE. To deny a request or demand. 113 Ind. 206. See FAIL.

REFUSE MATTER. That which is in fact noisome and has been refused or rejected by the owner as worthless. 65 Conn. 101.

REGALIA. A privilege, prerogative, or right of property pertaining to a sovereign. The regalia includes the power of judicature of life and death, of war and peace, of masterless goods as estrays; of assessments, and of minting money.

In England the term was sometimes applied to things, as the crown and sceptre, etc., and sometimes to the dignity, power, and pecuniary rights of the king. The term differs from sovereignty as being applicable to both things and to rights to things, and also as not being inherent in or inseparable from the sovereign power, for regalia may be alienated, either with or without the consent of parliament. 1 Hall. Int. Law 150.

Some writers divide the royal prerogative into majora and minora regalia, the former including the regal dignity and power, the latter the revenue or fiscal prerogatives of the crown. R. & L. Dict.

Upon the breaking up of the Roman Empire, the princes and cities which declared themselves independent appropriated to themselves those parts in which nature, most rich and liberal, yields extraordinary products. These portions or reserved rights were called regalia. Id.

Also, emblems of royalty, indicia of sovereignty. Abbott.

REGARD, COURT OF. See COURT OF REGARD.

REGARD OF THE FOREST. The oversight or inspection of the forest or the office and province of the regarder, who is to go through the whole forest, and every bailiwick in it, before the holding of the sessions of the forest, or justice-seat, to see and inquire after trespassers, and for the survey of dogs. R. & L. Dict.: Manw.

REGARDANT (French, regardant, seeing or vigilant). A villain regardant was one who had the charge to do all base services within the manor, and to see the same freed of annoyances. Co. Litt. 120; 2 Bla. Com. 28.

REGARDED. See REASONABLY REGARDED.

REGRE INCONSULTO. A writ issued from the sovereign to the judges not to proceed in a cause which may prejudice the crown, until advised. Jenk. Cent. 97.

REGENCY. The authority of the person in monarchical countries invested with the right of governing the state, in the name of the monarch, during his minority, absence, sickness, or other inability.

REGENT. A ruler; a governor. The term is usually applied to one who governs a regency, or rules in the place of another.

In the canon law, it signifies a master or professor of a college. Dict. du Dr. Can. It sometimes means simply a ruler, director, or superintendent; as in New York, where the board who have the superintendence of all the colleges, academies, and schools are called the regents of the University of the state of New York.

REGIAM MAJESTATEM (Lat.). An ancient book purporting to contain the law of Scotland, and said to have been compiled by king David, who reigned 1124-1153. It is not part of the law of Scotland, though it was ordered to be revised with other ancient laws of Scotland by parliaments of 1403 and 1407. Stair, Inst. 12, 508. So Craig, Inst. 1. 8. 11; Scott, Border Antiquities 7, 30; but Erskine, Inst. b. 1, tit. 1, § 13, and Ross 60, maintain its authenticity. It is cited in some modern Scotch cases. 2 Swint. 409; 3 Bell, Hou. L. It is, according to Dr. Robertson, a servile copy of Glanville. Robertson, Hist. Charles V. 262.

REGICIDE (Lat. rex, king, cadere, to kill, slay). The killing of a king, and, by extension, of a queen. Théorie des Loix Criminelles, vol. 1, p. 800.

REGIDOR. In Spanish Law. One of a body, never exceeding twelve, who formed a part of the ayuntamiento, or municipal council, in every capital of a jurisdiction in the colonies of the Indies.

The office of a regidor was held for life; that is to say, during the pleasure of the supreme authority. In most places the office was purchased; in some cities, however, they were elected by persons of the district, called capitulares. 12 Pet. 442, note.

REGIME DOTAL. See DOTAL PROPERTY.

REGIMIENTO. In Spanish Law. The body of regidores, who never exceeded twelve, forming a part of the municipal council, or ayuntamiento, in every capital of a jurisdiction. 12 Pet. 442, note.

REGINA. The queen. English.

REGIO ASSENSU. A writ whereby the sovereign gives his assent to the election of a bishop. Reg. Orig. 294.

REGISTER. A book containing a record of facts as they occur, kept by public authority; a register of births, marriages, and burials.

In England, where there is a state church, which has authority to legislate with respect to parish records, parish records are by law invested with the characteristics of public records: 1 Salk. 281; Stark. Ev. 4th ed. 299. But in the United States where there is no religion established by law, church registers, in the absence of statutory provisions, are not regarded as public records; 10 Allen 161; 16 Mo. 24; 47 Id. 521; 12 How. 472.

Entries in the baptismal register of a church, made by a clergyman in the regular discharge of his duties, are admissible in evidence after his death, though there is no law requiring such records to be kept. Ordinarily such entries are admissible only for the purpose of proving the fact and date of baptism, and not of other matters therein stated, such as the date of the birth of the child; 52 Md. 706; 92 Mass. 161; 3 Wall. 175.

These registers, when admissible, are not, in general, evidence of any fact not required to be recorded in them; 37 Kan. 298; 47 Mo. 521; 51 Hun 639; 61 Mich. 471; 8 Me. 75; 3 Wall. 175. They have sometimes been admitted in evidence as being made by a third person in the discharge of an official duty; 92 Mass. 161; 115 Mass. 167; 53 Md. 708; 8 Wall. 75. See DECLARATIONS.

Statutes have been enacted in several states which give to such records, in a measure, their common-law importance. See 5 Pet. 475; 74 Wis. 349; 37 Kan. 298; 47 Md. 521; 133 Mass. 242.

In Pennsylvania, the registry of births, etc., made by any religious society in the state is evidence, by act of assembly, but it must be proved as at common law; 6 Binn. 416. A copy of the register of births and deaths of the Society of Friends in England, proved before the lord mayor of London by an ex parte affidavit, was allowed to be given in evidence to prove the death of a person; 1 Dall. 2; and a copy of a parish register in Barbadoes, certified to be a true copy by the rector, proved by the oath of a witness, taken before the deputy secretary of the island and notary public, under his hand and seal, was held admissible to prove pedigree, the handwriting and office of the secretary being proved; 10 S. & R. 383. In North Carolina, a parish register of births, marriages, and deaths, kept pursuant to the statute of that state, is evidence of pedigree; 2 Murph. 47. In Connecticut, a parish register has been received in evidence; 2 Root 99. See 15 Johns. 228; 1 Phill. Ev. 305; 1 Curt. 755; 6 Ecol. 452.

The certificate of registry granted to the person or persons entitled thereto, by the collector of the district, comprehending the port to which any ship or vessel shall belong; more properly, the registry itself. For the form, requisites, etc., of certificate of registry, see Acts of Cong. Dec. 31, 1792, 1 Stat. at L. 267, § 9; May 6, 1864, 13 Stat. at L. 69, § 4; Desty, Com. & Nav. § 4153; 3 Kent 141. See 1 Cra. 158; 9 Pet. 682; 19 How. 76; 8 Wheat. 601; 1 Newb.

800: 1 Wash. C. C. 135; 1 Mas. 806; 1 Blatch. & H. 52.

REGISTER, REGISTRAR. An officer authorized by law to keep a record called a register or registry: as, the register for the probate of wills.

REGISTER GENERAL. An officer appointed by the sovereign of England to whom, subject to such regulations as shall be made by a principal secretary of state, the general superintendence of the whole system of registration of births, deaths, and marriages is entrusted. 3 Steph. Com. 234. See REGISTRAR GENERAL.

REGISTER OF PROBATE. In the United States, a public officer in some States who records all wills admitted to probate. Stand. Dict. See REGISTER OF WILLS.

REGISTER OF SHIPS. A register kept by the collectors of customs, in which the names, ownership, and other facts relative to the merchant vessels are required by law to be entered. The register is evidence of the nationality and privileges of an American ship. Rap. & L. Law Dict.

The certificate of such registration, given by the collector to the owner or master of the ship, is also called the "ship's register." Id.

The purpose of a register is to declare the nationality of a vessel engaged in trade with foreign nations, and to enable her to assert that nationality wherever found. It is to be distinguished from the purpose of an enrolment which is to evidence the national character of a vessel engaged in the coasting trade or home traffic, and to enable such vessel to procure a coasting license. 3 Wall. (U. S.) 571.

A certificate of a vessel's registry and proof that she carried the flag of the United States establish a prima facie case of proper registry under the laws of the United States, and of the nationality of the vessel and its owners; 154 U. S. 134.

REGISTER OF WILLS. A register of Probate (q. v.). English.

REGISTER OF WRITS. A book preserved in the English court of chancery, in which were entered, from time to time, all forms of writs once issued. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 25.

It is spoken of as one of the most ancient books of the common law. Co. Litt. 159; Co. 4th Inst. 150; 8 Co. Pref.; 3 Shars. Bla. Com. 138*. It was first printed and published in the reign of Hen. VIII. This book is still an authority, as containing, in general, an accurate transcript of the forms of all writs as then framed, and as they ought still to be framed in modern practice.

But many of the writs now in use are not contained in it. And a variation from the register is not conclusive against the propriety of a form, if other sufficient authority can be adduced to prove its correctness. Steph. Pl. 7, 8.

REGISTERED BOND. One whose negotiability is temporarily withdrawn by a writing thereon that it belongs to a specific person, and by a registry to that effect at a specified office. Cook, St. & Stockh. § 15.

REGISTERED LETTER. A letter is not registered so as to complete service of notice by registered letter until it is numbered as required by the postal laws, although the postmaster has received it properly addressed and given a receipt therefor. 34 L. R. A. (1a.) 466. A registered letter must be delivered by the carrier to the person to whom it is addressed; 4 id. (Neb.) 457.

REGISTER'S COURT. In American Law. A court in the state of Pennsylvania which had jurisdiction in matters of probate.

REGISTRAR. An officer whose business is to write and keep a register.

REGISTRAR GENERAL. In England, the officer at the head of the system under which all births, deaths and marriages in the country are registered. His office was established by the Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836, s. 2. Byrne.

REGISTRARIUS (Lat.). An ancient name given to a notary. In England this name is confined to designate the officer of some court the records or archives of which are in his custody.

REGISTRATION. The word "registration," used in the U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2011, has a general, not a technical, meaning, and indicates any list or schedule containing a list of voters, the being upon which constitutes a prerequisite to vote, unless there is a system of registration described by act of congress, and applied by the act as the only registration of voters under the law. The Delaware assessment lists, made primarily by the assessors of the different hundreds, and completed by the levy courts of the different counties, are such lists, though they contain not only a list of voters, but of other persons besides. The registration of voters intended by the act of congress need not be conclusive evidence that the person registered is qualified to vote; 1 Fed. Rep. 1. This decision was prior to the existence in Delaware of a registration act eo nomine.

In the United States circuit court for South Carolina it was held that the registration laws of that state were null and void as being an unreasonable restriction of the right of suffrage, evidently intended to exclude ignorant persons, especially of the African race, and a violation both of the constitution of the state and of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the constitution of the United States; 67 Fed. Rep. 818. In that case it appeared that in 1882 an act was passed providing that in that year a registration of voters should be made and the books closed to be opened thereafter once a month after the general election in each year until the first of July preceding the general election in November following; but that after the closing of the books each year persons coming of age before election might be registered. Voters receive certificates of registration which must be produced in order to vote and were transferred under different conditions upon removal into another county.

The registration of voters under the Delaware act was held to be so far judicial and not ministerial that a mandamus was refused to restore to the voting list the name of a person stricken off by the board of registration; 1 Marvel 450.

A land registration act went into effect in Massachusetts October 1, 1898. It provides for a court of registration consisting of two judges sitting in Boston, with a right to adjourn to such other place as convenience may require. Examiners of title may be appointed by the judge of registration in each county. Only estates in fee simple can be registered. The act provides for the form of application and the form of notice to be given to the occupants of the land and to adjoining owners, which may be given by mail and by publication. The decree of the court confirming title and ordering registration binds the land and quiets the title thereto. It cannot be opened except within one year in case the registration is obtained by fraud, and not for that reason if an innocent purchaser for value has acquired an interest. The decree is registered in the county. A certificate of registration constitutes the owner's evidence of title. After registration the owner may convey it, etc., as at present, but no voluntary instrument of transfer except a will and a lease for not over seven years binds the land, but operates only as a contract between the parties and as authority for registration. Upon re-registration this certificate is surrendered and a new one issued. The act was drawn by Alfred Hemenway, under an appointment by act of 1897.

See LAND TRANSFER; TORRENS SYSTEM.

REGISTRATION OF BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS. In most states acts have been passed requiring physicians, clergymen, etc., to register all such events with the proper county officer. The validity of these laws has been sustained under the police power; 14 N. W. Rep. (1a.) 202. See REGISTER.

REGISTRATION CERTIFICATE. The "registration certificate" was issued as a means of identifying the voter. His possession of the certificate, though conclusive as to the fact that the person named therein has been registered, will not be conclusive of his right to vote, for, if unknown to the election officers, they may require other proof of his identity. In other words, the "registration certificate" does not mean "vote bearer," unless "bearer" be known to the election officers to be the person named therein. 118 Ky. 690, 82 S. W. 282.

REGISTRATION OF COMPANIES. See REGISTRATION.

REGISTRATION OF DOCUMENTS. See REGISTRATION.

REGISTRATION OF MATTERS OF FACT. See REGISTRATION.

REGISTRUM BREVIUM (Lat.). The name of an ancient book which was a collection of writs. See REGISTER OF WRITS.

REGISTRY. A book, authorized by law in which writings are registered or recorded.

REGNAL YEARS. The years in which a sovereign has reigned.

The following table of the reigns of English and British kings and queens is added, to assist the student in many points of chronology:—

Victoria . . . . .	1837
George V. . . . .	1910

† The Restoration of Charles II. did not take place till 1660, but the regnal year of his reign is always computed from the death of Charles I., disregarding the Commonwealth.

REGNANT. One having authority as a king; one in the exercise of royal authority.

REGRATING. In Criminal Law. Every practice or device, by act, conspiracy, words, or news, to enhance the price of victuals or other merchandise, is so denominated. Co. 3d Inst. 196; 1 Russell, Cr. 169. Whart. Cr. Law 1849. See RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

REGULA. See MAXIMS.

REGULAR CLERGY. Monks who lived according to the rules of their respective houses or societies, in contradistinction to the parochial clergy, who did their duties "in seculo," and hence were called secular clergy. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 387, n.

REGULAR PANEL. The expression "regular panel" means the number of persons who are to constitute the regular attendance of the court during the term as regular jurors; that is, as the "standing jury." 106 Ky. 906, 51 S. W. 788.

REGULAR PROCESS. Regular process is that which has been lawfully issued by a court or magistrate having competent jurisdiction.

When the process is regular, and the defendant has been damnedified, as in the case of a malicious arrest, his remedy is by an action on the case, and not trespass; when it is irregular the remedy is by action of trespass.

If the process be wholly illegal or misapplied as to the person intended to be arrested, without regard to any question of fact, or whether innocent or guilty, or the existence of any debt, then the party imprisoned may legally resist the arrest and imprisonment, and may escape, be rescued, or even break prison; but if the process and imprisonment were in form legal, each of these acts would be punishable, however innocent the defendant might be, for he ought to submit to legal process and obtain his release by due course of law; 1 Chitty, Pr. 637; 5 East 804, 808; 2 Wils. 47; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 810. See ESCAPE; ARREST; ASSAULT; FALSE IMPRISONMENT; MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

REGULATE. To adjust by rule, method, or established mode; to direct by rule or restriction; to subject to governing principles or laws. 10 Neb. 683.

REGULATION. See INTERNATIONAL REGULATION.

REGULATION OF COMMERCE. It is the power to prescribe the rules by which it shall be governed, that is, the conditions upon which it shall be conducted; to determine when it shall be free and when subject to duties or other exactions. The power also embraces within its control all the instrumentalities by which that commerce may be carried on, and the means by which it may be aided and encouraged. 114 U. S. 203. As used in the constitution, transportation being essential to commerce, every obstacle to it, or burden laid upon it, by legislative authority, is regulation; 95 U. S. 470;

109 N. C. 279. See COMMERCE; REGULATE; COMMERCE WITH FOREIGN NATIONS;

REGULATIONS. In an act of Congress, regulations of a department means general rules relating to the subject upon which the department acts, made by the head thereof under some act giving the regulations the force of law. Anderson; 3 Ct. Cl. 42. See NAVY REGULATIONS.

REHABERE FACIAS SEISINAM (Lat. do you cause to regain seisin). When a sheriff in the "habere facias seisinam" had delivered seisin of more than he ought, this judicial writ lay to make him restore seisin of the excess. Reg. Jud. 13, 51, 54.

REHABILITATION. The act by which a man is restored to his former ability, of which he had been deprived by a conviction, sentence, or judgment of a competent tribunal.

REHEARING. A second consideration which the court gave to a cause on a second argument.

A rehearing takes place principally when the court has doubts on the subject to be decided; but it cannot be granted by the supreme court after the cause has been remitted to the court below to carry into effect the decree of the supreme court; 7 Wheat. 58.

Where any judge, who concurred in the decision, thinks proper to have a rehearing, the motion for one will be considered, otherwise it will be denied as of course; 16 U. S. App. 713.

Where the grounds for a rehearing were not brought to the attention of the court at the argument or by brief, permission to reargue will be granted only in extreme cases; 21 U. S. App. 428; and not where the questions have already been fully considered; 27 U. S. App. 290; and not when the ground was not overlooked at the former trial; 34 U. S. App. 45. That a judgment of affirmance was by an equal decision of the judges merely, affords no ground for granting a rehearing; 25 Wend. 256. See PRECEDENT.

The practice in the federal courts is to file a petition for a rehearing which, with the argument in its support, is submitted, without oral argument, for the consideration of the court, which decides whether to have the case reargued or not.

In the federal courts a petition for rehearing must be signed by counsel, and the accompanying affidavits should, by distinct and positive allegation, be made a part of the petition. Neither the petition nor affidavits should be verified before a notary public who is also counsel for petitioner; 85 Fed. Rep. 481.

When a motion for a new trial of an action at law and a petition for rehearing have been denied, equity will not entertain a bill to set the judgment aside on the same grounds alleged in the motion and petition; id. 608.

The refusal of the circuit court to grant a rehearing is not the subject of review; 118 U. S. 697.

Courts, especially in cases of general interest, order a reargument where they are in doubt or where the case was not argued before a full bench. In 71 Pa. 81, eminent counsel not connected with the cause petitioned the court for a reargument on the ground that the judgment was not well considered and that it would unsettle titles to real estate. A reargument was ordered and the former decision was reversed. See REOPENING CASE.

REHYPOTHECATION. See PLEDGE.

REI INTERVENTUS (Lat.). When a party is imperfectly bound in an obligation, he may, in general, annul such imperfect obligation; but when he has permitted the opposite party to act as if his obligation or agreement were complete, such things have intervened as to deprive him of the right to rescind such obligation: these circumstances are the rei inter- ventus; 1 Bell, Com., 5th ed. 328, 329; Burton, Man. 128.

REIMBURSE. To pay back. 88 Pa. 264.

REINSCRIPTION. The law of Louisiana requires a mortgage to be periodically reinscribed in order to preserve its priority. When ten years have elapsed from the date of inscription without reinscription the mortgage is without effect as to all persons whatsoever who are not parties to it; 29 La. Ann. 815. A failure to reinscribe a mortgage within the statutory limits is not remedied or supplied by the pendency of a suit to foreclose it; 80 La. Ann. 1. See 103 U. S. 281; 84 La. Ann. 797; 149 U. S. 505, MORTGAGE.

REINSTATE. To restore to a state from which one has been removed. 86 Ky. 190.

REINSTATEMENT. This term in the law of insurance implies placing the insured in the same condition that he occupied and sustained towards the insurer next before the forfeiture was incurred, and does not imply reinsurance or the making of a new contract or policy of insurance. 110 N. C. 93.

REINSURANCE. Insurance effected by an underwriter upon a subject against certain risks, with another underwriter, on the same subject, against all or a part of the same risks, not exceeding the same amount. In the original insurance, he is the insurer; in the second, the assured. His object in reinsurance is to protect himself against the risks which he has assumed. There is no privity of contract between the original assured and the reinsurer, and the reinsurer is under no liability to such original assured; 3 Kent 237; 1 Phill. Ins. § 78 a, 404; 20 Barb. 468; 23 Pa. 250; 9 Ind. 443; 13 La. Ann. 246. See Beach, Ins. 1283; Pata, Mari. Ins. 301.

In the absence of any usage to the contrary, and of any specific stipulation in the policy, the original insurer may protect himself by reinsurance to the whole extent of his liability; 140 U. S. 565.

REINVESTMENT. Under Civil Code of Kentucky, § 491, "reinvestment" means, real property may be sold for reinvestment of proceeds in other real property. 142 Ky. 499, 134 S. W. 882.

REISSUABLE NOTES. Bank-notes which, after having been once paid, may again be put into circulation.

They cannot properly be called valuable securities while in the hands of the maker, but in an indictment may properly be called goods and chattels; Ry. & M. 218. See 5 Mas. 537; 2 Russ. Cr. 147. And such notes would fall within the description of promissory notes; 2 Leach 1090, 1093.

REISSUE; REISSUED PATENT. See PATENT.

REJECT. To throw away; to discard; to refuse to receive; to refuse to grant; as to reject a prayer or request. 94 Ky. 302, 22 S. W. 318.

REJOINDER. In Pleading. The defendant's answer to the plaintiff's replication. Andr. Steph. Pl. 151.

It must conform to the plea; 16 Mass. 1; 2 Mod. 848; be triable, certain, direct, and positive, and not by way of recital, or argumentative; 1 H. & M.H. 159; must answer every material averment of the declaration; 23 N. H. 193. It must not be double; 6 Blackf. 421; 8 McLean 163; and there may not be several rejoinders to the same replication; 1 How. Miss. 139; 1 Wms. Saund. 337, n.; nor repugnant or insensible. See Co. Litt. 394; Archb. Civ. Pl. 278; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (H).

REJOINING GRATIS. Rejoining within four days from the delivery of the replication, without a notice to rejoin or demand of rejoinder. 1 Archb. P. 280. 817; 10 M. & W. 13. But judgment cannot be signed without demanding; 3 Dowl.

RELATION (Lat. re. back, fero, to bear). In Civil Law. The report which the judges made of the proceedings in certain suits to the prince were so called.

These relations took place when the judge had no law to direct him, or when the laws were susceptible of difficulties: it was then referred to the prince, who was the author of the law, to give the interpretation. They were made in writing, and contained the pleadings of the parties and all the proceedings, together with the judge's opinion, and prayed the emperor to order what should be done. This ordinance of the prince thus required was called a rescript. Their use was abolished by Justinian, Nov. 125.

In Contracts. When an act is done at one time, and it operates upon the thing as if done at another time, it is said to do so by relation: as, if a man deliver a deed as an escrow, to be delivered, by the party holding it, to the grantor, on the performance of some act, the delivery to the latter will have relation back to the first delivery. Termes de la Ley. Again, if a partner be adjudged a bankrupt, the partnership is dissolved, and such dissolution relates back to the time when the commission issued: 3 Kent 33. See Litt. 462; 2 Johns. 510; 15 id. 309; 2 Harr. & J. 151; Fiction.

RELATION, DOCTRINE OF. See DOCTRINE OF RELATION.

RELATIONS. A term which, in its widest sense, includes all the kindred of the person spoken of. It has long been settled that in the construction of wills it includes those persons who are entitled as next of kin under the statute of distribution: 2 Jarm. Wills 661; 54 Me. 291; L. R. 20 Eq. 410; [1894] 3 Ch. 565; 132 N. Y. 338; in the interpretation of a statute, the term was held not to include a stepson; 108 Mass. 352; or a wife; 101 id. 36; 10 Wash. 533; or a brother-in-law; 162 Mass. 448.

A legacy to "relations" generally, or to "relations by blood or marriage," without enumerating any of them, will, therefore, entitle to a share such of the testator's relatives as would be entitled under the statute of distributions in the event of intestacy: 1 Madd. 45; 1 Bro. C. C. 33. The same rule extends to devises of real estate; 1 Taunt. 263. See LEGACY; KINDRED.

Relations to either of the parties, even beyond the ninth degree, have been holden incapable to serve on juries; 3 Chitty, Pr. 795, note c. As to the disqualification of a judge by reason of relationship, see JUDGE. Relationship or affinity is no objection to a witness, unless in the case of husband and wife. See WITNESS.

Next of Kin. The "relations" or "next of kin" of the deceased are those persons who take the personal estate of the deceased under the statutes of distribution. 161 Ky. 19, 170 S. W. 213.

RELATIVE. See RELATIONS.

RELATIVE FACT. A fact having relation to another fact; a minor fact; a circumstance. Burril, Circ. Ev. 121. See RELEVANCY.

RELATIVE IMPOSSIBILITY. See IMPOSSIBILITY.

RELATIVE POWERS. Those which relate to land; so called to distinguish them from those which are collateral to it.

These powers are appendant: as, where a tenant for life has a power of making leases in possession. They are in gross when a person has an estate in the land, with a power of appointment, the execution of which falls out of the compass of his estate, but notwithstanding, is annexed in privity to it, and takes effect in the appointee out of an interest appointed in the appointor. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1980.

RELATIVE RIGHTS. Those to which a person is entitled in consequence of his relation with others; such as the rights of a husband in relation to his wife; of a father as to his children; of a master as to his servant; of a guardian as to his ward. In general, the superior may maintain an action for an injury committed against his relative rights. See 3 Bouvier, Inst. nn. 2377-2396; 8 id. n. 8401; 4 id. nn. 3615-3318; ACTION.

RELATOR. A rehearser or teller. One who, by leave of court, brings an information in the nature of a quo warranto.

At common law, strictly speaking, no such person as a relator to an information is known, he being a creature of the statute of Anne, c. 20. In this country, even where no statute similar to that of Anne prevails, informations are allowed to be filed by private persons desirous to try their rights, in the name of the attorney-general, and these are commonly called relators; though no judgment for costs can be rendered for or against them; 5 Mass. 231; 3 S. & R. 53; 15 id. 127; Ang. Corp. 470. In chancery, the relator is responsible for costs; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4022.

RELAXATION, LETTERS OF. Letters which a debtor might procure and which had the effect to restore him to his former state. Ersk. Prin. 156.

RELEASE. The giving up or abandoning a claim or right to the person against whom the claim exists or the rights to be exercised or enforced.

Releases may either give up, discharge, or abandon a right of action, or convey a man's interest or right to another who has possession of it or some estate in the same. Shepp. Touchst. 320; Littleton 444; Bac. Abr.; Viner, Abr.; Rolle, Abr. In the former class a mere right is surrendered; in the other not only a right is given up, but an interest in the estate is conveyed and becomes vested in the releasee.

An express release is one directly made in terms by deed or other suitable means.

An implied release is one which arises from acts of the creditor or owner, without any express agreement. See Pothier, Obl. nn. 603, 609.

A release by operation of law is one which, though not expressly made, the law presumes in consequence of some act of the releasor; for instance, when one of several joint obligors is expressly released, the others are also released by operation of law; 3 Salk. 298; Hob. 10, 66; 4 Mod. 860; 7 Johns. 207.

Releases of claims which constitute a cause of action acquit the releasee, and remove incompetency as a witness resulting from interest.

Littleton says a release of all demands is the best and strongest release; sect. 506. Lord Coke, on the contrary, says claims is a stronger word; Co. Litt. 291 b.

In general, the words of a release will be restrained by the particular occasion of giving it; 1 Lev. 235; T. Raym. 899. It cannot apply to circumstances of which the party had no knowledge at the time he executed it; and if it be so general as to include matters never contemplated, the party will be entitled to relief; 6 H. & N. 847.

The general words in a release are limited always to the things which were in the contemplation of the parties when the release was given; L. R. 4 H. L. 623.

The word release in an assignment for the benefit of creditors, requiring creditors accepting its terms to execute releases of their claims, was held to include any instrument sufficient to secure the absolute discharge of the debtor as to creditors accepting the terms of the assignment; 17 S. E. Rep. (S. C.) 56. See PREFERENCE.

The reader is referred to the following cases where a construction has been given to the expressions mentioned. A release of "all actions, suits, and demands;" 3 Mod. 277; "all actions, debts, duties, and demands;" id. 1, 64; 8 Co. 150 b; 2 Saund. 6 a; "all demands;" 5 Co. 70 b; 1 Lev. 69; Salk. 578; 2 Rolle 20; 2 Conn. 120; "all actions, quarrels, trespasses;" Dy. 2171, pl. 2; Cro. Jac. 487; "all errors, and all actions, suits, and writs of error whatsoever;" T. Raym. 890; "all suits;" 8 Co. 150; "of covenants;" 5 Co. 70 b.

Where a creditor promised to sign a release of his claim, but afterwards refuses to execute it, the debtor is not released from liability; 158 Pa. 281.

A parol agreement to release a party from liability on a note, unsupported by any consideration, cannot be enforced; 96 Ala. 454. The voluntary payment by a third person of the amount then due on a contract is a sufficient consideration to support a release of the contract; 120 U. S. 256. A release of plaintiff's cause of action, under seal and for a money consideration, is a bar to an action, though fraud in obtaining it be alleged, unless it be shown that the consideration was tendered back before the action was commenced, or that defendant was non compos mentis when he executed the release, and his mental unsoundness prevented him from understanding the transaction; 53 Fed. Rep. 569. Where it is claimed that a release is not effective because of the mental condition of the person who signed it, it raises a question of fact for the jury, as where in an action against a railroad company for injury by reason of negligence, a written release of damages was set up in bar of the action, it was held to be for the jury to say whether he executed it under the influence of great suffering through his injury and in a state approaching unconsciousness caused thereby and by the use of morphine; 158 U. S. 826.

Where one has a right of action against two or more, and covenants with one of them not to sue him, it does not operate as a release of the others, though an express release to him would have that effect; 6 Taunt. 269; L. R. 8 Ex. 81; 4 Ch. App. 208.

A release by a witness where he has an interest in the matter which is the subject of the suit, or release by the party on whose side he is interested, renders him competent; 1 Phill. Ev. 102, and the cases cited in n. a. See Chitty, Bail. 329; 1 Dowl. & R. 361.

The release of one of the joint makers of a note constitutes a release of the other also; 37 W. Va. 15; 17 Mass. 581; but a covenant not to sue one of two joint tortfeasors does not operate as a release of the other from liability; [1892] 2 Q. B. 511.

In Estates. The conveyance of a man's interest or right which he hath unto a thing to another that hath the possession thereof or some estate therein. Shepp. Touchst. 320. The relinquishment of some right or benefit to a person who has already some interest in the tenement, and such interest as qualifies him for receiving or availing himself of the right or benefit so relinquished. Burton, R. P. 15*.

The words generally used in such conveyance are "remised, released, and forever quit-claimed." Littleton § 445.

Releases of land are, in respect of their operation, divided into five sorts: releases that enure by way of passing the estate, or mitter l'estate (q. v.), e. g. a release by joint-tenant to co-joint-tenant, which conveyance will pass a fee without words of limitation. Releases that enure by way of passing the right, or mitter le droit, e. g. by disseisee to disseisor. Releases that enure by enlargement of the estate. A release to the tenant in possession, by him who hath the reversion or inheritance, is said to enlarge his estate and to be equal to an entry and feoffment and to amount to a grant and attornment. The law requires privity of estate, that the releasor have a right, and the releasee such a possession as will make him capable of taking an estate; Bac. Abr. Release (C) 4.

Releases that enure by way of extinguishment: e. g. a lord releasing his seigniorial rights to his tenant.

Releases that enure by way of feoffment and entry: e. g. if there are two disseisors, a release to one will give him a sole estate, as if the disseisee had regained seisin by entry and enfeoffed him. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 325*. See 4 Cruise, Dig. 71; Gilb. Ten. 82; Co. Litt. 284; 8 Brock. 185; 2 Sumn. 487; 8 Pick. 143; 5 Harr. & J. 158; 2 N. H. 402; 10 Johns. 436.

The technicalities of English law as to releases are not generally applicable in the United States. The corresponding conveyance is a quit-claim deed. 21 Ala. N. S. 125.

RELEASE BY WAY OF PASSING AN ESTATE. As where one of two co-parceners releases all her right to the other, this passes the fee simple of the whole. 2 Bl. Com. 324, 325. See RELEASE—IN ESTATE.

RELEASE DEED. A discharge or conveyance of a man's right in lands to another, who has in them some former estate in possession. 19 Conn. *113. See RELEASE.

RELEASEE. A person to whom a release is made.

RELEASEOR. He who makes a release.

RELEGATIO (Lat.). A kind of banishment known to the civil law, which did not take away the rights of citizenship, which deportatio did.

Some say that relegatio was temporary, deportatio perpetual: that relegatio did not take away the property of the exile, and that deportatio did; but these distinctions do not seem always to exist. There was one sort of relegatio for slaves, viz. in agros; another for freemen, viz. in provincias. Relegatio only confined to certain limits; deportatio exiled from a particular place (locus penae). Calvinus, Lex.

RELEGATION. The temporary banishment or exile by special act of parliament. Co. Litt. 133 a.

RELEVANCY. Applicability to the issue joined. That quality of evidence which renders it properly applicable in determining the truth and falsity of the matters in issue between the parties to a suit. See 1 Greenl. Ev. § 49. Two facts are said to be relevant to each other when so related "that according to the common course of events, one either taken by itself or in connection with other facts, proves or renders probable the past, present, or future existence or non-existence of the other." Steph. Dig. Ev. art. 1. This is relevancy in a logical sense. Legal relevancy requires a higher standard of evidentiary force. It includes logical relevancy and demands a close connection between the fact to be proved and the fact offered to prove it. The fact, however, that it is logically relevant does not insure admissibility; it must also be legally relevant; 92 U. S. 281; it is, however, the tendency of modern jurisprudence to admit most evidence logically relevant. Chamb. Best. Ev. 251, n.

RELICTA VERIFICATIONE (Lat.) his pleading being abandoned).

In Pleading. A confession of judgment made after plea pleaded: viz. a cognovit actionem accompanied by a withdrawal of the plea.

RELICTIO (Lat. relinquo, to leave behind). An increase of the land by the retreat or recession of the sea or a river.

Where the sea cut off the sea front of the main land between certain points and afterwards a beach was reformed outside the main land, and divided from it by a bay of navigable water, it was held that the title to the new formation was in the owners of the part cut off. 61 How. Pr. 197. See AVULSION; ALLUVION; LAKE; RIVER; WATERS.

RELIEF. A sum payable by a new tenant, the duty being incident to every feudal tenure, by way of fine or composition with the lord for taking up the estate which was lapsed or fallen in by the death of the last tenant. At one time the amount was arbitrary; but afterwards the relief of a knight's fee became fixed at one hundred shillings. 2 Bla. Com. 65.

In Practice. Satisfaction for a past injury, or the prevention of a threatened injury, or the enforcement or protection of a right.

A plaintiff usually claims not only a particular kind of relief, or specific relief, but also general relief by asking for such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require, and he may ask for alternative relief, that is, he may mention two kinds of relief, and ask for one of them. R. & L. Dict.

RELIEF ASSOCIATION. See RAILROAD RELIEF.

RELIEF, PRAYER FOR. See PRAYER.

RELIGION (Lat. re, back, ligo, to bind). Real piety in practice, consisting in the performance of all known duties to God and our fellow-men. It has been held to include the principle of gratitude to an active power who can confer blessings. 38 L. J. M. C. 5.

The constitution of the United States provides that "congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." See Story, Const. 1870; Miller, Const. 645. Congress cannot pass a law for the government of a territory which prohibits the free exercise of religion; 98 U. S. 162; religion is not defined in the constitution, its meaning there must be ascertained elsewhere. Jefferson was the leader of the movement for placing this clause in the constitution; id. See 13 Hening's Stat. 84; 1 Jeff. Works 45, 79; 2 id. 335; 8 id. 118. This provision and that relating to religious tests (q. v.) are limitations upon the power of congress only; Cooley, Const. 205; perhaps the fourteenth amendment may give additional securities if needful; id. By establishment of religion is meant the setting up of a state church, or at least the conferring upon one church of special favors which are denied to others; 1 Tuck. Bla. Com. App. 296; 2 id. App. n. G. The Christian religion is, of course, recognized by the government, yet not so as to draw invidious distinctions between different religious beliefs, etc.; Cooley, Const. 206. With the exception of these provisions, the preservation of religious liberty is left to the states. The various state guarantees have been summed up by Judge Cooley, who says that under American constitutions the following things are unlawful: 1. Any law respecting the establishment of religion. 2. Compulsory support by taxation or otherwise of religious instruction. 3. Compulsory attendance upon religious worship. 4. Restraints upon the free exercise of religion according to the dictates of conscience. 5. Restraints upon the expression of religious belief. Const. Lim. 573.

The constitutions of most of the states forbid any religious test for holding office; but those of Arkansas, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Texas provide that any one who denies the existence of God is ineligible to office. In Maryland, Kentucky, and Tennessee, by constitution, clergymen are ineligible to civil office. The constitution of New Hampshire permits the legislature to authorize the towns to make adequate provision for the support and maintenance of public Protestant teachers of religion.

A person's religious belief cannot be accepted as a justification for his committing an overt act, made criminal by the law of the land (polygamy); 98 U. S. 145. By the constitution "congress is deprived of all legislative power over mere opinion, but was left free to reach actions which were in violation of social duties or subversive of good order;" id. 164. Where the parents of a sick child omitted to call in medical attendance because of their religious belief that what they did would be effective, they were held not guilty of manslaughter; 10 Cox, Cr. Cas. 531; otherwise, if they had actively starved it to death under like religious belief; id. See 98 U. S. 167.

Where congress appropriated money for a building to be erected on the grounds of a hospital in the District of Columbia, at the discretion of the commissioners, they were restrained from placing it on the grounds of a Roman Catholic institution; 26 Wash. Law Rev. 84; s. c. 11 Harv. Law Rev. 542.

See Cooley, Const. Lim. ch. 18; 32 Am. L. Rev. 541; 29 Am. L. Reg. n. s. 278, 321; Spear, Religion and the State; 5 Revue Leg. 569; 4 Alb. L. J. 221; 10 id. 17.

As to reading the Bible in schools, see SCHOOLS.

See CHARITIES; CHARITABLE USES; POLYGAMY; RELIGIOUS TEST; RELIGIOUS EDUCATION; CHRISTIANITY.

RELIGIOUS BOOKS. Those which tend to promote the religion taught by the Christian dispensation, unless by associated words the meaning is so limited to show that some other form of worship is referred to. 72 Me. 500.

RELIGIOUS CORPORATION. See RELIGIOUS SOCIETY.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION. Questions respecting the religious education of children arise not infrequently by reason of applications to the courts for either restraining or mandatory process intended to control the religious education of children where differences exist between the parents or where the relations of a deceased parent seek to control the direction given to the mind of the child.

Where the husband was a Roman Catholic and the wife a Protestant, and by an antenuptial agreement the children were to be brought up as Roman Catholics, but they had been educated as Protestants, and it appeared that the father gave way to drink and two girls of fifteen and eleven were before the court on the application of the father, who had reformed, to restore them to his charge and educate them at a Papist school, it was held that the children should remain at the Protestant school where they then were; [96] 1 Ch. 740.

Courts or those who have the guardianship of a child after the father's death should have a sacred regard to the religion of the father and, unless under very special circumstances, should see that the child is brought up in his religious faith; L. R. 6 Ch. 539.

Where both father and mother were Roman Catholics and, after the death of the father, a posthumous child was born, and five years after the father's death, the mother became a Protestant and, until the child was about nine years of age, educated it in that faith, the court refused to order the child to be brought up in the father's belief; 8 D. M. & G. 760.

Where no abandonment by the father is shown, the mere fact that a child will be better off or more contented under other people's care will not justify his instruction in a creed other than the father's; but when abandonment is proved, the question turns upon the welfare of the child; L. R. 8 Ch. 822. See 24 Ch. Div. 317. The pecuniary welfare of the child will be weighed together with its moral welfare, but the danger of making the former all important must be guarded against; 4 My. & Cr. 688.

The practice of the courts of having interviews with the children is discouraged as tending to encourage controversial opinions in their tender minds, and because the child is often so nervous that the court can form no useful opinion in that way; [93] 1 Ch. 143. See FATHER; INFANT.

As to reading the Bible in schools, see SCHOOLS.

RELIGIOUS IMPOSTORS. Those who falsely pretend an extraordinary commission from heaven, or terrify and abuse the people with false denunciations of judgment; punishable with fine, imprisonment, and infamous corporal punishment. 4 Br. & H. Com. 71.

RELIGIOUS MEN. Such as entered into some monastery or convent. In old English deeds, the vendee was often restrained from aliening to "Jews or religious men," lest the lands should fall into mortmain. Religious men were civilly deal. Bloant.

RELIGIOUS SOT. See SECTARIAN.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETY. A body of persons associated together for the purpose of maintaining religious worship. In this country they are not ecclesiastical corporations in the English sense, but ordinary private, civil corporations, and as such subject to the ordinary civil jurisdiction; 13 Wall. 879; 33 N. Y. 161; 18 Vt. 511.

The religious corporation and the church are distinct bodies, independent of each other, though one may exist within the other. When a church and society are united, the society commonly owns the property and makes the pecuniary contract with the clergyman, but in many instances a society exists without a church and a church without a society; 18 Gray 329; 9 Cush. 196. Membership in the church is not ordinarily a prerequisite to membership in the corporation, and the excommunication of a member who was trustee of a religious society did not disqualify him from holding that office; 15 Wall. 131. This distinction between the church and the society has been stated by Judge Cooley, who said that the statute under consideration contemplated a church connected with the corporation, though that may not be essential. The church is not incorporated and does not control the property or the membership of the society, while the corporation has nothing to do with the church except to provide for its temporal wants; 51 Mich. 137. The unincorporated ecclesiastical body has power to control and discipline its membership, but the religious corporation has no power to try or disfranchise a corporator for moral delinquency, and in case of an attempt to do so, he has his remedy at law; 53 N. Y. 108.

Their powers, like those of other corporations, are construed with reference to the object of their corporate existence and extend so far, and so far only, as necessary to effectuate them. It has been held that a church corporation the object of whose incorporation was "the more efficient worship of God, the preservation and perpetuation of said church, and the better control and regulation of the property thereof," had no power to charter a steamboat, manage a public excursion, and sell tickets therefor, in order to raise money to pay debts of the church; 63 Ga. 186. In this case the steamboat company had refused to proceed because of an attempt to overload the boat, and it was held that no action would lie against it for breach of contract.

Where there is a dispute over the rights of contending factions of an unincorporated church to the use of the church property, an injunction will lie at the suit of the faction entitled to the property to restrain trespasses thereon by the other faction; 34 S. W. Rep. (Mo.) 875.

Even where the corporation is defective, yet where land has been acquired for the use of a religious society, equity will enforce that use no matter where the legal title is vested or though it be in an individual. So the corporation itself will be compelled by the courts to administer the property upon the trusts attached to it in the grant or donation. "The corporation or society are trustees and can no more divert the property from the use to which it was originally dedicated than any other trustee. If they should undertake to divert the funds, equity will raise some other trustee to administer them and apply them according to the intention of the original donors or subscribers." Sharswood, J., in 67 Pa. 138.

The effect of church divisions upon such trusts is discussed by Mr. Justice Miller in the leading case of Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. 679. He classifies the cases under three heads. 1. Where the property is devoted to some specific form of religious doctrine. 2. Where it is held by a congregation strictly independent of ecclesiastical associations. 3. Where it is merely a subordinate member of some general church organization. Trusts of the first class are enforced in some states, but mainly in jurisdictions which sustain charitable uses. And in such case the limitation must be express and not ambiguous. Kynett, Rel. Corp. 96. Such conveyance might be sustained in New York where the trust is put in the form of a condition which can only be enforced by the grantor; id. See 21 N. Y. 267. Such trusts have been held invalid in several states; 31 Minn. 173; 41 Mich. 730; 64 Md. 333; contra, 2 W. Va. 310; 9 Kan. 502.

In the second class of cases referred to in Watson v. Jones, it was there said that the ordinary rules governing voluntary associations must be applied, and in case of schism, the right to the property must be determined by the principles regulating the government of the association. This view is said to have been uniformly adopted; Kynett, Rel. Corp. 100, and cases cited in note.

As to the third class of societies, the denominational relations are considered by the court, and it is quite settled that if the doctrines of the denomination are abandoned by the majority, they forfeit the right to retain and use the property; id. 100-104, where the cases are collected.

In questions relating to church property, the decision of ecclesiastical tribunals, while accorded great weight, are not binding upon the civil courts, but they will be respected by the latter in all matters of purely ecclesiastical concern, such as the decision of questions of faith within the association, and the government of its individual members; id. 105.

Where land was bought and the title was taken by a bishop, and money was raised by the members of his church to purchase land and build a temple, and the land was dedicated by religious services by the head of the order, and when the bishop left the state he executed a declaration of trust in favor of the church, it was held that the grant was impressed with a trust in favor of the church; 60 Fed. Rep. 937.

In some states, as Illinois, Maryland, and Massachusetts, statutes provide that the appropriate Roman Catholic archbishop shall be and may become a corporation sole.

An allegation that by the regulations of the Catholic Church the bishop of the diocese holds all its property in his own name as trustee, for its benefit, and that each priest assigned to duty is entitled to hold the bishop individually liable for his salary, is not sufficient to sustain an action for salary brought by a priest against his bishop. A trust created by the rules of a church which is not shown to be capable of making contracts, accepting benefits, and compelling performance, is not recognized by law. The courts will not take judicial notice of the nature and powers of a church, so far as its civil rights and duties are concerned, in the absence of averment or proof upon the subject. Where such a question has been submitted to an ecclesiastical tribunal in the church, its decision, adverse to the claim, is a bar to an action therefor; 18 N. Y. L. J. 1013 (C. of App. N. Y., March 1, 1898).

A bishop is not liable to a priest for his salary; both are fellow-servants of the same church; 46 Mich. 457. Those who deal with an unincorporated church must trust the performance of civil obligations to the honor and good faith of its members; 41 Mich. 737.

The decision of an ecclesiastical tribunal is conclusive as to matters of discipline; and as to property rights it is said that the courts will treat the determination of the highest tribunal in the church as controlling; 13 Wall. 679; 54 N. Y. 551.

A priest necessarily subjects his conduct, in that capacity, to the laws and customs of his church; and in that respect, when his case has been heard according to the prescribed forms, the decision of the tribunals of the church will be respected by the courts; 149 N. Y. 401, 414; 98 Pa. 213; 58 Ill. 509.

In religious bodies all matters of faith and internal government will be left to the decision of the bodies themselves; 104 Pa. 493; 42 Minn. 508; 5 Del. Ch. 573; 156 Pa. 119; 146 Ill. 428. But where these decisions violate the law of the land, or their own law; 89 Pa. 477; courts will examine them; 36 Neb. 564; after the ecclesiastical remedies have been exhausted; 58 N. W. Rep. (Mich.) 834.

If property rights are involved, courts will assume jurisdiction; 163 Pa. 280; 33 N. J. L. 162; L. R. 1 Sc. & Div. App. 568; and the office of priest; 90 Pa. 477; or vestryman; 68 Cal. 248; involves a property right.

RELIGIOUS TEST. The constitution of the United States declares that "no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States." This clause was introduced for the double purpose of satisfying the scruples of many persons who feel an invincible repugnance to any religious test or affirmation, and to cut off forever every pretence of any alliance between church and state in the national government. Story, Const. § 1841. See RELIGION.

RELIGIOUS USE. See CHARITABLE USES.

RELINQUISHMENT. In Practice. A forsaking, abandoning, or giving over a right: for example, a plaintiff may relinquish a bad count in a declaration, and proceed on a good; a man may relinquish a part of his claim in order to give a court jurisdiction.

RELIQUA. The remainder or debt left upon balancing an account.

RELOCATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. A renewal of a lease on its determination on like terms as before. It may be either express or tacit; the latter is when the tenant holds over with the knowledge and without objection of the landlord. MacKelday, Civ. Law § 379.

REMAINDER. The remnant of an estate in land, depending upon a particular prior estate created at the same time and by the same instrument and limited to arise immediately on the determination of that estate and not in abridgment of it. 4 Kent 187. See Will. Real P. 282; Chall. Real P. 69.

A contingent remainder is one which is limited to an uncertain or dubious person, or which is to take effect on an event or condition which may never happen or be performed, or which may not happen or be performed till after the determination of the preceding particular estate.

A vested remainder is one by which a present interest passes to the party, though perhaps to be enjoyed in future, and by which the estate is invariably fixed to remain to a determinate person after the particular estate has been spent.

There are four classes of contingent remainders. 1. Where the remainder depends on a contingent determination of the preceding estate, and it remains uncertain whether the use or estate limited in future will ever vest. 2. Where the contingency on which the remainder is to take effect is independent of the determination of the preceding estate and must precede the remainder. 3. Where the condition upon which the remainder is limited is certain in event, but the determination of the particular estate may happen before it. 4. Where the person to whom the remainder is limited is not ascertained or not in being. 4 Kent 207, quoting Fearn, Cont. Rem.

They are divided by Blackstone into two kinds. 1. Remainders limited to take effect to a dubious or uncertain person, or 2. Upon a dubious or uncertain event; and by Lord Ch. J. Willes into, 1. Where the person to whom the remainder was limited is not in esse. 2. Where the courts ment of the remainder depended on some matter collateral to the determination of the particular estate; Willes 327; 4 Kent 207, and note, where the classification of Blackstone is approved.

There are exceptions to the third and fourth classes of contingent remainders, as enumerated by Fearn, as, a limitation for a long term of years with remainder over gives a vested remainder; and where one takes an estate of freehold and an immediate remainder is limited thereon in the same instrument to his heirs in fee or in tail, the remainder is immediately executed in possession and he becomes seized in fee or in tail. 4 Kent 209. See SHELLEY'S CASE, RULE IN.

The rule that where there is a possibility upon a possibility, the remainder is void; 2 Co. 51; is said to be obsolete; 4 Kent 206, n.; 2 H. L. Cas. 186.

See CONTINGENT REMAINDER; CROSS-REMAINDER; EXECUTORY DEVISE; LIMITATION; REVERSION.

REMAINDER-MAN. One who is entitled to the remainder of the estate after a particular estate carved out of it has expired. Will. Real P. 290.

REMAINS UNPAID. The words "remains unpaid" when used in a contractor's bond apply only to claims where payment has been demanded and either refused or neglected for an unreasonable length of time. 162 Ky. 632, 172 S. W. 1072.

REMAND. When a prisoner is brought before a judge on a habeas corpus, for the purpose of obtaining his liberty, the judge hears the case, and either discharges him or not: when there is cause for his detention, he remands him.

REMANDING A CAUSE. The sending it back to the same court out of which it came, for the purpose of having some action on it there. March 100.

REMANENT PRO DEFECTU EMPTORUM (Lat. remanet, they remain, pro defectu, through lack, emptorum, of buyers). The return made by the sheriff to a writ of execution when he has not been able to sell the property seized, that the same remains unsold for want of buyers; in that case the plaintiff is entitled to a venditioni exponas. Com. Dig. Execution (C 8).

REMANET (Lat.). In Practice. The causes which are entered for trial, and which cannot be tried during the term, are remanets. 1 Sell. Pr. 484; 1 Phillips, Ev. 4.

REMEDIAL. That which affords a remedy: as, a remedial statute, or one which is made to supply some defects or abridge some superfluities of the common law. 1 Bla. Com. 86. The term remedial statute is also applied to those acts which give a new remedy. Esp. Pen. Act. 1. See Wilberf. Stat. L. 281.

REMEDY. The means employed to enforce a right or redress an injury.

Remedies for non-fulfilment of contracts are generally by action; see ACTION; ASSUMPSIT; COVENANT; DEBT; DETINUE; or in equity, in some cases, by bill for specific performance. Remedies for the redress of injuries are either public, by indictment, when the injury to the individual or to his property affects the public, or private, when the tort is only injurious to the individual. See INDICTMENT; FELONY; MERGER; TORTS; CIVIL REMEDY.

Remedies are preventive which seek compensation, or which have for their object punishment. The preventive, or removing, or abating remedies may be by acts of the party aggrieved or by the intervention of legal proceedings: as in the case of injuries to the person or to personal or real property, defence, resistance, recaption, abatement of nuisance, and surety of the peace, or injunction in equity, and perhaps some others. Remedies for compensation may be either by the acts of the party aggrieved, or summarily before justices, or by arbitration, or action, or suit at law or in equity. Remedies which have for their object punishments or compensation and punishments are either summary proceedings before magistrates, or indictment, etc.

Remedies are specific or cumulative: the former are those which can alone be applied to restore a right or punish a crime: for example, where a statute makes unlawful what was lawful before, and gives a particular remedy, that is specific, and must be pursued, and no other; Cro. Jac. 644; 1 Salk. 45; 2 Burr. 803. But when an offence was antecedently punishable by a common-law proceeding, as by indictment, and a statute prescribes a particular remedy, there such particular remedy is cumulative, and proceedings may be had at common law or under the statute; 1 Saund. 134, n. 4.

In a very large number of cases there are concurrent remedies the resort to one of which does not bar the other. This is particularly true where there is a legal and an equitable remedy with respect to the same subject-matter. For example, a bill in equity against the holder of a note to recover possession of it, and against makers for the balance due on it, may be maintained, pending an action at law against the holders and makers to recover from the latter the balance due; and where the action at law failed on the ground that the plaintiffs were not in possession, the judgment did not bar the proceeding in equity; 180 Mass. 46.

The maxim ubi jus ibi remedium has been considered so valuable that it gave occasion to the first invention of that form of action called an action on the case; 1 Sm. Lead. Cas. 473. The novelty of the particular complaint alleged in an action on the case is no objection, provided there appears to have been an injury to the plaintiff cognizable by law; 2 Wils. 146; 3 Term 68; Willes 577; 2 M. & W. 518.

There is an important distinction to be considered in connection with the construction and effect of statutes, between those which create rights, and those which afford remedies. This distinction has an important effect upon the legislative power, with respect to many subjects constantly involved in the question whether an act is obnoxious to the provision of the federal constitution against impairing the obligation of contracts, under which title the subject is discussed and to which reference should be made. The distinction is also important in many questions merely of state legislation. "The remedies which one legislature may have prescribed for the redress of private wrongs, a subsequent legislature can change or modify at pleasure, and make the new remedy applicable to pending controversies, provided a substantial or adequate remedy is left, and provided, further, that the legislature is not prohibited from making the new remedy applicable to pending suits by some provision of the organic law. . . . It is true that the courts have, on some occasions, refused to apply statutes which dealt with the remedy for the redress of private grievances to existing controversies, and have held them solely applicable to actions thereafter brought. But it will be found, we think, on an examination of most of this class of cases, that the refusal to apply to existing suits statutes which were plainly applicable thereto, and which merely changed or modified the course of procedure, was based either on the ground that, if so applied, they would operate unfairly, and cause loss or inconvenience to the parties, or on the ground that the right involved had become so far established by acts done and performed in reliance on the prior law, and its continuance in force, that it would savor of injustice to take away such right by making the new law applicable to the pending controversy;" 83 Fed. Rep. 643, where it was held that a statute giving two new trials as of right in ejectment suits conferred not a vested right protected by constitutional guaranties, but a mere privilege pertaining to the remedy, which may be legally taken away by the legislature, as to pending suits, except in cases wherein a verdict is standing which a party is entitled to have set aside when the act takes effect. See, also, 4 Colo. 162; 4 Ore. 119; 23 Wend. 482; 68 Tex. 87; RETROSPECTIVE; EX POST FACTO LAW.

REMEDY. See PROVISIONAL REMEDY.

REMEMBRANCE, KING'S. One of the three officers anciently in the English Exchequer. The King's Remembrancer performed duties connected with recoveries of penalties and debts due to the crown; he kept in his office the documents relating to the passing of lands to and from the crown; and he had functions in connection with English Bills. The Queen's Remembrancer Act, 1859 provided that he should cease to exist as a separate officer, and that he should be a Master of the Court of Exchequer. Under the Judicature Act, 1873, he was attached to the Supreme Court, and under the Judicature Act, 1879 he was transferred to the Central Office and made a Master of the Supreme Court. His duties as King's Remembrancer now consist mainly of certain functions connected with the selection of sheriffs and swearing in of the Lord Mayor of London, the trial of the Pyx and acknowledgments of homage for crown lands. Byrne.

REMISE, RELEASE, AND QUIT-CLAIM. The ordinary effective words in a release. These words are, in this country, sufficient to pass the estate in a primary conveyance; 7 Conn. 230; 24 N. H. 460; 21 Ala. N. S. 125; 7 N. Y. 422. Remise is a French word synonymous with release. See QUIT-CLAIM.

REMISSION (Lat. re, back, mitto, to send).

In Civil Law. A release of a debt. It is conventional when it is expressly granted to the debtor by a creditor having a capacity to alienate; or tacit, when the creditor voluntarily surrenders to his debtor the original title, under private signature constituting the obligation. La. Civ. Code, art. 2195.

Forgiveness or pardon of an offence. It has the effect of putting back the offender into the same situation he was before the commission of the offence. Remission is generally granted in cases where the offence was involuntary or committed in self-defence. Pothier, Fr. C. v. sect. 7, art. 2, § 2.

At Common Law. The act by which a forfeiture or penalty is forgiven. 10 Wheat. 246.

REMIT. To annul a fine or forfeiture. This is generally done by the courts where they have a discretion by law: as, for example, when a juror is fined for non-attendance in court, after being duly summoned, and, on appearing, he produces evidence to the courts that he was sick and unable to attend, the fine will be remitted by the court.

In Commercial Law. To send money, bills, or something which will answer the purpose of money.

To send back, as to remit a check. 66 Hun 543.

REMITTANCE. In Commercial Law. Money sent by one merchant to another, either in specie, bill of exchange, draft, or otherwise.

REMITTEE. A person to whom a remittance is made. Story, Bailm. § 75.

REMITTER. To be placed back in possession.

When one having a right to lands is out of possession, and afterwards the freehold is cast upon him by some defective title, and he enters by virtue of that title, the law remits him to his ancient and more certain right, and, by an equitable fiction, supposes him to have gained possession under it; 3 Bla. Com. 190; Com. Dig. Remitter.

REMITTIT DAMNA (Lat. he releases damages). An entry on the record by which the plaintiff declares that he remits the damages or a part of the damages which have been awarded him by the jury.

In some cases a misjoinder of action may be cured by the entry of a remitter damna; Chitty, Pl. 207.

REMITTITUR DAMNUM. The act of the plaintiff upon the record, whereby he abates the excess of damages found by the jury beyond the sum laid in the declaration. See 1 Saund. 235, n. 6; 4 Conn. 109. It cannot be filed by one of several plaintiffs, and where the widow of one killed by the negligence of a railroad company brought an action for damages on behalf of herself and her children and the parents of the deceased, a remitter filed by the widow, reducing the judgment on behalf of each claimant, was held to be invalid and a new trial was ordered; 133 U. S. 369.

REMITTITUR OF RECORD. After a record has been removed to the supreme court and a judgment has been rendered, it is to be remitted or sent back to the court below, for the purpose of re-trying the cause, when the judgment has been reversed, or of issuing an execution when it has been affirmed. The act of so returning the record, and the writ issued for that purpose, bear the name of remitter.

REMITTOR. A person who makes a remittance to another.

REMONSTRANCE. A petition to a court or deliberative or legislative body, in which those who have signed it request that something which is in contemplation to perform shall not be done.

REMOTE. At a distance; afar off. See CAUSA PROXIMA; MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES. Under what are known as the removal acts, provision is made by federal statutes for the removal of causes in the state courts to the federal courts in certain cases.

The legislation on the subject begins with the Judiciary Act of 1789, which provided for the removal of suits commenced in the state courts against aliens, or citizens of other states, where the matter in dispute exceeded $500; 1 Stat. L. 73. This act continued in force, being substantially included in the revised statutes (§ 639), until 1875, when the jurisdiction was greatly enlarged; 18 Stat. L. 470; 3 Woods 397. The same section also provided for the removal of suits between citizens of one state claiming lands under grants of different states; 1 Stat. L. 73; and this act was also substantially included in the revised statutes (§ 647), and also in the act of 1887, with changes as to the jurisdictional limit, the party who might petition for removal, and the state from which the grant must be derived.

The act of 1838, occasioned by the nullification laws in South Carolina, provided for the removal of proceedings against federal revenue officers; 4 Stat. L. 633. This act was included in the revised statutes (§ 643), and with some extension of its scope is still in force, not having been repealed expressly or by implication by the act of 1875; 105 U. S. 636; and being excepted from repeal by the act of 1887; 25 Stat. L. 433. The act of 1863 related in terms to certain cases arising out of the civil war and has no subsequent force or effect. Several acts were passed during the reconstruction period, which were consolidated in the revised statutes, §§ 641, 642, relating to the removal of causes in which there was a denial of civil rights either by the action or non-action of the judicial tribunals of the state. This act is expressly saved from repeal by the act of 1887. The act of 1886 was one relating to procedure merely, and authorized the removal of a separable part of a cause by one non-resident defendant joined with a resident; 14 Stat. L. 306. This was substantially covered by Rev. St. § 639, but was repealed by the act of 1875 and not revived by that of 1887. The act of 1876 (14 Stat. L. 558), subsequently included in Rev. St. § 639, authorized the removal of causes upon an affidavit of prejudice or local influence. This was not repealed by the act of 1875 (113 U. S. 78), but was repealed and supplied by that of 1887; 142 id. 459. See infra. The act of 1868 authorized the removal of suits against federal corporations other than banks; 15 Stat. L. 227; Rev. St. § 640; but this was repealed by the act of 1887. The act of 1872 authorized the removal of personal actions brought by an alien against civil officers of the United States; 17 Stat. L. 44; Rev. St. § 644. Subject to the change in the jurisdictional amount, this act is not expressly, and probably not impliedly, repealed by the act of 1887.

The general act of 1875 was one largely extending the federal jurisdiction and the right of removal; 18 Stat. L. 470; and the result of it was such an overcrowding of the dockets of the federal courts as to induce the passage of the very restrictive act of 1887, which is now in force. The act of 1887 is generally considered to have been framed for the purpose of reorganizing the circuit courts of the United States and its operation is practically to repeal prior legislation on the subject, except some special acts of limited scope, and to substitute this act for pre-existing legislation as to the federal law on the subject of the removal of causes. The act of 1887 was supplemented by the act of August 13, 1888; 25 Stat. L. 433, which was passed for the purpose of correcting many errors and ambiguities in the act of 1887. As thus amended, the act gives to the circuit courts of the United States original concurrent jurisdiction of all civil suits where the matter in dispute exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of $2,000. In certain classes of cases there is a right to remove independently of amount; such as criminal cases and those civil actions touching matters not capable of a reduction to a pecuniary basis.

In determining whether an amount in dispute exceeds $2,000, the plaintiff's demand, unless colorable, must furnish the rule, but where the law does give the rule, the legal cause of action, and not the plaintiff's demand, must be regarded; 85 Fed. Rep. 4. See JURISDICTION.

Where the main controversy is removed the ancillary proceedings go with it, without respect to the amount involved; 79 Fed. Rep. 637; 137 U. S. 868.

The act of 1887 authorizes the removal from the state courts of the following classes of suits:

1. Suits at law or in equity arising under the constitution or laws or treaties of the United States.
2. Any other suits of which the circuit courts of the United States have jurisdiction under the act.
3. Any suits in which there is a controversy wholly between citizens of different states, and which can be fully determined as between them.
4. Any suit pending in a state court in which the defendant, being a citizen of another state, shall make it appear to the circuit court that from prejudice or local influence he will not be able to obtain justice in the state court.

In all these cases the jurisdictional limit of $2,000 is applicable. It was at first doubted whether this was so in cases removed on the ground of prejudice or local influence, and there were decisions to the effect that the limitation of amount did not apply in those cases; 32 Fed. Rep. 673; 85 Fed. Rep. 629; 41 Fed. Rep. 449; but it was finally settled by the supreme court that the limitation applies in this as in other cases; 137 U. S. 451. See 22 U. S. App. 707; 42 Fed. Rep. 420.

The proceeding for removal is by petition filed in this state court, upon which an order is made, if the case is within the act, directing the removal, upon the filing of a bond, with surety, for entering a copy of the record in the circuit court, where the case proceeds as if originally commenced therein; if improperly removed it may be remanded to the state court and there proceeded with. The proceedings under the act of 1887 are generally of the same character as those under the preceding acts, and, as a rule, the decisions under the latter are applicable, with the exception, of course, of cases relating to the construction of acts repealed and not supplied by subsequent legislation.

The removal acts are not penal and therefore not subject to any rule of strict construction; they are not in derogation of any right to a trial in a state court, as there is no such right; the rule of construction is that applied to other statutes giving jurisdiction; 8 Fed. Rep. 650; but the act of 1887 is to be construed with reference to its evident restrictive intent, and more strongly against one seeking to avoid its requirements; 32 id. 497. The right to remove is no more a vested right than the right to trial in the state court, and may therefore be taken away at will by congress; id. 708.

The cognizance over cases removed to the federal court has been referred to the appellate jurisdiction; on the ground that the suit is not instituted in that court by original process; 1 Wheat. 804; but this jurisdiction has been more accurately characterized as "original jurisdiction acquired indirectly by a removal from the state court;" 5 Blatchf. 336; 6 id. 362. The validity of the legislation on this subject has been repeatedly affirmed; 92 U. S. 10; 100 id. 257, 303; 77 N. C. 530; 28 Ohio St. 208. And it has been further decided that when the terms upon which the right is given have been complied with, the right of removal cannot be defeated by state legislation; 20 Wall. 445. It has been said that a state has the right to impose conditions, not in conflict with the constitution or the laws of the United States, on the transaction of business within its territory by a foreign corporation, or having given a license, to revoke it with or without cause; and that it may therefore require foreign corporations to forego their right of removal, or cease to do business within the state; 94 U. S. 535; 40 Wis. 220.

But in 121 U. S. 186, it was said that the point decided in 94 id. 435, was expressly limited to the principle that an injunction would not be granted to restrain the action of state officers in such case; and it is settled that any legislation by the states intended to defeat the right of removal or to require from foreign corporations a stipulation in advance that they will not exercise it, is unconstitutional and void; id.; 146 id. 202; 97 Ky. 238; 32 Ohio St. 468; or by a state law providing a special remedy in its own courts; 3 Wall. Jr. 252; nor can the right of removal be defeated by agreement of parties; 6 Pet. 41; 10 Wall. 415; Fed. Cas. No. 12. 90; 6 Gray 192; 56 Me. 521. See JURISDICTION.

Formerly the right of removal was given to either party without regard to the position occupied as plaintiff or defendant; 100 U. S. 457; but under the act of 1887 this right is in most cases given to the defendant only, the exception being where citizens of the same state claim land under grants from different states and the defendant must be a non-resident; 148 U. S. 663; but a case is not removable from the state court on the ground of citizenship, unless both at the commencement of the action, and also when the removal is asked, the defendants are citizens of a state other than the one of which the plaintiff is a citizen; 130 U. S. 230; 144 id. 568; 132 id. 267. Some question has arisen as to which party is to be considered the plaintiff in proceedings for the exercise of the right of eminent domain, and if, by local practice, the landowner is the plaintiff, he cannot remove; 50 Fed. Rep. 637; 54 id. 545.

Where several are sued as partners and only one has been served, he is not precluded from removal by the non-joinder of the others in the removal proceedings; 84 id. 413. Where one may sue either one of two parties and he chooses to sue both, he may do so, though his motive in joining them is to prevent a removal to a federal court; 85 Fed. Rep. 876.

A suit between a state and citizens of another state cannot be removed on the ground of citizenship; 117 U. S. 430; 155 id. 432; 65 N. C. 714; 9 Ohio C. C. 21; 85 Fed. Rep. 870. Corporations existing by virtue of acts of congress may remove to the federal courts actions brought against them in the state courts, on the ground that they are "suits arising under the laws of the United States;" 76 Fed. Rep. 468.

The diversity of citizenship at the commencement of the action must appear from the petition; 130 U. S. 230; 137 U. S. 61.

Application for removal must be before the plea is due; and this means at or before the time when the defendant is required by the laws of the state to answer or plead to the merits; 82 Fed. Rep. 15; and the time is not extended by delay in taking judgment or default for want of plea; 133 U. S. 238; nor can it be by stipulation of the parties or by the discretionary action of the judge in a particular case; 80 Fed. Rep. 945.

All the facts essential to federal jurisdiction must appear on the record; 22 U. S. App. 707. They must appear from the plaintiff's statement where that is the ground of removal, and cannot be supplied by statement in the petition for removal or subsequent pleadings; 133 U. S. 432, 439; 163 id. 490.

If a cause removed is not remanded when it might be, and proceeds without objection to judgment, the latter remains in force until vacated; 123 U. S. 552. One who petitions for or consents to removal cannot afterwards object to it as not asked for in time; 156 U. S. 335. If a cause is removed and the circuit court decides it has no jurisdiction, it remands and does not dismiss; 149 U. S. 452.

Where the state court denies the motion for removal but the record is nevertheless filed in the circuit court, which proceeds to a hearing and then remands, the order refusing removal works no prejudice, and the error, if any, is immaterial; 160 U. S. 556.

Actual removal subjects the defendants to the jurisdiction of the federal court and is a waiver of privileges claimed by pleas in abatement, but the mere filing a petition in the state court is not a waiver of exception to its jurisdiction; 13 U. S. App. 222.

An order of the circuit court remanding a case to a state court is not reviewable by the supreme court by any direct proceeding; 140 U. S. 117; 169 U. S. 92; 160 id. 556. The act of 1887 takes away the power of the supreme court to relieve by mandamus when a case removed is improperly remanded; 137 U. S. 451; and when the state court asserts jurisdiction after a proper application for removal, the question is not waived by the party entitled to the removal by reason of his appearing and contesting the matter in dispute; 19 Wall. 214; 100 U. S. 457; 106 id. 118; 112 id. 12. He may take an appeal, should the decision be against him, to the highest court of the state, save the question of removal on the record, and failing there, to the supreme court of the United States; 118 U. S. 43; 104 id. 5. In the event of his obtaining a decision in favor of removal there, the judgment of the state court will be reversed and an order made to transfer the case to the circuit court for trial on the merits; 92 U. S. 10. If a cause be improperly removed and the circuit court entertains jurisdiction improperly, its judgment will be reversed by the supreme court with directions to the circuit court to remand the same to the state court; 20 Wall. 117.

The denial by a state court of an application to amend a petition for removal is not a denial of a right secured by the constitution of the United States; 157 U. S. 370.

When a suit over which a state court has full jurisdiction in equity is removed to a circuit court of the United States on the ground of diverse citizenship, and it appears that the courts of the United States have no jurisdiction in equity over such a controversy, the cause should be remanded to the state court, instead of dismissing it for want of jurisdiction; 149 U. S. 451.

A bill in equity to reach partnership property and set aside judgments confessed by fraud, presented a single controversy as to all defendants and could not be removed by one for diversity of citizenship; 133 U. S. 571; so also of a bill to prevent the payment of county bonds alleged to be invalid where some bondholders were citizens of the same state with the plaintiffs and others who sought to remove of a different state; 188 U. S. 571; so of a bill to recover possession of town bonds where the bailee is a necessary party and a citizen of the same state; 151 U. S. 56. One of two corporations sued jointly in a state court for tort, though pleading severally, cannot remove the case on the ground of a separable controversy; 132 U. S. 599; so of a complaint against a corporation and its agents individually for damages for polluting a stream, and seeking a remedy against them jointly, though they answer separately with separate defenses; 118 U. S. 264. To remove upon the ground of separable controversy, the case must be capable of separation into two or more independent suits, one of which is wholly between citizens of different states in the sense that it may be fully determined as between them without the presence of the other parties to the record; 19 U. S. App. 618; 140 U. S. 406; see 151 id. 368; but separate defenses do not create separate controversies within the meaning of the removal act; 132 U. S. 571; 118 id. 596; and a defendant cannot make an action several which plaintiff elects to make joint; 118 U. S. 596; 144 id. 527.

The right of removal under R. S. § 641, supra, is authorized only upon petition setting forth infractions of the 14th amendment to the constitution previous to the trial and final hearing of the cause, and has no applicability to those occurring after the trial or final hearing has commenced. This section was drawn only with reference to state action, and has no reference to individual violations of rights; 100 U. S. 313. The right of removal under section 641 of the revised statutes exists only in the special cases mentioned in it, and in the absence of the denial or inability to enforce in the judicial tribunals of the state the equal civil rights of citizens, does not embrace cases in which a right is denied by judicial action during trial, or in the sentence or mode of its execution; 162 U. S. 585, where it was held, following 103 id. 370, that a removal was not authorized by the exclusion of negroes because of their race from service on grand juries.

A suit cannot be removed on the ground of prejudice or local influence, unless all the opposing parties are citizens of the state in which suit was brought, which state must also be other than that of which the petitioners are citizens; 118 U. S. 54; 119 id. 536; or under the act of 1887, where there is no separable controversy, and in such case the petition and affidavit must show facts, not mere conclusions; 19 U. S. App. 300. If the petition is filed by the final hearing it is in time; 129 U. S. 688. The motion cannot be made ex parte; 59 Fed. Rep. 209; 112 N. C. 396. The application is too late after a third trial in the state court; 142 U. S. 459; it may be at any time before the first trial; 53 Fed. Rep. 990; 54 id. 7. The matter in dispute in a case removed for prejudice, etc., must exceed $3,000; 137 U. S. 451; 23 U. S. App. 707; 30 Neb. 161; though it was at first a matter of some controversy whether the jurisdictional limit of amount applied to these cases, and there were decisions that it did not; 82 Fed. Rep. 673; 88 id. 539; 41 id. 448. In such case the defendant should obtain an order from the federal court for the removal, file that order in the state court, and take from it a transcript which should be filed in the federal court; 143 U. S. 235. All issues of fact upon petition for removal for prejudice or local influence must be tried in the circuit court; 122 U. S. 518.

In cases under Rev. St. § 643, the jurisdiction of the state court is taken away only after the petition for removal is filed in the circuit court and a writ of certiorari of habeas corpus cum causa issued and served; 146 U. S. 107.

A motion under a state statute as to corporations, for executions against a stockholder, cannot be removed; 5 Dill. 228. Nor can an appeal under a state law from assessment of taxes; 135 U. S. 467; or a writ of habeas corpus (under act of 1875); 115 U. S. 487.

Proceedings in a probate court to determine whether the property of a deceased person is separate or community property, cannot be removed to a federal court, though the opposing parties are citizens of different states. The federal courts will not interfere with the custody of the estate of a deceased person by the state probate court in which proceedings are pending for administration; 80 Fed. Rep. 949. A proceeding by mandamus to compel the register of the transfer of stock may be removed; id. 499; but not one on a plea which raises the issue of title to an office; 29 La. Ann. 399; nor an action in the nature of quo warranto to determine the title to office of presidential electors; 8 S. C. 382. Suits by attachment may be removed; 5 Blatchf. 107; 2 Curt. C. C. 212; ejectment suits; 3 Wall. Jr. 258, 263; a bill in equity to reform an insurance policy; 6 Blatchf. 208; a suit to annul a will; 92 U. S. 10; a railway foreclosure suit; 6 Bias. 529. A condemnation proceeding; 124 U. S. 197; suit against a marshal for trespass for goods taken on attachment; 139 U. S. 628; where the controversy involved the authority of the land department to grant a patent; 140 U. S. 406. An action of tort against several defendants for a conspiracy cannot be removed by a part of them; 40 Ala. 639. Where the suit is in its nature an equitable proceeding, it must proceed as such in the federal court, and in accordance with the rules governing equity cases in such court without regard to the system in the state court; 13 How. 268; 23 id. 484. Where the suit unites legal and equitable questions of relief or defence, a repleader is necessary after removal; 1 Dill. 290; 8 Blatchf. 239; 15 id. 432; 15 Wall. 573. The circuit court may issue a certiorari to bring in the record from the state courts. This was provided by the act of 1875 (18 Stat. L. 470) and not repealed by the act of 1887; but a certiorari is not an essential part of the proceeding and need only be resorted to if necessary to procure the record; 6 Bias. 529. So the circuit court may enjoin further proceedings in the state court; 17 Blatchf. 332; 56 Fed. Rep. 339; 22 Wall. 250, where it was held that the prohibition against injunctions by federal courts touching proceedings in the state courts has no application to such cases.

See Dillon, Removal of Causes (Black's ed.); UNITED STATES COURTS.

REMOVAL FROM OFFICE. A deprivation of office by the act of a competent officer or of the legislature. It may be express, that is, by a notification that the officer has been removed, or implied, by the appointment of another person to the same office; Wall. Jr. 118. See 13 Pet. 180; 1 Cra. 137. See OFFICER.

REMOVE. To move away from the position occupied; to displace. 86 Ky. 190. To change place in any manner; to go from one place to another. 12 Conn. 186.

Remove at Pleasure. The words "remove at pleasure" have a well defined legal meaning. The right to remove at pleasure is an entirely different thing from the right to remove for cause. To hold that the statute only authorized the council to remove for cause would be to deny the words used by the Legislature their ordinary meaning. 115 Ky 108, 80 S. W. 514.

REMOVER. In Practice. A transfer of a suit or cause out of one court into another, which is effected by writ of error, certiorari, and the like. 11 Co. 41.

REMUNERATION. Reward; recompense; salary. Dig. 17. 1. 7. See 1 Q. B. Div. 663.

RENDER. To yield; to return; to give again; it is the reverse of prender. See 77 Ia. 387.

A judgment is "rendered" when the court makes an order therefor; 19 Mont. 11.

RENDEZVOUS. A place appointed for meeting. Especially used of places appointed for the meeting of ships and their convoy, and for the meeting of soldiers.

RENDITION. See FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE; EXTRADITION.

RENEGADE. One who has changed his profession of faith or opinion. Whart.

RENEW. To make again; as, to renew a treaty or a covenant. 124 Mass. 151.

To renew a charter is to give new existence to a charter which has been forfeited or has lost validity by lapse of time. Anderson; 21 Pa. 201.

RENEWAL. A change of something old for something new; as, the renewal of a note; the renewal of a lease. See NOVATION; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 800.

RENOUCE. To give up a right; for example, an executor may renounce the right of administering the estate of the testator; a widow, the right to administer to her intestate husband's estate.

RENOUNCING PROBATE. Giving up the right to be executor of a will, wherein he has been appointed to that office, by refusing to take out probate of such will. 1 Will. Exec. 230, 231. It is usually done by writing filed in the probate office.

RENOVANT. Renewing. Cowel.

RENT (Lat. reditus, a return). A return or compensation for the possession of some corporeal inheritance. A certain profit, either in money, provisions, or labor, issuing out of lands and tenements, in return for their use.

The compensation, either in money, provisions, chattels, or labor, received by the owner of the soil from the occupant thereof. Jacks. & Gross, Landl. & T. § 38; Woodf. Landl. & T. 375.

The word "rents" in the bond of an administrator is intended to apply to and embrace only such "rents" as at the death of an intestate passed to his personal representative and not to his heirs. 12 Bush (Ky.) 215.

It has been held that a rent may issue out of lands and tenements corporeal, and also, out of them and their furniture, in this case a dairy farm with its stock and utensils; 31 Pa. 20; 99 id. 52. See, as to furnished lodgings, 5 B. & P. 224; 5 Co. 16 b.

Some of its common-law properties are that it must be a profit to the proprietor, certain in its character, or capable of being reduced to a certainty, issuing yearly, that is, periodically, out of the thing granted, and not be part of the land or thing itself; Co. Litt. 47; 2 Bla. Com. 41.

At common law there were three species of rent: rent service, where the tenant held his land by fealty, homage, or other corporal service and a certain rent to which the right of distress was necessarily incident; 3 Kent *461; 9 Watts 258; rent charge, which was a reservation of rent, with a clause authorizing its collection by distress; and rent seck, where there was no such clause, but the rent could only be collected by an ordinary action at law as by a writ of annuity or writ of assize. These distinctions, however, for all practical purposes, have become obsolete, in consequence of various statutes both in England and in this country, allowing every kind of rent to be distrained for without distinction. See Tayl. Landl. & T. § 370; FEUDAL LAW.

The payment of rent is incident to every tenancy where the relation of landlord and tenant subsists, except as to mere tenancies at will or by sufferance, where this relation cannot be said to exist. And no tenant can resist a demand for rent unless he shows that he has been evicted or become otherwise entitled to quit the premises, and has actually done so, before the rent in question became due. By the strictness of the common law, when a tenant has once made an agreement to pay rent, nothing will excuse him from continuing to pay, although the premises should be reduced to a ruinous condition by some unavoidable accident of fire, flood, or tempest; 6 Mass. 63; 4 Harr. & J. 564; 72 Pa. 285; 89 Cal. 151; 3 Johns. 44; 1 Term 310; 9 Price 294; 85 Ala. 99; 37 Ill. App. 542. See 72 Mich. 438.

But this severity of the ancient law has been somewhat abated in this country, and in this respect conforms to the more reasonable provisions of the Code Napoléon, art. 1722, which declares that if the thing hired is destroyed by fortuitous events, during the continuance of the lease, the contract of hiring is rescinded, but if it be only destroyed in part, the lessee may, according to circumstances, demand either a diminution of the rent or a rescission of the contract itself. The same provision is to be found substantially in the Code of Louisiana, art. 2867, and in the act of the legislature of New York of 1880, c. 845, § 1. A somewhat similar provision is found in the laws of Minnesota; Laws 1883, c. 100; 47 Minn. 291. In South Carolina and Pennsylvania it was decided that a tenant who had been dispossessed by a public enemy ought not to pay rent for the time the possession was withheld from him; and in Maryland it has been held that where a hurricane rendered a house untenable it was a good defence to an action for rent. But these cases are evidently exceptions to the general rule of law above stated; 1 Bay 499; 5 Watts 517; 1 McCord 447. A tenant is not compelled to keep and pay rent for a house which, from defects in its construction, becomes untenable and unfit for habitation; 73 Mich. 377. Where land has been swept away or gained upon by the sea, the lessee is no longer liable for rent; Buc. Abr. 63; Rolle, Abr. 236.

The right of the lessor to terminate a lease for non-payment of rent will not give the lessee any right to avoid the lease or his liability for agreed rent; 150 U. S. 665.

The quiet enjoyment of the premises, unmolested by the landlord, is an implied condition to the payment of rent. If, therefore, he ousts the tenant from any considerable portion of the premises, or erects a nuisance of any description upon or so near to them as to oblige the tenant to remove, or if the possession of the land should be recovered by a third person, by a title superior to that of the landlord, the disposition in either case amounts to an eviction, and discharges the obligation to pay rent; 2 Ired. 370; 3 Harr. N. J. 364; 4 Leigh 484; 4 N. Y. 217; 1 M. & W. 747; 91 Pa. 322; 103 Mass. 201; 54 N. H. 426; 49 Vt. 109; 31 Ala. 412; 44 Mo. App. 279; 1 App. D. C. 447. By retaining possession of premises in spite of such acts of his landlord as would otherwise amount to an eviction, a tenant waives his right to withhold the rent; 113 Mass. 8; 20 N. Y. 32. The entry of a landlord upon demised premises for the purpose of rebuilding does not operate as an eviction, where it was with the tenant's assent, and not to his entire exclusion; 151 Pa. 101.

A tenant's liability for rent is not affected by condemnation of part of the leased premises; 136 Ill. 87; 144 id. 537; but where the estate of both landlord and tenant in the entire premises is extinguished by condemnation, the obligation to pay rent ceases; 144 Ill. 537.

As rent issues out of the land, it is said to be incident to the reversion, and the right to demand it necessarily attaches itself to the ownership, and follows a transfer of the premises, and the several parts thereof, without the consent of the occupant. Every occupant is chargeable with rent by virtue of his occupation, whether he be the tenant or an assignee of the tenant. The original tenant cannot avoid his liability by transferring his lease to another, but his assignee is only liable so long as he remains in possession, and may discharge himself by the simple act of assigning over to some one else; 14 Wend. 8; 1 N. & M.C. 104; 12 Pick. 460; 4 Leigh 6; 2 Ohio 221; 1 Wash. C. C. 870; 1 Rawle 157; 3 B. & Ald. 393; 11 Ad. & E. 408; Cro. Eliz. 258; Co. Litt. 46 b. When rent will be apportioned, see APPORTIONMENT; LANDLORD AND TENANT.

The day of payment depends, in the first instance, upon the contract; if this is silent in that respect, rent is payable quarterly or half-yearly, according to the custom of the country; but if there be no usage governing the case, it is not due until the end of the term. Formerly it was payable before sunset of the day whereon it was to be paid, on the reasonable ground that sufficient light should remain to enable the parties to count the money; but now it is not considered due until midnight or the last minute of the natural day on which it is made payable; 38 Pa. 272. This rule, however, may be varied by the custom of different places; Co. Litt. 202 a; 15 Pick. 147; 5 S. & R. 432. Under a lease requiring rent to be paid annually on a certain day for a year in advance, a tenant continuing in possession three months after that day is liable for the year's rent; 17 Atl. Rep. (Vt.) 719. See FORTFEITURE; RE-ENTRY; PAYMENT.

Interest accrues on rent from the time it is due, but cannot be included in a distress; 17 S. & R. 390.

When rent is payable in money, it must strictly be paid in legal-tender money; with respect to foreign coin, the lessor may decline to receive it except by its true weight and value. Bank-notes constitute part of the currency of the country, and ordinarily pass as money, and are a good tender, unless specially objected to by the creditor at the time of the offer; 10 Wheat. 347. Payment may be made in commodities, when so reserved. If the contract specifies a place of payment, a tender of rent, whether in money or in kind, must be made at that place; but, if no place is specified, a tender of either on the land will be sufficient to prevent a forfeiture; 16 Term 222; 10 N. Y. 80; 4 Taunt. 555.

Under an income-tax statute, rent is to be treated as identical with land; 159 U. S. 601. An assignment of rent must be in writing under the statute of frauds; 23 N. Y. 521.

See DISTRESS; RE-ENTRY; GROUND-RENT; REPLEVIN; PAYMENT; TONNAGE-RENT.

RENT OF ASSISE. See RENTS OF ASSISE.

RENT CHARGE. A rent reserved with a power of enforcing its payment by distress. See RENT.

RENT INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

RENT ROLL. A list of rents payable to a particular person or public body. See RENT.

RENT SECK. A rent collectable only by action at law in case of non-payment. See RENT.

RENT SERVICE. A rent embracing some corporal service attendant upon the tenure of the land. Distress was necessarily incident to such a rent. See RENT; GROUND-RENT; FEUDAL SYSTEM.

RENTAL. A roll or list of the rents of an estate, containing the description of the lands let, the names of the tenants, and other particulars connected with such estate. This is the same as rent roll, from which it is said to be corrupted. It is commonly used as synonymous with rent.

RENTAL ROLLS. Tiend rolls, due the person as tithes. Ersk. Prin. 2. 10. 6.

RENTE. In French Law. A word nearly synonymous with our word annuity. Rentes: Public funds.

RENTE FONCIERE. In French Law. A rent which issues out of land; and it is of its essence that it be perpetual, for it is made but for a limited time it is a lease. It may, however, be extinguished. La. Civ. Code, art. 2750, 2759; Pothier. See GROUND-RENT.

RENTE VIAGERE. In French Law. An annuity for life. La. Civ. Code, art. 2764; Pothier, Rente, n. 215.

RENTS OF ASSIZE. The certain and determined rents of the freeholders and ancient copyholders of manors. Brown.

RENTS, ISSUES, AND PROFITS. The profits arising from property generally. This phrase in the Vermont statute has been held not to cover "yearly profits." 28 Vt. 741.

RENUNCIATION. The act of giving up a right.

It is a rule of law that any one may renounce a right which the law has established in his favor. To this maxim there are many limitations. A party may always renounce an acquired right; as, for example, to take lands by descent; but one cannot always give up a future right before it has accrued, nor the benefit conferred by law, although such advantage may be introduced only for the benefit of individuals.

For example, the power of making a will, the right of annulling a future contract on the ground of fraud, and the right of pleading the act of limitations cannot be renounced. The first, because the party must be left free to make a will or not; and the latter two, because the right has not yet accrued.

This term is usually employed to signify the abdication or giving up of one's country at the time of choosing another. The act of congress requires from a foreigner who applies to become naturalized a renunciation of all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty whereof such alien may at the time be a citizen or subject. See Morse, Citizenship; CITIZEN; EXPATRIATION; NATURALIZATION.

RENVOI. The power which every state has to expel strangers from its territory. This is one of the complementary elements of the protection to society which is the end and purpose of the right to inflict punishment. Bouvée, Exclusion and Expulsion of Aliens in the United States, p. 4. See DEPORTATION; EXPULSION.

REOPENING A CASE. A court of equity, in the exercise of a sound discretion, has full power to reopen a case, and allow the correction of mistakes in testimony. To reopen a case is to permit the introduction of new evidence and, practically, try it anew; to rehear a case is to hear it again upon the same proofs and allegations. Such applications are not favored, however, and, when granted, must be based upon strong circumstances to justify a deviation from the general rule; 93 Pa. 214; Adams, Eq. 372; 8 Phila. 380; 11 Fed. Rep. 423; 3 id. 95. An application to reopen a case and take further proofs has been granted on condition that the moving party pay his opponent's counsel fee for the previous argument, where the new testimony appeared to be newly discovered, material, and not cumulative, and there was no great laches; 44 Fed. Rep. 283. But an application to reopen and admit a newly discovered defence, after final hearing, will only be granted when it appears that such defence, if made at the final hearing, would have been effectual; 7 id. 620.

Reopening patent cases is to be discouraged when the grounds offered therefor pertain to matters of evidence which could as well have been produced at the hearing; 20 id. 111; 31 id. 918. See REHEARING; NEW TRIAL; BILL OF REVIEW.

REORGANIZATION. A term in common use to denote the carrying out, by proper agreements and legal proceedings, of a business plan or scheme for winding up the affairs of, or foreclosing a mortgage or mortgages upon the property of, insolvent corporations, more frequently railroad companies. It is usually by the judicial sale of the corporate property and franchises, and the formation, by the purchasers of a new corporation, in which the property and franchises are thereupon vested, and the stock and bonds of which are divided among such of the parties interested in the old company as are parties to the reorganization plan.

In most of the states, statutes have been passed to regulate the purchase of corporate properties and franchises at judicial sales. A list of them is given in Short, Ry. Bonds 842. They usually provide that the purchasers shall be, or become, or may organize a new corporation in taking over the assets and franchises purchased, and have and enjoy the corporate rights and franchises of the former company.

Usually some of the security holders name a committee who formulate a plan of reorganization providing for the deposit of securities with the committee as agents or trustees for the owners; for the purchase of the property at the sale; and the organization of a new company upon the basis of a specified scheme of distribution of the new securities among those who assent to the plan. The securities are generally deposited with the committee with very full powers of control, under the plan, and usually with a certain power of modification of the plan, under specified circumstances. When the new company has been formed, the new securities are issued to the assenting parties in accordance with the terms of the plan.

Where a reorganization is the only feasible method of protecting the relative rights of all parties interested in a large enterprise, and it can be done only by co-operation, courts of equity, in the absence of fraud or oppression, are disposed to aid rather than to thwart such schemes of reorganization; 56 Fed. Rep. 7. Such arrangements are to be promoted, because they are necessary to prevent great sacrifice and loss; 28 id. 340; 22 id. 188.

The creditors of a mortgagor railroad company may fairly combine to purchase the property at a mortgage sale, and other creditors are not, by such combination, deprived of the right to bid at such sale; 2 id. 302. Courts will endeavor to carry into effect a fair plan of reorganization and will overlook merely technical defects in it; 11 Ch. D. 603. Such an agreement is not a fraud on non-assenting creditors and does not entitle them to claim their debts against the new company; 101 Pa. 578.

Where a railroad company has issued several series of mortgage bonds, some covering all the property and some only a part, and become insolvent, and the principal of some of the mortgages was due and the company had a large floating debt, it was held that a decree foreclosing all the mortgages, entered by consent of the bondholders, would not be set aside on the petition of some of the stockholders on the ground that some of the mortgages were not yet due, as it was in the interest of the company to effect a reorganization which would secure and extend its bonded debt and reduce the rate of interest thereon and provide the necessary means to satisfy the floating debt; 45 Fed. Rep. 438.

Reorganization agreements must be carried out according to their terms. If they are not, the subscribers to them are not bound; 40 Vt. 399; and the assenting security holders must also comply strictly with the agreement to which they have assented; Short, Ry. Bonds 857.

Where there was a compromise in which stockholders of a company were given the right to subscribe for stock in the reorganized company, upon terms specified in a circular addressed to the old stockholders, it was held, on proceedings by a stockholder who averred, want of notice of the circular, that he had no right of action against the company, because the agreement was not made by the company or on its behalf, and that he could not complain of the terms of the agreement, as he was not a party to it; 81 N. Y. 483. A reorganization committee is not a trustee for non-assenting bondholders; 78 Fed. Rep. 49.

Creditors who do not assent to a reorganization agreement are entitled to enforce payment of the purchase price paid at a foreclosure sale by the reorganization committee, for the purpose of discharging their claims. Creditors coming in under the plan thereby release their rights against the old company; 80 Fed. Rep. 569.

Where a reorganization agreement provided that if stockholders neglected to pay the assessments within the period limited, the privilege of receiving the shares allotted to them should be ratably distributed among those who did pay their assessments, it was held that as soon as the default occurred on the part of a non-assenting stockholder, his interest became a vested right in the assenting stockholders under the plan. Likewise that an assenting bondholder who fails to deliver his bonds to the trustee under the agreement is debarred from any benefit therein; 44 Barb. 75.

In an action against a reorganized railroad company for failure to deliver its stock in amount equal to the bonds and coupons of the old company held by the plaintiff, it was held that, as the plaintiff had not exercised his option to come into the plan prior to the execution of the deed of the property to the new company, he was not entitled to the stock, and his only right was to take his share of the proceeds of the sale; 133 Pa. 579. The right to participate ceases when the property has passed to the new corporation; the rights of the security holders thereby become fixed, and a majority of certificate holders cannot then modify them; 14 N. Y. Supp. 558.

Where a statute required the consent of bondholders for foreclosure proceedings of a railroad property and such consent was given, it was held that outstanding bondholders would be regarded as consenting by reason of their silence during a protracted litigation; 122 U. S. 1.

A majority of bondholders cannot compel a minority, however small, to enter into a joint agreement with them; 109 U. S. 535; but it is said by an able writer that the relations of corporate bondholders are peculiar, and that the courts, in foreclosure proceedings, have sometimes considered them as analogous to those which exist among stockholders; Short, Ry. Bonds § 27; and that this is especially true in carrying out reorganization schemes; id. See 100 U. S. 603. An act for the reorganization of an embarrassed corporation which provides that all mortgage bondholders who do not, within a given time, expressly dissent from the plan of reorganization, shall be deemed to have assented to it, is valid; 109 U. S. 401; and so is an act which provides that a majority of the bondholders, with equal opportunities to all, may reorganize a new corporation; 53 Conn. 388. The theory is that railroad property is pledged to public use and that this consideration is superior to the property rights of corporators, stockholders, and bondholders. See 109 U. S. 535. Acts relating to reorganization are for the good of all, and are a species of bankruptcy acts; unless forbidden, as in the United States, there is no good reason why they should not be passed in respect of existing obligations; id.

Where a corporation mortgage vests certain powers of control in a majority of the bondholders, as to sanction a modification of a deed of trust; 55 L. T. N. S. 347; 74 Fed. Rep. 110; [1898] 1 Ch. 477, 484; to direct the trustee to purchase the mortgaged property at a foreclosure sale and to reorganize a new company; 99 U. S. 834; or to control the mortgagee trustee in beginning or discontinuing foreclosure proceedings: 184 U. S. 500; the courts will carry into effect the action of such majority.

In 18 Fed. Rep. 248, Treat, J., criticised the decree of foreclosure then before the court, for the omission of what he considered the usual clause in foreclosure decrees, viz., one permitting the minority bondholders to come in, after purchase, within a limited time, on equal terms with purchasing bondholders.

A sale under foreclosure of an insolvent railroad company under an agreement by which the bondholders, according to their priorities, got more or less of their debt (100 to 30 per cent.), and the stockholders of the company the residue of the proceeds (16 per cent. of the par of their stock), was held fraudulent as against general creditors, although the road was mortgaged far above its value; 7 Wall. 392. But where the plan gives stockholders an interest but does not include general creditors, it is not invalid unless the scheme is to give the stockholders that which should go to creditors: 85 Fed. Rep. 888.

The holders of preferred stock may not use it to make up the amount of their bid on foreclosure sale of the property; 85 Fed. Rep. 930.

Where the local managers and officers of an insolvent railroad company, holding a small portion of its bonds, of which a much greater portion was held by non-residents, got an order of sale and proceeded in a hasty and rather secret way to sell and buy it in at the lowest value for themselves, the proceedings were held invalid as against the bondholders, generally, and the stockholders; 21 Wall. 616.

In England, if some of the majority of bondholders are not acting in good faith, a reorganization agreement will not be sanctioned; 44 Ch. Div. 403. Secured creditors of a railroad company, after bringing the property within the jurisdiction of the court, will not be permitted, by any private arrangement with the company or otherwise, so to dispose of the property as seriously and unnecessarily to prejudice the unsecured creditors. They may not, for their own benefit or for the common interest of themselves and the debtor, place the surplus which may exist after the satisfaction of their own claims beyond the reach of the latter; 21 Fed. Rep. 264.

On proceedings by an unsecured creditor praying that the stock of a reorganized company, set aside in the reorganization agreement for the stockholders of the old company, should be sold and the proceeds paid to the holders of the floating debt, it appearing that the plan showed a due regard for the interests of all classes of creditors and stockholders, and that the bill did not show any injustice intended or done to the complainant, the bill was dismissed; 9 Fed. Rep. 738.

Bondholders who decline, on request, to assent, and take no steps to protect themselves, have no standing in equity to set aside a foreclosure sale, if the transaction was fair; 8 Fed. Rep. 177. And a bill praying that a reorganization of a railroad company be set aside and a new plan formulated, and for a receiver, was dismissed, it appearing that the plaintiff had her representative on the new board and had attempted to buy more of the new issue of bonds, although it was alleged that the new company was illegally organized, which fact was, however, known to the plaintiff; 15 Fed. Rep. 691.

Where a reorganization of an English mining company, whose property was all in the United States, was carried on in England by the voluntary act of the English stockholders and not by the British courts, and was found to have been in flagrant violation and disregard of the rights of the American stockholders, it was held that no principle of international comity required that it should be sustained; 55 Fed. Rep. 7.

In 112 U. S. 609, it was held that a mortgage on a charter of a corporation made in the exercise of a power given by a statute, confers no right upon purchasers at a foreclosure sale to exist as the same corporation; if it confers any right of corporate existence upon them, it is only a right to reorganize as a corporation, subject to the laws existing at the time of the reorganization. The court said: "The real transaction, in legal effect, is nothing more or less, and nothing other, than a surrender or abandonment of the old charter by the corporation, and a grant de novo of a similar charter to the so-called transferees or purchasers. To look upon it in any other light, and to regard the transaction as a literal transfer or sale of the charter, is to be deceived by a mere figure of speech. The vital part of the transaction, and that without which it would be a nullity, is the law under which the transfer is made. The statute authorizing the transfer and declaring its effect is the grant of a new charter couched in a few words, and to take effect upon condition of the surrender or abandonment of the old charter, and the deed of transfer is to be regarded as mere evidence of the surrender or abandonment."

In Pennsylvania, under the act of April, 1861, the sale of a railroad does not extinguish the corporation, but creates the purchaser a body corporate, with all the rights, etc., of the old corporation. Irregularities in the organization are not necessarily fatal to the being of the new corporation, and will, at the most, enable the commonwealth to retake the franchise. It cannot be said that the franchises do not exist; 52 Pa. 506.

Where foreclosure was brought on a railroad mortgage containing the usual clause that the trustee on request of a majority of the bondholders should bid at the sale, and reorganize on their account, it was held that the agreement enured equally for the benefit of the bondholders, and that each held his interest subject to the controlling power given to the majority; that, upon proper request from the bondholders, the court might direct the trustee to bid at the sale the amount of the principal and interest due on the first mortgage bonds and to proceed to execute the trust; 99 U. S. 384.

The pendency of a reorganization plan for the preservation of an entire railroad system may sometimes be reason for refusing temporarily an application on the part of the trustees of a divisional mortgage to be put in possession of the property covered by the mortgage to them; Short, Ky. Bonds 834.

In reorganization proceedings it is not necessary that notice of the terms of the plan nor of the legal proceedings be given to the stockholders in order to bar their rights if they do not assent; 96 N. Y. 49.

Where a Canadian act provides for the reorganization of a Canadian railroad company, and the settlement is accepted by a large majority of the shareholders and goes into effect, United States bondholders are bound by it, if they could participate on the same terms as Canadian bondholders; 109 U. S. 527.

Where the stockholders of an insolvent company formed a new company, under the laws of another state, which took a lease of the property of the old company and paid off its debts, and then in its turn became insolvent, it was held to be, as to third persons, substantially the same company and the property remained charged with a mechanic's lien for labor and materials furnished to the new company; 75 Fed. Rep. 366.

See MERGER; MORTGAGE; NEWSPAPER; RAILROAD; RECEIVER; LEASE. Modern systems of railroad reorganization are severely criticised by Moorfield Storey in Am. Bar Assn. Rep. 1896.

Reorganization agreements frequently contain provisions conferring a control by means of a voting trust, which see.

REPAIRS. That work which is done to property to keep it in good order.

Repair is held to mean to restore to a sound state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial injury; 85 Mo. 268; to be synonymous with "make and keep up"; 28 Ind. 281; and sometimes to mean replace; 3 N. Y. 98.

Tenantable repairs. Decorative repair is not included. But papering, always, and painting, unless intended for the protection of the property, are decorative repairs. The obligation does not extend to repairing or restoring what is worn out by age, but voluntary waste is a breach of the obligation. 36 W. R. 54; 59 L. J. Q. B. 129.

What a party is bound to do, when the law imposes upon him the duty to make necessary repairs, does not appear to be very accurately defined. Natural and unavoidable decay in the buildings must always be allowed for, when there is no express covenant to the contrary; and it seems the lessee will satisfy the obligation the law imposes on him by delivering the premises at the expiration of his tenancy in a habitable state. Questions in relation to repairs most frequently arise between the landlord and tenant.

In determining whether there has been a breach of a covenant to repair, regard must be had to the age and character of the premises at the date of the demise; and if the premises through their own inherent defects fall in the course of the tenancy into a particular condition, the result of their being in that condition are not breaches of a covenant to repair, however wide that covenant may be; [1893] 2 Q. B. 212.

When there is no express agreement between the parties the tenant is always required to do the necessary repairs; Woodf. Landl. & T. 244; 6 Cow. 476. He is, therefore, bound to put in windows or doors that have been broken by him, so as to prevent any decay of the premises; but he is not required to put a new roof on an old worn-out house; 2 Esp. 590. The landlord is under no implied obligation to make ordinary repairs; 161 Pa. 87.

An express covenant on the part of the lessee to keep a house in repair, and leave it in as good a plight as it was when the lease was made, does not bind him to repair the ordinary and natural decay; Woodf. Landl. & T. 250. See 7 Gray 550. And it has been held that such a covenant does not bind him to rebuild a house which had been destroyed by a public enemy; 1 Dall. 210; but where in a lease there is an express and unconditional agreement to repair and keep in repair, the tenant is bound to do so, though the premises be destroyed by fire or accident; 91 Pa. 88; 2 Wall. 1; 49 Barb. 554.

Repair means to restore to its former condition, not to change either the form or material of a building; 63 Pa. 162. When a landlord covenants to repair, he is bound only to restore to a sound state either what has become decayed or dilapidated, or better, what has been partially destroyed; his covenant does not extend to improvements, nor to new buildings erected by the tenant; 4 Pa. 364. See 1 Dy. 33 a.

In order to entitle a tenant to recover from his landlord for repairs made by the tenant upon the premises, he must show a contract with the landlord, express or implied, to pay for them; 38 Neb. 157.

As to the time when the repairs are to be made, it would seem reasonable that when the lessor is bound to make them he should have the right to enter and make them, when a delay until after the expiration of the lease would be injurious to the estate; but when no such damage exists, the landlord should have no right to enter without the consent of the tenant. See 18 Toullier, n. 297. A general covenant by a lessor to repair is construed to mean within a reasonable time after notice; 78 Cal. 178. When a house has been destroyed by accidental fire, neither the tenant nor the landlord is bound to rebuild, unless obliged by some agreement so to do; 4 Paige, Ch. 853; 1 Term 708. See LANDLORD AND TENANT; RENT; 4 Camp. 275; Co. Litt. 27 a; 3 Johns. 44; 6 Mass. 63; Platt. Co. 268; 1 Saund. 322, n. 1, 323, n. 7; 2 id. 158 b, n. 7 & 10.

REPARATION. The redress of an injury; amends for a tort inflicted. See

REMEDY.

REPARATIONE FACIENDA, WRIT DE (Lat.). The name of an ancient writ which lies by one or more joint tenants against the other joint tenants, or by a person owning a house or building against the owner of the adjoining building, to compel the reparation of such joint property. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 295.

REPATRIATION. The regaining nationality after expatriation.

REPAY. Repay does not necessarily mean to pay money. It has also the meaning of return, restore, etc.; 19 Kan. 390.

REPEAL. The abrogation or destruction of a law by a legislative act.

A repeal is express, as, when it is literally declared by a subsequent law, or implied, when the new law contains provisions contrary to or irreconcilable with those of the former law.

The power to revoke or annul a statute or ordinance is equivalent to the power to repeal it; and in either case the power is legislative and not judicial in its character; 30 W. Va. 479.

A statute is not to be deemed repealed merely by the enactment of another statute on the same subject. There must be a positive repugnancy between the provisions of the new law and the old, to work a repeal by implication; and even then the old law is repealed only to the extent of such repugnancy; 10 Pet. 342; 51 N. J. Eq. 332; 137 U. S. 682. This rule is supported in a vast variety of cases.

A law may be repealed by implication, by an affirmative as well as by a negative statute, if the substance is inconsistent with the old statute; 1 Ohio 10; 2 Bibb 96; Harp. 101; 4 Wash. C. C. 691; and a repeal by implication has been effected even where two inconsistent enactments have been passed in the same session; 2 B. & Ald. 818; or where two parts of the same act have proved repugnant to each other; 4 C. P. Div. 29; but this will be presumed only in extreme cases; 13 C. B. 461. A repeal by implication is not favored, the leaning of the courts is against the doctrine, if it be possible to reconcile the two acts; 1 Black 470; 137 U. S. 632; 146 Ill. 268; 57 Mich. 407; 73 Cal. 380; 75 Ia. 88; 50 Ark. 132; 9 Q. B. D. 58; [1892] 1 Q. B. 654; see 76 Ga. 181; 100 N. C. 474; and a general law is not to be held as repealing a prior special law unless it clearly manifests such intention; 98 Mo. 426; 85 Ky. 267; 45 La. Ann. 227; 146 Ill. 268; 12 U. S. App. 574. General legislation must give way to special legislation on the same subject; id. 267. But where the constitution directs the legislature to pass general legislation, and a law is passed, which is complete and does evidently intend to provide a uniform system, no words of repeal are necessary; 176 Pa. 67.

The later of two clearly inconsistent and repugnant acts must prevail; 104 N. Y. 218; 28 Neb. 618; and is an implied repeal of the earlier; 29 Ch. D. 15; but not unless their provisions are clearly inconsistent; 12 U. S. App. 574; and where they can be read together without repugnancy, both should stand; 50 L. J. M. C. 6; 157 U. S. 46; and the burden is on the one who asserts that there is an implied repeal; 29 Ch. D. 15.

An earlier statute is repealed by a subsequent one only in those particulars wherein it is clearly inconsistent and irreconcilable with the later enactment. The leaning of all courts is against repealing the positive provisions of former statutes by construction, unless there be such a manifest and total repugnance between the two enactments that they cannot both stand. It is not enough that there is a discrepancy between different parts of a system of legislation on the same general subject; there must be a conflict between different acts on the same specific subject; 177 Pa. 112. Where the repealing act is unconstitutional and void, it will not work a repeal; 26 Ala. 165; 3 Gray 476; 14 Mich. 276; 1 Wash. 382; contra, 11 Ind. 489.

Special legislation is not necessarily repealed by subsequent general legislation without words of repeal; 91 N. Y. 231; 152 Pa. 244; 146 Ill. 268; L. R. 10 A. C. 65. To have that effect there must be express reference or necessary implication; 2 J. & H. 53; 10 App. Cas. 68. Where a statute amends a former statute "so as to read as follows" and restates it at length the prior act is not repealed and re-enacted but is continued; 143 Mass. 418; inconsistent provisions in the former, omitted in the later, act are repealed; 136 N. Y. 347.

Where there is a general revision of statutes, clearly intended to be complete, it repeals prior legislation, though not repugnant and though the revision contains no words of repeal; 82 Ky. 256; 12 Mass. 537, 545; 9 Pick. 97; 42 Me. 53; 121 N. Y. 234; 37 N. H. 295; 30 Vt. 344; 8 Tex. 62; 14 Ill. 334; 6 B. Monr. 146; but only where the intent to repeal plainly appears; 62 Vt. 442. See 9 Ind. 337; 10 id. 566.

There can be no repeal by non-user; 2 Term 274. It was otherwise in the civil law, and it is said to be otherwise in Scotland; 1 Kent 466.

A statute purporting to cover an entire subject repeals all former statutes on the same subject, either with or without a repealing clause and notwithstanding it may omit material provisions of the earlier statutes; 86 Tenn. 523; 85 id. 495; 86 Ky. 170; 73 Ia. 619; 20 Ore. 345.

A statute will not repeal a prior statute merely because it repeals some of its provisions and omits others, or adds new provisions; the later act operates as a repeal only when it plainly appears that it was intended as a substitute for the first act; 127 U. S. 406; and a previous statute will be held to be modified by a subsequent one, if the latter was plainly intended to cover the whole subject embraced by both, and prescribes the only rules in respect to that subject that are to govern; 134 U. S. 206.

Where a new statute expressly repeals the former statute, and the new and the repeal of the old are to take effect at the same time, a provision in the old statute which is embodied in the new is deemed to have continued in force without suspension; 3 Wisc. 667; 15 Ill. 595. But it has been held that where the new law does not go into effect until a time subsequent to that at which the repeal takes effect, such a provision is to be deemed repealed meantime; 13 La. Ann. 593. But see 1 Pick. 33.

As to what force should be given to portions of a statute excepted from repeal, see Endlich, Interpr. Stat.; 3 Wall. 493; 109 U. S. 536.

A difference in the punctuation of similar statutes does not in all cases warrant a different construction, particularly when the printer is responsible for it, and not the legislature; 39 Pac. Rep. (Idaho) 548. See 34 Cent. L. J. 253.

Where an amendment changes the phraseology of a former act, it will be presumed that it was the intention to make a corresponding change in its meaning; 50 Fed. Rep. 749. Where a section of a statute is amended and afterwards such section "as amended" is repealed, the original section, and not the amendment merely, is repealed; 80 Ia. 601. The amendment of a statute does not repeal it so that a subsequent statute, which professes to amend the original act, is invalid; 45 Neb. 734. See 1 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 566.

It is a general rule that when a penal statute punishes an offense by a certain penalty, and a new statute is passed imposing a greater or a lesser penalty for the same offense, the former statute is repealed by implication; 5 Pick. 163; 3 Halst. 48; 3 A. K. Marsh. 70; see 1 Binn. 601; Bacon, Abr. Statute (D); but subsequent statutes which add accumulative penalties do not repeal former statutes; 1 Cowp. 297; 6 Mod. 141.

At common law the repeal of a repealing act revived the former act; 6 Co. 199; 1 Gray 183; 7 W. & S. 233; 2 Blackf. 32; 54 N. J. L. J. 175; and it has been held in the supreme court to have this effect, unless the language of the repealing statute or some general statute provides otherwise; 120 U. S. 52; but this rule is now altered in England by an act passed in 1890 and amended in 1899, and in many states this rule has been changed, as in Ohio and Louisiana; La. Civ. Code, art. 23. And in some states, as Tennessee and Georgia, the substance of an act repealed or revived must be stated in the caption or otherwise, and in others, as Connecticut and Arkansas, a repealing or amending act must recite the law so amended sufficiently to show the effect of the amendment or repeal. For a summary of statutes on the subject of repeals, see Stimson, An. Stat. L. §§ 1042-3.

It has been held that when the repealing clause in an unconstitutional statute repeals all inconsistent acts, the repealing clause is to stand and have effect, notwithstanding the invalidity of the act; 11 Ind. 499. But other cases hold that such repealing clause is to be understood as designed to repeal all conflicting provisions, in order that those of the new statute can have effect, and that if the statute is invalid, nothing can conflict with it, and therefore nothing is repealed; 6 Wis. 605; 35 Barb. 264; Cooley, Const. Lim. 186.

A repealed statute is as if it had never existed, except as to transactions which are past and closed before the repeal; 4 De G. & J. 537; but the repeal leaves all the civil rights of the parties acquired under the law unaffected; 3 La. 337; 2 South. 689; Breesee 29; 2 Stew. Ala. 160; 2 Wall. 450. An action for penalties cannot be sustained when the statute inflicting them has been repealed before judgment; 13 How. 429; nor an action for the recovery of money paid in violation of law, under similar circumstances; 5 Blatch. 229.

When a penal statute is repealed or so modified as to exempt a class from its operation, violations committed before the repeal are also exempted, unless specifically reserved, or unless there has been some private right vested by it; 2 Dana 330; 4 Yeates 392; 5 Rand. 657; 1 Wash. C. C. 84; 2 Va. Cas. 382.

See, generally, Dwarris; Wilberforce; Endlich, Statutes; PATENT; REPUGNANCY; CONSTRUCTION; OBSOLETE; INTERPRETATION; STATUTE; REVISED STATUTES.

REPERTORY. In French Law. A word used to donate the inventory or minutes which notaries are required to make of all contracts which take place before them. Dalloz, Dict.

REPETITION. In Civil Law. The act by which a person demands and seeks to recover what he has paid by mistake or delivered on a condition which has not been performed. Dig. 12. 4. 5.

The name of an action which lies to recover the payment which has been made by mistake when nothing was due.

Repetition is never admitted in relation to natural obligations which have been voluntarily acquitted, if the debtor had capacity to give his consent. 6 Toullier 356.

In order to entitle the payer to recover back money paid by mistake, it must have been paid by him to a person to whom he did not owe it, for otherwise he cannot recover it back.—the creditor having, in such case, the just right to retain the money. Repetitio nulla est ab eo qui suum recepit.

How far money paid under a mistake of law is liable to repetition has been discussed by civilians; and opinions on this subject are divided. 2 Pothier, Obl., Evans ed. 289, 406-437; 1 Story, Eq. Pl. § 111, note 2.

In Scotch Law. The act of reading over a witness's deposition, in order that he may adhere to it or correct it, at his choice. The same as recolement (q. v.) in the French law. 2 Benth. Ev. 339.

REPLEADER. In Pleading. Making a new series of pleadings.

Judgment of repladers differs from a judgment non obstante veredicto in this: that it is allowed by the court to do justice between the parties where the defect is in the form or manner of stating the right, and the issue joined is on an immaterial point, so that it cannot tell for whom to give judgment; 3 Pick. 124; 19 id. 419; while judgment non obstante is given only where it is clearly apparent to the court that the party who has succeeded has, upon his own showing, no merits, and cannot have by any manner of statement; 1 Chitty, Pl. 563. See 19 Ark. 194.

It may be ordered by the court for the purpose of obtaining a better issue, if it will effect substantial justice where issue has been reached on an immaterial point; 3 B. & P. 353; 2 Johns. 388; 3 Hen. & M. 115, 161; Gould, Pl. 473; as a plea of payment on a given day to an action on a bond conditioned to pay on or before that day; 2 Stra. 934. It is not to be allowed till after trial for a defect which is aided by verdict; 3 Saund. 819 b; Bac. Abr. Pleas. If granted or denied where it should not be, it is error; 3 Salk. 579. See 9 Ala. N. S. 183.

The judgment is general, and the parties must begin at the first fault which occasioned the immaterial issue; 1 Ld. Raym. 169; entirely anew, if the declaration is imperfect; 1 Chitty, Pl. 563; that the action must be dismissed in such case; 1 Wash. Va. 135; with the replication, if that be faulty and the bar be good; 3 Keb. 661; 1 Wash. Va. 155. No costs are allowed to either side; 6 Term 131; 2 B. & P. 376.

It cannot be awarded after a default at nisi prius; 1 Chitty, Pl. 563; nor where the court can give judgment on the whole record; Willes 533; nor after demurrer; 2 Mass. 81; unless, perhaps, where the bar and replication are bad; Cro. Eliz. 318; 7 Ms. 303; nor after writ of error, without the consent of the parties; 3 Salk. 308; nor at any time in favor of the person who made the first fault; 1 Ld. Raym. 170; 1 Hempst. 288; 1 Humphr. 85; 6 Blackf. 375; see 3 Hen. & M. 388; nor after judgment; 1 Tyl. Vt. 148. The same end is secured in many of the states by statutes allowing amendments. See, generally, Tidd, Pr. 813, 814; Com. Dig. Pleader (R 18); Bac. Abr. Pleas (M).

REPLEGIARE (Lat.). To replevy: to redeem a thing detained or taken by another, by putting in legal sureties.

REPLEGIARE DE AVERIIS (Lat.). A writ brought by one whose cattle are impounded or distrained, upon security given to the sheriff to pursue or answer the action at law. 7 Hen. VIII. c. 4; Fitzh. N. B. 68; New Book of Entries, Replevin; Dy. 178; Reg. Orig. 81.

REPLEGIARE FACIAS (Lat.). A writ of replevin, which issued out of chancery, commanding the sheriff to deliver the distress to the owner, and afterwards to do justice in regard to the matter in his own county court. It was abolished by statute of Marlbridge (q. v.), which provided a shorter process. 3 Sharw. Bla. Com. 147; Andr. Steph. Pl. 92.

REPLEVIN. In Practice. A form of action which lies to regain the possession of personal chattels which have been taken from the plaintiff unlawfully.

The action originally lay for the purpose of recovering chattels taken as a distress, but has acquired a much more extended use. In England and most of the states of the United States it extends to all cases of illegal taking, and in some of the states it may be brought wherever a person wishes to recover specific goods to which he alleges title. See infra.

A general use of this remedy seems to date from the latter part of the 13th century, referring to the fact that at that period the remedy known as retitum namium (q. v.) was falling into desuetude.

It is said that at that time, "under the name of Replegiare, or Replevin, an action was being developed which was proving itself to be convenient action for the settlement of disputes between landlord and tenant; but it seems to have owed its vigor, its rapidity, and therefore its convenience, to the supposition that a serious offence had been committed against the king." 9 Poll. & Maitl. 576.

By virtue of the writ, the sheriff proceeds at once to take possession of the property therein described and transfer it to the plaintiff, upon his giving pledges which are satisfactory to the sheriff to prove his title, or return the chattels taken if he fail so to do. It is said to have laid formerly in the detinuit, which is the only form now found at common law, and also in the detinet, where the defendant retained possession, and the sheriff proceeded to take possession and deliver the property to the plaintiff after the trial and proof of title; Bull. N. P. 52; Chitty, Pl. 145; 3 Bla. Com. 146; DETINET; DETINUIT.

It differs from detinue in this: that it requires an unlawful taking as the foundation of the action; and from all other personal actions in that it is brought to recover the possession of the specific property claimed to have been unlawfully taken.

The action lies to recover personal property; 19 Pa. 71; including parish records; 11 Pick. 492; trees after they had been cut down; 2 Barb. 618; 9 Mo. 259; 13 Ill. 192; records of a corporation; 5 Ind. 165; articles which can be specifically distinguished from all other chattels of the same kind by initials or ear-marks; 18 Ill. 286; including money tied up in a bag and taken in that state; 2 Mod. 61; a promissory note; 153 Mass. 339; trees cut into boards; 30 Me. 370; 13 Ill. 192; a house which is being moved from the land on which it was built; 84 Me. 139; see 81 Wis. 341; 93 Mich. 49; but does not lie for injuries to things annexed to the realty; 4 Term 504; 2 M'CORD 339; 17 Johns. 116; 10 B. Monr. 72; nor to recover such things, if discovered and removed as part of the same act; 8 S. & R. 509; 6 Me. 427; 8 Cow. 230; nor for writings concerning the realty; 1 Brownl. 163.

Replevin lies in Massachusetts wherever detinue does, e. g. for deeds which attend the inheritance; Holmes, Com. L. 353.

A general property with the right to immediate possession gives the plaintiff sufficient title to maintain it; 9 Wend. 230; 15 Pick. 69; 9 Gill & J. 220; 2 Ark. 315; 4 Blackf. 304; 8 Dana 238; 27 Miss. 193; 2 Swan 335; 60 Vt. 624; as do a special property and actual possession; 2 Watts 110; 2 Ark. 315; 4 Blackf. 304; 10 Mo. 277; 9 Humphr. 739; 3 Ohio St. 82; and the bare possession of property, though wrongfully obtained, is sufficient title to maintain it against a mere stranger; 51 Minn. 294.

A joint owner of personal property can maintain replevin in his own name to recover it, against one whose right is not superior to his; 60 Vt. 718.

It will not lie for the defendant in another action to recover goods belonging to him and taken on attachment; 5 Co. 99; 20 Johns. 470; 2 N. H. 412; 2 B. Monr. 18; 3 Md. 34; nor, generally, for goods properly in the custody of the law; 2 N. & M'C. 456; 3 Md. 64; 7 Watts 173; 4 Ark. 625; 8 Ired. 387; 16 How. 622; 3 Mich. 163; Hempst. 10; 2 Wisc. 92; 1 Sneed 390; 72 Hun 633; but this rule does not prevent a third person, whose goods have been improperly attached in such suit, from bringing this action; 4 Pick. 167; 14 Johns. 84; 6 Halst. 870; 2 Blackf. 172; 7 Ohio 183; 19 Me. 255; 9 Gill & J. 220; 24 Vt. 871.

As to the rights of co-tenants to bring this action against each other, see 1 Harr. & G. 303; 12 Conn. 831; 15 Pick. 71; 86 Neb. 621; as against strangers, see 4 Mass. 515; 13 Wend. 131; 15 Me. 245; 2 N. J. L. 553; 27 N. H. 330; 6 Ind. 414.

The action lies, in England, and most of the United States, wherever there has been an illegal taking; 18 E. L. & E. 230; 7 Johns. 140; 5 Mass. 268; 8 S. & R. 563;

1 Mass. 319; 11 Mo. 28; 2 Blackf. 415; 1 Const. 401; 8 N. H. 89; 6 Halst. 870; 1 Ill. 130; 1 Mo. 845; 6 T. B. Monr. 421; 6 Ark. 18; 4 Harr. Del. 337; and in some states wherever a person claims title to specific chattels in another's possessions; 2 Harr. & J. 429; 4 Me. 806; 1 Pa. 239; 4 Harr. N. J. 160; 4 Mo. 93; 2 Blackf. 244; Hempst. 10; 4 R. I. 539; 121 Mass. 107; 54 Me. 447; 48 Miss. 357; while in others it is restricted to a few cases of illegal seizure; 9 Conn. 140; 8 Rand. 448; 16 Miss. 279; 4 Mich. 295. The object of the action is to recover possession; and it will not lie where the property has been restored. And when brought in the detinet the destruction of the articles by the defendant is no answer to the action; 3 Bla. Com. 147.

The declaration must describe the place of taking. Great accuracy was formerly required in this respect; 2 Wms. Saund. 74 b; 10 Johns. 53; but now a statement of the county in which it occurred is said to be sufficient; 1 P. A. Bro. 60.

The chattels must be accurately described in the writ; 6 Halst. 179; 1 Harr. & G. 252; 4 Blackf. 70; 1 Mich. 82.

The plea of non cepi puts in issue the taking, and not the plaintiff's title; 6 Ired. 38; 25 Me. 464; 3 N. Y. 506; 2 Fla. 42; 13 Ill. 378; and the pleas, not guilty; 9 Mo. 256; cepi in alio loco, and property in another, are also of frequent occurrence.

An avowry, cognizance, or justification is often used in defence. See those titles.

The judgment, when the action is in the detinuit, if for the plaintiff, confirms his title, and is also for damages assessed by the jury for the injurious taking and detention; 1 W. & S. 518; 20 Wend. 172; 15 Me. 20; 1 Ark. 557; 5 Ired. 192. In actions of replevin the measure of damages is the real value of the chattel at the time the tortious possession of the defendant began, with damages for its unlawful detention; 54 N. J. L. 597.

The defendant in replevin is not concluded by the value of the property named in the bond of the writ, when he brings an action on the bond, and is not estopped from showing such value to be greater than there stated; 125 U. S. 426.

See JUDGMENT; Morris, Repl.; 6 E. & B. 842; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 3.

REPLEVY. To re-deliver goods which have been distrained to the original possessor of them, on his giving pledges in an action of replevin. It signifies also the bailing or liberating a man from prison, on his finding bail to answer. See REPLEVIN.

REPLIANT. One who makes a replication.

REPLICATION (Lat. replicare, to fold back).

The plaintiff's answer to the defendant's plea or answer.

In Equity. The plaintiff's avoidance or denial of the answer or defence. Story, Eq. Pl. § 877.

A general replication is a general denial of the truth of the defendant's plea or answer, and of the sufficiency of the matter alleged in it to bar the plaintiff's suit, and an assertion of the truth and sufficiency of the bill. Cooper, Eq. Pl. 329, 330. Such a replication is always sufficient to put in issue every material allegation of an answer or amended answer, unless the rules of pleading imperatively require an amendment of the bill; 108 U. S. 1.

A special replication was one which introduced new matter to avoid the defendant's answer. It might be followed by rejoinder, surrejoinder, and rebutter. Special replications have been superseded by the practice of amending bills; 1 How. Intr. 55; 17 Pet. App. 68. A replication must be made use of where the plaintiff intends to introduce evidence, and a subpoena to the defendant to rejoin must be added, unless he will appear gratis; Story, Eq. Pl. § 879.

A replication may be filed ex parte after witnesses have been examined under leave of court; Story, Eq. Pl. § 881; Mitf. Eq. Pl. by Jeremy 828. If a replication is taken to a plea and issue be found thereon, the bill will not be dismissed, provided the facts contained in the plea are proved; 24 U. S. App. 542.

In the federal courts, after an answer is filed on any rule day, complainant has until the second rule day thereafter to file a general replication; 85 Fed. Rep. 506 (in the 8th Circuit).

In Admiralty. No replication to the answer to a libel is now allowed; the libellant, under Adm. Rule 51, is considered as denying new facts set up in the answer.

At Law. The plaintiff's reply to the defendant's plea. It contains a statement of matter, consistent with the declaration, which avoids the effect of the defendant's plea or constitutes a joinder in issue thereon. See Andr. Steph. Pl. 151.

It is, in general, governed by the plea, whether dilatory or in bar, and most frequently denies it. When the plea concludes to the country, the plaintiff must generally reply by a similiter. See STILLER; Hempet, 67. When it concludes with a verification, the plaintiff may either conclude the defendant by matter of estoppel, deny the truth of the plea in whole or in part, confess and avoid the plea, or new assign the cause of action in case of an evasive plea. Its character varies with the form of action and the facts of the case. See 1 Chitty, Pl. 519.

As to the form of the replication:

The title contains the name of the court, and the term of which it is pleaded, and in the margin the names of the plaintiff and defendant. 2 Chitty, Pl. 641.

The commencement is that part which immediately follows the title, and contains a general denial of the effect of the defendant's plea. When the plea is to the jurisdiction, it contains a statement that the writ ought not to be quashed, or that the court ought not to be ousted of their jurisdiction. Rastell, Entr. 101. When misnomer is pleaded, no such allegation is required; 1 B. & P. 81.

When matter in estoppel is replied, it is, in general, in the words "and the said plaintiff saith that the said defendant."

When the replication denies or confesses and avoids the plea, it contains a precludi non, which see.

The body should contain—

Matter of estoppel, which should be set forth in the replication if it does not appear from the previous pleadings; as, if the matter has been tried upon a particular issue in trespass and found by the jury; 8 East 846; 4 Mass. 443; 4 Dana 78; denial of the truth of the plea, either of the whole plea, which may be by a denial of the fact or facts constituting a single point in express words; 12 Barb. 573; 36 N. H. 282; 28 Vt. 279; 1 Humphr. 524; or by the general replication and injury, etc., according to the form of action; 8 Co. 67; 1 B. & P. 79; 13 Ill. 80; 19 Vt. 329; or of a part of the plea, which may be of any material fact; 20 Johns. 406; 13 T. B. Monr. 288; and of such only; 20 N. H. 323; 37 E. L. & E. 479; 9 Gill 310; 8 Pet. 31; or of matter of right resulting from facts; 1 Saund. 28 a. n. 5; 10 Ark. 147; see 2 Ia. 120; and see TRAVESSE; a confession and avoidance; 23 N. H. 535; 2 Denio 97; 10 Mass. 228; see CONFESSION AND AVOIDANCE; a new assignment, which see.

The conclusion should be to the country when the replication denies the whole of the defendant's plea containing matter of fact; 2 McLean 92; 7 Pick. 117; 1 Johns. 516; as well where the plea is to the jurisdiction; 1 Chitty, Pl. 385; as in bar; 1 Chitty, Pl. 554; but with a verification when new matter is introduced; 1 Saund. 103, n.; 17 Pick. 87; 1 Brev. 11; 11 Johns. 56. See 5 Ind. 264. The conclusions in particular cases are stated in 1 Chitty, Pl. 615; Com. Dig. Plead (F 5). See 1 Saund. 103, n.; 1 Johns. 610; Archb. Civ. Pl. 258; 19 Vin. Abr. 29; Bac. Abr. Trespass (14).

As to the qualities of a replication. It must be responsive to the defendant's plea; 17 Ark. 865; 4 McLean 521; answering all which it professes to answer; 13 Ark. 188; 8 Ala. N. s. 375; and if bad in part, is bad altogether; 1 Saund. 888; 7 Cra. 156; 82 Ala. N. s. 506; directly; 10 East 205; see 7 Blackf. 481; without departing from the allegations of the declaration in any material matter; 2 Watts 806; 4 Munf. 205; 22 N. H. 303; 5 Blackf. 806; 1 Ill. 26; see DEPARTURE; with certainty; 6 Fla. 25; see CERTAINTY; and without duplicit; 4 Ill. 423; Daveis 280; 14 N. H. 378; 26 Vt. 897; 4 Wend. 211; see DUPPLICITY. Although the replication is a departure from the complaint, yet the defendant cannot avail himself of such a defect in a court of error, where he did not raise the question by demurrer or by motion, but went to trial upon the issues as made up; 148 U. S. 345.

An objection that replications were not filed to the defendant's pleas when the trial commenced, nor before judgment with leave of court, comes too late if made after entry of judgment; 144 U. S. 484.

REPLY. In England in public prosecutions for felony or misdemeanor, instituted by the Crown, the law officers have a general right of reply, whether the defendant has introduced evidence or not; but prosecuting counsel in ordinary cases have not this right. See 6 Law Mag. & Rev., 4 Ser. 102. See OPENING AND CLOSING; RIGHT TO BEGIN; BURDEN OF PROOF.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE. That communication which the chairman makes to the house upon the close of the investigation in which the committee has been engaged.

REPORT OFFICE. Formerly a department of the English court of chancery. Whart.

REPORTING, COUNCIL OF LAW. In 1865 the Council of Law Reporting commenced a series of reports covering all the superior courts of England which took over the regular reporters. But this series is not official, as is sometimes thought. "All reports made by gentlemen of the Bar and published on their responsibility are equally regular. There is no superiority in the reports of the Council of Law Reporting. Counsel are as much entitled to use the one as the others." (per Lord Esher, M. R., 3 T. L. R. 641). Byrne.

REPORTS. A printed or written collection of accounts or relations of cases judicially argued and determined.

The value and force of adjudicated precedents, which is, to a greater or less degree, acknowledged in the jurisprudence of all civilized countries, is elsewhere discussed under the titles herein, Judge-made law, precedent, and stare decisis. The greater weight given to precedent, however, in England and America, makes the subject of law reporting one of the utmost interest and importance. The multiplication of reports has given rise to much discussion on the subject.

In an able report to the American Bar Association, 1898, presented by Edward Q. Keasbey, it was suggested that the evils of excessive reports would be lessened if the court could be induced to write shorter opinions, especially when passing upon well-settled principles of law, and if the dissenting opinions were brief. The committee thought that dissenting opinions should be published. Only the important cases should be reported, omitting those which decide only questions of fact, or reaffirm settled principles of law, the selection to be made by the reporter. In preparing the syllabus all dicta should be omitted, and also propositions of law made by the court which were only arguendo. The reporter should state the facts even though they are stated by the court; an abstract of the arguments should be printed only in novel and important cases; Rep. Am. Bar Ass'n, 1898.

Prior to the year 1800, there were only one or two American Reports. In England, however, there were very many, but before the period of official reporting, and particularly among the early reports, there is a great difference in the value of the reports published by volunteer reporters. While some of them are of the highest authority, both in England and America, others are of little or, in many cases, of no authority whatever, and it is of the highest importance that a lawyer in citing them should know the character of the volume cited.

They are often mere note-books of lawyers or of students, or copies hastily and very inaccurately made from genuine manuscripts. In some instances one part of the book is good, when another is perfectly worthless. This is especially true of the early Chancery Reports, which were generally printed as booksellers' "jobs."

The failure to give due attention to the character of the old reports has led to grave judicial errors. Mr. Wallace, in "The Reporters," calls attention to the fact that the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall, which "had the effect of almost totally subverting in two states of our Union the entire law of charitable uses," relied upon the authority, which, twenty-five years afterwards, under the critical examination of Mr. Binney, was shown to be no authority, and the opinion passed upon it was overruled. The necessity of attention to the apparent value of the old reports is enhanced by the fact that even in books of the worst authority, there are occasional cases well reported, and different parts of the same book are of very different value. The most thorough and satisfactory source of information on this subject is "The Reporters," the author of which made the most exhaustive investigations in London, and his work received the highest commendation from English judges: 5 C. B. N. s. 854, where the book was characterized "as highly valuable and interesting," and one to which "they could not refrain from referring" on a question involving the reputation of one of the early English reporters.

Although want of space requires the omission in this revision of the detailed list of reports, a few of the comments upon the older reporters are given here in view of the fact that some of the sources from which they were drawn are out of print.

For a history of the "Law Reports" in England, with much information on reporting, see Daniel, History of the Origin of the Law Reports, 1884.

See 1 Abbott's National Digest, x, for much information as to the Federal Reports, other than those in supreme court. All of the federal cases (except in the Supreme Court) have been reprinted in a very valuable series, in thirty volumes, under the name of "Federal Cases."

See, generally, 1 Kent, 14th ed. 471; 9 L. Quart. Rev. 179; 1 id. 137; Wambaugh, Study of Cases, passim; 2 Jurid. Soc. Papers 745; "The Expediency of Digesting the Precedents of the Common Law, and Regulating the Publication of Reports."

For a list of reports, see Soule, Lawyers' Reference Manual, which gives the chronology of all reports.

Among the English reporters the following possess little authority: Noy, Godbolt, Owen, Popham, Winch, March, Hutton, Ley, Lane, Hetley, Carter, J. Bridgman, Keble, Siderfin, Latch, several volumes of the "Modern" Reports. 3d Salkeld, Gilbert's Cases in Law and Equity, the 1st and 2d parts of "Reports in Chancery," Chancery Cases, Reports temp. Finch, "Gilbert's Reports," 8th Taunton, Peake's Nisi Prius Reports.

Prof. Wambaugh (Study of Cases) speaks of the "many cases excellently reported by Dyer, Plowden, Coke, Croke, Yelverton, Hobart, and Saunders." The first reporter to make orderly and condensed reports in full harmony with modern ideas was Sir James Burrow (1756-1772, K. B.); id.

Aleyn (John). K. B., 1648-48. 1 vol. These are reports of cases in the time of the civil wars of Charles I., and do not possess much authority, though contain-

- ing reports of Rolle's decisions.
- Ambler (Charles). Cases in the High Court of Ch. 1737-83. Second edition by J. E. Blunt. 3 vols. An originally published of very little authority, but much improved by Mr. Blunt, whose edition was published in 1888.
- Barnardiston (Thomas). High Ct. of Ch. 1740-41. 1 vol. Lord Mansfield (3 Burr. 1143) forbade the citing of this book as it would be only misleading the students to put them upon reading it. He said it was marvellous, however, to those who knew the sergeant, and his manner of taking notes, that he should so often stumble upon what was right; but that there was not one case in his book which was so throughout. Lord Eldon, however, in 1 Bligh, N. R. 538, says, "in that book there are reports of very great authority."
- Barnardiston (Thomas). K. B., 1736-84. 3 vols. A book which for many years was very little esteemed, the author having been reputed a careless fellow who let the wags scribble what they liked in his note-book while he was asleep. However, where his accuracy has been tested, as it has been of later times, it has come out pretty fairly; and now both the K. B. and Ch. reports of Barnardiston are reasonably respected. See Wallace, Report. 423.
- Bendloes (Guilme). All the Courts, 1531-1633. 1 vol. Properly cited as New Benloe, but sometimes as old Benloe.
- Benloe (Guilme) & Dalison (Guilme). C. P. Benloe contains cases from 1532 to 1579, and Dalison from 1546 to 1574. 1 vol. of each, bound together. There is very great confusion in the citations of the reports of Benloe and Dalison. Some cases of Benloe's are given at the end of Keilway's Reports and of Ashe's Tables. It is supposed that the title New Benloe was given to the volume here given as Bendloes to distinguish it from the cases in Keilway and Ashe. The volume given as Benloe & Dalison consists in reality of two separate series of reports, paged independently, although bound together, and the modes of reference are very various, being sometimes to Dalison when Benloe is intended, and vice versa. A full account is given in Wallace's Report. 80-85, 93, of these reports, and of the various mistakes made in citation.
- Blackstone (William). K. B., C. P., and Exch. Chamber, 1746-79. 2 vols. Lord Mansfield said (Doug. 92, n.): "We must not always rely on the words of reports, though under great names. Mr. Justice Blackstone's reports are not very accurate," but of late they have been well edited, and are more esteemed.
- Boanquet (J. B.) & Puller (C.). New Reports, C. P., Exch. Chamb., and House of Lords, 1804-07. 3 vols. The volumes of Boanquet & Puller are generally cited from 1 to 5 in American books. In English books the latter series is frequently cited as New Reports.
- Brooke (Robert). New Cases. Called also Petit Brooke, Little Brooke and Bellewe's Cases, temp. Henry VIII. A selection of cases in the K. B., C. P., and Exch., 1515-58. These cases were selected out of Brooke's Abridgment by Richard Bellewe.
- Burrow (James). K. B., 1756-71. 5 vols. A full, excellent, and accurate reporter, who holds in a legal point of view the same relation to Lord Mansfield that in a literary and historical one Boswell does to Dr. Johnson.
- Carthew (Thomas). King's Bench, 3 Jac. II.-12 Will. III. 1 vol. Lord Thurlow said, "Carthew and his book were equally bad authority," but Lord Kenyon, in 2 Term 776, says that Carthew is in general a good reporter. See also Willes 182.
- Cary (George). Ch., 1557-1604. 1 vol. Frequently mere transcripts from the Registrar's books.
- Cases in B. R. temp. Holt. Cases and Resolutions in the Court of K. B., 1714-29. 1 vol. This must not be mistaken for "Reports temp. Holt," for which see "Holt."
- Cases in Chancery. Two parts in 1 vol.; with this is usually bound "Select Cases in the High Ct. of Ch.," which contains the cases of the Duke of Norfolk and of the Earls of Bath & Montagu; it is cited as 1st, 2d, & 3d "Chancery Cases."
- Cases tempore Hardwicke. K. B. at Westminster during the time of Hardwicke, usually cited as Hardwicke's Cases, which see; see also Ridgway.
- Cases tempore Talbot. K. B., C. P., and Ch., 1734-38. 1 vol. By Alex. Forrester to page 817, and from there to the end, by Hawkins. A book of highly respectable authority, though not a monument worthy of Lord Talbot's transcendent virtue. Wallace, Report. 506.
- Cases tempore William III. King's Bench, 1690-1702. 1 vol. See Modern, vol. 12. Buller said in Doug. 88, "13th Modern is not a book of any authority."
- Choyce Chancery Cases, 1557-1608. 1 vol. A very good little book, so far as it goes. See Wallace, Report. 470, where curious extracts are given from the volume. Reprinted, 1870.
- Coke (Edward). King's Bench, Common Pleas, Exchequer, and Chancery, 1572-1618. 13 parts or volumes. Lord Coke's reports are very voluminous. They have been severely criticised by Sir Edward Sugden, Lord Redeford, and others, and Coke charged with "telling untruths" in them; but all the charges made against him have been examined by Mr. Wallace (Reporters, p. 165), and Lord Coke's integrity vindicated from the imputations of his countrymen.
- Comberbach (Roger). K. B., 1685-99. It is said by Lord Thurlow (1 Bro. C. C. 97) to be bad authority, though a few cases are better reported than in any other place. Its chief use is for comparison with other reports of the same cases. Wallace, Report. 396.
- Cox (Edward W.). Criminal Cas. in all the Cts. in England and Ireland, 1643-81. 14 vols. These reports, which are edited by Mr. Cox, are prepared by a large number of reporters.
- Croke (Sir George). Ch., K. B., and C. P., 1582-1641. 4 vols. The reports in Croke are generally short, and, as the books consist of four closely-printed volumes, the cases are, of course, very numerous. Occasionally cases are misreported; but taken as a whole, Croke has enjoyed from early times a high reputation, and even now is constantly cited. Wallace, Report. 198. The Chancery cases in the time of Elizabeth are Sir Harbottle Grimston's. The reports are commonly cited by the name of the author and the reigning sovereign: vol. 1 as Croke Car., vols. 2 & 3 Croke Eliz., and vol. 4 Croke Jac.
- Davies, or Davis, or Davy (Sir John). K. B., C. P., and Exch. in Ireland, 1604-12. 1 vol. Davies, who was chief-justice of Ireland, and died on the night of the day on which he had been appointed chief-justice of England, was a man of great genius and accomplishments. For an account of these reports, see Wallace, Report. 229.
- Dickens (John). High Ct. of Ch., 1559-1798. 2 vols. Mr. Dickens was a very attentive and diligent register; but his notes, being rather loose, are not to be considered as of very high authority. Lord Redeford, 1 Sch. & L. 240. See, also, Sugd. Vend. 146. A few cases, where the opinions are printed from manuscripts prepared for publication, are valuable. Wallace, Report. 476.
- Dyer (Sir James). K. B. and C. P. Exch. and Ch., 1513-82. 8 vols. Short notes, never intended by Dyer to have been published; always regarded, however, as among the best of the old reports. Wallace, Report. 126.
- Ellis (Thomas F.) & Blackburn (Colm). Q. B., 1852-58. 8 vols. Among modern reports few are more valued for the success with which extraneous matter is stripped off and nothing but the essence of the case presented to the reader. 9 Lond. Law Mag. 839.
- Equity Cases Abridged. Cases in the High Court of Ch., 1667-1744. 3 vols. This work is a digest, rather than reports, and is frequently cited. The first volume, which is attributed to Pooley, is of excellent authority; the second, much less so.
- Fortesque (John). Select cases in all the courts of Westminster Hall, tempore Will. III., Anne, Geo. I., and Geo. II.; also the Opinion of all the Judges of England relative to the Grandest Privileges of the royal family, and some observations relating to the Privilege of a Queen-Consort. 1 vol.
- Freeman (Richard). K. B. and C. P., 1670-1704. 1 vol. Freeman's note-book having been stolen by a student, and these reports published surreptitiously, they were for a long time but little esteemed. Of late, however, they have been re-edited, and enjoy a higher reputation than they formerly did. Lord Mansfield said, in Cowp. 16, "Some of the cases in Freeman are very well reported." Wallace, Report. 890.
- Gilbert (J.). Cases in Law and Eq., 1718-15. 1 vol. A posthumous work, containing one or two cases well reported, but generally consisting of loose notes very badly edited. Wallace, Report. 251. Commonly cited as Gilbert's Cases.
- Hardwicke's Cases. Court of King's Bench at Westminster, 7th to 10th Geo. II., during which time Hardwicke presided in that court, to which are added some cases decided by Lee and two Equity cases by Hardwicke.
- Hetley (Sir Thomas). C. P., 1627-31. 1 vol. Not marked by any peculiar skill, accuracy, or information. Doug. ix. Not valued. 2 Jurid. Soc. Papers 577.
- Hobart (Sir Henry). C. P. and Ch., 1-23 Jac. I. Hobart was a great judge; and these reports, which are by himself, have always been esteemed. Wallace (Report. p. 163) cites from Judge Jenkins a splendid tribute to his character.
- Holt. Reports tempore Holt. K. B., C. P., Exch., and Ch., 1688-1710. 1 vol., by Giles Jacob. (Taken from a MS. of Thomas Farresley.) In Rex v. Bishop of London, Lee, C. J., said this was a book of no authority.
- Howell (Thomas B.) & (Thomas J.). State Trials and Proceedings for High Treason and other Crimes and Misdemeanors, 1163-1830. 38 vols., and Index. Vol. 1-21, 1163-1783. T. B. Howell. 22-33, 1783-1830. T. J. Howell. This is an immense collection of cases, brought together by hunting through every collection in England, and, therefore, having very different degrees of merit. For a full account of its character and value, see Wallace's Report. 64.
- Hutton (Sir Richard). C. P., 1612-38. 1 vol. This book, says Mr. Wallace, seems to belong to that class of literary productions which do not obtain notoriety enough to be abused. Wallace, Report. 246.
- Jenkins (David). Exchequer, 1220-1623. 1 vol. Eight centuries, or eight hundred cases. See an interesting account of Jenkins, who was a Welsh judge, by Mr. D'Israeli, given in Wallace's Report. 71. The reports of Jenkins were prepared in prison, where Jenkins was put for his loyalty to Charles I. and kept for fifteen years. The book is of excellent authority.
- Jones (Sir William). K. B. and C. P., House of Lords, and Exch. Chamb., 1620-41. It is a book of good authority. It is sometimes cited as 1st Jones, to distinguish it from Sir Thomas Jones, which is then correspondingly cited as 2d Jones. Keble (Joseph). K. B., 12-20 Car. II. 3 vols., an inaccurate reporter, yet a tolerable historian of the law; 3 Wils. 330. Not a satisfactory reporter, but a pretty good register, and more esteemed of late, perhaps, than formerly. Wallace, Report. 315.

Keilway (Robert). K. B. and C. P. It also contains some cases in certis temporibus, and some temp. Edw. III. The volume, having been edited by John Croke, is sometimes cited as Croke's Reports. See Wallace, Report. 119.

Leonard (William). K. B., C. P., and Exch., 1540-1615. A very good and much-esteemed reporter; one of the best, indeed, of the old books. See Wallace, Report. 142, citing Sugden, Lord Nottingham, and Sir George Treby.

Ley (Sir James). King's Bench, C. P., Ex., and Court of Wards, and Star Chamber, 1608-29. 1 vol. The book is seldom cited. Wallace, Report. 241. It is sometimes cited as Leigh; id. 244.

Lofft (Capel). K. B., C. P., and Ch., 1772-74. 1 vol. Not a very highly esteemed reporter, but the only volume giving an account of the great case of the negro Somerset.

Meeson (R.) & Welsby (W. N.). Exch. and Exch. Chamb., 1836-47. 16 vols. Among the most useful and best reported of the modern English reports.

Modern Cases in Law and Equity. See Modern Reports, parts 8 & 9; in 1 Burr. 386, it is observed, that it is a miserable, bad book, and in 3 Burr. 1326, the court said they treated it with the contempt it deserved.

Modern Reports. Select Cases in the K. B., C. P., Ch., and Exch., 1609-1755. 12 vols. By various hands, and of various degrees of excellence; some are very inferior. See much learning on the subject in Wallace, Report. 347-360. See Modern Cases in Law and Equity.

Moore (Edmund F.). Cases in Privy Council. New Series, 1862-73. 9 vols. Vol. 3, p. 347 to the end, and vols. 4-9 are identical word for word with 1-4 Law Reports. Privy Council.

Moore (Francis). K. B., C. P., Exch., and Ch., 1512-1612. 1 vol. Moore's Reports are printed from a genuine manuscript, and are esteemed valuable and accurate.

Mosely (William). High Court of Ch., time of King, 1726-30. 1 vol. Condemned by Lord Mansfield, but perhaps on insufficient ground. Lord Eldon, a better judge of the merits of a Chancery Reporter, spoke well of it (19 Ves. 488, n.), as did also Mr. Hargrave. Wallace, Report. 504.

New Reports. See Bosanquet & Puller.

Noy (William). K. B. and C. P., 1559-1649. 1 vol. This is an abridgment by Serjeant Noy, who when a student borrowed Noy's Reports and abridged them for his own use. Vide Vent. 81; 2 Keb. 652; for a full account see Wallace, Report. 154.

Plowden (Edmund). K. B., C. P., and Exch., 1550-80. 1 vol. Probably the most full, finished, and thoroughly accurate of the old reporters; always highly esteemed. For an amusing illustration of subtle argumentation, see the case of Hales v. Petit, as quoted by Wallace, Report. 147, where he shows it to be the original of the grave-digger's scene in Hamlet.

Raymond (Lord Robert). K. B. and C. P., 1694-1734. 8 vols. Some of the earlier cases in Lord Raymond, having been taken when he was a young man, or copied from the papers of his different young friends, have not been so highly esteemed, perhaps, as his other cases, which are, generally speaking, his own. As a whole, his reports are highly respected, and often cited, even in this day and country. Wallace, Report. 401.

Ridgway (William). K. B. and Ch., at the time Lord Hardwicke presided in those courts. King's Bench, 1738, Chancery, 1744-45.

Salkeld (William). K. B., Ch., C. P., and Exch., 1 Will. III. to 10 Anne. 3 vols. The third volume having been published from notes less carefully prepared than the first two, is not accounted as of the highest authority.

Saville (Sir John). C. P. and Exch., 1580-94. This book, says Wallace (Report. 197), appears to be in the condition of Pope's "most women," and to have no character at all. I have not found a word upon it, either of censure or of praise.

Sayer (Joseph). K. B., 1751-58. 1 vol. "An inaccurate reporter." 1 Sugd. Vend. 80.

Select Chancery Cases. High Court of Ch. Containing the great cases of the Duke of Norfolk, and of the Earls of Bath and Montague. (This is part 3 of Chancery Cases, and is usually bound with parts 1 & 2.)

Strange (Sir John). Ch., K. B., C. P., and Exch. 2 vols. Authoritative, though too brief in the style of reporting. Mr. Nolan, in 1795, published a new edition, which has rendered Strange more valuable than he was. Wallace, Report. 420.

Style (William). K. B., "now Upper Bench," 1646-1655. Printed from a genuine manuscript, and esteemed.

Taunton (William P.). C. P. and other Cts., 1807-19. 8 vols. The eighth volume of Taunton is not very highly esteemed, having been made up from his notes and not supervised by him. Wallace, Report. 633, note; 9 Lond. Law Mag. 339.

Vaughan (Sir J.). C. P., 1665-74. 1 vol. Edited by Edward Vaughan. Containing some cases from his own perfected manuscript, very well reported, but some others not fully prepared, and not so much esteemed. Vaughan was an interesting character, upon whose merits the author of The Reporters dwells with interest. See page 334.

Vernon (Thomas). High Ct. of Ch., 1680-1719. 2 vols. Vernon was a very eminent chancery lawyer; but his reports were posthumously published from notes found in his study after his death. They were loose, and on that account unsatisfactory and inaccurate. A very highly improved edition was published in 1801, 1807, by Mr. Raithby, under the auspices of Lord Eldon. The manuscript reports of Vernon were the subject of an entertaining chancery suit between his widow, his heir-at-law, and his residuary legatee. No one of the parties, however, succeeded; and the case was ended by the lord chancellor's keeping the manuscript himself. See Wallace, Report. 493.

West (Martin, J.). High Court of Ch., 1736-39. 1 vol. A book published only of recent time, though from ancient and genuine manuscripts. It is a good work so far as it goes, but, unfortunately, includes but a short term of Lord Hardwicke's administration in Chancery.

Willes (John). C. P., Exch. Chamb., Ch., and House of Lords, 1737-58. 1 vol. Edited by Charles Durnford. Posthumously published, but quite authoritative and useful.

Year-Books. Cases in different Courts, 1307-1537. 11 vols. See YEAR-BOOKS.

Year-Books of Edward I. K. B., 1292-1307. 5 vols. Edited and translated by A. J. Horwood. Published by the authority of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, under the direction of the Master of the Rolls.

Yelverton (Sir Henry). K. B., 1603-13. 1 vol. Excellent reports of a first-rate old-school English lawyer, and admirably edited in America by Judge Metcalf. See Wallace, Report. 311, where a full biographical sketch of the gifted and unfortunate reporter is given.

REPRESENT. To exhibit, to expose before the eyes. To represent a thing is to produce it publicly. Dig. 10. 4. 2. 8.

REPRESENTATION. In Insurance. The stating of facts by either of the parties to a policy of insurance, to the other, whether in writing or orally, expressly or by plain implication, preliminary and in reference to making the insurance, obviously tending to influence the other as to entering into the contract. 12 Md. 348; 11 Cush. 324; 2 N. H. 551; 6 Gray 221.

A statement incidental to the contract, relative to some fact having reference thereto, and upon the faith of which the contract is made. May, Ins. 190. It may be affirmative or promissory.

The distinction between representation and warranty must be carefully observed; the latter is a part of the contract, the former is but a statement incidental thereto. In an action on the policy the plaintiff must show facts sufficient to bring him within the terms of the warranty while the burden of proving the untruthfulness of representations, if any, is on the defendant. Further, representations need not be literally complied with; 49 Neb. 811; but only in material points; while in cases of warranty, the question of materiality does not arise; May, Ins. § 183. All reasonable doubts as to whether statements inserted in or referred to in an insurance policy are warranties or representations should be resolved in favor of the assured; 58 Ark. 528. Representations in writing are, ipso facto, material; 4 H. L. C. 484; 98 Mass. 381; 31 Ia. 216. Representations are material though the fact represented may not relate directly to the risk; 20 N. Y. 32.

Doctrines respecting representation and concealment usually have reference to those by the assured, upon whose knowledge and statement of facts the insurance is usually made; but the doctrine on the subject is equally applied to the underwriter, so far as facts are known to him; 3 Burr. 1905.

In the absence of fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation, the assured cannot be protected by claims of ignorance of the contents of the application, since it is his duty to inform himself of its contents before signing; 45 Mo. App. 426; and it is the duty of the assured to communicate all material facts, and he cannot urge as an excuse for his omission to do so that they were actually known to the underwriters, unless the knowledge of the latter was as full and particular as his own information; 107 U. S. 485.

A misrepresentation though made unintentionally, or through mistake, makes the insurance void, notwithstanding its being free from fraud; 1 Du. 747; 18 Eng. L. & Eq. 427. See 87 Ky. 541.

The material falsity of an oral promissory representation, without fraud, is no defence in an action on a policy. If made with the intent to deceive, the policy may be thereby avoided. Promissory representations, reduced to writing and made a part of the contract, become substantial warranties; May, Ins. § 182. See 9 Allen 640.

A substantial compliance with a representation is sufficient,—the rule being less strict than in case of a warranty; 3 Metc. Mass. 114; 4 Mas. 439; 31 Ia. 216; 34 Md. 582. See 98 Mass. 381. The validity of the policy does not depend on the literal truth of the assertion; 40 Neb. 811. The substantial truth of the statement is for the jury, but not its materiality; May, Ins. § 187.

Insurance against fire and on life rests upon the same general conditions of good faith as marine insurance; but in the first two classes the contract is usually based mainly upon statements by the applicant in written replies to numerous inquiries expressly referred to in the policy, which answers are thus made express warranties and must, accordingly, be strictly true whether their being so is or is not material to the risk. The inquiries are intended to cover all material circumstances, subject, however, to the principle, applicable to all contracts, that fraud by either party will exonerate the other from his obligations, if he so elects; 7 Barb. 570; 10 Pick. 535; 6 Gray 288; 2 Rob. La. 300; 24 Pa. 320; 3 Md. 341; 2 Ohio 452; 21 Conn. 19; 6 Humphr. 176; 6 McLean 324; 8 How. 235; 2 M. & W. 505. 36 Fed. Rep. 118; 119 Ill. 482; 80 Ala. 470. See 10 L. R. A. 666; CONCEALMENT; INSURANCE; MISREPRESENTATION; WARRANTY.

In Scotch Law. The name of a plea or statement presented to a lord-ordinary of the court of session, when his judgment is brought under review.

REPRESENTATION OF PERSONS. A fiction of the law, the effect of which is to put the representative in the place, degree, or right of the person represented.

The heir represents his ancestor; Bac. Abr. Heir and Ancestor (A); the devisee, his testator; the executor, his testator; the administrator, his intestate; the successor in corporations, his predecessor; and, generally speaking, they are entitled to the rights of the persons whom they represent, and bound to fulfil the duties and obligations which were binding upon them in those characters.

Representation was unknown to the Romans, and was invented by the commentators and doctors of the civil law. Toullier, Dr. Civ. Fr. liv. 3, t. 1, c. 3, n. 180. See Ayliffe, Pand. 397; Dalloz, Dict. Succession, art. 4, § 2.

REPRESENTATIVE. One who represents or is in the place of another.

In the law of decedents' estates any person who has succeeded to the rights of the decedent, whether by purchase descent, or operation of law. 67 N. W. Rep. (Neb.) 771.

A representative of a deceased person, sometimes called a "personal representative," or "legal personal representative," is one who is executor or administrator of the person described. 6 Madd. 159; 5 Ves. 402. See 118 Mass. 200; 189 id. 504.

A gift in a will to the "representative" of a person is a gift to his legal personal representatives, in the absence of any context in the will showing that the word is to have a different meaning; 45 Ch. Div. 269.

See PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES; LEGAL PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE.

In legislation, it signifies one who has been elected a member of that branch of the legislature called the house of representatives.

The securing of fair apportionment of representatives in legislative bodies is one of the most serious problems in modern constitutional law, there being no subject as to which the legislation is more frequently affected by partisan bias. In many of the states there has been an effort to control the matter by constitutional provisions under which it is usually required that the districts shall be formed of contiguous territory and contain as nearly as possible an equal number of inhabitants. These are the principal provisions in the constitution of Illinois, in which state it was held that an apportionment act was valid which was a substantial compliance with the constitution, though the rule of compactness was only applied to a limited extent; 155 Ill. 451. The subject has been very carefully considered in Indiana. Among the conclusions reached there are: that under the state constitution requiring a sexennial enumeration of the male inhabitants over twenty-one years and an apportionment at the next legislative session thereafter, the legislature, having once made a valid apportionment after an enumeration, is prohibited from making a reapportionment and from repealing such valid apportionment during the enumeration period; that if the first apportionment is invalid, even before it has been declared so by the courts, a second may be passed; that the question of the validity of such a law is not a political one, to be determined only at the discretion of the legislature, but that it is entirely within the jurisdiction of the courts to determine its constitutionality; that where the question of constitutionality has been determined by a lower court in an action between the citizens, and an appeal is dismissed, the subject is not res judicata as against the state; and that the state is not estopped from objecting to the constitutionality of an apportionment by the fact that a legislature has been elected under an unconstitutional act; 144 Ind. 598.

In New Jersey it was held that the constitutionality of such acts is a subject of judicial inquiry and not a mere political question, but that the courts cannot overturn a law passed within constitutional limitations on the ground that it is unwise, impolitic, unjust, or oppressive, or even that it was procured by corporate means; 56 N. J. L. 126, where it was held that mandamus to compel officers to proceed under prior laws in respect to elections instead of following an unconstitutional statute is not premature because no demand and refusal has been made or the time arrived when it is the duty of the officers to act.

In a Virginia case it was said that the laying off and defluing of districts under a constitutional requirement that they should be of contiguous counties, etc., compact, and, as nearly as may be, equal in population, was an exercise of political and discretionary power of the legislature for which they are amenable to the people; 79 Va. 289; but this, it is remarked, "was a mere declaration of the court without discussion of the question and without any facts reported which show any attempt at a gerrymander"; 15 L. R. A. 551, note.

Any clear violation of the constitutional provisions will make an apportionment invalid; as, the division of a county or district where the constitution forbids it; 81 Wis. 440; or the allotment of a greater number of representatives than the constitution directs; 26 Kan. 724; and glaring inequalities either of representation or of population in the districts will be considered a sufficient indication that the legislature has exceeded its discretion; 83 Wis. 90; 93 Mich. 1; 2 Idaho 1209; 73 N. C. 193; 133 Ind. 178; contra, 135 N. Y. 473, as to which see 31 Am. Law Reg. 851. The opinion by Peckham, J., in the New York case takes a radically different view of the nature of the power involved in the apportionment of a state for representatives from that expressed in the other cases cited, particularly those from Indiana and New Jersey. He says: "From the formation of government under written constitutions in this country the question of the basis of representation in the legislative branch of the government has been one of the most important and most frequently debated. It is not true that equality of numbers in representation has been the leading idea at all times in regard to republican institutions. . . . The power to readjust the political divisions of a sovereignty with the view of representation of those divisions or of the inhabitants thereof, in the legislature, resides, of course, in the first instance, with the people, who in this country are the source of all political power. The essential nature of the power itself is not, however, altered by that fact. In its nature it is political as distinguished from legislative or judicial."

If the discretion of the legislature is fairly exercised, the apportionment will be sustained even if not mathematically correct; 48 Ohio St. 438; 11 Kan. 235, per Brewer, J.; 18 Me. 459; but there can be no legislative discretion to give a county of less population than another greater representation under a constitution requiring representative districts to contain "as nearly as may be" an equal number of inhabitants; 92 Mich. 638.

These principles have been also applied to apportionments made by minor administrative bodies to which the power is granted; 142 N. Y. 523, 531; 138 id. 95. In the case last cited a distinction was made by Peckham, J., between the legislative power of apportionment and that confided to an inferior body. The former, it was said, might reasonably be considered a power to divide according to the legislative discretion, "but in the case of inferior bodies, like boards of supervisors, who have no legislative power excepting what is specifically granted, the power to divide being given, the implication would be strong that it was only a power to divide equally." Nevertheless, as some discretion was necessarily involved, it must be an honest and a fair discretion arising out of the circumstances of the case and reasonably effecting the exercise of the power of equal division. But it was not to be considered "that every trifling deviation from equality of population would justify or warrant an application to a court for redress. . . . It must be a grave, palpable, and unreasonable deviation from the standard," making it apparent "that very great and wholly unnecessary inequality has been intentionally provided for." 138 N. Y. 95.

As to the apportionment of representatives in congress among the states, see APPORTIONMENT; and see, generally, JUDICIAL POWER; LEGISLATIVE POWER; LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES.

REPRESENTATIVE DEMOCRACY. A form of government where the powers of the sovereignty are delegated to a body of men, elected from time to time, who exercise them for the benefit of the whole nation. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 81.

REPRESENTATIVE PEERS. See PEERS.

REPRIEVE (from Fr. repandre, to take back). In Criminal Practice. The withdrawing of a sentence for an interval of time, which operates in delay of execution. 4 Bla. Com. 394.

It is granted by the favor of the pardon power, or by the court who tried the prisoner. Reprieves are sometimes granted ex necessitate legis; for example, when a woman is convicted of a capital offence, after judgment she may allege pregnancy in delay of execution. In order, however, to render this plea available, she must be quick with child (q. v.), the law presuming—perhaps wrongly enough—that before that period life does not commence in the fetus; Co. 3d Inst. 17; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 368; 2 id. 413; 4 Bla. Com. 395. See JURY OF WOMEN.

The judge is also bound to grant a reprieve when the prisoner becomes insane; 4 Hargr. St. Tr. 205, 206; Co. 3d Inst. 4.

The president, under the constitution, Art. II, § 2, has the power to grant reprieves. A reprieve is said to be a withdrawal or withholding of punishment for a time after conviction and sentence, in the nature of a stay of execution. Cooley, Const., 2d ed. 104. See Bish. Cr. Proc. 1299. When a reprieve is granted in a capital case to a day certain, the warden should execute the sentence on the day the reprieve expires, and the time of execution need not be again fixed by the court; 40 N. E. Rep. (N. Y.) 883. See 29 Ohio St. 457; 13 Wend. 159; PARDON.

REPRIMAND. The censure which in some cases a public officer pronounces against an offender.

This species of punishment is used by legislative bodies to punish their members or others who have been guilty of some impropriety of conduct towards them. The reprimand is usually pronounced by the speaker.

REPRISALS. The forcibly taking a thing by one nation which belonged to another, in return or satisfaction for an injury committed by the latter on the former. Vattel, b. 2, c. 18, s. 342; 1 Bla. Com. c. 7.

General reprisals take place by virtue of commissions delivered to officers and citizens of the aggrieved state, directing them to take the persons and property belonging to the offending state wherever found.

Negative reprisals take place when a nation refuses to fulfil a perfect obligation which it has contracted, or to permit another state to enjoy a right which it justly claims.

Positive reprisals consist in seizing the persons and effects belonging to the other nation, in order to obtain satisfaction.

Special reprisals are such as are granted in times of peace to particular individuals who have suffered an injury from the citizens or subjects of the other nation.

Reprisals are used between nation and nation to do themselves justice, when they cannot otherwise obtain it.

Where an individual is injured by a foreign state he must first apply to its courts, if possible, and it is only when refused redress there that his own government can claim to interfere. Similarly where the injury is to a state, compensation should be demanded before recourse is had to reprisal. Risley, Law of War 57. An instance of reprisal occurred in December, 1897, when Germany threatened bombardment at Hayti unless the government within eight hours saluted the German flag and made compensation to an injured German subject. See LETTERS OF MARQUE.

Reprisals are made in two ways, either by embargo, in which case the act is that of the state, or by letters of marque and reprisals, in which case the act is that of the citizen, authorized by the government. See 2 Brown, Civ. Law 334. Such letters are generally granted for a refusal to pay debts, for an unwarrantable suspension of treaty obligations, denial of evident justice, or a refusal to pay indemnity for losses. One of the last instances of a letter of reprisal was in 1778 when the King of France gave authority of reprisal to certain people whose vessels had been seized by the British government for carrying contraband of war; Snow, Int. Law 76. Congress has the power to grant letters of marque and reprisal. U. S. Const. art. 1, s. 8, cl. 11.

The property seized in making reprisals is preserved while there is any hope of obtaining satisfaction or justice; as soon as that hope disappears, it is confiscated, and then the reprisal is complete; Vattel, b. 2, c. 18, § 843. See Boyd's Wheat. Int. Law. See POSTLIMINIUM.

REPRISES. The deductions and payments out of lands, annuities, and the like are called reprises, because they are taken back; when we speak of the clear yearly value of an estate, we say it is worth so much a year ultra reprises, besides all reprises.

In Pennsylvania, lands are not to be sold under an execution when the rents can pay the debt and interest and costs in seven years, beyond all reprises.

REPROBATION. In Ecclesiastical Law. The propounding exceptions either against facts, persons, or things; as, to allege that certain deeds or instruments have not been duly and lawfully executed; or that certain persons are such that they are incompetent as witnesses; or that certain things ought not, for legal reasons, to be admitted.

REPUDIATUR, ACTION OF. An action in Scotch law for the purpose of convicting a witness of perjury. Bell.

REPUBLIC. A commonwealth; that form of government in which the administration of affairs is open to all the citizens. In another sense, it signifies the state, independently of its form of government. 1 Toullier 28 and n., 202, note.

REPUBLICAN GOVERNMENT. A government in the republican form; a government of the people; a government by representatives chosen by the people. Cooley, Const. 184. It is usually put in opposition to a monarchical or aristocratic government. But it is said to be, strictly speaking, by no means inconsistent with monarchical forms; Cooley, Const. 194; there can be no doubt that in the light of the fact that the Revolution was intended to throw off monarchical forms, a republican form of government in the constitution means a government in which the people choose, directly or indirectly, the executive.

The fourth section of the fourth article of the constitution directs that "the United States shall guarantee to every state in the Union a republican form of government." Mill. Const. U. S. 640. The form of government is to be guaranteed, which supposes a form already established; and this is the republican form of government the United States have undertaken to protect. See Story, Const. § 1807.

A republican government, once established, may be endangered so as to call for the action of congress: 1. By the hostile action of some foreign power, and taking possession of the territory of some state, and setting up a government therein not established by the people. 2. By the revolutionary action of the people themselves in forcibly rising against the constituted authorities and setting the government aside, or attempting to do so, for some other.

In either of the above cases, it will be the duty of the federal government to protect the people of the state by the employment of military force. Cooley, Const., 2d ed. 203; see 7 Wall. 700; 7 How. 1, 8. Even in strict accordance with the forms prescribed for amending a state constitution, it would be possible for the people of the state to effect such changes as would deprive it of its republican character. It has been suggested that it would then be the duty of congress to intervene. In any case there could probably be no appeal from the decision of congress. Cooley, Const. 196. See GOVERNMENT.

REPUBLICATION. An act done by a testator, from which it can be concluded that he intended that an instrument which had been revoked by him should operate as his will. Schoul. Wills 441; or it is the re-execution of a will by the testator, with a view of giving it full force and effect.

The republication is express when there has been an actual re-execution of it; 1 Ves. 440; 3 Rand. 193; 9 Johns. 312; it is implied when, for example, the testator by a codicil executed according to the statute of frauds, reciting that he had made his will, added, "I hereby ratify and confirm my said will, except in the alterations after mentioned." 3 Bro. P. C. 85. See 30 Neb. 149; 16 Ves. Jr. 167. The will might be at a distance or not in the power of the testator, and it may be thus republication: 1 Ves. Sen. 437; 1 Ves. 468; 4 Bro. C. C. 2.

The republication of a will has the effect—first, to give it all the force of a will made at the time of the republication; Beach, Wills 143; if, for example, a testator by his will devise "all his lands in A." then revokes his will, and afterwards buys other lands in A, the republication, made after the purchase, will pass all the testator's lands in A; Cro. Eliz. 493. See 1 P. Wms. 275. Second, to set up a will which had been revoked. See, generally, Will. Exec.; Jarm. Wills; Schoul. Ex.; Schoul. Wills.

REPUDIATE. To express in a sufficient manner a determination not to accept a right, when it is offered.

He who repudiates a right cannot by that act transfer it to another. Repudiation differs from renunciation in this, that by the former he who repudiates simply declares that he will not accept; while he who renounces a right does so in favor of another. Renunciation is, however, sometimes used in the sense of repudiation. See RENOUNCE; RENUNCIATION; Wolf, Inst. § 329.

REPUDIATION. In Civil Law. A term used to signify the putting away of a wife or a woman betrothed.

Properly, divorce is used to point out the separation of married persons; repudiation, to denote the separation either of married people, or those who are only affianced. Divortium est repudium et separatio maritum; repudium est renuntiatio matrimonii, vel etiam est divorcium. Dig. 50. 18. 101.

A determination to have nothing to do with any particular thing; as, a repudiation of a legacy is the abandonment of such legacy, and a renunciation of all right to it.

In Ecclesiastical Law. The refusal to accept a benefice which has been conferred upon the party repudiating.

As to repudiation of a contract before the time of performance, see ELECTION OF RIGHTS AND REMEDIES; PERFORMANCE.

REPUGNANCY (Lat. re, back, against, pugnare, to fight). In Contracts. A disagreement or inconsistency between two or more clauses of the same instrument. In deeds, and other instruments inter vivos, the earlier clause prevails, if the inconsistency be not so great as to avoid the instrument for uncertainty; 2 Taunt. 109; 15 Sim. 118; 2 C. B. 880; 13 M. & W. 684.

In wills, the latter clause prevails, under the same exceptions; Co. Litt. 112 b; Plowd. 541; 6 Ves. 100; 2 My. & K. 149; 1 Jarm. Wills 411. See, however, 18 Ch. Div. 17.

Repugnancy in a condition renders it void; 2 Mod. 285; 11 id. 191; 1 Hawks 20; 7 J. J. Marsh. 192; 6 Ch. Div. 549. And see, generally, 8 Pick. 272; 4 id. 54; 6 Cow. 677; Schoul. Wills 498; Beach, Wills 521.

In Pleading. An inconsistency or disagreement between the statements of material facts in a declaration or other pleading; as, where certain timber was said to be for the completion of a house already built; 1 Salk. 213. Repugnancy of immaterial facts, or of redundant and unnecessary matter, if it does not contradict material allegations, will not, in general, vitiate the pleadings; Co. Litt. 308 b; 10 East 142; 1 Chitty, Pl. 283. See Steph. Pl. 378; Gould, Pl. § 172.

REPUGNANT. Contrary to; in conflict with.

REPUTABLE. Worthy of repute or distinction, held in esteem, honorable, praiseworthy. 123 Ill. 245.

REPUTATION (Lat. reputo, to consider). The opinion generally entertained in regard to the character or condition of a person by those who know him or his family. The opinion generally entertained by those who may be supposed to be acquainted with a fact.

In general, reputation is evidence to prove a man's reputation in society; a pedigree; 14 Camp. 416; 1 S. & S. 153; certain prescriptive or customary rights and obligations; matters of public notoriety. But as such evidence is in its own nature very weak, it must be supported, when it relates to the exercise of a right or privilege, by proof of acts of enjoyment of such right or privilege within the period of living memory; 1 Maule & S. 679; 5 Term 82. Afterwards, evidence of reputation may be given. The fact must be of a public nature; it must be derived from persons likely to know the facts; 9 B. Monr. 88; 4 B. & Ald. 53. Evidence of the reputation of a man for truth and veracity in the neighborhood of his home is equally competent to affect his credibility as a witness, whether it is founded upon a dispassionate judgment, or upon warm admiration for habitual truthfulness, or natural indignation at habitual falsehood, and whether his neighbors are virtuous or immoral in their own lives; 164 U. S. 221. The facts must be general, and not particular; they must be free from suspicion; 1 Stark. Ev. 54. An existing reputation is a fact to which any one may testify who knows it; he knows it because he hears it, and what he hears constitutes the reputation; 50 Mich. 643.

Formerly, and until the middle of this century, witnesses in England could testify as to their personal knowledge and opinion of a defendant's or witness's character. At present the question to be asked is whether the witness knows the witness's reputation, what it is, and whether, from such knowledge, he would believe him on oath. Tayl. Ev. § 1324. In America, as to the character of a defendant, reputation is in most states made the exclusive mode of proof; and as to a witness's character, reputation is the sole source of proof. See an interesting article by Prof. John H. Wigmore, in 53 Am. L. Rev. 718.

Injuries to a man's reputation by circulating false accounts in relation thereto are remediable by action and by indictment. See LABEL; SLANDER; CHARACTER.

REPUTE. Character, as distinguished from reputation. 3 Dist. Rep. (Pa.) 271. See GOOD REPUTE.

REPUTED. Accepted by general, or public opinion.

REPUTED OWNER. In English Practice. A bankrupt trader who has in his apparent possession goods, which he holds with the consent of the true owner, is called the reputed owner. The Bankruptcy Act of 1869, sec. 15, § 5, provides that such goods in his possession at the commencement of his bankruptcy pass to his trustee; but things in action, other than debts due to him in the course of his trade or business, are not deemed goods and chattels within the meaning of that clause. Whart. Dict.; 3 Steph. Com. 166.

By the English Bankruptcy Act of 1883, the trustee is entitled to such goods as are, at the commencement of the bankruptcy (the date of the earliest act of bankruptcy), in the possession, order, or disposition of the bankrupt, by the consent of the true owner, in such a way that the former is the reputed owner of them; provided they are with the bankrupt in his trade or business. The ownership may be rebutted by showing a custom in the trade to take goods on hire, as in the case of a hotel-keeper having hired furniture; 18 Ch. D. 30; or of pianos; 18 id. 601; and perhaps of furniture in general; 41 L. J. Q. B. 20; but see, contra, 23 Ch. D. 261.

In mechanic's lien law, where the remedy is usually in rem, liens are commonly filed of record against the "owner or reputed owner."

REQUEST (Lat. requiro, to ask for). Within the provision of the constitution of a religious society providing that a change therein cannot be granted except at the request of two-thirds of the society, a vote was held not a request. 81 Pac. Rep. (Ore.) 216.

In Contracts. A notice of a desire on the part of the person making it, that the other party shall do something in relation to a contract. Generally, when a debt is payable immediately, no request need be made; 10 Mass. 280; 8 Day 327; 1 Johns. Cas. 819.

In some cases, the necessity of a request is implied from the nature of the transaction; as, where a horse is sold to A, to be paid for on delivery, A must show a request; 5 Term 409; or impossibility on the part of the vendor to comply, if requested; 5 B. & Ad. 712; previous to bringing an action; and on a promise to marry; 2 Dowl. & R. 55. See DEMAND. And if the contract in terms provides for a request, it must be made; 1 Johns. Cas. 327. It should be in writing, and state distinctly what is required to be done; 1 Chitty, Pr. 497.

In Pleading. The statement in the plaintiff's declaration that a demand or request has been made by the plaintiff of the defendant to do some act which he was bound to perform, and for which the action is brought.

A general request is that stated in the form "although often requested so to do" (licet sepe requisitus), generally added in the common breach in the money counts. Its omission will not vitiate the declaration; 1 B. & P. 59; 1 Johns. Cas. 100.

A special request is one provided for by the contract, expressly or impliedly. Such a request must be averred; 5 Term 409; 3 Camp. 549; 2 B. & C. 695; and proved; 1 Saund. 32, n. 2. It must state time and place of making, and by whom it was made, that the court may judge of its sufficiency; 1 Stra. 89. See Com. Dig. PLEADER (C 69, 70); 1 Saund. 89, n.; DEMAND.

REQUEST NOTES. In English Law. Certain notes or requests from persons amenable to the excise laws, to obtain a permit for removing any excisable goods or articles from one place to another.

REQUESTS, COURTS OF. See COURTS OF REQUESTS. Vol. 12 (1896) of the publications of the Selden Society contains Select Cases in this court.

REQUISITION. The act of demanding a thing to be done by virtue of some right. See MILITARY OCCUPATION.

The demand made by the governor of one state on the governor of another for a fugitive, under the provision of the United States constitution. See EXTRADITION; FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE.

REQUISITIONS OF TITLE. Written inquiries made by the solicitor of an intending purchaser of land, to the vendor's solicitor, in respect of some apparent insufficiency in the abstract of title. Moz. & W.

RESE FIRMS. Inferior feudatories in Scotland. Whart.

RES (Lat. things). The terms Res, Bona, Biens, used by jurists who have written in the Latin and French languages, are intended to include movable or personal, as well as immovable or real property. 1 Burge, Conf. L. 19. See BIENS; BONA; THINGS; JUS AD REM.

RES ACCESSORIA (Lat.). An accessory thing; that which belongs to a principal thing, or is in connection with it.

RES ADIRATAE. One of the two old remedies of the 12th century for an involuntary loss of possession. One might either bring the appeals of robbery or larceny (called respectively the actio vi bonorum raptorum and actio furti) or one might omit the charge of larceny and claim the goods as res adiratae, i. e., as his goods which have gone from his possession against his will. (Bracton f. 150). A person who elected this latter remedy might abandon it and proceed by appeal of larceny; but the converse course could not be pursued. The gist of the old action for res adiratae was the fact that the plaintiff had lost his goods, that they had come into the hands of the defendant, and that the defendant on request refused to give them up. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 3rd ed., 320 et seq.

RES ADJUDICATA. See RES JUDICATA.

RES COMMUNES (Lat.). In Civil Law. Those things which, though a separate share of them can be enjoyed and used by every one, cannot be exclusively and wholly appropriated; as, light, air, running water. Mackelvey, Civ. Law § 136; Erskine, Inst. i. 1. 3. 6.

RES CONTROVERSA (Lat.). A matter controverted. A matter in controversy; a point in question; a question for determination.

RES CORPORALES. Corporeal things; things which can be touched, or are perceptible to the senses. Burrill; Dig. 1. 8. 1. 1. Called by Cicero, res quae sunt (things which are), as distinguished from incorporeal things, which are understood, or mentally perceived. Id.; Cic. Topic. 5. See RES INCORPORALES.

RES GESTA (Lat.). Transaction; thing done; the subject-matter. Those circumstances which are the automatic and undesigned incidents of a particular litigated act, and which are admissible in evidence when illustrative of such act. Whart. Ev.; 96 Cal. 125.

Events speaking for themselves through the instructive words and acts of participants, not the words and acts of participants when narrating the events. 18 Colo. 170.

When it is necessary in the course of a cause to inquire into the nature of a particular act, or the intention of the person who did the act, proof of what the person said at the time of doing it is admissible evidence as a part of the res gesta, for the purpose of showing its true character. On an indictment for a rape, for example, what the girl said so recently after the fact as to exclude the possibility of practicing on her, has been held to be admissible evidence as a part of the transaction; 9 Stark. 241; 1 Phill. Ev., 4th Am. ed. 163.

Declarations or acts, accompanying the fact in controversy and tending to illustrate or explain it, as conversations contemporaneous with the facts; 112 Mo. 374; 18 Fed. Rep. 156; 148 Pa. 583; or the complaints of the injured party, both as to bodily suffering and the circumstances of the occurrence; 79 Pa. 433; 95 N. Y. 274; 86 Wis. 518; 34 U. S. App. 364; 116 Ind. 565; 158 U. S. 271; or the declarations and conduct of third persons at the time; 107 Mo. 240; 49 Ohio St. 25; 93 Tex. 318; see 21 How. St. Tr. 514; are admissible; also declarations of a party at the time of taking possession of personal property as to the nature of his possession; 35 Mo. 533; statements made by the parties at the time of the sale of personal property, when such statements bear upon the question of good faith or other fact in issue; 19 N. Y. 464; 86 N. H. 339; statements as to the conditions of an execution sale; 1 Rawle 238; or of an officer or other persons interested at the time of levying on property; id.; 47 Barb. 248; of a person at the time of making an entry upon land, when they explain the character and purpose of making such entry; 3 Bla. Com. 174; by a bondsman when signing a bond; 189 Ind. 387; declarations accompanying the payment of money, to show the purpose or application of such payment; 25 Vt. 806; statements of a grantor at the time of making a conveyance; 16 N. H. 168; 88 Barb. 491; 81 Mo. 62. Declarations of a wife showing maltreatment on the part of her husband are part of the res gesta in an action by him for the alienation of her affections; 64 Vt. 439. Declarations made by one officer of a steamboat while engaged in violently removing a passenger from a part of the vessel in which his contract for transportation did not entitle him to be, were admitted as part of the res gesta; 121 U. S. 687.

A mere narrative of a past occurrence is inadmissible as part of the res gesta; 9 Cush. 42; 41 Conn. 55; 70 Miss. 874; the declaration must so harmonize with the fact as to form one transaction; 128 N. Y. 85. In a case frequently criticised, a statement made immediately after the act and whilst running from the room, where her throat had been cut, was held inadmissible; 14 Cox, Cr. C. 341. The length of the interval of time between the main facts and the statements cannot be important if sufficient time elapsed to make the statements, having regard to their form and substance, mere narrative; 71 Ind. 66; and that only a minute elapsed, does not alter the rule; 63 Miss. 576; but see 8 Wall. 397; 3 Cush. 181, where the declarations are considered part of the res gesta, if there is neither time nor motive for misrepresentation or invention; and see 25 Gratt. 921; and if they are voluntary and spontaneous and made within so short a time after the occurrence as to preclude the idea of deliberate design; 35 Cal. 49; 116 Ind. 566; 93 Tex. 657; 77 Va. 681. In an action for personal injury, a physician's written statement concerning the injury made at the time and annexed to his deposition, is not admissible as part of the res gesta; 119 U. S. 59; nor were the declarations of an officer of a corporation that a note on which it had brought suit was indorsed to it only for the purpose of suing on it, where there were no circumstances connected with the declaration which would raise an estoppel; 83 Fed. Rep. 644. In Georgia, it is provided by the code that declarations accompanying the act or so nearly connected therewith in time as to be free from all suspicion of device or afterthought, are admissible in evidence;

Georgia Code § 3733. See 14 Am. L. Rev. 817; 15 id. 1; 11 Eng. Rul. Cas. 298; Taylor, Evidence; Jones, Evidence; EVIDENCE.

RES IMMOBILES (Lat.). Immoveable things. Such things as, by their nature, are physically incapable of a change of place; such as lands; or which cannot be removed to another place without injury to their substance; such as buildings.

RES INCORPORABLES. Things incorporeal; fixed relations in which men stand to things or to other men; relations giving them power over things or claims against persons. Inst. 2, 2.

RES INTEGRA (Lat. an entire thing; an entirely new or untouched matter). A term applied to those points of law which have not been decided, which are untouched by dictum or decision. 3 Mer. 269; 1 Burge, Conf. L. 241.

RES INTER ALIOS ACTA (Lat.). A technical phrase which signifies acts of others of transactions between others.

Neither the declarations nor any other acts of those who are mere strangers, or, as it is usually expressed any res inter alios acta, are admissible in evidence against any one; when the party against whom such acts are offered in evidence was privy to the act, the objection ceases; it is no longer res inter alios; 1 Stark. Ev. 53; 3 id. 1300; 4 Mann. & G. 282. See 1 Metc. Mass. 55; MAXIM.

RES IPSA LOQUITUR (Lat. the thing speaks for itself). A phrase often used in actions for injury by negligence where no proof of negligence is required beyond the accident itself, which is such as necessarily to involve negligence. See 5 Ex. 787. Where contractual relations existed between the parties, and the plaintiff shows actual negligence or conditions so obviously dangerous as to admit of no other inference, the burden thus thrown on the defendant is not that of satisfactorily accounting for the accident, but of showing that he used due care; 184 Pa. 519. See NEGLIGENCE.

For cases in which this doctrine has been applied or considered, see 167 Mass. 388; 9 App. D. C. 60; 78 Fed. Rep. 442; 79 id. 125; 90 Me. 110; 56 Alb. L. J. 96; 17 App. Div. N. Y. 402; 18 id. 22; 89 Tex. 168.

RES JUDICATA (Lat. the matter has been decided). In Practice. A legal or equitable issue which has been decided by a court of competent jurisdiction.

When one is barred in any action, real or personal, by judgment, demurrer, confession, or verdict, he is bound as to that or a like action forever; 14 Q. B. D. 146; XII B. L. R. 304.

When a question is necessarily decided in effect though not in express terms between parties to the suit, they cannot raise the same question as between themselves in any other suit in any other form; 8 Atkins 626. This definition of Lord Hardwicke, in Gregory v. Molesworth, has been by some writers considered the best.

The doctrine of res judicata is plain and intelligible, and amounts simply to this, that a cause of action once finally determined, without appeal, between the parties, on the merits, by a competent tribunal, cannot afterwards be litigated by a new proceeding either before the same or any other tribunal; 100 Mass. 469.

Estoppel rests on equitable principles, while res judicata does not rest upon equitable principles, but on the two maxims which were its foundation in the Roman Law (see infra); Ind. L. R. VIII. All. 332; it is rather a principle of public policy than the result of equitable considerations. Thus it is also a matter of private right; 84 N. J. Eq. 585.

It is a general principle that a decision by a court of competent jurisdiction, of matters put in issue by the pleadings, is binding and conclusive upon all other courts of concurrent power, and between parties and their privies; 168 U. S. 48, reviewing the federal cases. This principle pervades not only our own, but all other systems of jurisprudence, and has become a rule of universal law, founded on the soundest policy, and is necessary for the repose and peace of society and the maintenance of civil order; id. See also 125 id. 702; 7 Wall. 107.

It has been characterized as a "fundamental concept in the organization of civil society;" 22 Illow. 352.

It was derived from Roman law, being founded on the maxims nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa, and interest reipublice ut sit finis litium.

It was commonly said by the civilians res judicata facit ex albo nigrum, ex nigro album, ex curvo rectum, ex recto curvum (a decision makes white black; black, white; the crooked, straight; the straight, crooked).

It was said by Blackburn, L. J., that the doctrine was not received in England, as it was on the continent, directly from the Roman law; L. R. 2 App. Cas. 530.

But in order to make a matter res judicata there must be a concurrence of the four conditions following:

1. Identity in the thing sued for; 5 M. & W. 109; 7 Johns. 20; 1 Hen. & M. 449; 1 Dana 434.

2. Identity of the cause of action; Whart. Ev. 763; 6 Wheat. 109; 2 Gall. 216; 17 Mass. 237; 2 Leigh 474; 8 Conn. 268; 1 N. & McC. 329; 16 S. & R. 282; 3 Pick. 429; 1 Tex. Civ. App. 611.

An action for breach of covenant of seisin is not a bar to an action for the breach of a covenant in the same deed against incumbents; the action not being founded on the same cause of action, and the rule prohibiting the splitting of a single cause of action having, therefore, no application; 18 So. Rep. (Ala.) 825. A person who obtains an order from a police magistrate for the delivery of goods improperly detained, is not thereby precluded from subsequently bringing an action for special damage arising out of the same detention. It is not res judicata, since the matter of damage was one with which the magistrate had no power to deal; [1893] 2 Q. B. 172.

A judgment against an administrator for moneys due the estate is not a bar to a subsequent action for a further sum not known by the plaintiff at the time of the former action, to be due; 23 S. E. Rep. (N. C.) 259.

But the estoppel arising from a finding in a previous suit between the same parties extends to a decision of the legal rights of the parties on a state of facts common to both suits, although the causes of action are different; 55 Fed. Rep. 690.

3. Identity of persons and of parties to the action; 7 Cra. 271; 1 Wheat. 6; 14 S. & R. 435; 4 Mass. 441; 2 Yerg. 10; 5 Me. 410; 8 Gratt. 63; 16 Mo. 168; 12 Ga. 271; 21 Ala. N. S. 813; 23 Barb. 464; 83 Va. 862; 83 id. 173; 50 Kan. 342.

A judgment in favor of plaintiffs in an action upon notes which they had previously transferred to a bank, is not conclusive that they owned the cause of action at the time of recovery, or that it was due at the commencement of the action as against other creditors of the maker not parties or privies to the action, and does not bar them from asserting their rights to precedence; 95 Wis. 169.

4. Identity of the quality in the persons for or against whom the claim is made; 5 Co. 83 b; 6 Mann. & G. 161; 4 C. B. 694.

A judgment is only presumptively conclusive against parties in the character in which they sue or are sued; 114 Ind. 803. As a rule it must be a final decision of a cause on the merits to constitute res judicata; 92 Mo. 120. The following have been held not to be a bar to a subsequent suit: A final judgment on a third demurrer to the second amended petition; 61 Mo. App. 237; a judgment of dismissal entered upon the plaintiff's failure to appear; 42 Pac. Rep. (Nev.) 11; an order of "judgment reversed," but without an award of a retrude de novo, entered in the supreme court on a writ of error; 98 Pa. 142; a suit which was dismissed under the rule as to dismissal for want of prosecution and was not heard on the merits; 23 S. E. Rep. (W. Va.) 789; a judgment of peremptory nonsuit against the plaintiff; 66 N. W. Rep. (Wis.) 253. See NONSUIT. The findings of the court do not constitute a bar in a subsequent action between the same parties unless followed by a judgment based thereon; 90 Hun 411.

Cases to which the doctrine of res judicata has been applied are: The decision of a referee on a point properly determined by him and reviewable on appeal; 3 East 846; 4 Cow. 539; 14 N. Y. 329; a judgment rendered on a compromise; 39 La. Ann. 803; a decision on habeas corpus as to the custody of a child; 99 Mo. 484; a judgment upon the ownership of property where that is the material point in issue; 29 N. Y. St. Rep. 569; judgment by default; 123 U. S. 336; 111 N. Y. 177; or on demurrer; 91 U. S. 526; 124 id. 225; 10 Col. 599; or by an equally divided court; 68 Md. 516; a judgment of dismissal entered under an agreement reciting a settlement that nothing is due; 120 U. S. 89; or upon a hearing where the entry is not "expressly without prejudice"; 125 id. 698; or a simple dismissal with taxation of costs and award of execution; 30 Fed. Rep. 325; or dismissal for want of prosecution; 81 Va. 709; or dismissal for failure in the proof of execution of a contract for breach of which an action is brought, even where the words, without prejudice, are added to the decree; 33 W. Va. 464; judgments in other states; 53 Me. 346; 69 Md. 211; 97 U. S. 331; but where the state is a party it is not estopped from denying the constitutionality of an act which it is claimed was a contract between the state and an individual, where that question was not raised in a previous adjudication of the state court upon the meaning of the statute; 94 U. S. 645.

A judgment on a plea in abatement in an action of attachment for rent is not res judicata on the trial on the merits; 58 Mo. App. 181; nor is a judgment in another state on habeas corpus for the custody of a child conclusive, where there has been a material change of conditions and circumstances; 30 Wkly. Law Bul. 164. A judgment ordering that the cause be filed away for want of prosecution is not final or a bar to a subsequent action; 23 S. W. Rep. (Ky.) 366. A judgment abating an action entered upon a verdict finding that plaintiff's powers as administrator had ceased pending the action, is not a bar to the subsequent revival of the action on plaintiff's reinstatement as administrator; 61 Ark. 203.

The decision of a motion or summary application is not to be regarded in the light of res judicata, or as a final conclusive upon the parties as to prevent their drawing the same matter in question again in the more regular form of an action; 128 U. S. 489. An adjudication sustaining a demurrer going to the merits is res judicata as to the whole matter in controversy; 117 Mo. 261; 126 Ind. 477; 5 Ind. App. 369.

In determining whether a decision of a court of competent jurisdiction operates as an estoppel, the court in a subsequent case is entitled to consider what facts were before the court in the former case, and to give effect to any fresh facts that subsequently take place; [1894] 2 Q. B. 108. Its conclusiveness does not depend upon the question whether there is the same demand in both cases, but it exists even where there are different demands, if the question upon which the recovery of the second demand depends has, under identical circumstances and conditions, been previously concluded by a judgment between the parties or their privies; 167 U. S. 371. Where the causes of action are different, but the parties the same, the former judgment is conclusive as to matters, in fact, necessarily decided and as to matters which might have been, but which were not, presented and decided; 83 Fed. Rep. 632. A judgment, when introduced in evidence as an estoppel, cannot be explained or varied by parol; 43 Ill. App. 835.

The fact that a court is composed of several divisions does not prevent the judgment of one of the divisions from being res judicata; 167 U. S. 371. A change in a person holding an office does not destroy the effect of a judgment against such officer as res judicata; 167 U. S. 371.

A judgment in a civil action is not admissible in a criminal proceeding, for the reason that the parties "are necessarily different, and the objects and results of the two proceedings are equally diverse;" 69 Conn. 212; 35 id. 185; 77 Ala. 202; 85 Vt. 437; contra, 83 Ind. 357, where, in a prosecution for the unlawful removal of a fence, a judgment in a civil action between the defendant and the prosecuting witness was admitted in evidence. But this case was criticised in 69 Conn. 212, as founded upon an error which was not relieved by the instruction of the court to the jury that the evidence was not conclusive, but merited serious consideration. The Connecticut court cite a former decision of their own to the effect that, "a judgment is conclusive or is nothing. If not conclusive, there is no rule by which courts can measure and determine its effect;" 51 Conn. 484.

Where there is concurrent jurisdiction at law and in equity, a decision in one court is res judicata as to the other; 1 Johns. Ch. 91; 18 Johns. 584; 5 Mass. 207; 70 N. Y. 11. Where there is jurisdiction both of the cause and the parties a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction is conclusive, even though erroneous, until it is reversed upon appeal or vacated; 7 Co. 76; 1 Pet. 340; 9 Cow. 237; 8 Binn. 410; 6 Pick. 435; 4 Johns. Ch. 460; 103 N. Y. 604; 81 Va. 677; 82 Ga. 168. See 7 L. R. A. 577; 11 id. 153, 308.

A decree on a bill by a stockholder for the benefit of himself and all other stockholders who come in, to enjoin the consummation of an agreement by the corporation, is conclusive in a subsequent suit by another stockholder for the same purpose and involving the same question, in the absence of fraud or collusion; 50 N. J. Eq. 656, citing 15 R. I. 75; 23 Am. Rep. 44; 6 Metc. 546; 60 Vt. 1; 11 Fed. Rep. 97; 123 Ill. 122.

The doctrine of res judicata applies even though the amount in controversy in the former suit was so small that the party was not entitled to a review in an appellate court; 152 U. S. 252.

What might be an extension of the doctrine of res judicata, though not technically within the definition of the subject, is the rule that obtains among the circuit courts of the United States by which a decision in one circuit court is followed in the other upon like facts although between different parties. This practice is more common in patent litigation. It can hardly be sustained on principle. It is a convenient rule which saves litigation and tends towards unity of decision among the federal courts other than the supreme court; 67 Fed. Rep. 928. Thus, a circuit court should follow the decision of another circuit court upholding a patent, except when new evidence of invalidity is introduced, and in such case, confine its investigation to the new evidence; 53 Fed. Rep. 791; on a motion for a preliminary injunction even greater effect is given to the prior adjudication; the new evidence must be so conclusive as to lead the court to believe that, if introduced before, it must have changed the result; 75 id. 609. This is usually spoken of as a rule of comity. While the circuit court should follow the decision in another circuit, the circuit court of appeals will re-examine the whole case anew and not follow the earlier adjudication in the circuit court; 58 id. 792.

An analogous to this subject the following may be cited: The decision of the supreme court upon questions of fact in a suit determining the validity of a patent, did not operate strictly as res judicata or as a technical estoppel in a subsequent suit in the circuit court, upon the same patent between different parties, but operated merely upon the conscience of the inferior tribunal, and therefore in applying the conclusions of the superior court the circuit court should first inquire what facts are proven in the pending case by independent evidence, and, second, examine the opinions of the superior court and the line of reasoning and conclusion which they exhibited, and from these or otherwise, but not by formal evidence, become satisfied whether or not the proofs of which the latter court took cognizance were substantially the same as those in the case at bar; 55 Fed. Rep. 516.

RES MANCIPi. In Roman Law. Those things which might be sold and alienated, or of which the property might be transferred from one person to another.

The division of things into res mancipi and res nec mancipi was one of ancient origin, and it continued to a late period in the empire. Res mancipi (Ulp. Frag. xix.) are prædia in italico solo, both rustic and urban; also, jura rusticorum prædiorum or servitutes, as via, iter, aquæductus; also slaves, and four-footed animals, as oxen, horses, etc., quæ collo dorsove domantur. Smith, Dict. Gr. & Rom. Antiq. To this list may be added children of Roman parents, who were, according to the old law, res mancipi. The distinction between res mancipi and nec mancipi was abolished by Justinian in his Code. Id.; Cooper, Inst. 442.

RES NOVA (Lat.). Something new; something not before decided.

RES NULLIUS (Lat.). A thing which has no owner. A thing which has been abandoned by its owner is as much res nullius as if it had never belonged to any one.

The first possessor of such a thing becomes the owner; res nullius fit primi occupantis. Bowy, Code, 97.

RES PERIT DOMINO (Lat. the thing is lost to the owner). A phrase used to express that when a thing is lost or destroyed it is lost to the person who was the owner of it at the time. For example, an article is sold; if the seller has perfected the title of the buyer so that it is his, and it is destroyed, it is the buyer's loss; but if, on the contrary, the title has not vested in the buyer, then the loss falls on the seller. See SALE.

RES PRIVATE (Lat.). In Civil Law. Things the property of one or more individuals. Mackeldey, Civ. Law § 187.

RES PUBLICÆ (Lat.). In Civil Law. Things the property of the state. Mackeldey, Civ. Law § 157; Erskine, Inst. 2. 1. 5. 6.

RES RELIGIOSÆ (Lat.). In Civil Law. Things pertaining to religion. Places where the dead were buried. Thevenot Deseaulles, Dict. du Dig. Choe.

RES SACRÆ (Lat.). In Civil Law. Those things which had been publicly consecrated.

RES SANCTÆ (Lat.). In Civil Law. Those things which were especially protected against injury of man.

RES UNIVERSITATIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. Those things which belonged to cities or municipal corporations. They belonged so far to the public that they could not be appropriated to private use; such as public squares, market-houses, streets, and the like. Inst. 2. 1. 6.

RESALE. A second sale made of an article; as, for example, when A, having sold a horse to B, and the latter, not having paid for him, and refusing to take him away, when by his contract he was bound to do so, again sells the horse to C. The effect of a resale is, in this case, that B would be liable to A for the difference of the price between the sale and resale; 4 Bingh. 722; 4 Mann. & G. 898; Blackb. Sale; 463. See SALE.

RESCIT, RESCIT. The admission or receiving of a third person to plead his right in a cause formerly commenced between two other persons; as, when an action is brought against a tenant for life or years, or any other particular tenant, and he makes default, in such case the reversioner may move that he may be received to defend his right and to plead with the defendant. Jacob, Law Dict.; Cowel.

The admittance of a plea when the controversy is between the same two persons. Co. Litt. 192.

RESCISSION OF CONTRACTS. The abrogation or annulling of contracts.

It may take place by mutual consent; Ans. Contr. 239; and this consent may be inferred from acts; 4 Mann. & G. 898; 1 Pick. 57; 5 Me. 277; 156 Pa. 278. It may take place as the act of one party, in consequence of a failure to perform by the others; 2 C. B. 905; 4 Wend. 285; 2 Pa. 454; 28 N. H. 561; 9 La. Ann. 81; 63 Hun 439; 76 Ga. 8; not so, ordinarily, where the failure is but partial; 4 Ad. & E. 599; 1 M. & W. 231; on account of fraud, even though partially executed; 5 Cush. 126; 15 Ohio 200; 23 N. H. 519; 129 U. S. 86. See 25 Alb. L. J. 69. Misrepresentations not a part of the same transaction are no cause for rescinding the contract; 83 Va. 504.

A contract cannot, in general, be rescinded by one party unless both parties can be placed in the same situation and can stand upon the same terms as existed when the contract was made; 2 Y. & J. 278; 4 Mann. & G. 903; 1 M. & W. 231; 3 Me. 30; 1 Denio 69; 22 Pick. 288; 4 Blackf. 515; 2 Watts 433; 10 Ohio 142; 3 Vt. 442; 1 N. H. 17; 73 Ia. 749; 39 Kan. 105; 73 Tex. 619. It must be done at the time specified, if there be such a time; otherwise, within a reasonable time; 2 Camp. 530; 14 Me. 57; 22 Pick. 546; in case of fraud, upon its discovery; 1 Den. 69; 5 M. & W. 83; 141 U. S. 429; 45 N. J. Eq. 196; 37 Fed. Rep. 418; 39 Kan. 105. The right may be waived by mere lapse of time; 8 Story 612; see 6 Cl. & F. 234; or other circumstances; 9 B. & C. 59; 4 Den. 554; 4 Mass. 502; Baldw. 331.

In case of a conditional sale or exchange the party desiring to rescind must return or tender a return of all the property received by him under the terms of the sale or exchange, and within a reasonable time; 1 Marvel Del. 156. In that case it was held that the question as to what is a reasonable time is a question for the court under the circumstances of each case; id.; in another case, however, it is said that the question whether the defendants delayed for an unreasonable time in asserting a right to rescind is for the jury; 3 C. C. App. 600.

If a party means to rescind a contract because of the failure of the other party to perform he should give a clear notice of his intention to do so, unless the contract itself dispenses with such notice, or unless notice becomes unnecessary by reason of the conduct of the parties; 187 U. S. 78.

The equity for the rescission and cancellation of agreements, securities, deeds, and other instruments arises when a transaction is vitiated by illegality or fraud, or by reason of its having been carried on in ignorance or mistake of facts material to its operation; Bisp. Eq. 31; 126 U. S. 315. The jurisdiction of the court of equity is exercised upon the principle of quia timet; that is, for fear that such agreements, securities, deeds, and other instruments may be vexatiously or injuriously used against the party seeking relief, when the evidence to impeach them may be lost; or that they may throw a cloud or suspicion over his interest or title; or where he has a defence good in equity which cannot be made available at law. The cases in which this relief will be granted on account of misrepresentation and fraud may be divided into four classes: first, where there is actual fraud in the party defendant in which the party plaintiff has not participated; 13 Pet. 26; secondly, where there is constructive fraud against public policy and the party plaintiff has not participated therein; see 4 Munf. 318; thirdly, where there is a fraud against public policy and the party plaintiff has participated therein, but public policy would be defeated by allowing it to stand; fourthly, where there is a constructive fraud by both parties,—that is, where both parties are in delicto, but not in pari delicto; see 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 694; 3 Jones, Eq. 494; 2 Mas. 378; 25 Ga. 89; 1 Pat. & H. 307; Bishp. Eq. § 81. The court will decree that a deed or other solemn instrument shall be delivered up and cancelled, not only when it is avoidable on account of fraud, but also when it is absolutely void, unless its invalidity appears upon the face of it, so that it may be defeated at any time by a defence at law; 2 Story, Eq. Jur., 13th ed. § 698; 6 Du. 507. To cancel an executed contract for alleged false representations, fraud must be made clearly to appear, and it must be shown that the complainant has been injured and deceived thereby; 124 U. S. 173.

The ignorance or mistake which will authorize relief in equity must be an ignorance or mistake of material facts; 1 Stor. 173; 11 Conn. 134; 6 Wend. 77; 8 Harr. & J. 500; 10 Leigh 37; and the mistake must be mutual; 3 Green, Ch. 103; 2 Sumn. 367; 11 Pet. 68; 24 Me. 62; 10 Vt. 570; 6 Mo. 10; 153 Pa. 134; 60 Ga. 610. If the facts are known but the law is mistaken, the same rule applies in equity as at law, that a mere mistake or ignorance of law, where there is no fraud or trust, is immaterial; ignorantia legis neminem excusat; Adams, Eq., 8th ed. 189. See 99 N. C. 30; IGNORANCE; MISTAKE.

Instruments may also be rescinded and cancelled when they have been obtained from persons who were at the time under duress or incapacity; 2 Root 218; 8 Ohio 214; 3 Yerg. 537; 36 Miss. 685; or by persons who stood in a confidential relation and took advantage of that relation; 5 Sneed 533; 31 Ala. N. S. 292; 3 Cow. 537; 2 A. K. Marsh. 175; 9 Md. 248; 3 Jones, Eq. 152, 186; 30 Miss. 869; 9 Beav. 437; 151 Pa. 593; 115 Mo. 465; 96 Mich. 562.

Gross inadequacy of consideration; 17 Vt. 9; 22 Ga. 627; 19 How. 808; 82 Va. 894; 119 U. S. 499; fraudulent misrepresentation and concealment; 3 Pet. 210; 2 Ala. N. S. 251; 10 Yerg. 206; 1 A. K. Marsh. 235; 2 Mo. 126; 84 Ala. N. S. 596; 6 Wisc. 286; 74 Ia. 161; 85 Ky. 180; 110 Md. 367; hardship and unfairness; 17 Vt. 542; 2 Root 218; 2 Green, Ch. 357; 2 Harr. & J. 265; 3 Yerg. 537; 8 Ohio 214; 81 Vt. 101; undue influence; 3 Mas. 378; are among the causes for a rescission of contracts in equity.

See, generally, 9 L. R. A. 607; ELECTION OF RIGHTS AND REMEDIES; PERFORMANCE.

RESCISSORY ACTIONS. In Scotch Law. Actions which are brought to set aside deeds. Patterson, Comp. 1058, n.

Proper improbation is an action brought for declaring writing false or forged.

Reduction-improbation is an action whereby a person who may be hurt or affected by a writing insists upon producing or exhibiting it in court, in order to have it set aside, or its effects ascertained under the certification that the writing, if not produced, shall be declared false and forged.

In an action of simple reduction the certification is only temporary, declaring the writings called for null until they be produced; so that they recover their full force after their production. Erskine, b. 4, tit. 1, §§ 5, 8.

RESCOUS. An old term, synonymous with rescue, which see.

RESCRIPT. In Canon Law. A term including any form of apostolical letter emanating from the pope. The answer of the pope in writing. Dict. Droit Can.

In Civil Law. The answer of the prince, at the request of the parties, respecting some matter in dispute between them, or to magistrates, in relation to some doubtful matter submitted to him.

The rescript was differently denominated according to the character of those who sought it. They were called annotations or subnotations, when the answer was given at the request of private citizens; letters or epistles, when he answered the consultation of magistrates; pragmatic sanctions, when he answered a corporation, the citizens of a province, or a municipality. See Code.

At Common Law. A counterpart.

In Massachusetts it is used to denote the statement of the decision of the supreme judicial court as an appellate tribunal, and the accompanying brief statement of the reasons for the decision sent to the court from which the case was brought.

RESCRIPTION. In French Law. A rescription is a letter by which the maker requests some one to pay a certain sum of money, or to account for him to a third person for it. Pothier, Contr. de Change, n. 225.

According to this definition, bills of exchange are a species of rescription. The difference appears to be this,—that a bill of exchange is given when there has been a contract of exchange between the drawer and the payee; whereas the rescription is sometimes given in payment of a debt, and at other times it is lent to the payee.

RESCUE. In Criminal Law. The forcibly and knowingly freeing another from arrest or imprisonment. 4 Bla. Com. 181.

A deliverance of a prisoner from lawful custody by a third person. 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 1065; 1 Russ. Cr. § 597.

Taking and setting at liberty, against law, a distress taken for rent, services, or damage feasant. Bacon, Abr. Rescue.

If the rescued prisoner was arrested for felony, then the rescuer is a felon; if for treason, a traitor; 3 P. Wms. 468; Cro. Car. 583; and if for a trespass, he is liable to a fine as if he had committed the original offence; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 5, c. 21. See 2 Gall. 318; Russ. & R. 432. If the principal be acquitted, the rescuer may nevertheless be fined for the misdemeanor in the obstruction and contempt of public justice; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 598. See T. U. P. Charit. 13.

In order to render the rescuer criminal, it is necessary he should have knowledge that the person whom he sets at liberty has been apprehended for a criminal offence, if he is in the custody of a private person; but if he be under the care of a public officer, then he is to take notice of it at his peril; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 606. See further, 1 Stor. 83; 2 Gall. 318; 1 Car. & M. 299; 1 Ld. Raym. 85, 89.

A departure from an unlawful imprisonment or custody is not an escape, within the meaning of the law; and one who, without violence, assists a person who is confined without authority or process of law to depart from his place of confinement, is not guilty of the crime of assisting a prisoner to escape; 92 Cal. 431; 7 Conn. 452. See BREACH OF PRISON; ESCAPE.

The rescue of cattle and goods distrained by pound-breach is a common-law offence and indictable; 7 C. & P. 233; 5 Pick. 714.

In Maritime Law. The retaking by a party captured of a prize made by the enemy. There is still another kind of rescue which partakes of the nature of a recapture: it occurs when the weaker party, before he is overpowered, obtains relief from the arrival of fresh succors, and is thus preserved from the force of the enemy. 1 C. Rob. 224, 271; Halleck, Int. Law cxxxv.

Rescue differs from recapture. The rescuers do not by the rescue become owners of the property, as if it had been a new prize; but the property is restored to the original owners by the right of post-liminium.

RESCUSSOR. The party making a rescue is sometimes so called; but more properly he is a rescuer.

RESEALING WRIT. The second sealing of a writ by a master so as to continue it, or cure it of an irregularity. Whart. Dict.

RESERVATION. That part of a deed or instrument which reserves a thing not in case at the time of the grant, but newly created. 2 Hilliard, Abr. 359.

The meaning of a reservation in a contract must be determined in every case by the particular facts of the case, such as the character of the conveyance, the nature and situation of the property conveyed and of the property excepted, and the purpose of such exception; 143 U. S. 596.

The creation of a right or interest which had no prior existence as such in a thing or part of a thing granted, by means of a clause inserted by the grantor in the instrument of conveyance.

A reservation is distinguished from an exception in that it is of a new right or interest; thus, a right of way reserved at the time of conveying an estate, which may have been enjoyed by the grantor as owner of the estate, becomes a new right. 42 Me. 9. An easement may be acquired by the grantor of a deed poll by a clause of reservation; and the technical distinction between reservation and exception will be disregarded, and the language used so construed as to effectuate the intention of the parties; 50 N. J. Eq. 464.

A reservation may be of a life-estate; 28 Vt. 10; 33 N. H. 18; 23 Mo. 373; 3 Md. Ch. Dec. 280; of a right of flowage; 41 Me. 296; right to use water; 41 Me. 177; 9 N. Y. 423; right of way; 25 Conn. 531; 6 Cush. 254; 10 id. 318; 10 B. Monr. 423; 5 Wash. St. 509; a ground rent, in Pennsylvania, and of many other rights and interests; 33 N. H. 507; 9 B. Monr. 163; 5 Pa. 317; 29 Ohio 568; 107 Mass. 290.

The public land laws of the United States provide for reservations or "reserves" of government land for certain public purposes; such as Indian reservations (see INDIAN TERRITORY); and those for military posts. The jurisdiction of a circuit court over crimes committed on military reservations extends to the whole of such reservations, whether used for military purposes or not; 146 U. S. 825. See 66 Fed. Rep. 671.

The land department of the United States has authority to withdraw or reserve public lands from sale, etc., and a grant by congress does not operate upon lands theretofore reserved for any purpose whatever. Lands withdrawn from sale by the land department are considered as reserved within the terms of this rule; 34 U. S. App. 66. An act for the sale of desert lands does not embrace alternate sections reserved to the United States along the lines of railroads for the construction of which congress has made grants of lands; 160 U. S. 186. See LANDS, PUBLIC; LAND GRANT.

RESERVE. The National Bank Act directs that all national banks in the sixteen largest cities shall at all times have on hand, in lawful money of the United States, an amount equal to at least twenty-five per cent. of the aggregate amount of its notes in circulation and deposits. Fifteen per cent. is required of all other national banks. When the reserve falls below the proper limit, the bank must not increase its liability, otherwise than by discounting or purchasing bills of exchange payable at sight, nor make any dividend, till the limit is reached. On a failure to make good the reserve for thirty days after notice by the comptroller of the currency, the latter may, with the concurrence of the secretary of the treasury, appoint a receiver to wind up the bank. R. S. § 5191.

In Insurance Law. In general it means a sum of money, variously computed or estimated, which, with accretions from interest, is set aside, reserved, as a fund with which to mature or liquidate, either by payment or reinsurance with other companies, future unaccrued and contingent claims, and claims accrued, but contingent and indefinite as to amount or time of payment 2511. See RESERVE FUND Under the statutes of many states insurance companies are required to deposit in each state where they do business securities approved by some state officer, usually an insurance commissioner, to an amount specified over and above the capital stock of the company, which is termed the reserve fund. Such statutes usually prescribe rules for its investment and also the percentage at which it shall be accumulated; Biddle, Ins. § 66. They are held not to apply to relief associations where the assessments are purely voluntary; 11 Ins. L. J. N. Y. 859; or mutual insurance companies; 9 Colo. 73. The securities which compose a reserve fund are in the nature of a trust fund for the policy holders, and not a security for the general creditors; 43 Ohio St. 359; 76 Mo. 594; 12 R. I. 259; and a receiver appointed in case of the insolvency of a company is not entitled to control it, but securities are held in trust for distribution by the trustee; 56 Conn. 334. After the policy holders are satisfied, the securities, if the property of the company, may be applied for the benefit of general creditors; 12 R. I. 259.

In many states such fund is required as a prerequisite to permission to a foreign insurance company to do business in the state, and ordinarily the deposits required by such laws are for the benefit of domestic policy holders; 91 Mo. 177; 77 Va. 85; 25 Neb. 834; 17 U. C. Ch. 160.

Another use of the term is its application to a fund sometimes called the safety fund and sometimes a reserve fund in policies issued by companies which provide for an assessment to meet the losses. Such fund is intended for the protection of living members by the use of the income for the payment of dues and assessments; 2 Joyce, Ins. § 1287. Where a reserve fund and the mortuary and benefit fund were to be raised by assessments, the latter being for the payment of death claims only and the former for the exclusive use of members, except that it might be used in payment of death claims when they exceed the experience table of mortality, it was held, upon dissolution, that the reserve fund was to be distributed exclusively among the holders of certificates in force, and that death claims had no right to share in it; 65 N. Y. 867; 131 N. Y. 854. See 92 Hun 592.

In a policy on the Tontine system (see INSURANCE, subtitle, Tontine), where, in addition to the provision for the payment of death claims, it was provided that in case the policy holder survived the specified period and the policy remained in force, there should be a payment in cash or annuity bonds from a fund created by a certain class of policy holders consisting of those effecting insurance on the same plan and in the same year, the surplus and profits to be equitably apportioned among survivors of that class, it was held that the policy did not require a separate investment of these funds and that the consent of the assured to placing the dividends in a reserve fund did not extend its obligations in that respect; 101 N. Y. 828.

Where a policy recited that it was upon the "reserve dividend plan," and that if premiums were paid for ten years the company would pay to the person designated his equitable proportion of the "reserve dividend fund," it was held that the meanings of the terms employed must be ascertained by recourse to contemporary insurance literature, and as the only reserve dividend plan then known was the one devised and copyrighted by W. P. Stewart, who was engaged as actuary by the defendant and his plan used by it, the liability must be determined by reference thereto; 37 Fed. Rep. 163.

The term reserve in life insurance is also applied to the fund accumulated out of premiums after the payment of expenses and other charges properly apportioned to each policy, and where a life policy provides that, in case of lapse for non-payment of premium, the net reserve, less indebtedness, shall be applied to the purchase of extended insurance, or, if the assured shall so elect within three months, to the purchase of a paid-up policy, and also that said indebtedness may be paid in cash, and the entire net reserve so applied, such indebtedness must be paid within the three months; 81 Fed. Rep. 835.

For point reserved, see that title.

RESERVE FUNDS. In the Excise Act of 1909, and the Income Tax Act of 1913. Words include an "unearned premium reserve" to meet future liabilities on policies; a "liability reserve," to satisfy claims indefinite in amount and as to time of payment, but accrued, on liability and workmen's compensation policies; and a "reserve for loss claims," accrued on other policies; but not to include funds required by state authority to be maintained to meet ordinary running expenses, such as taxes, salaries, re-insurance and unpaid brokerage. 251 U. S. 350. See also RESERVE.

RESET. The receiving or harboring an outlawed person. Cowell.

RESET OF THEFT. In Scotch Law. The receiving and keeping stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, with a design of feloniously retaining them from the real owner. Alison, Cr. Law 328.

RESETTER. In Scotch Law. A receiver of stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen.

RESIANCE. A man's residence or permanent abode. Such a man is called a resiant. Kitch. 88.

RESIANT ROLLS. Those containing the resiants in a tithing, etc., which were called over by the steward on holding courts leet.

RESIDENCE (Lat. resideo). Personal presence in a fixed and permanent abode. 20 Johns. 208; 1 Metc. Mass. 251.

The abode where one actually lives, not the legal domicile. 69 Hun 617.

A residence is different from a domicile, although it is a matter of great importance in determining the place of domicile. The essential distinction between residence and domicile is that the first involves the intent to leave when the purpose for which one has taken up his abode ceases. The other has no such intent; the abiding is animo manendi. One may seek a place for the purposes of pleasure, of business, or of health. If his intent be to remain, it becomes his domicile; if his intent be to leave as soon as his purpose is accomplished, it is his residence; 53 Fed. Rep. 311. See 13 Mass. 501; 2 Gray 490; 19 Wend. 11; 11 La. 175; 5 Me. 148; 50 Hun 454; 59 L. J. 67; DOMICIL. But it has been held synonymous with domicile; 15 Co. Ct. Rep. Pa. 812. It is an element of domicile. See 97 Pa. 74; 21 Wall. 350; Dicey, Dom. 1. Residence and habitation are usually synonymous; 2 Gray 490; 2 Kent 574, n. Residence indicates permanency of occupation, as distinct from lodging, or boarding, or temporary occupation, but does not include as much as domicile, which requires an intention combined with residence; 19 Me. 293; 2 Kent 578. See 5 Sandf. 44; 16 N. Y. S. 834. In a statute it was held not to mean business residence, but the fixed home of the party; 18 Repr. 430 (S. C. of Md.). See 15 M. & W. 433; 69 Hun 308.

Residence has been held to be more restricted than domicile as applied to homestead laws; 113 N. C. 421.

An averment of residence is not equivalent to an allegation of citizenship; 21 U. S. App. 45.

It was held that within the meaning of the statute against kidnapping, any place where a child has a right to be is its residence; 147 Ind. 621. See KIDNAPPING; DOMICIL; PERMANENT.

See, generally, 105 Mass. 93; 117 N. Y. 159; 24 Q. B. Div. 29; 184 U. S. 351.

RESIDENT. One who has his residence in a place.

One is a resident of a place from which his departure is indefinite as to time, definite as to purpose; and for this purpose he has made the place his temporary home; 63 Fed. Rep. 311. See NON-RESIDENT.

RESIDENT MINISTER. In international Law. See MINISTER.

RESIDUARY ACCOUNT. In English Practice. The account which every executor and administrator, after paying the debts and particular legacies of the deceased, and before paying over the residuum, must pass before the Board of Inland Revenue. 2 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 221, n.; Moz. & W.

RESIDUARY CLAUSE. The clause in a will by which that part of the property is disposed of which remains after satisfying previous bequests and devises. 4 Kent 541; 2 Will. Exec., 7th Am. ed. § 1316.

RESIDUARY DEVISEE. The person to whom the residue of a testator's real estate is devised after satisfying previous devises.

RESIDUARY ESTATE. What remains of a testator's estate after deducting the debts and the bequests and devises.

RESIDUARY LEGATEE. He to whom the residuum of the estate is devised or bequeathed by will. Rep. Leg.; Powell, Mortg. See LEGACY.

RESIDUE. That which remains of something after taking away a part of it: as, the residue of an estate, which is what has not been particularly devised by will.

What is left; the rest. 68 Hun 333. What is left after all liabilities are discharged, and the objects of the testator carried into effect. 48 Fed. Rep. 3.

A will bequeathing the general residue of personal property passes to the residuary legatee everything not otherwise effectually disposed of; and it makes no difference whether a legacy falls into the estate by lapse or as void at law, the next of kin is equally excluded; 15 Ves. 416; 2 Mer. 892. See 40 Conn. 264.

Where a residuary legacy lapses, there is a pro tanto intestacy; 82 Pa. 428. Where the residue is not expressly disposed of and it does not appear by the will that the executors were intended to take it beneficially, they are to be deemed trustees for the next of kin; 8 Beav. 475; though previous to 1830, it was considered in the English courts that if the testator had named in his will an executor, but no residuary legatee, the executor should retain the residue of the personal estate for his own benefit; Schoul. Ex. & Ad. § 494. Under the statutes 2 Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV. c. 40, the executor is a trustee for the next of kin, unless it shall appear from the will that he is to take the residue beneficially; L. R. 7 H. L. 606; and he is not entitled to it by implication of law; id. See 12 Eng. Rul. Cas. 20; LEGACY. A legacy to the next of kin does not exclude his claim to the residue; Amb. 566; 12 Ves. 298.

RESIGNATION (Lat. resignatio; re, back, signo, to sign). See OFFICER.

RESIGNATION BOND. In Ecclesiastical Law. A bond given by an incumbent to resign on a certain contingency. It may be conditioned to resign for good and sufficient reason, and therefore lawful, e. g. to resign if he take a second benefice, or on request, if a patron present his son or kinsman when of age to take the living, etc. Cro. Jac. 249, 274. But equity will generally relieve the incumbent; 1 Rolle, Abr. 443.

RESIGNEE. One in favor of whom a resignation is made. 1 Bell, Com. 123, n.

RESIST. To oppose by direct, active, and quant-forcible means. 37 Wis. 261.

RESISTANCE (Lat. re, back, sisto, to stand, to place). The opposition of force to force. See ARREST; ASSAULT; OFFI- CER; PROCESS; RESIST.

RESISTING. See RESIST.

RESOLUTION (Lat. re, again, solvere, to loose, to free). A solemn judgment or decision of a court. This word is frequently used in this sense in Coke and some of the more ancient reporters.

An agreement to a law or other thing adopted by a legislature or popular assembly. See Diet. de Jurisp.; ORDINANCE; JOINT RESOLUTION; MUNICIPAL ORDINANCE.

In Civil Law. The act by which a contract which existed and was good is rendered null.

Resolution differs essentially from rescission. The former presupposes the contract to have been valid, and it is owing to a cause posterior to the agreement that the resolution takes place; while rescission, on the contrary, supposes that some vice or defect annulled the contract from the beginning. Resolution may be by consent of the parties or by the decision of a competent tribunal; rescission must always be by the judgment of a court; 7 Troplong, de la Vente, n. 689; 7 Toullier 551.

RESOLUTIVE CONDITION. In Scotch Law. A condition of which the obligation comes to an end on the occurrence of the uncertain event. Ersk. Prin. §. 1. 3.

RESOLUTORY CONDITION. One which has for its objects, when accomplished, the revocation of the principal obligation; for example, I will sell you my crop of cotton if my ship America does not arrive in the United States within six months; my ship arrives in one month; my contract with you is revoked. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 764.

RESOURCES. Money or any property that can be converted into supplies, capabilities of producing wealth, or to supply necessary wants; available means or capabilities of any kind. 3 Mont. 386.

RESPECTIVE, RESPECTIVELY. Words of severance. Occurring in a testamentary gift to more persons than one, their effect is to sort out the devisees or legatees so that they take as tenants in common; 31 L. J. Ch. 388. In court or in chambers respectively, as used in the Judicature Act, means either in court or in chambers; 53 L. J. Q. B. 428; 13 Q. B. D. 218.

RESPECTU COMPUTI VICECOMITIS HABENDO. A writ for respecting a sheriff's account addressed to the treasurer and barons of the exchequer. Reg. Orig. 139.

RESPIRATION (Lat. re, back, spiro, to breathe). Breathing, which consists of the drawing into, inhaling, or, more technically, inspiring, atmospheric air into the lungs, and then forcing out, expelling, or, technically, expiring, from the lungs the air therein. Chitty, Med. Jur. 92, 416, note n.

RESPIRE. In Civil Law. An act by which a debtor who is unable to satisfy his debts at the moment transacts (i. e. compromises) with his creditors and obtains from them time or delay for the payment of the sums which he owes to them. La. Code 3051.

A forced respite takes place when a part of the creditors refuse to accept the debtor's proposal, and when the latter is obliged to compel them, by judicial authority, to consent to what the others have determined in the cases directed by law.

A voluntary respite takes place when all the creditors consent to the proposal of the debtor to pay in a limited time the whole or a part of his debt.

A delay, forbearance, or continuation of time.

In Criminal Law. A reprieve. A temporary suspension of the execution of a sentence. See 62 Pa. 60. It differs from a pardon, which is an absolute suspension. See PARDON, REPRIEVE.

RESPIRE OF HOMAGE. To dispense with the performance of homage by tenants who held their lands in consideration of performing homage to their lords. Cowell.

RESPONDE BOOK. In Scotch Law. A book of record of the chancery, in which are entered all non-entry and relief duties payable by heirs who take precepts from chancery. Stair, Inst. p. 296, § 28; Erskine, Inst. 11. 5. 50.

RESPONDEAT OUSTER (that he answer over). See ABATEMENT; JUDGMENT; OUSTER.

RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR. A phrase often used to indicate the responsibility of a principal for the acts of his servant or agent. MASTER AND SERVANT; PRINCIPAL; AGENT.

RESPONDENT. The party who makes an answer to a bill or other proceeding in chancery.

In Civil Law. One who answers or is security for another; a fidejussor. Dig. 2. 8. 6.

RESPONDENTIA. In Maritime Law. A loan of money, on maritime interest, on goods laden on board of a ship, upon the condition that if the goods be wholly lost in the course of the voyage, by any of the perils enumerated in the contract, the lender shall lose his money; if not, that the borrower shall pay him the sum borrowed, with the interest agreed upon. See Newb. 514.

The contract is called respondentia because the money is lent mainly, or most frequently, on the personal responsibility of the borrower. It differs principally from bottomry, which see, in the following circumstances: bottomry is a loan on the ship; respondentia is a loan upon the goods. 1 Pet. 386. The money is to be repaid to the lender, with maritime interest, upon the arrival of the ship in the one case, and of the goods in the other. In most other respects the contracts are nearly the same, and are governed by the same principles. In the former, the ship and tackle, being hypothecated, are liable, as well as the borrower; in the latter, the lender has, in general, it is said, only the personal security of the borrower; Marsh. Ins. 734.

If any part of the goods arrive safely at the end of the voyage, the lender is entitled to have the proceeds applied to the payment of his debt. If the loan is made to the master, and not to the owners of the goods, the necessity for the loan and for the hypothecation of the cargo must be clearly shown, or the owners of the goods, and, consequently, the goods themselves, will not be bound. The ship and freight are always first to be resorted to to raise money for the necessity of the ship or the prosecution of the voyage; and it seems that a bond upon the cargo is considered by implication of law a bond upon the ship and freight also, and that unless the ship be liable in law the cargo cannot be held liable; The Constancia, 4 Notes of Cas. 235, 512, 877; 10 Jur. 846; 2 W. Rob. 83; 14 Jur. 96. See MASTER OF A SHIP.

If the contract clearly contemplates that the goods on which the loan is made are to be sold or exchanged, free from any lien, in the course of the voyage, the lender will have no lien on them, but must rely wholly upon the personal responsibility of the borrower. It has frequently been said by elementary writers, and without qualification, that the lender has no lien; 2 Bla. Com. 458; 3 Kent 354; but the form of bond generally in use in this country expressly hypothecates the goods, and thus, even when there is no express hypothecation, if the goods are still on board at the end of the voyage, it is not doubtful that a court of admiralty will direct the arrest of the goods and enforce against them the maritime lien or privilege conferred by the respondentia contract. There is, perhaps, no common-law lien, but this maritime lien only; but the latter will be enforced by the proper admiralty process. See the authorities cited in note to Abb. Shipp., 13th ed. 152, 154, 175; 4 Wash. C. C. 669; form of respondentia bonds in Conkl. Adm. 263; 1 Pars. Mar. Law 437, and n. 5; Abb. Shipp. 455. See ADMIRALTY; MARITIME CAUSE; LIEN; NAUTICA PECTUNIA.

RESPONDERE NON DEBET (Lat. ought not to reply). In Pleading. The prayer of a plea where the defendant insists that he ought not to answer, as when he claims a privilege; for example, as being a member of congress or a foreign ambassador. 1 Chitty, Pl. *433.

RESPONSA PRUDENTUM (Lat.). In Roman Law. Opinions given by Roman lawyers.

Before the time of Augustus, every lawyer was authorized, de jure, to answer questions put to him; and all such answers, responsa prudentum, had equal authority—not the force of law, but the opinion of a lawyer. Augustus was the first prince who gave to certain distinguished jurists the particular privilege of answering in his name; and from that period their answers acquired greater authority. Adrian determined in a more precise manner the degree of authority which these answers should have, by enacting that the opinions of such authorized jurists, when unanimously given, should have the force of law (legis vicem) and should be followed by the judges, and that when they were divided the judge was allowed to adopt that which to him appeared the most equitable. The opinions of other lawyers held the same place they had before: they were considered merely as the opinions of learned men. Mackeldey, Man. Introd. § 43; Mackeldey, Hist. du Dr. Rom. §§ 40, 49; Hugo, Hist. du Dr. Rom. § 313; Inst. 1. 2. 8; Institutes Explicées, n. 39.

RESPONSALIS. In Old English Law. One who appeared for another.

A person, without restrictions as to character, permitted by the judge to act for a party in his presence. Such a person was sometimes allowed by a justice to act on the appearance of the defendant, which, according to the old writs, was always in proper person. Lord Coke calls special attention to the difference between a responsalis and an attorney; 2 Co. Inst. 249; 22 N. Y. 68, per T. W. Dwight, arguendo.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A proctor.

RESPONSIBILITY. The obligation to answer for an act done and to repair any injury it may have caused.

One person—as, for example, a principal, master, or parent—is frequently responsible, civilly, for the acts of another.

Penal responsibility is always personal; and no one can be punished for the commission of a crime but the person who has committed it, or his accomplice.

RESPONSIBLE. Able to pay the sum which may be required of him; able to discharge an obligation. Webster, Dict.; 26 N. H. 587; 55 How. Pr. 119. A promise "to be responsible" for the debt of another is merely a guaranty, and not a suretyship; 9 Phila. 499; 80 Pa. 209.

In an act directing municipal officers to award contracts to the lowest responsible bidder, responsible applies not only to pecuniary ability but also to judgment and skill; 184 Pa. 477. See 160 Ill. 655.

RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT. A term used in England and her colonial possessions to indicate an obligation to resign, on the part of the ministry, upon the declaration of a want of confidence by vote of the legislative branch of the colonial government. Mills, Col. Const. 27.

RESPIRER. The taking of lands into the hands of the crown, where a general livery or ouster le main was formerly misused. Whart.

REST. (v). To rely upon, trust to the sufficiency of. Anderson, "To rest a case," and for a party "to rest," is to adduce what is thought to be sufficient testimony to make out an apparent case in chief, or to rebut the adversary's prima facie case. Id.

(n). A pause made by an accountant in his entries, in order to strike a balance upon which to allow interest. Id. Spoken of as annual and semi-annual rests; and made by an administrator, executor, guardian, or other trustee. Id. 1 Comp. 566. Also, peace, quiet. Id.

RESTAUR, or RESTOR. The remedy or recourse which assurers have against each other, according to the date of their assurances; or against the master, if the loss arises through his default; also the remedy or recourse a person has against his guarantor, or other person, who is to indemnify him from any damage sustained. Whart.

RESTAURANT. As currently understood, an eating house. 10 Fed. Rep. & See INN; INNKEEPER.

RESTITUTIO IN INTEGRUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A restoring parties to the condition they were in before entering into a contract or agreement, on account of fraud, infancy, force, honest mistake, etc. Calvinus, Lex. The going into a cause anew from the beginning. Id.

RESTITUTION. In Maritime Law. The placing back or restoring articles which have been lost by jettison: this is done, when the remainder of the cargo has been saved, at the general charge of the owners of the cargo; but when the remainder of the goods is afterwards lost, there is not any restitution. Stevens, Av. pt. 1, c. 1, s. 1, art. 1, n. 8. As to restitution of captured vessels, see RECAPTURE; Desty, Sh. & Adm. § 446.

In Practice. The return of something to the owner of it or to the person entitled to it.

After property has been taken into execution, and the judgment has been reversed or set aside, the party against whom the execution was sued out shall have restitution; and this is enforced by a writ of restitution; Cro. Jac. 698; 13 S. & R. 294. When the thing levied upon under an execution has not been sold, the thing itself shall be restored; when it has been sold, the price for which it is sold is to be restored; Bacon, Abr. Execution (Q); 1 Maule & S. 425.

"Pending an appeal from an order of the common pleas striking off the satisfaction of a judgment, the plaintiff in the judgment issued an execution, and the terre-tenant of the land was compelled to pay to the sheriff a large sum of money to prevent a sale of the land; the supreme court subsequently reversed the order striking off the satisfaction of the judgment; held, that the terre-tenant was entitled to a writ of restitution." 176 Pa. 170. Whether restitution should be made in the progress of judicial procedure if the interest of the parties defendant are diverse, is a question of fact; 33 U. S. App. 393.

RESTITUTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS. In Ecclesiastical Law. A compulsory renewal of cohabitation between a husband and wife who have been living separately. Unknown in the United States.

A suit may be brought in the divorce and matrimonial court for this purpose whenever either the husband or wife is guilty of the injury of subjection, or lives separate from the other without sufficient reason, by which the party injured may compel the other to return to cohabitation; 3 Bla. Com. 94; 3 Steph. Com. 11; but a woman cannot take proceedings for the restitution of conjugal rights until she has used reasonable means to induce her husband to take her back; 14 P. Div. 26; and the rule requires a written demand for cohabitation, of a conciliatory character; id. A wife whose husband had refused to receive her because she had left her home on account of a disagreement with his children by a former marriage, was held entitled to a decree for the restitution of conjugal rights; [1896] P. 175; 1 Add. Eccl. 805; 8 Hagg. 619. Formerly a deed of separation afforded no bar to this suit, even though it in terms forbade such proceedings. But this rule is now changed, and to one separated spouse chancery will now grant an injunction, to restrain the other from suing for restitution of conjugal rights; Schoul. Hus. & Wife § 482. See CRUELTY.

RESTITUTION EDICT. An edict issued in 1629, by Emperor Ferdinand II., requiring Protestants to restore to the Roman Catholic authorities all ecclesiastical property which they had appropriated at the peace of Passau in 1552.

RESTITUTION OF MINORS. In Scotch Law. A minor on attaining majority may obtain relief against a deed previously executed by him, which may be held void or voidable, according to circumstances. This is called restitution of minors. Bell.

RESTITUTION OF STOLEN GOODS. At common law there was no restitution of goods upon an indictment, because it was at the suit of the crown only, therefore the party was compelled to bring an appeal of robbery in order to have his goods again; but a writ of restitution was granted by 21 Hen. VIII. c. 11, and it became the practice of the crown to order, without any writ, immediate restitution of such goods. The Larceny Act, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, § 100, gives power to the court from time to time to issue writs of restitution for stolen property or to order the restitution thereof in a summary manner upon a conviction of the guilty party upon an indictment on behalf of the owner, and this notwithstanding the guilty party may have sold them for value to an innocent purchaser; but by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, § 9, a sum not exceeding the proceeds of such sale out of moneys taken from the guilty party on his apprehension may be delivered to such innocent purchaser. Whart. Lex.

RESTITUTION, WRIT OF. A writ which lies, after the reversal of a judgment, to restore a party to all that he has lost by occasion of the judgment. 2 Tidd, Pr. 1186.

RESTITUTIONE EXTRACTI AB ECCLESIA. A writ which formerly lay to restore a man to the church, which he had recovered for a sanctuary being suspected of a felony. Reg. Orig.; Cowel.

RESTITUTIONE TEMPORALIUM. A writ addressed to the sheriff to restore the temporalities of a bishopric to the bishop elected and confirmed. Fitz. N. B. 169.

RESTRAINING. Narrowing down; making less extensive. For example, a restraining statute is one by which the common law is narrowed down or made less extensive in its operation. *Restrain*ing powers are the limitations or restrictions upon the use of a power imposed by the donor. *Restrain*ing order is an order granted on motion or petition, restraining the Bank of England or other public company from allowing any dealing with certain specified stock or shares. Hunt, Eq. pt. iii. c. 3, s. 2.

In the United States a restraining order is an interlocutory order made by a court of equity upon an application for an injunction and as part of the motion for a preliminary injunction, by which the party is restrained pending the hearing of the motion.

RESTRAINT. The effect of restraint in the law is to be considered mainly with respect to trade, marriage, princes, and alienation, all of which are herein separately considered. As to restraint upon anticipation, see MARRIED WOMAN; and as to the execution of deeds or other documents under restraint, see DURESS.

RESTRAINT ON ALIENATION. A provision in a settlement to the special use of a married woman without power of alienation, which is valid as an exception to the general rule against any restraint on alienation. It is in force only during marriage; Snell, Eq. 200; 11 Ch. D. 645.

A restriction, by way of devise over, against all alienation during a limited time upon an estate in fee, is void; 141 U. S. 306. See PERPETUITY; SPENDTHRIFT TRUST; MARRIED WOMAN.

RESTRAINT OF MARRIAGE.

Conditions attached to gifts or bequests to a person who has never been married, in general restraint of marriage, are void; Chit. Const. 619; so is an agreement not to marry any one except a particular person; 4 Burr. 2235. The gift or bequest is good and the condition fails, but if the restraint is partial, with a gift over in case of marrying a Roman Catholic or a particular person or without the consent of a particular person, the condition is good, and so is a condition in restraint of a second marriage. See Allen v. Jackson, 1 Ch. D. 399; 1 Q. B. D. 279; 16 Ch. D. 183.

It is said that a condition in restraint of marriage is valid if it is a condition precedent; 2 Dick. 712. In 1 Q. B. D. 279, it was held to be the intention of the testator not to restrain marriage but to make provision for the devise until marriage. See Poll. Contr. 307.

A limitation until marriage is good; Wats. Comp. Eq. 1139; being construed as a provision until marriage and not a restraint on marriage.

RESTRAINT OF PRINCES AND

RULERS. A phrase used in the exceptions to bills of lading, importing a limitation upon the liability of a ship-owner under the contract.

The words apply only to the ruling power of a country and not to pirates or any lawless power; 4 Term 783; they apply not only to hostile acts, but to those committed by the government of which the assured is a subject, as the seizure of a vessel for use as a fire-ship; 2 Ld. Raym. 840; or the wrongful seizure of an English ship and cargo by a British ship of war; 2 E. & E. 180; L. R. 5 Q. B. 599; to a temporary embargo by a friendly government; 6 Term 413; 3 B. & S. 163; 32 L. J. Q. B. 50; a detention of a neutral vessel in a blockaded port; 7 L. R. Q. B. 404; or a siege; L. R. 8 C. P. 518. A reasonable apprehension of capture will justify delay under the usual exception of restraint of princes, etc.; L. R. 5 P. C. 801; L. R. 3 A. & E. 427; 1 Maule & S. 352.

It does not include a seizure of the cargo by an armed mob; 4 Term 783, n.; or a remote danger of capture; 10 East 530; nor, it seems, a restraint sanctioned by municipal law of the ship-owner's country; 3 B. & S. 163; nor the process of a court of law; 23 L. T. 251.

Where goods contraband of war were shipped under a bill of lading containing this exception, it was held that the risk of the goods being seized amounted to a restraint of princes; [1896] 2 Q. B. 326.

Enforced obedience to lawfully prescribed quarantine regulations is a restraint of natural liberty of action devised by and proceeding from the people, and detention at quarantine is fairly included within an exception in a charter party which has reference to restraint of princes or rulers and people; 3 U. S. App. 147.

See CHARTER PARTY; PERILS OF THE SEA; QUARANTINE.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Contracts operating for the restraint of trade are presumptively illegal and void on the ground of the policy of the law favoring freedom of trade; but the presumption of illegality may be rebutted by the occasion and circumstances; 2 Pars. Contr. 570. See 7 C. C. App. 15. Thus in agreements for the sale of the good-will of a firm, or the formation or dissolution of a partnership, provisions operating in restraint of trade are frequently inserted. Their validity depends upon whether the restraint is such only as to afford a fair protection to the interests of the party in whose favor it is imposed; Leake, Contr. 688; 49 N. J. Eq. 217. Whatever restraint is larger than is necessary for the protection of this party is void; therefore, the restraint must be limited in regard to space; 5 M. & W. 562; L. R. 15 Eq. 69. An agreement reasonable in regard to space may be unlimited in regard to the duration of time provided for; but where the question is as to whether the space is unlimited, the duration of the restraint in point of time may become an important matter; Leake, Contr. 684; 3 M. & G. 20. It has been said generally that where a covenant in restraint of trade is general, that is, without qualifications, it is bad, as being unreasonable and contrary to public policy. Where it is partial, that is, subject to some qualification either as to time or space, then the question is whether it is reasonable; and if reasonable, it is good in law; [1892] 3 Ch. 447.

There are cases where an unlimited restraint is justified: e. g. the sale of a secret process of manufacture of an article in general demand, which it is agreed shall be communicated for the exclusive benefit of the buyer; see L. R. 9 Eq. 45; 181 U. S. 88; so of the sale of a patent right, the restraint may be unlimited while the patent continues; 1 H. & N. 189.

Some cases have required the presence of a sufficient and reasonable consideration to support a contract in restraint of trade; 8 Mass. 228; 21 Wend. 158; see 8 Ohio St. 275; but in England a legally valid consideration only is required; 6 A. & E. 438. See, generally, 1 Sm. L. C. 724; 35 Am. Rep. 269.

The decision in Mitchell v. Reynolds, 1 P. Wms. 181, may be regarded as the first announcement of the rule in relation to the invalidity of contracts in restraint of trade.

Mitchell v. Reynolds contains much more in the way of legal statement than is required for the decision of the precise point involved, which was that a reasonable restraint agreed to for a good consideration is valid, and it was afterwards remarked by Tindal, C. J., that when it was said by Parker, C. J., in Mitchell v. Reynolds, that "a restraint to carry on a trade throughout the kingdom must be void; a restraint to carry it on within a particular place is good," those are only examples and not limits of the application of the rule which can only be, "What is a reasonable restraint with reference to the particular case?"; 7 Bing. 735. More than sixty years after this case the English rule is stated in the same terms, and it is said that the true test of validity is whether the contract is or is not reasonable; [1894] App. Cas. 535; and a more comprehensive statement is that a general covenant in restraint of trade, without qualifications, is bad, because unreasonable and contrary to public policy, but if partial, that is, subject to some qualification either as to time or place, then the question is whether it is reasonable, and if it is, it is legally valid; [1892] 3 Ch. 447. In Rousillon v. Rousillon, L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 351, the existence of an absolute rule with respect to restraint unlimited as to space, was denied, but that question was left somewhat in doubt by the English court of appeal in 36 id. 351; see also 4 App. Cas. 674; so that by way of summing up a review of the English decisions, it is said the question "whether there is an inflexible rule that contracts, the restraint of which extends throughout England, are null and void, is still a mooted one"; Patterson, Restr. of Trade 16. See, also, [1898] 1 Ch. 630; [1898] 1 Ch. 676. In the United States it was early held that a covenant not to pursue an occupation in the state was in total restraint of trade and void; 21 Wend. 157; 10 Barb. 641; 18 Allen 375; 36 Cal. 812; contra, 31 Mich. 490; 17 R. I. 8; see 103 N. Y. 473, where it was held that the question as to what is a general restraint of trade does not depend on state lines, and a restraint is not necessarily general which embraces an entire state. The United States supreme court took the view that a restraint co-extensive with the state was not necessarily void; 20 Wall. 64, where the subject was ably discussed by Bradley, J., and in a later case it was said by Fuller, C. J., "The question is whether under the particular circumstances of the case, the nature of the particular contract involved in it, the contract is or is not unreasonable;" 180 U. S. 896. In 2 Ohio St. 519, a covenant not to manufacture candles in the United States was held void, and in 51 Hun 157, a similar contract as to space but limited to ten years in time, for the manufacture of thermometers, was held valid as a reasonable restriction. An agreement in a contract not to engage in the business of manufacturing or dealing in certain articles of commerce for a period of five years, and without any limitation of space, is held to be unlawful; 146 Mass. 469; as was a contract excluding the obligor from engaging in a useful trade everywhere and for all time; 19 Pick. 51; and a contract of sale of fire alarm or police telegraph machines, with a covenant not to enter into competition with the purchaser for ten years without restriction as to place; 160 Mass. 50; see 45 Cal. 152; but a contract unlimited territorially save by the words so far as the law allows, is not void as being in conflict with public policy, nor as being too uncertain to be capable of being enforced; 47 Ia. 137.

"The general rule can then best be stated as follows: Contracts in restraint of trade are in themselves, if nothing more appear to show them reasonable, bad in the eye of the law, but if from the peculiar circumstances of each case they appear to be reasonable and are founded upon a good consideration, they are valid!" Patterson, Restr. of Trade 5, and cases cited; 68 Pa. 173.

Contracts in general restraint of trade are void unless natural and not unreasonable for the protection of the parties; 21 Wend. 157; 4 Daly 108; 47 Ia. 137; as such contracts impose too great a restraint on trade and are oppressive to one party without being of benefit to another; 3 G. Green 506; 5 Fed. Rep. 119. Contracts for limited restraint are valid if entered into for good reasons, such as to afford fair protection to the purchaser of a business; 7 Cow. 307; 52 Ia. 241; 30 Ga. 655. A contract not to carry on a trade in a particular town or county is valid; 7 J. J. Marsh. 368. Contracts in restraint of trade held to be valid are: Not to practise medicine within twelve miles of a place; 58 Pa. 51; not to engage in a certain business within sixty miles of a place for ten years; 40 Me. 224; not to run a stage on a certain route; 8 Mass. 223; not to set up the business of an apothecary within twenty miles of a place; 6 Ad. & El. 438. A contract relating to a compound involving a secret in its preparation and based upon a valuable consideration, and limited as to the space within which, though unlimited as to the time for which the restraint is to operate, is reasonable and enforceable; 131 U. S. 88.

An agreement never to engage in a certain trade in the city and county of San Francisco or state of California, was held too extensive in its restriction and therefore void; 40 Cal. 251; as was a covenant not to run a steamboat belonging to a certain corporation or allow its machinery to be used on any other boat in any of the waters of certain states; 1 Wash. 283. But the contract by the owner of a line of vessels running between New York and the West Indies, who had sold the goodwill thereof, to do no business with such ports within any place in the United States east of the Mississippi River, is not an unreasonable restraint of trade; 51 N. Y. Suppl. 579.

The conclusion from the cases is stated to be that the weight of authority in this country as in England is opposed to a fixed limit beyond which the restraint under a contract cannot extend; Patterson, Restr. of Trade 25. That there is no limitation as to time is no objection; 5 M. & W. 548 (where Parke, B., states clearly the reasons for applying a different rule to time from that relating to space); 6 Ind. 200; 47 Conn. 175; 44 Ill. App. 441; 23 Atl. Rep. (N. J.) 977.

An agreement to relinquish a business and not to carry it on thereafter, limited as to place but unlimited as to time, is not void; 61 N. H. 40; 57 Mich. 363; and the limit of space may be according to the nature of the contract; L. R. 1 Ch. 468.

It has been held that no contracts are void as being in general restraint of trade when they operate simply to prevent a party from engaging or competing in the same business; 110 N. Y. 519.

Agreements to restrain rivalry and competition in bidding for public work are void, but an honest co-operation is not within the rule against combinations to stifle competition; 83 Fed. Rep. 372.

The tendency of recent adjudications is now clearly marked in the direction of relaxing the rigor of the doctrine that all contracts in general restraint of trade are void, irrespective of special circumstances; 106 N. Y. 478. It has of late years been denied that a hard and unjust rule of that kind has ever been the law of England; L. R. 14 Ch. D. 251.

Courts will not lend their aid to enforce the performance of a contract which they hold to be in restraint of trade, as contrary to public policy, on the ground that one side has performed the agreement, but will leave the parties in the plight in which their own illegal action placed them; 27 U. S. App. 1. See 9 id. 96; 3 id. 16.

The reasonableness of such covenants, and consequently whether they are in restraint of trade or not, is a question of law for the court and not of fact for the jury; 11 M. & W. 548; id. 653; 3 Chand. 133; 7 Bing. 743.

Covenants of this character have been held divisible, partly valid and partly void; 11 M. & W. 635; 2 Ohio 519; 113 Pa. 579; 20 Wall. 64; 40 Cal. 251.

Where the restriction of a business is in accordance with public policy, the rule against such covenants does not apply, upon the ground that the reason ceasing, the rule also ceases. This is true in the case of patents, the object of granting which is to create a monopoly; 103 Mass. 78; 32 Mo. 265; 183 U. S. 88; trade secrets; L. R. 9 Eq. 845; 19 Pick. 523; intoxicating liquors; 25 Ind. 112; but in case of a business in which competition is particularly beneficial to the public interest, the tendency is to view with disfavor any restrictions. This principle has been applied to the manufacture of glass; 121 Ill. 530; pipe lines; 22 W. Va. 660; telegraphing; 65 Ga. 160. It is this principle which underlies the legislation against limitations upon railroad competition. See infra. But it has been held that a statute which prohibits companies doing business in a state from combining with other persons in the state for the creation of a monopoly, or the unlawful restraint of trade, or the prevention of competition, applies to a combination to control the price of a certain article, though its manufacture is protected by patents; 47 N. Y. Supp. 462; and that the fact that several patentees are exposed to litigation does not justify the creation by them of combinations to public disadvantage; 83 Fed. Rep. 86.

While the strictness of the ancient rule with respect to what was then termed restraint of trade has thus been relaxed, the mischief against which that rule was directed has taken a new form, and the creation of monopolies and restrictions upon competition are now accomplished under the guise of what are termed trusts, pooling agreements, and the like. The distinguishing feature of these attempts to stifle competition is a combination of persons engaged in any particular business under agreements for controlling and limiting the output of manufacturing establishments, lessening the amount of goods placed upon the market, and stipulating for uniform minimum prices of goods sold. The term trust is derived from the means employed to carry out the designs of these combinations, the stock of the various corporations or the property of the various concerns which become parties to a combination being in some cases assigned to trustees to control and manage in execution of the agreement.

It has been maintained that the rules governing contracts in restraint of trade are not applicable to trusts because persons constituting trusts become partners, and, as is well known, partners are not subject to these rules; see 3 Political Sci. Quart. 599; and the same writer is doubtful whether the offence of engrossing, forestalling, or regrating ever existed independently of the statutes 5 & 6 Edw. IV. ch. 14, and when these statutes were repealed courts had no authority to punish offenders; id. See 4 Harv. L. Rev. 128.

In modern state constitutions, following generally that of Illinois, 1870, there are efforts to prevent combinations to suppress competition. Most of these are directed against such attempts by railroad companies either through unjust discriminations or consolidation of competing lines. There are constitutional provisions on this subject in Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Georgia, Illinois, Louisiana, Michigan, Massachusetts, Nebraska, Pennsylvania, Texas, and West Virginia. A summary of them will be found in Spelling, Trusts & Monopolies § 89, note. They are usually considered as declaratory of the common law, as that of Colorado was expressly decided to be; 102 U. S. 667. Of the same character are state statutes directed against restraint of trade generally, which add but little to the limitations of the common law. The difficulty in dealing with the subject by state legislation is inherent. The great trusts cannot be reached by legislation within the states, inasmuch as their operations are not circumscribed by state boundaries. On the other hand attempts to deal with the subject by congress are hampered and obstructed by the constitutional limitation that federal legislation can deal only with interstate and foreign commerce; nevertheless an attempt was made by what was known as the anti-trust act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. L. 209, which is generally admitted to deal very unsatisfactorily with the acknowledged evil which it was intended to reach. The most peculiar feature of this law is that, as construed, it expressly fails to prevent the combinations of capital and affords very drastic remedies against combinations of labor whenever they affect interstate commerce, which is the fact in almost every case of railroad strikes. See STRIKE; LABOR UNION.

Where an effort has been made under the anti-trust act to prosecute attempts to create a monopoly they have usually failed by reason of the vague and general terms in which the offences are described by the act; 50 Fed. Rep. 469; 52 id. 104, where the construction of the statute and the common-law principles involved are elaborately discussed by Jackson, J.; id. 148.

A bill was introduced in the senate in 1893 to repeal the anti-trust act of 1890 and "to defeat, punish, and restrain acts, contracts and combinations in restraint of trade and interstate commerce." This bill, which was referred and never passed, is characterized as comprehensive and specific and covering the necessities of the situation; Spell. Tr. & Mon. § 184, n.

In New York, the act of 1897, ch. 884, prohibits combinations for the creation of a monopoly or unlawful restraint of trade. The Texas constitution forbids perpetuities and monopolies, and the Texas act of 1899, ch. 117, makes void any contract whereby a combination of capital or goods of two or more persons is effected to create restrictions in trade or to prevent competition in the sale of commodities. In California, a contract restraining a profession, trade, or business except in the sale of good-will, as for a county or city or dissolution of partnership, is void by statute; Civ. Code § 1678; and in Georgia one in general restraint of trade is void; Code § 2780.

The decisions on the subject of these trusts and combinations are usually under the constitutional provisions or statutes on the subject, either state or federal, but most of them have been made in view of the common-law doctrine concerning restraint of trade and the creation of monopolies, and they need to be read and considered in connection with both the common and local statute law.

It has been said that "the nearest to a definite proposition which may be advanced is that any compact between two or more persons or corporations affecting any article or commodity of which the public must have a constant supply, the sole intent and direct tendency of such arrangement being the creation of a scarcity or the enhancement of the price, will be nullified by the courts, or specific enforcement refused." Spelling, Trusts & Monopolies § 62.

This principle has been applied to the case of agreements for combinations of manufacturers to control the market for many articles of general consumption. The usual features of such agreements are substantially the same, and the method adopted is the formation of a trust through which the objects of the combination are affected (see supra). Such trusts have been held illegal in the case of: coal mining companies; 69 N. Y. 588, where the principles involved are well stated; manufacturers of grain bags; 90 Cal. 110; of lumber; 76 Cal. 387; of wire cloth; 14 N. Y. S. 277; persons engaged in the transportation of freight and passengers on New York canals; 5 Den. 534; 4 id. 349; or in the business of manufacturing and selling preserves; 157 Ill. 284; in the manufacture and sale of distillery products; 156 id. 448; brewers who combined to lease "all the cooling room capacity for cooling beer" in a town, to prevent competition and in this case it was held that the parties could not recover for non-performance of the contract; 88 Tex. 184; dealers in mineral waters; 63 L. T. 455; a combination of local milk dealers for buying and selling milk, wholesale and retail, but which only acted as the seller's agent to find purchasers and charged to commission, and acted under a by-law giving the directors the power to fix the price to be paid for milk; 145 N. Y. 267; a combination to control the price and production of a floating-spring tooth harrow which is held to be an instrument of such general use and utility as to render such a combination a violation of public policy; 21 App. Div. N. Y. 290. See also 67 Fed. Rep. 131; 76 id. 667; 47 U. S. App. 166; s. c. 77 Fed. Rep. 293.

A similar combination between a corporation and its stockholders, although it did not combine with any other corporation, was void within the Illinois anti-trust act; 155 Ill. 166, reversing 46 Ill. App. 576. An agreement for buying and selling coal at prices fixed by an association organized to control them is void so far as it is not executed, but not so as to deny to the seller his remedy for non-payment for coal delivered under the contract; 81 Hun 178. A contract for the sale of good-will and agreeing not to do the business of carpet beating in several counties is void as to all but the county in which the business is carried on, under the California Code; 102 Cal. 506. An association, the object of which is to prevent competition in a certain business and pay dues of an officer thereof, is illegal, and the parties cannot recover the amount so paid; 55 Ill. App. 213. A railroad pooling contract, the manifest purpose of which is to stifle competition and raise rates, is void as against public policy; 61 Fed. Rep. 933; s. c. 27 U. S. App. 1. An agreement between sheep brokers, to form an association and pay the treasurer so much for every head sold and receive an arbitrary proportion of the sum accumulated, which is made to carry out a contract with a similar butchers' association, simultaneously formed,—under which the brokers were to slaughter no sheep and the butchers were to buy only of the brokers' association—is void as a contract to enhance the price of food and not enforceable against a member of the association; 139 N. Y. 105. A contract not to sell or be interested in the sale of beer except to one company, which, in its turn, contracts not to sell or consign beer to any other party in the vicinity, is a combination in violation of the Texas statute; 90 Tex. 298, 277. Where a masons and builders' association, by its laws or rules, required all who competed for any contract or job to bring their bids for examination and have six per cent. added to the lowest before it should be submitted in competition, is contrary to public policy; 95 Wis. 129.

In Montana, where water rights are of great importance in connection with mining, a contract to control them is void; 7 Mont. 89. What are known as "corners" in the necessities of life have been held void as violating the law against the creation of monopolies; 40 Mich. 447; 78 Ind. 487; 101 Mass. 145; and this is true whether the agreement on which they are based is temporary or permanent; id.; so the courts have held invalid a combination of grain-dealers; 79 Ill. 346; of cotton bagging; 60 N. Y. 288. So also the courts hold void expedients for buying up or cornering particular stocks in the market, by whatever means the result is accomplished; 19 Abb. N. C. 460; 80 Fed. Rep. 91; and see 5 Blatchf. 535; 6 Paige 337. An agreement of a large number of stenographers to raise the price and force the increase by penalties, was held invalid, though the combination did not include all the stenographers in the city; 41 Ill. App. 164; as was also the agreement by the grocers of a town with a firm about to open a butter store, that they would not buy any butter for two years; 83 Ia. 156; and a combination of mill-owners designed to control the output of cotton seed oil; 83 Tex. 650.

There are other cases in which the courts have held combinations of this general character valid, as in 143 Mass. 355; but there the manufactured article was shad-rollers, which possibly would not be enumerated among the necessities of life, as to the enhancement of the price of which the law is so jealous.

A corporation organized for the purpose of acquiring patents and granting licenses thereunder covering machines relating to a certain art, is not subject to the anti-trust laws of Illinois; 53 Fed. Rep. 502; 51 id. 819; 69 id. 333; 71 id. 302, disapproving 67 id. 181. The purchase of the stock of sugar refining companies for the purpose of acquiring control of the business in the United States, does not involve a monopoly or restraint of interstate or foreign commerce within the meaning of the federal anti-trust act, since the business of refining and selling sugar is not commerce; 156 U. S. 1, affirming 80 Fed. Rep. 934.

A contract to refrain from forming a corporation for the construction of water-works in a specified city and from carrying on such work in order that the other party to the contract might obtain a corporation for such purpose and conduct the business without competition, is not void as against public policy; 149 N. Y. 430. An agreement by manufacturers of watch cases to fix an arbitrary price on them, and not to sell them to persons buying watch cases of a rival manufacturer, was held not to be a violation of the federal anti-trust act or to be a cause of action in favor of the rival manufacturer; 58 Fed. Rep. 851.

A contract by which three out of four persons engaged in manufacturing oleomargarine consolidate, in order to stop sharp competition and agree not to engage separately in the business for five years, is not void; 18 R. I. 484.

It was held by the circuit court that what was known as the railroad freight pooling association to maintain rates and regulate freight traffic was not a contract in restraint of trade under the federal anti-trust act, where the rates maintained were reasonable and the tendency was to diminish rather than to enhance them, and no monopoly of trade or attempt at such is proved by such contract; 58 Fed. Rep. 58, affirming 53 id. 44; but this decision was reversed by the supreme court which held that any contract or combination made in violation of law is void, without respect to previous decisions as to what was the public policy of the country on the subject, and the right of a railroad company to charge reasonable rates does not include the right to enter into a combination with competing roads to maintain reasonable rates; 166 U. S. 290.

An arrangement by which a company promised all persons who would purchase from its distributing agents for six months exclusively and would permit the company to regulate their prices, that it would pay them a rebate on the amount of their purchases, was not a contract in restraint of trade or an attempt to monopolize it; 53 Fed. Rep. 104, where it was held that the restraint was only partial, and reasonable for the protection of the particular business; id., approving [1892] App. Cas. 25.

An agreement to raise the price of lumber fifty cents a thousand feet is not a restraint upon trade unless it involves the absorption of the entire traffic; 53 Fed. Rep. 646. The by-law of the Associated Press, which provides that no member of it "shall receive or publish the regular news dispatches of any other news association covering a like territory and organized for a like purpose," is not void as unreasonable and in restraint of trade; 136 N. Y. 333, 692. In California it is held that the law against unlawful restraint of trade is not violated by an agreement by an association of stevedores to control prices, unless it appears that the entire business of the city is controlled by it, and that the prices are unreasonable or the restriction prevents fair competition; 115 Cal. 10.

A contract with an independent manufacturer for the entire product of his plant is not in itself a contract in illegal restraint of trade; and if made without knowledge of similar contracts made by the buyer with other manufacturers, and without any knowledge that such contract was intended as a step in a general scheme of monopoly, there is no conspiracy against freedom of commerce, or contract in illegal restraint of trade; 86 Fed. Rep. 439.

To constitute the offence of "monopolizing or attempting to monopolize" trade or commerce among the states, within the meaning of the federal anti-trust act, it is necessary to acquire or attempt to acquire an exclusive right in such commerce by such means as are adequate to prevent others from engaging therein; 53 Fed. Rep. 104.

The federal anti-trust act of July 2, 1890, confers no right upon private individuals to sue in equity to restrain the acts forbidden by the statute. That right is vested only in the district attorneys of the United States and the only remedy of private persons injured is an action at law for damages; 64 Fed. Rep. 821.

It is not a legal defence to an action for goods sold and delivered or service rendered, that the seller or person rendering service is a member of an illegal trust or combination, since the illegality is collateral to the contract of sale and does not taint it; 86 Wis. 352; 74 Fed. Rep. 802; and it is no defence to an action by a milk-shippers' association for goods sold that it is an illegal corporation under the Illinois act of June 11, 1891; 48 Ill. App. 876.

It is no defence to an action for compensation due from the federal government for mail service over a leased line that the leases were void because operated by a combination intended to prevent competition; 28 Ct. Cl. 77.

In the U. S. v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association, it was held (four justices dissenting), that the prohibitory provisions of the federal anti-trust act of July 2, 1890, applied to all contracts in restraint of interstate or foreign trade or commerce without exception or limitation, and are not confined to those in which the restraint is unreasonable. In that case it was applied to a contract between competing railroads forming an association for maintaining and regulating transportation rates, and it was held that such an agreement is within the act; 166 U. S. 290, reversing the circuit court of appeals which held the agreement reasonable; 19 U. S. App. 86. After the decision of the circuit court of appeals and before that of the supreme court, two other cases were decided holding such agreements not contracts in unlawful restraint of trade or in violation of the act; 73 Fed. Rep. 439; 70 id. 495.

See TRUST for the decision in the Joint Traffic case just handed down.

The federal anti-trust act was held not applicable to the case of a state which by its laws assumed a monopoly of the traffic in intoxicating liquors; 60 Fed. Rep. 908. So the act was held not to apply where members of a business exchange sought to enjoin the board of directors from enforcing against them by-laws which were alleged to be illegal as in restraint of trade and commerce; 77 Fed. Rep. 1.

See report on the federal anti-trust law in Report of Amer. Bar Assn., 1897; Patterson, Contracts in Restraint of Trade; Spelling, Trusts and Monopolies; Beach, Monopolies and Industrial Trusts.

RESTRICTED LANDS. In the Act of 1912, c. 83, 37 Stat. 86, § 6: Lands the alienation of which is subject to restrictions imposed by Congress to protect the Indians from their own incompetency. 250 U. S. 61.

In the Act of 1908, c. 199, 35 Stat. 312, § 2: Lands of a deceased full-blood Indian allottee, descended to a full-blood heir and not conveyed with the approval of such court. 250 U. S. 238.

RESTRICTIVE INDORSEMENT. See INDORSEMENT.

RESTS. A term used in computing interest especially on mortgages and in trust accounts. It consists in striking a balance of the account, at the end of any fixed period, upon which interest is allowed, thus giving the benefit of compound interest. 3 Pars. Contr. § 151.

RESULTING TRUST. A trust raised by implication or construction of law, and presumed to exist from the supposed intention of the parties and the nature of the transaction.

All trusts created by implication or construction of law are often included under the general term implied trusts; but these are commonly distinguished into implied or resulting and constructive trusts; resulting or presumptive trusts being those which are implied or presumed from the supposed intention of the parties and the nature of the transaction; constructive trusts, such as are raised independently of any such intention, and which are forced on the conscience of the trustee by equitable construction and the operation of law. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1095; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 510; 2 id. 198; 3 Swanst. 585; 1 Ohio 321; 6 Conn. 285; 2 Edw. Ch. 373; 6 Humpfr. 93.

Where upon a purchase of property the conveyance of the legal estate is taken in the name of one person, while the consideration is given or paid by another, the parties being strangers to each other, a resulting or presumptive trust immediately arises by virtue of the transaction, and the person named in the conveyance will be a trustee for the party from whom the consideration proceeds; 30 Me. 120; 8 N. H. 187; 5 Cush. 433; 10 Paige, Ch. 618; 2 Green, Ch. 480; 18 Pa. 283; 2 Harr. Del. 225; Beach, Mod. Eq. Jur. 218; 73 Cal. 166; 83 Ala. 135; 64 Vt. 326; 112 Mo. 412; and if he conveys the property to the cestui que trust, such conveyance is good as against the creditors of the trustee; 151 U. S. 420.

Resulting trusts are raised by the law from the presumed intention of the parties, and the natural equity that one who furnishes the means for the acquisition of property should enjoy its benefits. But it cannot arise where an obligation exists on his part, legal or moral, to provide for the grantee, as in the case of a husband for his wife, or a father for his child, as under such circumstance the relation to the party is of itself sufficient evidence to rebut the presumption of a resulting trust, for in such cases arises the contrary presumption of an advancement for the grantee's benefit; 91 U. S. 125.

Where land is bought by a husband with the separate property of a married woman, and the title is taken in his name, a trust results to her, in the absence of any agreement to the contrary; 110 N. C. 403; 176 Pa. 67. But where a wife gives to her husband money from her father's estate, without any agreement for its investment, or that he should be accountable to her for it, and he subsequently informed her that he has invested it in land for her, when, in fact, he has not done so, but has taken the title in his own name, it was held that, under the proof in that case, no resulting trust therein was created in favor of the wife; 36 S. W. Rep. (Tenn.) 877.

To establish a resulting trust in one person of land purchased in the name of another, to whom title is conveyed, it is essential that the party setting up the trust shall have paid, or become bound for the purchase-money on his own account, and as part of the original transaction of purchase; 4 Del. Ch. 445; payment by way of loan to the nominal purchaser raises no resulting trust; id. It is a latent equity, which cannot prejudice a bona fide holder for value; id. 135.

The fact that a conveyance is voluntary, especially when accompanied by other circumstances indicative of such an intention, it is said, may raise a resulting trust. See 2 Vern. 473; 23 Pa. 243; 29 Me. 410; 1 Johns. Ch. 240; 1 Dev. Eq. 456; 14 B. Monr. 585.

Where a voluntary; 1 Atk. 188; disposition of property by deed; 1 Dev. Eq. 403; or will is made to a person as trustee, and the trust is not declared at all; 10 Ves. 527; 3 Sim. 638; or is ineffectually declared; 1 Myl. & C. 286; 13 Sim. 496; 2 Dev. Eq. 255; or does not extend to the whole interest given to the trustee; 8 Pet. 326; 14 B. Monr. 585; 3 H. L. C. 492; or it fails either wholly or in part by lapse or otherwise; 5 Harr. & J. 392; 5 Paige, Ch. 318; 6 Ired. Eq. 187; 7 P. Monr. 481; 15 Pa. 500; 10 Hare 204; the interest so undisposed of will be held by the trustee, not for his own benefit, but as a resulting trust for the donor himself, or for his heir at law or next of kin, according to the nature of the estate.

A resulting trust must arise at the time the title is taken. No subsequent oral agreement or payment will create it; 32 W. Va. 14; 85 Va. 740; 84 id. 813; 65 N. H. 39; 149 Mass. 400; 138 U. S. 587. Where a father was induced to execute an absolute deed of his land to one of his children, by fraudulent representations that the grantee would hold it in trust for the other children, and subsequently without fraud executed another deed to the same grantee for the same land, the latter deed passed the title free from any trust in favor of the other children, as the fraud in procuring the first deed created a resulting trust in favor of the father, the express trust being void, as not being in writing, and the second deed carried the father's equitable interest; 60 N. W. Rep. (Mich.) 976.

The property may be personal or real; 8 Humpfr. 447; 1 Ohio St. 10; 26 Miss. 615; 2 Beav. 454. Parol evidence is admissible to prove a resulting trust in land; 24 N. E. Rep. (Ind.) 810; 37 W. Va. 507; 52 Kan. 469. One who buys shares of stock with his own money does not become trustee for another, though he tells him that the purchase is made for his benefit and he expects to be reimbursed by him; 18 U. S. App. 293. Resulting trusts cannot be declared upon doubtful evidence, nor upon a mere preponderance of evidence. There should be no room for a reasonable doubt as to the facts relied upon to establish the trust; 96 Mo. 361; 76 Ia. 192; 5 Tex. Civ. App. 367.

The statute of frauds has no application to a trust resulting from the purchase of property with funds of another; 126 Ill. 68; 69 Tex. 685.

Consult Story, Bisham, Spence, Adams, on Equity Jur.; Hill, Lewin, Sanders, on Trusts. See CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST.

RESULTING USE. A use raised by equity for the benefit of a feoffee who has made a voluntary conveyance to uses without any declaration of the use. 3 Washb. R. P. 100.

The doctrine, at first limited to the case of an apparently voluntary conveyance with no express declaration, became so extended that a conveyance of the legal estate seemed to imply an intention that the feoffee should enjoy the beneficial interest therein; and if no intent to the contrary was expressed, and no consideration proved or implied, the use always resulted to the feoffee; 2 Washb. R. P. 100. And if part only of the use was expressed, the balance resulted to the feoffee; 2 Atk. 150; 3 Rolle, Abr. 781; Co. Litt. 33 a. And, under the statute, where a use has been limited by deed and expires, or cannot vest, it results back to the one who declared it; 4 Wend. 494; 15 Me. 414; 5 W. & S. 833. And see Cro. Jac. 300; Tudor, Lead. Cas. Eq. 238; 2 Washb. R. P. 133.

RESUME WORK. To begin work anew with a bona fide intention of prosecuting it. 104 Cal. 227.

RESUMMONS. A second summons calling upon a person to answer an action where the first summons is defeated. 2 Chitty, Arch. Pr. 1847.

RESUMPTION. The taking again by the crown of land or tenements, which, on false suggestion, had been granted by letters patent. Whart. Dict.

RETAIL. To sell by small parcels, and not in the gross. 5 Mart. La. N. S. 297; 7 Metc. 808.

Selling, bartering or loaning liquors in quantities of less than five gallons shall be deemed "retailing." Kentucky Statutes, § 4199.

RETAILER OF MERCHANDISE. One who deals in merchandise by selling it in smaller quantities than he buys,—generally with a view to profit. 1 Cra. C. C. 268.

RETAIN. To continue to hold; to keep in possession. To keep is a synonym for retain. 84 Va. 269.

In Practice. To engage the services of an attorney or counselor to manage a cause. See RETAINER.

RETAINER. The act of withholding what one has in one's own hands, by virtue of some right. See ADMINISTRATOR; EXECUTOR; LIEN.

In Practice. The act of a client by which he engages an attorney or counselor to manage a cause, either by prosecuting it, when he is plaintiff, or defending it, when he is defendant.

The retaining fee.
A general retainer merely gives a right to expect professional service when requested. It binds the person retained not to take a fee from another against his retainer; but to do nothing except what he is asked to do, and for this he is to be distinctly paid; 6 R. I. 206.

In English practice a much more formal retainer is usually required than in America. Thust it is said by Chitty, 3 P. 116, note m. that, although it is not indispensable that the retainer should be in writing, unless required by the other side, it is very expedient. It is therefore recommended, particularly when the client is a stranger, to require from him a written retainer, signed by himself; and, in order to avoid the imputation that it was obtained by contrivance, it should be witnessed by one or more respectable persons. When there are several plaintiffs it should be signed by all, and not by one for himself and the others, especially if they are trustees or assignees of a bankrupt or insolvent. The retainer should also state whether it be given for a general or a qualified authority. See 9 Wheat. 728, 820; 3 Johns. 84, 86; 11 id. 604; 1 N. H. 23; 35 id. 308; 7 Harr. & J. 375; 27 Miss. 367. The extent of the relation of solicitor and client between parties may be inferred from their acts, although the solicitor has not received any express retainer; [1891] 1 Ch. 387.

The effect of a retainer to prosecute or defend a suit is to confer on the attorney all the powers exercised by the forms and usages of the courts in which the suit is pending; 2 M'Con. Ch. 409; 18 Metc. 269. He may receive payment; 18 Mass. 820; 4 Conn. 517; 89 Me. 386; may bring a second suit after being nonsuited in the first for want of formal proof; 18 Johns. 815; may sue a writ of error on the judgment; 16 Mass. 74; may discontinue the suit; 6 Cow. 885; may restore an action after a nol. pros.; 1 Binn. 469; may claim an appeal, and bind his client in his name for the prosecution of it; 1 Pick. 462; may submit the suit to arbitration; 1 Dall. 164; 16 Mass. 896; 6 McLean 190; 7 Cra. 486; 89 Ga. 68; may sue out an alias execution; 2 N. H. 576; may receive livery of seisin of land taken by an extent; 18 Mass. 868; may waive objections to evidence, and enter into stipulation for the admission of facts or conduct of the trial; 2 N. H. 620; and for release of bail; 1 Murph. 146; may waive the right of appeal, review, notice, and the like, and confess judgment; 5 N. H. 898; 4 T. B. Monr. 877; 5 Pet. 99; may agree to the entry of a judgment; 3 Ind. App. 379; 66 Hun 151; may waive a jury trial; 99 N. C. 58. But he has no authority to execute a discharge of a debtor except upon the actual payment of the full amount of the debt; 8 Dowl. 656; 8 Johns. 861; 10 Vt. 471; 82 Me. 110; 21 Conn. 245; 3 Md. Ch. Dec. 392; 14 Pa. 87; 13 Ark. 644; 1 Pick. 347; 35 W. Va. 323; nor to satisfy a judgment for a less sum than is due; 66 Tex. 306; and that in money only; 16 Ill. 272; 1 Ja. 360; see 6 Barb. 201; nor to release sureties; 3 J. J. Marsh. 532; 4 McLean 87; nor to enter a retraxit; 8 Blackf. 137; nor to act for the legal representatives of his deceased client; 2 Penn. N. J. 689; and ordinarily one retained to collect a debt has no right to compromise it; 85 Ia. 643; 47 Mo. App. 1; 122 Pa. 1. An attorney's authority to appear for his client ceases after the entry of final judgment, except that he may take the necessary steps to collect the judgment; 66 Hun 620.

There is an implied contract on the part of an attorney who has been retained, that he will use due diligence in the course of legal proceedings; but it is not an undertaking to recover a judgment; Wright Ohio 446. See 3 Camp. 17; 7 C. & P. 289; 16 S. & R. 368; 2 Cush. 810; 73 Mich. 831. An attorney is bound to act with the most scrupulous honor; he ought to disclose to his client if he has any adverse retainer which may affect his judgment or his client's interest; but the concealment of the fact does not necessarily imply fraud; 8 Mas. 305. See Weeks, Att. at Law.

RETAINING A CAUSE. Under the English Judicature Acts of 1873 and 1875, a cause brought in a wrong division of the High Court of Justice may be retained therein, at the discretion of the court or a judge.

RETAINING FEE. A fee given to counsel on being consulted, in order to insure his future services. See RETAINER.

RETAKING. The taking one's goods, wife, child, etc., from another, who without right has taken possession thereof. See RECAPTION; RESCUE.

RETALIATION. See LEX TALIONIS.

RETENEMENTUM. Detaining, withholding, or keeping back. Cowel.

RETENTION. In Scotch Law. The right which the possessor of a movable has of holding the same until he shall be satisfied for his claim either against such movable or the owner of it; a lien.

General retention is the right to withhold or detain the property of another, in respect of any debt which happens to be due by the proprietor to the person who has the custody, or for a general balance of accounts arising on a particular train of employment. 3 Bell, Com. 90.

Special retention is the right of withholding or retaining property or goods which are in one's possession under a contract, till indemnified for the labor or money expended on them.

RETIRE. As applied to bills of exchange, this word is ambiguous. It is commonly used of an indorser who takes up a bill by handing the amount to a transferee, after which the indorser holds the instrument with all his remedies intact. But it is sometimes used of an acceptor, by whom, when a bill is taken up or retired at maturity, it is in effect paid, and all the remedies on it extinguished; Byles, Bills, 15th ed. 98, 195, 268, 296; Dan. Neg. Inst. 12.

RETIRED FROM ACTIVE SERVICE. An officer of the army who is retired from active service is still in the military service of the United States, and, in addition to the per centum of the pay of the rank on which he was retired, is entitled to the ten per centum allowed by law for each term of five years' service. 105 U. S. 244.

RETIREMENT. To be retired from active service under the sections from 1448 to 1455, Rev. Stats., inclusive, means retired with pay and has had this meaning for several years. (113 U. S. 568, 572.) To be wholly retired means to be removed from the service entirely on payment of a lump sum and to become a civilian. (19 Ct. Clms. 338, 353; 29 Ops. Atty. Gen. 401.) No form of retirement is a removal by way of punishment. It is very clear, therefore, that a mere change of status from active service to inactive duty in the Naval Reserve Force is not a "retirement" in the meaning of § 1455, Rev. Stats., the Act of July 1, 1918, or that of June 4, 1920.

Officers in the Regular Navy who have become unfit for service before the retiring age are subject to three methods of retirement. One is when the disability is in the line of duty and their retirement pay is three-fourths of the pay of their rank on active duty. The other two are when the disability is not incurred in line of duty; and in one the retirement pay is furlough or one-half of leave of absence pay of their rank in active service, and in the other there is full retirement to civilian life on a year's full pay of their rank. § § 1453, 1454, Rev. Stats. 263 U. S. 35.

See RETIRED FROM ACTIVE SERVICE.

RETIRING BOARD. A board of army or navy officers, who report on the incapacity of officers for active service. Stand. Dict.

RETORNA BREVIVUM. In Old English Law. The return of writs by sheriffs and bailiffs, which is only a certificate delivered to the court on the day of return, of that which he hath done touching the execution of their writ directed to him: this must be indorsed on back of writ by officer; 2 Lilly, Abr. 476. Each term has return days, fixed, as early as 51 Hen. III., at intervals of about a week, on which all original writs are returnable. The first return day is regularly the first day in the term; but there are three days' grace. 8 Bla. Com. 278.

RETORNO HABENDO. In Practice. A writ issued to compel a party to return property to the party to whom it has been adjudged to belong, in an action of replevin. See DE RETORNO HABENDO; REPLEVIN.

RETORTION, RETORSION. An act employed by a government to impose the same hard treatment on the citizens or subjects of a state that the latter has used towards the citizens or subjects of the former, for the purpose of obtaining the removal of obnoxious measures. Vattel, liv. 2, c. 18, § 341. An act of retaliation in kind when a nation has failed in courtesy or friendship. Instances of retortion usually arise in discriminating duties or restrictions upon commercial intercourse; Snow, Int. Law 72. It is equivalent to retaliation and may be either amicable or vindictive. The former, retorsion de droit, is a remedy for a departure from any international courtesy, done in an unfriendly, but not an illegal manner. The latter, retorsio facti, implies the infliction of the same amount of evil on an aggressive state that it has inflicted on the state aggrieved; Risley, Law of War 57. This is a purely belligerent act; id.

RETOUR SANS PROTET. A request or direction by the drawer of a bill of exchange, that in case the bill should not be honored by the drawee, it may be returned without protest, by writing the words "retour sans protet" or "sans pais." Should such request be made, it is said that a protest as against the drawer, and perhaps as against the indorsers, is unnecessary; Byles, Bills, 15th ed. 216.

RETOUR OF SERVICE. In Scotch Law. An authenticated copy of the verdict of a jury, taken under a brief of succession, by which the legal character of a party as heir is judicially established.

RETRACT (Lat. re, back, traho, to draw). To withdraw a proposition or offer before it has been accepted. See LETTER; OFFER.

After pleading guilty, a defendant will, in certain cases where he has entered that plea by mistake or in consequence of some error, be allowed to retract it. But where a prisoner pleaded guilty to a charge of larceny, and sentence has been passed upon him, he will not be allowed to retract his plea and plead not guilty; 9 C. & P. 346; Dig. 12. 4. 5.

RETRACTO O TANTEO. In Spanish Law. The right of revoking a contract of sale; the right of redemption of a thing sold.

RETRACTIT (Lat. he has withdrawn). In Practice. The act by which a plaintiff withdraws his suit. It is so called from the fact that this was the principal word used when the law entries were in Latin.

A retractit differs from a nonsuit—the former being the act of the plaintiff himself, for it cannot even be entered by attorney; 8 Co. 58; 8 Pa. 157, 163; 68 Ind. 305; 81 Ala. 168; and it must be after declaration filed; 8 Pa. 163; while the latter occurs in consequence of the neglect merely of the plaintiff. A retractit also differs from a nolle prosequi. The effect of a retractit is a bar to all actions of a like or a similar nature; Bac. Abr. Nonsuit (A); 31 Ala. 108; 79 Va. 333; 120 U. S. 95; a nolle prosequi is not a bar even in a criminal prosecution; 2 Mass. 172. See 2 Sell. Pr. 336; Com. Dig. Pleader (X 2).

RETRIBUTION. That which is given to another to recompense him for what has been received from him: as, a rent for the hire of a house.

A salary paid to a person for his services. The distribution of rewards and punishments.

RETROACTIVE. See RETROSPECTIVE.

RETROCESSION. In Civil Law. When the assignee of heritable rights conveys his rights back to the cedent, it is called a retrocession. Erskine, Inst. 3. 5. 1.

RETROSPECTIVE (Lat. retro, back, spectare, to look). Looking backward. Having reference to a state of things existing before the act in question.

This word is usually applied to those acts of the legislature which are made to operate upon some subject, contract, or crime which existed before the passage of the acts; and they are therefore called retrospective laws. These laws are generally unjust, and are to a certain extent forbidden by that article in the constitution of the United States which prohibits the passage of ex post facto laws, or laws impairing contracts. See EX POST FACTO LAW; IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS.

A general law for the punishment of offences, which endeavors to reach, by its retrospective operation, acts previously committed, as well as to prescribe a rule of conduct for the citizen in future, is void in as far as it is retrospective; but such invalidity will not affect its operation in regard to future cases; 128 U. S. 189; but statutes affecting remedies are entirely at the discretion of the legislature.

A statute of limitations which provides that in all civil suits in which the cause of action shall have arisen within the state, the defendant, who shall have become a non-resident of the state after such cause of action shall have arisen, shall not have the benefit of any statute of this state for the limitation of actions during the period of such residence without the state, if retrospective in its effect, is constitutional and applies to the trial of issues pending when the act was passed; 177 Pa. 633.

Legislation which concerns merely modes of procedure, applies to pending suits whether the act so specify or not; 140 Pa. 99.

A statutory amendment allowing, as of right, but one new trial in ejectment is not unconstitutional as retrospective legislation, when applied to a pending action in which there has been one new trial long after the date of the act; 83 Fed. Rep. 643.

In the absence of constitutional prohibition against it, retrospective legislation is usually valid if not subject to the objection that it impairs vested rights. Where there is a constitutional prohibition, much legislation otherwise valid will fail; as, for example, the deed of a person of unsound mind could not in such case be ratified; 85 Mo. 174. Retrospective statutes which have been held valid are: One validating a married woman's power of attorney; 30 Cal. 138; authorizing the insertion in a deed of the name of a married woman which was omitted by mistake; 11 Ohio St. 641; or validating an unauthorized conveyance of a married woman of her separate estate; 57 Pa. 369; prohibiting the defence to a suit on a contract that it was made on Sunday, unless the defendant restores whatever of value he received under the contract; 77 Me. 482; rendering a bond valid which when executed was invalid because not bearing the proper stamp; 12 Md. 195.

It has been held that the legislature has power to cure a defective conveyance by retroactive legislation; 17 Ia. 528; or to confirm conveyances defectively executed; 6 Gill & J. 461.

The right to pass retrospective laws, with the exceptions above mentioned, exists in the several states, according to their own constitutions, and they become obligatory if not prohibited by the latter; 4 S. & R. 364; 1 Bay 179; 7 Johns. 477. See 2 Cra. 272; 2 Pet. 414; 18 Ind. 237; 19 Ia. 388; 63 Pa. 474; 57 N. J. L. 180.

An instance may be found in the laws of Connecticut. In 1796, the legislature passed a resolve setting aside a decree of a court of probate disapproving of a will, and granted a new hearing; it was held that the resolve, not being against any constitutional principle in that state, was valid; 8 Dall. 386. And in Pennsylvania a judgment was opened by the act of April 1, 1837, which was held to be constitutional; 2 W. & S. 271.

Under a New York statute which provides that no person should practise medicine in the state who had ever been convicted of a felony, it was held that the statute applied to persons convicted before its passage, and that as to such of them at least as were not engaged in the practice of medicine at the time of its passage, it was not an ex post facto law; 46 N. E. Rep. (N. Y.) 607. See PHYSICIAN.

Laws should never be considered as applying to cases which arose previously to their passage, unless the legislature have clearly declared such to be their intention; 13 La. 352. See BARRINGTON, Stat. 466, n.; 7 Johns. 477; 1 Kent 455; Code 1. 14. 7; Story, Const. § 1893; 1 McLean 40; 12 S. & R. 330.

The English courts also hold that a statute should not be construed so as to make it retrospective; 8 C. B. 551. Nothing but clear and express words will give such effect to it; 4 H. & N. 76; so of criminal acts; [91] 2 Q. B. 148.

The power of congress to pass a retrospective tariff act is discussed in 55 Alb. L. J. 248, in connection with the tariff act of 1897, and the conclusion reached that if it is desired to make a law retrospective, all that is necessary is that congress shall express its intention to that effect in unambiguous terms. The writer contends that the only decision bearing upon the subject is Burr v. United States, in which the question of the constitutionality of retrospective legislation would naturally have arisen, but it was assumed both by counsel and the court that the only question was as to the intent of congress in fixing a date from which the act should take effect. The court said, "No question exists, or is really made, but that this whole subject was within the law-making power; but that a law should not have any retrospective application unless that is plainly intended is more strenuously urged;" 66 Fed. Rep. 642. It had been previously declared by the supreme court with respect to such a tax that "congress could have passed a law to reimpose this tax retrospectively, to revive the sections under consideration if they had expired, to re-act the law by a simple reference to sections; 20 Wall. 332; and this case was determined as one merely of intent. The same court in another case treated the case from the same standpoint of intent, but arrived at a different conclusion. The main point made by Chief Justice Fuller was that the new act comprised a saving clause to the effect that "all rights and liabilities under said law shall continue, and may be enforced in the same manner as if said repeal or modification had not been made." "If," it was argued, "congress intended that this section should relate back to August 1, still the intention is quite apparent that the act of 1890 should remain in full force and effect until the passage of the new act, on August 28, and that all acts done, rights accrued, and liabilities incurred under the earlier act, prior to the repeal, should be saved from the effect thereof as to all parties interested, the United States included." 159 U. S. 78. This principle of construction appears also to have been accepted by the supreme court in a very early case, where it was said that "words in a statute ought not to have a retrospective application, unless they are so clear, strong, and imperative that no other meaning can be annexed to them, or unless the intention of the legislature cannot otherwise be satisfied." 3 Cra. 398, 413; 15 How. 423; 112 U. S. 559. See, also, 52 Pa. 315; 31 N. J. L. 133; 54 Md. 486; 16 Pa. 62; 17 How. 456; 68 N. C. 361. See, generally, 4 Wall. 277, 333; 129 U. S. 114; Pom. Const. L. § 530, 525-533. See STATUTE; REMEDY; EX POST FACTO LAW; IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS; WADE, Retrospect. Leg.

RETURN. An official statement by an officer of what he has done in obedience to a command from a superior authority, or why he has done nothing, whichever is required. 61 Conn. 287.

Persons who are beyond the sea are exempted from the operation of the statute of limitations of some states, till after a certain time has elapsed after their returning. See 14 Mass. 203; 3 Johns. 263; 2 W. Bl. 728; 8 Litt. 48; 1 Harr. & J. 89, 330.

When a member of parliament has been elected to represent a certain constituency, he is said to be returned, in reference to the return of the writ directing the proper officer to hold the election. In this country, election returns are the statements or reports of the balloting at an election, by the proper officers.

To come or go back to the same place; to revisit. 12 Conn. 166.

RETURN-DAY. A day appointed by law when all writs are to be returned which have issued since the preceding return-day. The sheriff is, in general, not required to return his writ until the return-day. After that period he may be ruled to make a return. See RULE DAY.

RETURN OF PREMIUM. In Insurance. A repayment of a part or the whole of the premium paid. Policies of insurance, especially those on marine risks, not unfrequently contain stipulations for a return of the whole or a part of the premium in certain contingencies; 2 Phill. Ins. xxii. sect. xi.; but in the absence of any such stipulation, in a case free of fraud on the part of the assured, if the risk does not commence to run, he is entitled to a return of it, if paid, or an exoneration from his liability to pay it, subject to deduction settled by stipulation or usage; and so, pro rata, if only a part of the insured subject is put at risk; 2 Phill. Ins. ch. xxii. sect. i.; and so an abatement of the excess of marine interest over the legal rate is made in hypothecation of ship or cargo in like case; id. sect. vii.

RETURN OF WRITS. In Practice. A short account, in writing, made by the sheriff, or other ministerial officer, of the manner in which he has executed a writ. Steph. Pl. 24.

It is the duty of such officer to return all writs on the return-day: on his neglecting to do so, a rule may be obtained on him to return the writ, and if he do not obey the rule he may be attached for contempt. See 18 Com. Dig. Return; 1 Rawle 520.

RETURNUM AVERIORUM. A judicial writ, similar to the retorno habendo. Cowel.

RETURNUM IRREPLEGIABILE. A judicial writ addressed to the sheriff for the final restitution or return of cattle to the owner when unjustly taken or distrained, and so found by verdict; it is granted after a nonsuit in a second deliverance. Reg. Judic. 27.

REUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A party to a suit, whether plaintiff or defendant. Reus est qui cum altero litum contestatum habet, sive id egi, sive cum eo actum est.

A party to a contract. Reus credendi is he to whom something is due, by whatever title it may be: reus debendi is he who owes, for whatever cause. Pothier, Pand. lib. 50. Reus stipulandi, a party to a stipulation; reus promittendi, the debtor or obligor to the stipulation. Where there were several creditors or several debtors jointly entitled to, or jointly liable under, a stipulation they were respectively called correi.

See MENS REA.

REVE. The bailiff of a franchise or manor; an officer in parishes within forests who marks the commonable cattle. Cowel.

REVELAND. In Domesday Book we find land put down as thane-lands, which were afterwards converted into revelands, i. e. such lands as, having reverted to the king upon death of his thane, who had it for life, were not since granted out to any by the king, but vested in charge upon account of the reve or bailiff of the manor. Spelm. Feuds, c. 24. Coke was mistaken in thinking it was land held in socage.

REVELS. Sports of dancing, masking, etc., formerly used in princes' courts, the ins of court, and noblemen's houses, commonly performed by night; there was an officer to order and supervise them, who was entitled the "master of the revels." Cowel.

REVENDECATION. In Civil Law. An action by which a man demands a thing of which he claims to be owner. It applies to immovables as well as movables, to corporeal or incorporeal things. Merlin, Répert.

By the civil law, he who has sold goods for cash or on credit may demand them back from the purchaser if the purchase-money is not paid according to contract. The action of revendication is used for this purpose. See an attempt to introduce the principle of revendication into our law, in 3 Hall, Law Journ. 181.

Revendication. In another sense, corresponds very nearly to the stoppage in transitu of the common law. It is used in that sense in the Code de Commerce, art. 577. Revendication, says that article, can take place only when the goods sold are on the way to their place of destination, whether by land or water, and before they have been received into the warehouse of the insolvent (failli) or that of his factor or agent authorized to sell them on account of the insolvent. See Dig. 14. 4. 15; 18. 1. 19. 63; 19. 1. 11.

REVENUE. The income of the government arising from taxation, duties, and the like; and, according to some correct lawyers, under the idea of revenue is also included the proceeds of the sale of stocks, lands, and other property owned by the government. Story, Const. § 877. Internal revenue. The revenue raised by the United States from all sources of taxation except duties on imports. By revenue is also understood the income of private individuals and corporations.

See TAXATION; BILL.

A bill establishing rates of postage is not a bill for raising revenue, within the meaning of the constitution; but post-office laws may be revenue laws without being laws for raising revenue: 18 Blatchf. 207. See 15 Wall. 390; 4 Blatchf. 311; 15 Int. Rev. Rec. 30.

REVENUE LAWS. Laws made for the direct and avowed purpose of creating and securing revenue or public funds for the service of the government. 1 Gall. 396. See 123 U. S. 686.

No country ever takes notice of the revenue laws of another; 1 Cowp. 343, per Lord Mansfield; 3 D. & R. 190.

Under the constitution of the United States revenue bills must originate in the house of representatives; Const. art. 1, § 7. In the sense of this clause, revenue bills are not those which create revenue incidentally, or those which are intended primarily for other purposes, but those which upon their face are plainly designed to raise revenue; 4 Biss. 198; those which levy taxes in the strict sense of the word; 1 Sto. Const. § 680. See 41 Cal. 165. "An act of congress providing a national currency secured by a pledge of bonds of the United States, and which, in the furtherance of that object, and also to meet the expenses attending the execution of the act, imposed a tax on the notes in circulation of the banking association organized under statute, is clearly not a revenue bill which the constitution declares must originate in the house of representatives." 167 U. S. 196.

The existing revenue laws of the United States under which the funds necessary for the expenses and disbursements of the government are raised, are the tariff laws and the internal revenue laws. The existing tariff law is what is commonly known as the Dingley tariff bill, being the act passed July 24, 1897. The internal revenue taxes are provided for by what is known as the war revenue bill, being an act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, passed June 13, 1896.

REVENUE SIDE OF THE EXCHEQUER. That jurisdiction of the court of exchequer, or of the exchequer division of the high court of justice, by which it ascertains and enforces the proprietary rights of the crown against the subjects of the realm. The practice in revenue cases is not affected by the orders and rules under the Judicature Act of 1875. Moz. & W.

REVERSAL. In International Law. A declaration by which a sovereign promises that he will observe a certain order, or certain conditions, which have been once established, notwithstanding any changes that may happen to cause a deviation therefrom; as, for example, when the French court consented for the first time, in 1745, to grant to Elizabeth, the Czarina of Russia, the title of empress, it exacted as a reversal a declaration purporting that the assumption of the title of an imperial government by Russia should not derogate from the rank which France had held towards her.

Letters by which a sovereign declares that by a particular act of his he does not mean to prejudice a third power. Of this we have an example in history: formerly the emperor of Germany, whose coronation, according to the golden bull, ought to have been solemnized at Aix-la-Chapelle, gave to that city, when he was crowned elsewhere, reversals, by which he declared that such coronation took place without prejudice to its rights; and without drawing any consequences therefrom for the future.

In Practice. The decision of a superior court by which the judgment, sentence, or decree of the inferior court is annulled.

After a judgment, sentence, or decree has been rendered by the court below, a writ of error may be issued from the superior to the inferior tribunal, when the record and all proceedings are sent to the supreme court on the return to the writ of error. When, on the examination of the record, the superior court gives a judgment different from the inferior court, they are said to reverse the proceeding. As to the effect of a reversal, see 9 C. & F. 518. See REVERSE; JUDGMENT; RES JUDICATA.

REVERSE, REVERSED. A term frequently used in the judgments of an appellate court, in disposing of the case before it. It then means "to set aside, to annul, to vacate." 7 Kans. 234.

REVERSE. In Scotch Law. A reversioner.

REVERSION. The residue of an estate left in the grantor, to commence in possession after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him. The return of land to the grantor and his heirs after the grant is over. Co. Litt. 142 b; 2 Bla. Com. 175; 4 Kent 354. See CONDITION; CONDITIONAL FEE; BASE FEE.

The reversion is a vested interest or estate and arises by operation of law only. In this latter respect it differs from a remainder, which can never arise except either by will or deed; Chall. Real Pr. 68; Cruise, Dig. tit. 17; 4 Kent 345; 19 Vin. Abr. 217. A reversion is said to be an incorporeal hereditament; 4 Kent 331; 1 Washb. R. P. 37, 47; 38 N. J. Eq. 124. The possibility of reverter in the grantor of a qualified or determinable fee is not void for remoteness; 130 Mass. 448; 106 id. 479; 153 id. 171; as to the reversion or remainder in lands confiscated by the United States because of the owners engaging in the rebellion, see 145 U. S. 546. See REMAINDER; LIMITATION.

In some cases land taken under the right of eminent domain for a specific purpose reverts to the former owner when that purpose has ceased. See EMINENT DOMAIN; 6 Am. & E. Corp. Cas. 566.

REVERSIONARY INTEREST. The interest which one has in the reversion of lands or other property. The residue which remains to one who has carved out of his estate a lesser estate. See REVERSION. An interest in the land when possession shall fall. Cowel.

REVERSIONARY LEASE. One to take effect in futuro. See LEASE.

A second lease to commence after the expiration of a former lease. All leases where a particular estate subsists are leases in reversion. R. & L. Dict.

REVERSIONER. A person having the reversion of an estate; a person entitled to a reversion. See 2 Bl. Com. 176.

REVERSOR. In Scotch Law. A debtor who makes a wadset, and to whom the right of reversion is granted. Erskine, Inst. 2. 8. 1. A reversioner. Jacob, Law Dict.

REVERTER. Reversion. A possibility or reverter is that species of reversionary interest which exists when the grant is so limited that it may possibly terminate. See 1 Washb. R. P. 68.

REVEST. To replace one in the possession of anything of which he has been divested, or put out of possession. 1 Rop. H. & W. 353.

REVIEW. In Practice. A second examination of a matter. For example, by the laws of Pennsylvania, the courts having jurisdiction of the subject may grant an order for a view of a proposed road: the reviewers make a report, which, when confirmed by the court, would authorize the laying out of the same. After this, by statutory provision, the parties may apply for a review or second examination, and the last viewers may make a different report. For the practice of reviews in chancery, see BILL OF REVIEW. A bill of review is the appropriate mode of correcting errors apparent on the face of the record. 103 U. S. 766; 125 id. 1.

The criticism of a publication. See CRITICISM; LIBEL.

REVIEW, COURT OF. In England. A court of appeal in bankruptcy cases, established in 1832 and abolished in 1847. Robson, Bkcy.

REVILING CHURCH ORDINANCES. An offence against religion punishable in England by fine and imprisonment. 4 Steph. Com. 208. See BLASPHEMY.

REVISED STATUTES OF THE UNITED STATES. The Revised Statutes were enacted June 23, 1874, and, when printed in 1875, embraced the laws, general and permanent in their nature, in force December 1, 1873. A second edition was completed in the latter part of 1878, and includes only the specific amendments passed by the forty-third and forty-fourth congresses, with references to some other acts. The period from 1874 to 1880 is provided for by a supplement published in 1881. See Preface to Supplement to Rev. Stat. A second edition of the supplement, covering the legislation from 1874 to 1891, and embracing the matter in the Supplement to the Revised Statutes of 1881, was prepared and published under the direction of congress by Chief Justice Wm. A. Richardson of the Court of Claims. Volume 2 of the Supplement has since been published, covering legislation down to 1901.

Transactions subsequent to the enactment of the Revised Statutes must be determined by the law as there found, and not by the earlier statutes incorporated therein. In cases of ambiguity or uncertainty, the previous statutes may be referred to to elucidate the legislative intent, but where the language is clear, the Revised Statutes must govern. The second edition is neither a new revision nor a new enactment; it is only a new publication, a compilation containing the original law with certain specific alterations and amendments made by subsequent legislation incorporated therein according to the judgment of the editor, who had no discretion to correct errors or supply omissions; 15 Ct. Cl. 80. Sections of a statute re-enacted in the Revised Statutes are to be given the same meaning they had in the original, unless a contrary intention is clearly manifested; 121 U. S. 278; the Revised Statutes are merely a compilation of the statutes of the United States, and resort may be had to the original statute to ascertain what, if any, change of phraseology there is, and whether such change should be construed as changing the law; 134 U. S. 626; and this is especially so where the act authorizing the revision directs marginal references as in this case; 169 U. S. 227, where some historical matter relating to the subject is found. "They must be treated as the legislative declaration of the statute law on the subjects embraced, on the first day of December, 1873. When the meaning is plain, the courts cannot look to the statutes which have been revised, to see if congress erred in that revision, but may do so when necessary to construe doubtful language." 157 U. S. 1; 74 Fed. Rep. 145.

The act of June 4, 1897, appointed a commission to revise the Criminal Code of the United States.

See STATUTES AT LARGE.

REVISING ASSESSORS. In English Law. Two officers formerly elected to assist the mayor in revising the parish burgess lists, but now abolished and the duties transferred to the revising barristers.

REVISING BARRISTERS. In English Law. Barristers appointed to revise the list of voters for county and borough members of parliament, and who hold courts for that purpose throughout the country.

REVIVAL. Of Contracts. An agreement to renew the legal obligation of a just debt after it has been barred by the act of limitation or lapse of time is called its revival.

In Practice. The act by which a judgment which has lain dormant or without any action upon it for a year and a day is, at common law, again restored to its original force.

When a judgment is more than a day and a year old, no execution can issue upon it at common law; but till it has been paid, or the presumption arises from lapse of time that it has been satisfied, it may be revived and have all its original force, which was merely suspended. This may be done by a scire facias or an action of debt on the judgment. See SCIRE FACIAS.

REVIVE. To bring again to life, to reanimate, to renew; to bring into action after a suspension. 37 Ia. 207.

REVIVOR, BILL OF. A bill filed to revive and continue the proceedings, whenever there is an abatement of a suit, before its final consummation.

REVOCAION (Lat. re, back, vocare, to call). The recall of a power or authority conferred, or the vacating of an instrument previously made.

An act of the mind demonstrated by some outward and visible sign. 47 Minn. 171.

Revocation of grants. Grants may be revoked by virtue of a power expressly reserved in the deed, or where the grant is without consideration or in the nature of a testamentary disposition; 8 Co. 25.

Voluntary conveyances, being without pecuniary or legal consideration, may be superseded or revoked, in effect, by a subsequent conveyance of the same subject-matter to another for valuable consideration. And it will make no difference that the first conveyance was meritorious, being a voluntary settlement for the support of one's self or family, and made when the grantor was not indebted, or had ample means besides for the payment of his debts. And the English cases hold that knowledge of the former deed will not affect the rights of the subsequent purchaser; 9 East 59; 4 B. & P. 332; 18 Ves. 84. See, also, the exhaustive review of the American cases, in note to Sexton v. Wheaton, 1 Am. Lead. Cas. 36.

In America, it is generally held that a voluntary conveyance which is also fraudulent, is void as to subsequent bona fide purchasers for value with notice; but if not fraudulent in fact, it is only void as to those purchasing without notice. See Biap. Eq. 257; 18 Pick. 131; 2 B. Monr. 345; 10 Ala. n. s. 348, 352; 12 Johns. 536, 537; 4 McCord 295; FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE.

The fact that the voluntary grantor subsequently conveys to another, is regarded as prima facie evidence that the former deed was fraudulent as to subsequent purchasers without notice, or it would not have been revoked; 5 Pet. 265; 4 McCord 295; 8 Strobb. 59; 1 Rob. Va. 500, 544.

In some of the states, notice of the voluntary deed will defeat the subsequent purchaser; 1 Rawle 281; 6 Md. 242; 4 McCord 295; 3 M'Mull. 508; 1 Ball. 575; 15 Ala. 525; 5 Pet. 265. But in other states the English rule prevails; 1 Yerg. 18; 1 A. K. Marsh. 208; 1 Dana 581; 8 Ired. Eq. 81.

There is a distinction between the creditors of the grantor by way of family settlement (he being not insolvent or in embarrassed circumstances), and a subsequent purchaser for value. The claim of the latter is regarded as superior to a mere creditor's, whether prior or subsequent to the voluntary conveyance,—especially if he buy without notice. Some of the foregoing cases do not advert to this distinction; 3 Ired. Eq. 81; 4 Vt. 389.

So, too, if one bail money or other valuables to another, to be delivered to a third person on the day of marriage, he may countermand it at any time before delivery over; 1 Dy. 49. But if such delivery be made in payment or security of a debt, or for other valuable consideration, it is not revocable; 1 Stra. 163. And although the gift be not made known to the donee, being for his benefit, his assent will be presumed until he expressly dissents; 3 Co. 26 b; 2 Salk. 618.

Powers of appointment to uses are revocable if so expressed in the deed of settlement. But it is not indispensable, it is said, that this power of revocation should be repeated in each successive deed of appointment, provided it exist in the original deed creating the settlement; 4 Kent 336; 1 Co. 110 b; 3 Bla. Com. 339.

It has been said that the power of revocation does not include the appointment of new uses; 3 Freem. 61; Pr. in Ch. 474.

A voluntary deed of trust, without power of revocation, made with a nominal consideration, and without legal advice as to its effect, when there was evidence that its effect was misunderstood by the grantor, will be set aside in equity; 13 Am. L. Reg. n. s. 345, and note. In a similar case it was held that the mere omission of counsel to advise the insertion of a power of revocation is not a ground to set aside the deed; but that this omission and the absence of the power are circumstances tending to show that the act was not done with a deliberate intent. The deliberate intent of a party to tie up his hands should clearly appear. In the absence of such an intent the omission of a power to revoke is prima facie evidence of mistake. The mistake being one of fact mixed with legal effects, equity will relieve; 75 Pa. 289; the earlier English cases seem to have insisted upon the presence of a power of revocation in voluntary settlements; L. R. 8 Eq. 559; 14 id. 365; but in a later case it was held that the absence of such a power was merely a circumstance of more or less weight, according to the other circumstances of each case; L. R. 8 Ch. Ap. 430. A reserved right of revocation is not inconsistent with the creation of a valid trust; 1 Mo. App. 99.

A quitclaim deed from a trustee to the donor of the trust will not revoke the trust, though made solely for that purpose, since a completed trust, without reservation of power to revoke, can only be revoked by the consent of all the beneficiaries; 113 Mo. 188. See 70 Cal. 440.

As to the revocation of powers conferred upon agents, see AGENCY. It is a general rule that a principal may revoke the agent's authority at his own will; 141 U. S. 827.

The American courts, following the case of Brown v. M'Gran, 14 Pet. 479, hold that the consignee of goods for sale, who has incurred liability or made advances upon the faith of the consignment, acquires a power of sale which, to the extent of his interest, is not revocable or subject to the control of the consignor. But if orders are given by the consignor, contemporaneously with the consignment and advances, in regard to the time and mode of sale, and which are, either expressly or impliedly, assented to by the consignee, he is not at liberty to depart from them afterwards. But if no instructions are given at the time of the consignment and advances, the legal presumption is that the consignee has the ordinary right of factors to sell, according to the usages of the trade and the general duty of factors, in the exercise of a sound discretion, and reimburse the advances out of the proceeds, and that this right is not subject to the interference or control of the consignor. See 52 Miss. 7; 43 Ind. 115.

The right of the factor to sell in such case is limited to the protection of his own interest, and if he sell more than is necessary for that purpose contrary to the order of his principal, he is liable for the loss incurred. 1; 37 Conn. 378.

The case of Parker v. Branker, 22 Pick. 40, seems to go to the length of holding that where the consignee is to sell at a limited price the consignee may after notice sell below that price, if necessary, to reimburse advances. But to this extent the American rule has not gone; 1 Pars. Contr., 8th ed. 70. See, also, 12 N. H. 239; 3 N. Y. 78.

The English courts do not hold such a power irrevocable in law; 3 C. B. 380; 5 id. 895. In the last case, Wilde, C. J., thus lays down the rule. It may furnish a ground for inferring that the advances were made upon the footing of an agreement that the factor shall have an irrevocable authority to sell in case the principal made default. But it would be an inference of fact, not a conclusion of law. The fact that the agent has incurred expense in faith of the authority being continued, and will suffer loss by its revocation, is a ground of recovery against the principal, but does not render the power irrevocable. A pledge of personal property to secure liabilities of the pledgor, with an express power of sale, confers such an interest in the subject-matter that it will not be revoked by his death; 10 Paige, Ch. 205. But a power to pledge or sell the property of the constituent and from the avails to reimburse advances made on liabilities incurred by the appointee is not so coupled with an interest as to be irrevocable; 8 Wheat. 174; 6 Conn. 559. The interest must exist in the subject-matter of the power, and not merely in the result of its exercise, to become irrevocable; 15 N. H. 469; 20 Ohio St. 185. Hence, if one give a letter of credit agreeing to accept bills to a certain amount within a limited time, the letter is revoked by death, and bills drawn after the death and before knowledge thereof reaches the drawer cannot be enforced against the estate of such deceased party; 28 Vt. 209.

All contracts which are to be executed in the name of the constituent by virtue of an agency, although forming an essential part of a security upon the faith of which advances have been made, are of necessity revoked by the death of the constituent. Even a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, although not revocable by the act of the party, is revoked by his death. The courts, however, allow judgment in such cases to be entered as of a term prior to the death of the constituent; 2 Kent 646; 9 Wend. 432; 8 Wheat. 174. See 75 Cal. 349; see, also, 2 Ld. Raym. 768, 849, where the form of procedure is discussed; 7 Mod. 93; Stea. 103. A warrant of attorney to confess judgment, executed by a feme sole, is revoked by her marriage; but if executed to a feme sole, the courts will allow judgment to be entered up in the name of the husband and wife; 3 Harring. 411.

Where one is not notified of the revocation of the authority of an agent, he is justified in acting upon the presumption of its continuance; 129 U. S. 374; 75 Cal. 159; 82 Va. 712.

The powers of arbitrators. These are revocable by either party at any time before final award; 20 Vt. 198; 156 Mass. 118; 128 Ill. 72; 58 Mo. App. 289; 23 S. E. Rep. (Va.) 165. It is not competent for the parties to deprive themselves of this power by any form of contract; 8 Co. 80; 16 Johns. 205. But where the submission releases the original cause of action, and the adversary revokes, the party so releasing may recover the amount so released by way of damages caused by the revocation; 13 Vt. 97.

Where the submission is made a rule of court, it becomes practically irrevocable, since such an act would be regarded as a contempt of court and punishable by attachment; 7 East 608. This is the only mode of making a submission irrevocable "when the fear of an attachment may induce them to submit." 4 Bingh. 443.

In the American courts a submission by rule of court is made irrevocable by the express provisions of the statutes in most of the states, and the referee is required, after due notice, to hear the case ex parte, where either party fails to appear; 12 Mass. 47; 1 Conn. 498; 4 Me. 459; 5 Pa. 497; 3 Ired. 333. In Ohio, a submission under the statute is irrevocable after the arbitrators are sworn; 19 Ohio St. 245; and it has been held that a naked submission is not revocable after the arbitrator has made his award and published it to one of the parties; 6 N. H. 36. But while a statute requisite, as being witnessed, is not complied with, it is incomplete and so the submission is revocable; 5 Paige, Ch. 575.

When one party to the submission consists of several persons, one cannot revoke without the concurrence of the others; Rolle, Abr. Authority (H); 12 Wend. 578. But the text-writers are not fully agreed in this proposition; see Russ. Arb. 141; 2 Chitty, Bail. 452, where it was held that the death of one of several parties on one side of the submission operates as a revocation as to such party at least, and that an award made in the name of the survivors and the executor of the deceased party is void. It is here intimated by way of query whether, that where the cause of action survives, the award might not legally be made in the name of the surviving party. See Russ. Arb. 155.

An award made after the revocation of the submission is entirely void; 1 Sim. 154.

The power of the arbitrator is determined by the occurrence of any fact which incapacitates the party from proceeding with the hearing. The marriage of a feme sole is a revocation of the arbitrator's power; 11 Vt. 525; without notice to the arbitrators; Russ. Arb. 152. So, also, if she be joined with another in the submission, her marriage is a revocation as to both; W. Jones, 228; Rolle, Abr. Authority.

Insanity in either party, or in the arbitrator, will determine his authority. The death of either party, or of the arbitrator, or one of them, or where the arbitrators decline to act, will operate as a revocation of the submission; 4 T. B. Monr. 3; 1 B. & C. 66; 36 Fed. Rep. 408; 58 Mo. App. 289.

It is competent to make provision in the submission for the completion of the award, notwithstanding the death of one of the parties, by proceedings in the name of the personal representative. This seems to be the general practice in England in late years; 3 B. & C. 144; 8 M. & W. 878. And in some of the American states it is held that a submission by rule of court is not determined by the death of the party, where the cause of action survives, but may be revived and prosecuted in the name of the personal representative; 15 Pick. 79; 3 Halst. 116; 3 Gill 190. Bankruptcy of the party does not operate to revoke a submission to arbitration; Caldw. Arb. 89. But it seems to be considered in 9 B. & C. 639, that the bankruptcy of one party will justify the other in revoking. But see 2 Chitt. Bail. 43; 1 C. B. 131.

The time when the revocation becomes operative. Where it is by the express act of the party, it will be when notice reaches the arbitrator; 5 B. & Ald. 507; 8 Co. 80. But in the case of death, or marriage, or insanity, the act itself terminates the power of the arbitrator at once, and all acts thereafter done by him are of no force; 11 Vt. 525; 5 East 266.

The form of the revocation is not important, if it be in conformity with the submission, or if, when it is not, it be acquiesced in by the other party; 7 Vt. 287.

It is said in the books that the revocation must be of as high grade of contract as the submission. This seems to be assumed by the text-writers and judges as a settled proposition; 8 Co. 82; 8 Johns. 125. Where the submission is in writing, the revocation "ought to be in writing"; 18 Vt. 91. But see 7 Vt. 237, 240; 15 N. H. 468. It seems questionable whether at this day a submission by deed would require to be revoked by deed, since the revocation is not a contract, but a mere notice, and no special right is conferred upon such an act by the addition of wax or wafer; 8 Ired. 74. But see 26 Me. 251, contra. But it is conceded the party may revoke by any act which renders it impracticable for the arbitrators to proceed; 7 Mod. 8; Story, Ag. 474.

So a revocation imperfectly expressed, as of the bond instead of the submission, will receive a favorable construction, in order to effectuate the intention of the party; 1 Cow. 325.

It has been held, too, that bringing a suit upon the same cause of action embraced in the submission, at any time before the award, was an implied revocation; 6 Dana 107; 136 Ill. 72.

The power of a partner to contract in the name of the firm may be revoked, by injunction out of chancery, where there is a wanton or fraudulent violation of the contract constituting the association; Bisp. Eq. 426; 1 Story, E. J. Jur. § 673. This will sometimes be done on account of the impracticability of carrying on the undertaking; 1 Cox, Ch. 213; 2 V. & B. 299. So, too, such an injunction might be granted on account of the insanity or permanent incapacity of one of the partners; 1 Story, E. J. Jur. § 673. But insanity is not alone sufficient to produce a dissolution of the partnership; 2 My. & K. 125. See PARTNERSHIP.

An oral license to occupy land is, where the statute of frauds prevails, revocable at pleasure, unless permanent and expensive erections have been paid by the licensee in faith of the permission. In such case a court of equity will decree a conveyance on equitable terms, in conformity with the contracts of the parties, or else require compensation to be made upon equitable principles; 1 Stockt. 471; Red. Railw. 106; 13 Vt. 150; 10 Conn. 375.

For the law in regard to the revocation of wills, see WILLS.

REVOCATIONE PARLIAMENTI. An ancient writ for recalling a parliament. 4 Inst. 44.

REVOCATUR (Lat. it is recalled). A term used to denote that a judgment is annulled for an error in fact. The judgment is then said to be recalled, revocatur; not reversed, which is the word used when a judgment is annulled for an error in law; Tidd, Pr. 1126.

REVOLT. The endeavor of the crew of a vessel, or any one or more of them, to overthrow the legitimate authority of her commander, with intent to remove him from his command, or against his will to take possession of the vessel by assuming the government and navigation of her, or by transferring their obedience from the lawful commander to some other person. 11 Wheat. 417.

According to Wolff, revolt and rebellion are nearly synonymous; he says it is the state of citizens who unjustly take up arms against the prince or government. Wolff, Droit de la Nat. § 1232. See REBELLION.

By R. S. § 5359, if any one of the crew of an American vessel, on the high seas or other waters, within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the U. S., endeavors to make a revolt, etc., or conspires, etc., so to do, or incites, etc., any other of the crew to disobey lawful orders, or to neglect their duty, or assemble such orders in a mutinous manner, or makes a riot, or unlawfully confines the master, etc., he is punishable by a fine of not over $1,000, or imprisonment for not over five years, or both. By § 5360, if any one of the crew, etc., usurps the command of the vessel, or deprives the master of authority, or seizes his authority, or transfers the same to one not entitled thereto, he is punishable by a fine of not over $2,000, and imprisonment for not over ten years. Foreign seamen on American vessels are punishable under this section; 1 N. Y. Leg.

Oba. 38. If, before a voyage is begun, the seamen for good reason believe that the vessel is unworthy, they may resist an attempt to compel them to go to sea in her, without being guilty of revolt; 1 Sprague 75.

Revolts on shipboard are to be considered as defined by the last-mentioned act; 1 W. & M. 306.

A confederacy or combination must be shown; 2 Sumn. 582; 1 W. & M. 305; Crabbe 558. The vessel must be properly registered; 3 Sumn. 342; must be pursuing her regular voyage; 2 Sumn. 470. The indictment must specifically set forth the acts which constitute the crime; Whart. Prec. § 1061, n. And see 1 Mas. 147; 5 id. 402; 1 Sumn. 448; 4 Wash. C. C. 402. 528; 2 Curt. C. C. 225; 1 Pet. C. C. 218. See SEAMEN.

REWARD. The offer of recompense given by authority of law for the performance of some act for the public good, which, when the act has been performed, is to be paid. The recompense actually so paid.

The offer may be made to an individual; 6 Blatch. 426; or by public, oral statement, poster, or newspaper; 56 Ind. 46; 14 Cal. 134; 6 Mass. 244; and its acceptance and performance create a valid contract; Poll. Contr. 11; Ans. Contr. 81; 83 N. Y. 503; 71 Tex. 584; 52 Pa. 484; such performance being sufficient consideration; 7 N. H. 549; 78 Am. Dec. 684; 4 B. & Ad. 621. The offer, not being a contract until performance, may be withdrawn prior thereto; 16 Ind. 140; 79 Ga. 658; 5 Metc. 57; 14 Cal. 137. See 92 U. S. 75. As to what information will constitute a performance, see 3 C. B. 254; L. R. 2 Q. B. 301. The offer of a reward may contain such terms as the party sees fit to prescribe; 48 Ark. 337; 7 Metc. 412; provided they are lawful; Bish. Contr. § 467; 106 Mass. 269; 68 Me. 142; 61 Pa. 415; and substantial performance is usually sufficient; 9 Allen 152; 85 Am. Dec. 747.

A reward may be offered by the government or by a private person; 21 N. J. L. 310; by a railroad company; 19 Am. Rep. 80; 85 Ala. 48; but not by the District of Columbia; 7 D. C. 184; nor by municipal corporations, unless authorized by statute; 82 Ill. App. 397; 41 Mich. 387; 51 Me. 174; 49 Ia. 472; 14 Bush 324; 18 Fla. 318; 72 Ind. 455; contra, 23 Pa. 391. But where the selectmen of a town offered a reward in excess of that authorized by statute, it was held good for the lawful amount; 39 Conn. 159; and such officials are personally liable for the excess; 80 N. E. R. P. (Mass.) 95; 7 Dana 29; contra, 2 McCrary 152.

Any one who complies with the terms of the offer, if not guilty of fraud, may recover the reward; 39 Me. 45; 133 Mass. 283; 89 Tex. 74; 24 Ia. 78; although not embraced in the description of the persons to whom it was originally proposed; 55 Ill. 62; 64 L. T. 594; but not for apprehending a person who has been admitted to bail; 8 Bush 22; nor one discharged from arrest by the committing magistrate; 63 Miss. 193.

One may recover a reward offered by his employers; 16 Ill. App. 181; but not if he is morally bound to furnish the information; 50 Cal. 218; or it is his official duty to do so; 79 Tex. 141; 10 Pa. 39. And a reward offered by the state for the capture of a criminal cannot be claimed by an officer whose official duty it is to make the arrest; the rule being founded on public policy, it is opposed to opening the door to any inducement for public officers to delay arrests until rewards are offered; 45 S. W. Rep. (Ky.) 515. In that case it was also decided that no one could have any property right in a reward until it was earned by making the arrest, so that where, by sharp practice in making use of information derived over the telephone, one person secured the reward and prevented another, who really gave the information, from obtaining the benefit of it, the latter had no right of action. But it is held that a promise to pay a reward to a police constable is binding because there might be some information which he was not bound, in the discharge of his ordinary duty, to give; 11 A. & E. 858.

An offer of a reward is not void as against public policy, because made for conviction of offence; afterwards to be committed; 151 Pa. 200.

It is held to be necessary that the person performing the service should know of the offer when he did so; 51 N. Y. 604; 16 Ill. App. 181; 2 Handy 193; 7 Dana 123; contra, 3 Ind. App. 459; 9 Bush 453; 44 Vt. 170; 13 C. B. N. s. 740; 104 E. C. L. 740.

The person first complying with the terms of the offer is entitled to the reward; 4 B. & Ad. 631; 24 E. C. L. 126; 7 Fed. Rep. 709; 6 Blatch. 406; and where the offer is for information, the whole of which is furnished in fragments by different persons, the reward may be equitably apportioned; 48 N. H. 86; 48 How. Pr. 193; 28 Md. 147; and so as to the recovery of property; 49 Ia. 472; 25 Am. Dec. 187; 6 Mass. 344.

The finder of lost property is not entitled to a reward, if there was no promise of one by the owner; 1 Ore. 86. See REASONABLE REWARD.

REX. The king. As the king is the source of authority, honor, and power, in a monarchical government, the word often stands for the sovereign power. In particular, during a king's reign, criminal prosecutions, and decisions in criminal cases, and suits on behalf of the crown, are entitled Rex v. The Defendant. Abbott.

RHANDIR. A part in the division of Wales before the Conquest; every township comprehended four gavels, and every gavel had four rhandirs, and four houses or tenements constituted every rhandir. Tayl. Hist. Gav. 69.

RHODE ISLAND. One of the original thirteen states of the United States of America; its full style being, "The State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations."

Its territory lies between Massachusetts and Connecticut, in the southwest angle of that portion of the territory of the former state which was known as the colony of New Plymouth, and is situated at the head and along both shores of the Narragansett Bay, comprising the islands in the same, the principal of which is Rhode Island, placed at the mouth of the bay. The settlement was commenced as early as June, 1639, on the present site of the city of Providence, by five men under Roger Williams, founder of his colony upon a compact which bound the settlers to obedience to the major part "only in civil things"; leaving to each perfect freedom in matters of religious concernment, so that he did not, by his religious practices, encroach upon the public order and peace. A portion of the Massachusetts colonists, who were of the antinomian party, after their defeat in that colony, settled on the island of Aquinet, now Rhode Island, where they associated themselves as a colony on March 7, 1663. These settlements, together with one "at Shawomet, now Warwick, made by another sect of religious outcasts, under Gorton, in 1642-3, remained under separate voluntary governments until 1647, when they were united under one government, styled "The Incorporation of Providence Plantations in the Narragansett Bay in New England," by virtue of a charter granted in 1648.

This colony remained under this charter, which, upon some divisions, was confirmed by Cromwell in 1655, until after the restoration, when a new charter was procured from Charles II., in the fifteenth year of his reign, under which a new colonial government was formed on the 24th of November, 1683, which continued, with the short interruption of the colonial administration of Sir Edmund Andros, down to the period of the American revolution.

In the general assembly of the colony, on the first Wednesday of May, 1776, in anticipation of the declaration of independence, an act was passed which absolved the colonists from their allegiance to the king of Great Britain, and which ordered that in future all writs and processes should issue in the charter name of "The Governor and Company of the English Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations." Instead of the name of the king. The old colonial charter, together with a bill of rights adopted by the general assembly, remained the sole constitution of state government until the first Tuesday in May, 1843, when a state constitution framed by a convention assembled in November, 1842, and adopted by the people of the state, went into operation.

RHODIAN LAW, THE. See Lex RHODIA DE JACTU.

RHODIAN LAWS. A code of maritime laws adopted by the people of Rhodes, who had by their commerce and naval victories obtained the sovereignty of the sea, about nine hundred years before the Christian era. There is reason to suppose this code has not been transmitted to posterity, at least not in a perfect state.

See CODE.

RIAL. A piece of gold coin current for ten shillings in the reign of Henry VI, at which time there were half-rials, and quarter-rials, or rial-farthings. In the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's reign, golden rials were coined at 15s. a piece; and in James I. there were rose-rials of gold at 30s., and spur-rials at 15s. Wharton; Lownd. Ess. Coins 38.

RIBAUD. A rogue; a vagrant.

RIBBONMEN. Associations or secret societies formed in Ireland, having for their object the dispossession of landlords and political purposes. See Whart. Law Lex.

RIDER. A schedule or small piece of paper or parchment added to some part of a record or policy of insurance; as, when on the reading of a bill in the legislature a new clause is added, this is tacked to the bill on a separate piece of paper, and is called a rider.

RIDING. In English Law. An ascertained district; part of a county. This term has the same meaning in Yorkshire that division has in Lincolnshire. 4 Term 459.

RIDING ARMED. The offence of riding or going armed with dangerous or unusual weapons. It is a misdemeanor; 4 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 208.

RIDING CLERK. One of the Six Clerks in chancery, who, in his turn, for one year kept the control books of all grants that passed the Great Seal. Whart. Dict.

RIENS. A French word which signifies nothing. It has generally this meaning; as, riens en arriere; riens passe per le fait, nothing passes by the deed; riens per descent, nothing by descent: it sometimes signifies not, as, rien culpable, not guilty.

RIENS EN ARRIERE (L. Fr. nothing in arrears). In Pleading. A plea which alleges that there is nothing remaining due and unpaid of the plaintiff's demand. It is a good plea, and raises the general issue in an action for rent. 2 Wm. Saund. 297, n. 1; 2 Chitty, Pl. 486; 2 Ld. Raym. 1503; Gould, Pl. 286; McKelv. Pl. 33.

RIENS PER DESCENT. A plea by an heir sued for the debt of his ancestor that he had no lands by descent from the ancestor. Chitty, Prec. 433.

RIENS PASSE PER LE FAIT (L. Fr. nothing passed by the deed). In Pleading. A plea which avoids the effect of a deed where its execution cannot be denied, by asserting that nothing passed thereby; for example, an allegation that the acknowledgment was before a court which had not jurisdiction.

RIER, or REER-COUNTY. Close county, in opposition to open county. It appears to be some public place which the sheriff appoints for the receipt of the king's money after the end of the county court. Flota says it is dies crastinus post comitatum. Encyc. Lond.

RIFFLARE. To take away anything by force.

RIGGING THE MARKET. A term of the stock exchange denoting the practice of inflating the price of given stocks or enhancing their quoted value by a system of pretended purchasers, designed to give the air of an unusual demand for such stocks. L. R. 13 Eq. 447.

RIGHT. A well-founded claim. If people believe that humanity itself establishes or proves certain claims, either upon fellow-beings, or upon society or government, they call these claims human rights; if they believe that these claims inhere in the very nature of man himself, they called them inherent, inalienable rights; if people believe that there inheres in monarchs a claim to rule over their subjects by divine appointment, they call the claim divine right, jus divinum; if the claim is founded or given by law, it is a legal right. The ideas of claim and that the claim must be well founded always constitute the idea of right. Rights can only inhere in and exist between moral beings; and no moral beings can coexist without rights, consequently without obligations. Right and obligation are correlative ideas. The idea of a well-founded claim becomes in law a claim founded in or established by the law: so that we may say a right in law is an acknowledged claim.

Men are by their inherent nature moral and social beings; they have, therefore, mutual claims upon one another. Every well-grounded claim on others is called a right, and, since the social character of man gives the element of mutuality to each claim, every right conveys along with it the idea of obligation. Right and obligation are correlative. The consciousness of all constitutes the first foundation of the right or makes the claim well grounded. Its incipency arises instinctively out of the nature of man. Man feels that he has a right of ownership over that which he has produced out of appropriated matter, for instance, the bow he has made of appropriated wood; he feels that he has a right to exact obedience from his children, long before laws formally acknowledge or protect these rights; but he feels, too, that if he claims the bow which he made as his own, he ought to acknowledge (as correlative obligation) the same right in another man to the bow which he may have made; or if he, as father, has a right to the obedience of his children, they have a corresponding claim on him for protection as long as they are incapable to protect themselves. The idea of rights is coexistent with that of authority (or government); both are inherent in man; but if we understand by government a coherent system of laws by which a state is ruled, and if we understand by state a sovereign society, with distinct authorities to make and execute laws, then rights precede government, or the establishment of states, which is expressed in the ancient law maxim: Ne ex regula jus sumatur, sed ex jure quod est, regula fiat. See GOVERNMENT. We cannot refrain from referring the reader to the noble passage of Sophocles, Œdyp. Tyr. 876 et seq., and to the words of Cicero, in his oration for Milo: Est enim hæc, judices, non scripta sed nata lex; quam non didicimus, accepimus, legimus; verum ex natura ipsæ arripimus, hausimus, expressimus; ad quam non docti sed facti; non instituti sed imbuti sumus.

As rights precede government, so we find that now rights are acknowledged above governments and their states, in the case of international law. International law is founded on rights, that is, well-grounded claims which civilized states, as individuals, make upon one another. As governments come to be more and more clearly established, rights are more clearly acknowledged and protected by the laws, and right comes to mean a claim acknowledged and protected by the law. A legal right, a constitutional right, means a right protected by the law, by the constitution; but government does not create the idea of right or original rights; it acknowledges them; just as government does not create property or values and money, it acknowledges and regulates them. If it were otherwise, the question would present itself, whence does government come? whence does it derive its own right to create rights? By compact? But whence did the contracting parties derive their right to create a government that is to make rights? We would be consistently led to adopt the idea of a government by jus divinum,—that is, a government deriving its authority to introduce and establish rights (bestowed on it in particular) from a source wholly separate from human society and the ethical character of man, in the same manner in which we acknowledge revelation to come from a source not human.

Rights are claims of moral beings upon one another: when we speak of rights to certain things, they are, strictly speaking, claims of persons on persons,—in the case of property, for instance, the claim of excluding others from possessing it. The idea of right indicates an ethical relation, and all moral relations may be infringed; claims may be made and established by law which are wrong in themselves and destitute of a corollary obligation; they are like every other wrong done by society or government; they prove nothing concerning the origin or essential character of rights. On the other hand, claims are gradually more clearly acknowledged, and new ones, which were not perceived in early periods, are for the first time perceived, and surrounded with legislative protection, as civilization advances. Thus, original rights, or the rights of man, are not meant to be claims which man has always perceived or insisted upon or protected, but those claims which, according to the person who uses the term, logically flow from the necessity of the physical and moral existence of man; for man is born to be a man,—that is, to lead a human existence. They have been called inalienable rights; but they have been alienated, and many of them are not perceived for long periods. Lieber, in his Political Ethics, calls them primordial rights: he means rights directly flowing from the nature of man, developed by civilization, and always showing themselves clearer and clearer as society advances. He enumerates, as such especially, the following: the right of protection; the right of personal freedom,—that is, the claim of unrestricted action except so far as the same claim of others necessitates restriction; these two rights involve the right to have justice done by the public administration of justice, the right of production and exchange (the right of property), the right of free locomotion and emigration, the right of communion in speech, letter, print, the right of worship, the right of influencing or sharing in the legislation. All political civilization steadily tends to bring out these rights clearer and clearer, while in the course of this civilization, from its incipency, with its relapses, they appear more or less developed in different periods and frequently wholly in abeyance: nevertheless, they have their origin in the personality of man as a social being.

Publicists and jurists have made the following further distinction of rights:—

Rights are perfect and imperfect. When the things which we have a right to possess, or the actions we have a right to do, are or may be fixed and determinate, the right is a perfect one; but when the thing or the actions are vague and indeterminate, the right is an imperfect one. If a man demand his property which is withheld from him, the right that supports his demand is a perfect one, because the thing demanded is or may be fixed and determinate; but if a poor man ask relief from those from whom he has reason to expect it, the right which supports his petition is an imperfect one, because the relief which he expects is a vague, indeterminate thing. Rutherford, Inst. c. 2, § 4; Grotius, lib. i. c. 1, § 4.

Rights are also absolute and qualified. A man has an absolute right to recover property which belongs to him; an agent has a qualified right to recover such property when it has been intrusted to his care and which has been unlawfully taken out of his possession.

Rights might with propriety be also divided into natural and civil rights; but as all the rights which man has received from nature have been modified and acquired anew from the civil law, it is more proper, when considering their object, to divide them into political and civil rights.

Political rights consist in the power to participate, directly or indirectly, in the establishment or management of government. These political rights are fixed by the constitution. Every citizen has the right of voting for public officers, and of being elected; these are the political rights which the humblest citizen possesses.

Civil rights are those which have no relation to the establishment, support, or management of the government. These consist in the power of acquiring and enjoying property, of exercising the paternal and marital powers, and the like. It will be observed that every one, unless deprived of them by a sentence of civil death, is in the enjoyment of his civil rights,—which is not the case with political rights; for an alien, for example, has no political, although in the full enjoyment of his civil, rights.

These latter rights are divided into absolute and relative. The absolute rights of mankind may be reduced to three principal or primary articles: the right of personal security, which consists in a person's legal and uninterrupted enjoyment of his life, his limbs, his body, his health, and his reputation; the right of personal liberty, which consists in the power of locomotion, of changing situation or removing one's person to whatsoever place one's inclination may direct, without any restraint unless by due course of law; the right of property, which consists in the free use, enjoyment, and disposal of all his acquisitions, without any control or diminution save only by the laws of the land. 1 Bla. Com. 124-139.

The relative rights are public or private: the first are those which subsist between the people and the government; as, the right of protection on the part of the people, and the right of allegiance which is due by the people to the government; the second are the reciprocal rights of husband and wife, parent and child, guardian and ward, master and servant.

Rights are also divided into legal and equitable. The former are those where the party has the legal title to a thing; and in that case his remedy for an infringement of it is by an action in a court of law. Although the person holding the legal title may have no actual interest, but hold only as trustee, the suit must be in his name, and not, in general, in that of the cestui que trust: 8 Term 332; 1 Saund. 158, n. 1; 2 Bing. 20. The latter, or equitable rights, are those which may be enforced in a court of equity by the cestui que trust.

RIGHT OF ACTION. The right to bring suit in a case. Also sometimes used in the same sense as right in action, which is identical with chase in action (q. v.).

RIGHT OF APPEAL. This is not limited to a right of appeal by statute, but includes a case where a judge has given leave to appeal. 46 L. J. Q. B. 226; 2 Q. B. D. 125.

RIGHT TO BEGIN. In Practice. The party who asserts the affirmative of an issue has the right to begin and reply, as on him is the burden of proof. The substantial affirmative, not the verbal, gives the right; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 74; 18 B. Monr. 136; 8 Ohio St. 307; 2 Gray 260; Tay. Ev. 356. See OPENING AND CLOSING.

RIGHT CLOSE, WRIT OF. An abolished writ which lay for tenants in ancient demesne, and others of a similar nature, to try the right of their lands and tenements in the court of the lord exclusively. 1 Steph. Com. 224.

RIGHT OF COMMON. See COMMON.

RIGHT OF DISCUSSION. In Scotch Law. The right which the cautioner (surety) has to insist that the creditor shall do his best to compel the performance of the contract by the principal debtor, before he shall be called upon. 1 Bell, Com. 347.

RIGHT OF DIVISION. In Scotch Law. The right which each of several cautioners (sureties) has to refuse to answer for more than his own share of the debt. To entitle the cautioner to this right, the other cautioners must be solvent, and there must be no words in the bond to exclude it. 1 Bell, Com. 347.

RIGHT OF HABITATION. In Louisiana. The right of dwelling gratuitously in a house the property of another. La. Civ. Code, art. 623; 3 Toullier, c. 2, p. 825; 14 id. n. 279, p. 330; Pothier, n. 2-25.

RIGHT HEIRS. The heirs of the testator at common law, who, if more than one, take as tenants in common. 47 L. J. Ch. 714; 35 W. R. 356.

Direct, nearest; lineal; legal heirs. Anderson. "Right heirs," in a will, was held to mean children. Id.; 42 N. J. Eq. 557. A limitation to one and his "right heirs" is the same as to his "heirs" simply; and a limitation directly to the "right heirs" of one carries a fee, without the addition of the words "and his heirs." Id.; 1 Washb. Real Prop. * 57. To limit an estate to one's "right heir," excepting A, who actually is that heir, is palpably inconsistent. Id.; 132 Mass. 529.

RIGHT HONOURABLE. In England. A title given to privy counsellors, earls, viscounts, barons, and to certain mayors who bear the title of "Lord" ex officio. Stand. Dict. See HONORABLE.

RIGHT TO JURY TRIAL. The "right to jury trial" is the right to the submission to a jury of all the issues of fact in the case on the law given by the court, and the jury determines the rights of the litigants under the law. 131 Ky. 46, 114 S. W. 308.

RIGHT OF LIEN. The word lien is of the same origin as the word liable, and the right of lien expresses the liability of certain property for a certain legal duty, or a right to resort to it in order to enforce the duty. 30 Pa. 277. See LIEN.

RIGHT PATENT. The name of an ancient writ, which Fitzherbert says, "ought to be brought of lands and tenements, and not of an advowson, or of common, and lieth only of an estate of fee-simple, and not for him who has a lesser estate, as tenant in tail, tenant in frank-marriage, or tenant for life." Fitzh. N.B.1.

RIGHT, PETITION OF. See PETITION OF RIGHT.

RIGHT OF POSSESSION. The right to possession which may reside in one man, while another has the actual possession, being the right to enter and turn out such actual occupant: e. g. the right of a disseisee. An apparent right of possession is one which may be defeated by a better; an actual right of possession, one which will stand the test against all opponents. 2 Bla. Com. *196.

RIGHT OF PROPERTY. The abstract right (merum jus) which remains after the actual possession has been so long gone that the right of possession is also lost, and the law will only allow recovery of the land by a writ of right. It, together with possession and right of possession, makes a perfect title; e. g. a disseisor has naked possession, the disseisee has right of possession and right of property. But after twenty years without entry the right of possession is transferred from the disseisee to the disseisor; and if he now buys up the right of property which alone remains in the disseisee, the disseisor will unite all three rights in himself, and thereby acquire a perfect title. 2 Bla. Com. *197.

RIGHT OF SALE. A contractual right of sale of an article constitutes the taker of such right an agent for the sale of the article, but does not bind the giver to supply the article; 6 L. R. Ir. 319.

RIGHT OF SEARCH. See SEARCH, RIGHT OF; PRISONER.

RIGHT OF SUCCESSION TO THE CROWN. See HEREDITARY RIGHT TO THE CROWN.

RIGHT OF VISITATION. See

VISIT, RIGHT OF; VISITATION; Cf. SEARCH, RIGHT OF.

RIGHT OF WAY. See EASEMENT; WAY.

RIGHT, WRIT OF. See WRIT OF RIGHT.

RIGHTS. See IMPRESCRIPTIBLE; NATURAL RIGHTS.

RIGHTS, BILL OF. See BILL OF RIGHTS.

RIGHTS OF PERSONS. Rights which concern and are annexed to the persons of men. 1 Bl. Com. 122.

RIGHTS OF THINGS. Rights which may be acquired over external objects or things unconnected with the person. 1 Bl. Com. 122.

RIGOR JURIS (L. Lat.). Strictness of law.

RIGOR MORTIS. Rigor of death. Death stiffening; the rigidity of the muscles that occurs at death and lasts till decomposition sets in. It is due to the formation of myosin by the coagulation of the contents of the individual muscle fibers. Webster.

RING. A combination of persons, usually for the attainment of a selfish aim or purpose; especially a clique formed for controlling a market, or local or state politics. See RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

RING-DROPPING. In Criminal Law. A phrase applied in England to a trick frequently practised in committing larcenies. It is difficult to define it; it will be sufficiently exemplified by the following cases. The prisoner, with some accomplices, being in company with the prosecutor, pretended to find a valuable ring wrapped up in a paper, appearing to be a jeweller's receipt for "a rich brilliant diamond ring." They offered to leave the ring with the prosecutor if he would deposit some money and his watch as a security. The prosecutor, having accordingly laid down his watch and money on a table, was beckoned out of the room by one of the confederates, while the others took away his watch and money. This was held to amount to a larceny; 1 Leach 278. In another case, under similar circumstances, the prisoner procured from the prosecutor twenty guineas, promising to return them the next morning, and leaving the false jewel with him. This was also held to be larceny; 1 Leach 314; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 679.

RING SETTLEMENT. The ring settlement, where there is no physical handing over of commodities in buying and selling transactions, e. g., in the grain pit, is reached by a comparison of books among the clerks of the members buying and selling in the pit, and picking out a series of transactions which begins and ends with dealings which can be set against each other by eliminating those between—as, if A has sold to B five thousand bushels of May wheat, and B has sold the same amount to C, and C to D and D to A. Substituting D for B by novation, A's sale can be set against his purchase, on simply paying the difference in price. 198 U. S. 247. Cf. DIRECT SETTLEMENT.

RINGING THE CHANGE. A trick practised by a criminal, by which, on receiving a good piece of money in payment of an article, he pretends it is not good, and, changing it, returns to the buyer a spurious coin. See 2 Leach 768.

RINGS - GIVING. The giving of golden rings by a newly-created sergeant-at-law to every person of rank at court, from the princes of the blood, through the lords in parliament and the justices and barons of the courts, down to the meanest clerk of common pleas, to each one according to his dignity. The expense was not less than forty pounds English money. Fortesque 190; 10 Co. Intro. 28.

RIOT. In Criminal Law. A tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three persons or more, assembling together of their own authority with an intent mutually to assist each other against any who shall oppose them, in the execution of some enterprise of a private nature, and afterwards actually executing the same in a violent and turbulent manner, to the terror of the people, whether the act intended were of itself lawful or unlawful. Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 65, § 1. See 3 Blackf. 209; 3 Rich. 337; 5 Pa. 88; 78 Ga. 258.

"An unlawful assembly which has actually begun to execute the purpose for which it is assembled, by a breach of the peace, and to the terror of the public or a lawful assembly, may become a riot if the persons assembled form and proceed to execute an unlawful purpose to the terror of the people, although they had not that purpose when they assembled." Steph. Dig. Cr. Law, art. 77.

In this case there must be proved—first, an unlawful assembling; 15 N. H. 169; for if a number of persons lawfully met together, as, for example, at a fire, or in a theatre or a church, should suddenly quarrel and fight, the offence is an affray, and not a riot, because there was no unlawful assembling; but if three or more being so assembled, on a dispute occurring, form into parties with promises of mutual assistance, which promises may be express, or implied from the circumstances, then the offence will no longer be an affray, but a riot; the unlawful combination will amount to an assembling within the meaning of the law. In this manner any lawful assembly may be converted into a riot; 18 Me. 346; 1 Camp. 328; 24 Hun 562. Any one who joins the rioters after they have actually commenced is equally guilty as if he had joined them while assembling.

Secondly, proof must be made of actual violence and force on the part of the rioters, or of such circumstances as have an apparent tendency to force and violence, and calculated to strike terror into the public mind; 2 Camp. 363. See 60 Ga. 128; 20 Mo. 429. The definition requires that the offenders should assemble of their own authority, in order to create a riot; if, therefore, the parties act under the authority of the law, they may use any necessary force to enforce their mandate, without committing this offence. See 1 Hill 8. C. 363; 72 N. C. 25.

Thirdly, evidence must be given that the defendants acted in the riot and were participants in the disturbance; 1 Morr. Tenn. 142. It is sufficient if they be present encouraging or giving countenance, support, or acquiescence to the act; 9 Miss. 270. See 1 Russ. Cr. *392; Co. 3d Inst. 176; 4 Bla. Com. 146; Com. Dig.; Ros. Cr. Ev. Women and infants above, but not those under, the age of discretion are punishable as rioters; 1 Russ. Cr. *387.

In a case growing out of the riots in Pittsburgh in 1877, under a statute making a county liable for the property "situated" therein, when destroyed by a mob, the liability was held to attach to property owned by a non-resident of the state, in transit in possession of a common carrier; 90 Pa. 397; s. c. 83 Am. Rep. 670.

In the absence of a statute giving a remedy, municipal corporations are not liable for damages resulting in loss of life from the acts of a mob or riotous assemblage, no matter what the negligence of the city officials may have been; 23 U. S. App. 533. See RIOT; MOB; UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY; PUBLIC MEETING; AFFRAY.

RIOT ACT. The stat. 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 5. It forbade the unlawful assembling of twelve persons or more to the disturbance of the peace. If they continue together for one hour after the sheriff, mayor, etc., has commanded them to disperse, such contempt shall be felony. Stat. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 11, requires that, in order to constitute felony, the riotous act must consist in demolishing, or beginning to demolish, some building; Moz. & W.; Cox & S. Cr. Law 104.

By statute 1 Geo. I., the Riot Act, which is directed to be read in a loud voice by a justice of the peace or other person authorized by the act, is to be in the following words or in words of like effect:—"Our Sovereign Lord the King, charged and comendeth all persons, being assembled, immediately to disperse themselves, and peaceably to depart to their habitations, or to their lawful business, upon the pains contained in the act made in the first year of King George for preventing tumults and riotous assemblies. God save the King."

Persons who wilfully obstruct or hinder the reading of the proclamation are guilty of felony, and if the proclamation would have been read had it not been prevented by the interference of any person or persons, any twelve or more persons who remain together after the proclamation would have been read, are guilty of felony, as if the act had been read. See 21 St. Tr. 485.

RIOTOUSLY. In Pleading. A technical word, properly used in an indictment for a riot, which of itself implies violence. 3 Sess. Cas. Sc. 13; 2 Stra. 834; 2 Chitty, Cr. Law 489.

RIPA (Lat.). The banks of a river, or the place beyond which the waters do not in their natural course overflow.

An extraordinary overflow does not change the banks of the river. Pothier, Pand. lib. 50. See BANKS; RIVER.

RIPARIAN. Belonging to or relating to the bank of a river.

RIPARIAN NATIONS. In International law, those who possess opposite banks or different parts of banks of one and the same river. R. & L. Dict.

RIPARIAN PROPRIETORS. Those who own the lands bounding upon a watercourse. 4 Mass. 897.

Each riparian proprietor owns that portion of the bed of the river (not navigable) which is adjoining his land usque ad flum aquae; or, in other words, to the thread or central line of the stream; Hargr. Tracts 5; Holt 499; 3 Dane, Abr. 4; 7 Mass. 496; 5 Wend. 423; 2 Conn. 482; 11 Ohio St. 138; Ang. Wat.-Courses 3; 28 Am. Law Reg. 147, 397; 47 Ill. App. 258; 142 U. S. 254. Where the middle of a stream is the boundary between states or private landowners, that boundary follows any changes in the stream which are due to a gradual accretion or degradation of its banks; 143 U. S. 339; but where a navigable stream suddenly changes its course, the owner of the shore does not acquire title to the abandoned channel; 117 Mo. 33.

Where one has obtained title by adverse possession of land bounded by a stream, it was held that he had not acquired title to the middle line of the stream; 89 S. W. Rep. (Ky.) 495. See RIVER; WATER-COURSE; TIDE-WATER; WHARF; ALLUVION; AVULSION; FISHERY; RELICION; LAKE; ACCRETION.

As to the rights of riparian owners over the bed of navigable waters between high and low water-mark, the decisions are somewhat conflicting, although the general rule is that the riparian owner holds the right of access to the water, subject to the right of the state to improve navigation; Wood, Nuisances, 81 ed. 418, 502 et seq.; 81 Pa. 80; 7 W. N. C. Pa. 322; 122 Pa. 191. That the riparian owner has a right of action where his access to the water is cut off by a structure erected between high and low water mark, by a corporation acting under its charter, see L. R. 5 H. L. 418; 10 Wall. 497; 25 Wend. 463; 42 Wisc. 214; s. c. 24 Am. Rep. 394, n.; contra, 32 Ia. 106; s. c. 7 Am. Rep. 178; 8 Cow. 146; 34 N. J. 532; 8 Am. Rep. 269. Where, by the action of the sea, the sea front was cut off between certain points, and a beach formed outside the main-land, divided from it by a navigable bay, the title to the new formation was held to be in the owners of the part cut off; 61 How. Pr. 197. See 95 Ill. 84; 83 Ia.

841. An owner does not lose his property in the soil by submersion or avulsion if he afterwards reclaims it by natural or artificial means, nor does the length of time during which the soil was submerged bar his rights; 169 Ill. 892.

Where the land of the riparian owner ended in an almost perpendicular bank from five to six feet high, to the foot of which the bed of the river reached, often rising some height above it, and by accretion caused by the planting of trees in the river a short distance from the bank by one who owned the bed of the river and a separate fishery, the accretion was held to be the property of the latter, and not of the riparian owner; [1896] 1 Ch. 78. In the leading cases of Gould v. Hudson River R. Co., 6 N. Y. 522, it was held, Edmonds, J., dissenting, that "whatever rights the owner of the land has in the river, or in its shore below high-water mark, are public rights, which are under the control of the legislative power, and any loss sustained through the act of the legislature affecting them is damnum abaque injuria." Government grants for lands bordering upon navigable waters extend only to high-water mark; 85 Fed. Rep. 45. One riparian owner cannot build out into the stream, so as to injure the land of another riparian owner, even when armed with a license granted under act of parliament; L. R. 1 App. Cas. 662. The owner of lands situated on the sea cannot maintain ejectment for that portion of a wharf constructed on his land, which extends below low-water mark; 53 Cal. 385. The owner of both sides of a stream above tide-water has a right to the ice formed between his boundaries; 14 Chic. Leg. News 83. The intervention of a public road between an estate and a river does not prevent the owner of the estate from being considered as the front or riparian proprietor, when nothing susceptible of private ownership exists between the road and river; 44 La. Ann. 1043. A riparian proprietor of land bordering upon a running stream has a right to the flow of its waters as a natural incident to his estate, and they cannot be lawfully diverted against his consent; 133 U. S. 541. As to riparian rights, see 10 L. R. A. 207, n.; 8 Kent [427]; RIVER; LAKES.

RIPTOWELL, or REAPTOWELL. A gratuity or reward given to tenants after they had reaped their lord's corn, or done other customary duties. Cowell.

RIPARIAN LAW. A code of laws of the Franks, who occupied the country upon the Rhine, the Meuse, and the Scheldt, who were collectively known by the name Ripurians, and their laws as Riparian law.

RISE. Used in the phrase "rising of the court" which has been held equivalent to "final adjournment" or "the last day of the term." 24 Am. & Eng. Encyc. 2nd ed., 983; 11 Neb. 165.

RISING OF THE COURT. See RISE.

RISK OF EMPLOYMENT. See ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

RISKS AND PERILS. In Insurance. Those causes against loss from which the insurer is to be protected in virtue of the contract for insurance.

The risk or peril in a life policy is death; under a fire policy, damage by fire; and under a marine policy, by perils of the seas, usually including fire; and under a policy upon subjects at risk in lake, river, or canal navigation, by perils of the same. See INSURABLE INTEREST; INSURANCE; POLICY; WARRANTY.

Under a marine insurance the risks are from a certain place to a certain other, or from one date to another. The perils usually insured against as "perils of the seas" are—fire, lightning, winds, waves, rocks, shoals, and collisions, and also the perils of hostile capture, piracy, theft, arrest, barratry, and jettisons. 1 Phill. Ins. § 1099. But a distinction is made between the extraordinary action of perils of the seas, for which underwriters are liable, and wear and tear and deterioration by decay, for which they are not liable; 1 Phill. Ins. § 1103. See PERILS OF THE SEA.

Perils of lakes, rivers, etc., are analogous to those of the seas; 1 Phill. Ins. § 1099, n.

Underwriters are not liable for loss occasioned by the gross misconduct of the assured or imputable to him; Biddle, Ins. 881; but if a vessel is seaworthy, with suitable officers and crew, underwriters are liable for loss though occasioned through the mistakes or want of assiduity and vigilance of the officers or men; 1 Phill. Ins. § 1049; Beach, Ins. 923. Underwriters are not answerable for loss directly attributable to the qualifications of the insured subject, independently of the specified risks; 1 Phillips, Ins. c. xiii. sect. v.; or for loss distinctly occasioned by the fraudulent or gross negligence of the assured.

Insurance against illegal risks—such as trading with an enemy, the slave-trade, piratical cruisers, and illegal kinds of business—is void; 1 Phill. Ins. §§ 210, 691. Policies usually contain express exceptions of some risks besides those impliedly excepted. These may be—in maritime insurance, contraband and illicit, interloping trade, violation of blockade, mobs and civil commotions; in fire policies, loss on jewelry, paintings, sculpture, by hazardous trades, etc.; in life policies, loss by suicide, risk in certain climates or localities, and in certain hazardous employments without express permission; 1 Phill. Ins. §§ 53, 63, 64. See LOSS; TOTAL LOSS; AVULSION; ASSUMED RISK; ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

RIVAGE. In French law, the shore, as of the sea. In English law, a toll anciently paid to the crown for the passage of boats or vessels on certain rivers. Cowell.

RIVER. A natural stream of water flowing betwixt banks or walls in a bed of considerable depth and width, being so called whether its current sets always one way or flows and reflows with the tide. Woolrych, Wat. 40; 16 N. H. 487.

A body of flowing water; a running stream of no specific dimensions, larger than a brook or rivulet, and pent on either side by walls or banks; 7 Ind. App. 809.

Rivers are either public or private. Public rivers are divided into navigable and non-navigable,—the distinction being that the former flow and reflow with the tide, while the latter do not. Both are navigable in the popular sense of the term; Ang. Tide-Wat. 74; 7 Pet. 824; 5 Pick. 199; 26 Wend. 404; 4 B. & C. 602.

At common law, the bed or soil of all rivers subject to the ebb and flow of the tide, to the extent of such ebb and flow, belongs to the crown; and the bed or soil of all rivers above the ebb and flow of the tide, or in which there is no tidal effect, belongs to the riparian proprietors, each owning to the centre or thread,—ad flum aquae, which see,—where the opposite banks belong to different persons; Ang. Tide-Wat. 20; Daves 149; 5 B. & Ald. 268. In this country the common law has been recognized as the law of many of the states,—the state succeeding to the right of the crown; 4 Pick. 268; 26 Wend. 404; 31 Me. 9; 1 Halst. 1; 2 Conn. 481; 2 Swan 9; 16 Ohio 540; 4 Wis. 486; 117 Mo. 33. See 146 U. S. 837. But in some states the common-law distinction founded on the tide is not recognized, and it is held that the ownership of the bed of soil of all rivers navigable for any useful purpose of trade or agriculture, whether tidal or fresh-water, is in the state; 2 Binn. 475; 14 S. & R. 71; 3 Ired. 277; 1 M'Cord 580; 3 Ia. 1; 29 Miss. 21; 11 Ala. 436; 71 Hun 153; 123 Pa. 191. See 153 U. S. 1. At common law, the ownership of the crown extends to high-water mark; Ang. Tide-Wat. 69; 3 B. & Ald. 907; and in several states this rule has been followed; 12 Barb. 616; 3 Zabr. 824; 7 Cush. 53; 7 Pet. 824; 3 How. 221; 25 Conn. 346; 44 N. J. Eq. 396; 124

U. S. 656; but in others it has been modified by extending the ownership of the riparian proprietor, subject to the servitudes of navigation and fishery, to low-water mark; 28 Pa. 206; 14 B. Monr. 367; 11 Ohio 188; 95 Ala. 116; see 123 Pa. 191; 84 Ky. 372; unless these decisions may be explained as applying to fresh water rivers; 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 224.

In Wisconsin the riparian ownership extends to the centre or thread of the stream, subject, if such stream be navigable, to the right of the public to its use as a public highway for the passage of vessels; 142 U. S. 254.

In Michigan, a grant of land bounded by a stream, whether navigable or not, carries with it the bed of the stream to the centre line thereof; 159 U. S. 87.

So in Ohio it was held that the ownership of a riparian proprietor to the middle of a navigable river does not carry with it the right to the exclusive use of the water over land ordinarily covered by water, but is subordinate to the paramount easement of navigation by the public, which includes the right to use such water for navigation and commerce, and such uses as may be reasonably incident thereto; Pollock v. Cleveland Ship Building Co., Ohio Sup. Ct., June 23, 1897. Among the rights of the public is that of mooring vessels for repairs and of putting in engine, boilers, and machinery, after such vessels have been launched; id. The right of the public does not extend to the use of lands not covered by water, and such use may be prevented by injunction, although the land may be unimproved and there is no present damage; id.

Upon the acquisition of territory by the United States, whether by cession from one of the states, or by treaty with a foreign country, or by discovery and settlement, the title and dominion over land under tide water passes to the United States for the benefit of the whole people and in trust for the several states; 152 U. S. 1.

In England, many rivers originally private have become public, as regards the right of navigation, either by immemorial use or by acts of parliament; Woolf. Wat. 40. In this country, all rivers, whether tidal or fresh-water, are, of common right, navigable highways, if naturally capable of use for the floating of vessels, boats, rafts, or even logs, or "whenever they are found of sufficient capacity to float the products of the mines, the forests, or the tillage of the country through which they flow, to market;" 8 Barb. 289; 31 Me. 9; 3 N. H. 821; 10 Ill. 351; 2 Swan 9; 2 Mich. 519; 5 Ind. 8. As to the navigability of rivers. See NAVIGABLE WATERS. The state has the right to improve all such rivers, and to regulate them by lawful enactments for the public good; 4 Rich. 69; 31 Me. 361; 5 Ind. 13; 29 Miss. 21. Any obstruction of them without legislative authority is a nuisance, and any persons having occasion to use the river may abate the same, or, if injured thereby, may receive his damages from its author; 28 Pa. 195; 4 Wisc. 454; 4 Cal. 180; 10 Mass. 70; 1 McCrary 281; 60 N. Y. 239; 53 Md. 422; 6 Mo. App. 266. See BRIDGE. One who seeks to abate an obstruction in a navigable stream and for an injunction must allege and show that the commerce for which he would utilize the stream is lawful; 50 Fed. Rep. 429. By the ordinance of 1787, art. 4, relating to the northwestern territory, it is provided that the navigable waters leading into the Mississippi and St. Lawrence, and the carrying-places between the same, shall be common highways and forever free; 29 Miss. 21; 2 Mich. 519.

Congress has absolute power over the navigable waters of the United States and may declare what constitutes obstruction thereto. The act of March 1, 1893, created a California debris commission and prohibited hydraulic mining "directly or indirectly injuring the navigability" of the Sacramento and San Joaquin river systems; the commission may, on petition, grant permission to mine. The act is intended to prohibit such mining until such permission is granted; 81 Fed. Rep. 243, affirmed in 49 U. S. App. 2; s. c. 83 Fed. Rep. 2. See 7 Yale L. J. 385.

To bring obstructions and nuisances in navigable waters within a state within the cognizance of the federal courts, there must be a federal statute directly applicable to such streams; 81 Fed. Rep. 658.

Rivers, when naturally unfit for public use, as above described, are called private rivers. They are the private property of the riparian proprietors, and cannot be appropriated to public use, as highways, by deepening or improving their channels, without compensation to their owners; 16 Ohio 540; 6 Barb. 265; 8 Pa. 879; 10 Me. 278; 1 McCord 580. And see WATER-COURSE.

A river, then, may be considered—as private in the case of shallow and obstructed streams; as private property, but subject to public use, when it can be navigated; and as public, both with regard to its use and property. Some rivers possess all these qualities. The Hudson is mentioned as an instance; in one part it is entirely private property; in another, the public have the use of it; and it is public property from the mouth as high up as the tide flows; 6 Barb. 265. See, generally, La. Civ. Code 444; Bac. Abr. Prerogatives (B 3); Jacobson, Sea Laws; 3 Kent 411; Woolf. Waters; Schultes, Aquatic Rights; Washb. R. P.; Cruise, Dig., Greenl. ed.; BOUNDARIES; FISHERY; RIPARIAN PROPRIETORS; POLLUTION.

In International Law. A river which is entirely within a state is part of its territory. Where a river forms a boundary between two states and flows to the ocean, it is "now generally considered that the right of navigation, for commercial purposes, is common to all the states inhabiting the different parts of its banks; but this is a right of innocent passage only, subject to the regulations of the abutting states. These rights have usually been adjusted by treaty; the Rhine is free in its whole navigable length, under the Congress of Vienna; and so of most of the other large rivers of Europe. In 1795, the free navigation of the Mississippi was secured to the United States by treaty. After much controversy, the St. Lawrence was, in 1871, stipulated to be free to the United States for the purposes of commerce, from the point where it ceased to be a boundary between it and Canada, to the sea, subject to the regulations of Great Britain or Canada, not inconsistent with such privilege. See 1 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 171.

Levees. The construction and maintenance of levees is an important subject of legislation in the states bordering on the Mississippi river and its tributaries. Such statutes usually provide for the construction of levees by some public authorities or under delegated power of eminent domain, and provide for a charge on the land benefited thereby for making and repairing the same. This tax is usually a lien on the land and applies to all lands lying within a certain specified distance of the Mississippi river. It has been held that such taxation is constitutional, and that the power, whether exercised for general or local purposes, belongs to the legislature and is not subject to interference from the court; 27 Miss. 200. The legislature has power to impose local taxation for such purposes, and laws imposing taxes upon certain districts, whether the citizens affected are of the same political division, subdivision, or district or not, are constitutional; 38 Miss. 632.

The building of the levees is a proper subject of legislation and a general tax may be levied therefor; 26 La. Ann. 564; 22 id. 58. In Louisiana, it has been made a criminal offence to cut levees; Laws 1875, 49. Crevasses in the district, do not release the owner of the land from the levee tax; there is in such case a greater necessity for its payment; 16 La. Ann. 440.

RIXA (Lat.). In Civil Law. A dispute; a quarrel. Dig. 48. 8. 17.

RIXATRIX (Lat.). A common scold.

ROAD. A passage through the country for the use of the people. 3 Yeates 421; and it is frequently used as a synonym of railroad; 46 N. J. L. 292; 33 Fed. Rep. 699; as when a charter power to take stock in companies for making "roads" to a city was held to authorize a subscription to the stock of a railroad; 181 U. S. 484.

A state statute imposing a duty of two days' labor in every year on each person for the purpose of keeping roads in repair is not unconstitutional; 81 Ga. 770; 36 N. E. Rep. (Ohio) 832. As to the constitutionality of an act authorizing the establishment of a private way over property of another, see EMINENT DOMAIN, where the cases are collected, and see also 4 Ore. 818, where such an act was held unconstitutional. See HIGHWAY; WAY; STREET; DEDICATION; EASEMENT.

In Maritime Law. An open passage of the sea, which, from the situation of the adjacent land and its own depth and width, affords a secure place for the common riding and anchoring of vessels. Hale, de Port. Mar. p. 2, c. 2. This word, however, does not appear to have a very definite meaning; 2 Chitty, Com. Law 4, 5. Often called "roadstead"; 2 Hugh. 17.

ROADBED, ROADWAY. The roadbed of a railroad "is the foundation upon which the superstructure of a railroad rests;" the roadway is the right of way which has been held to be the property liable to taxation; 32 Cal. 499, cited in 119 U. S. 413. See 25 Md. 353. The roadbed does not include ends of ties of unusual length; 60 Ark. 691. A space of 10 ft. between railroad tracks is not the roadbed; 81 S. W. Rep. (Mo.) 578.

ROBBATOR. A robber. Bract.

ROBBER. One who commits a robbery. One who feloniously and forcibly takes goods or money to any value from the person of another by violence or putting him in fear.

ROBBERY. In Criminal Law. The felonious and forcible taking from the person of another, goods or money to any value, by violence or putting him in fear. 4 Bla. Com. 243; Baldw. 103. See 12 Ga. 283; 33 Neb. 354; 2 N. Dak. 510; 29 N. E. Rep. (Ind.) 868.

"Whoever, by force and violence, or by putting in fear, shall feloniously take from the person or presence of another anything of value, shall be imprisoned not more than fifteen years." § 284 Federal Criminal Code. 258 U. S. 420.

Taking property from the presence of another feloniously and by putting him in fear is equivalent to taking it from his personal protection and is, in law, a taking from the person. Id.

In this offence the kind and value of the property taken is not material, but it must be of some value, however little, to the person robbed; 61 Ala. 287; 73 N. C. 89; 58 Mo. 581.

Robbery, by the common law, is larceny from the person, accompanied by violence or by putting in fear; and an indictment therefor must allege that the taking was from the person, and that it was by violence, or by putting in fear, in addition to the averments that are necessary in indictments for other larcenies; Jebb 62; 1 Leach 195; 7 Mass. 242; 17 id. 539; 8 Cush. 215.

By "taking from the person" is meant not only the immediate taking from his person, but also in his presence when it is done with violence and against his consent; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 539; 2 Russ. Cr. 61; 8 Wash. C. C. 209; 11 Humphr. 167; Whart. C. L. 847. The taking must be by violence or putting the owner in fear; but both these circumstances need not concur; for if a man should be knocked down, and then robbed while he is insensible, the offence is still a robbery; 4 Binn. 379. And if the party be put in fear by threats and then robbed, it is not necessary there should be any greater violence; 17 Mass. 539.

The violence or putting in fear must be at the time of the act or immediately preceding; 1 C. & P. 804. See 53 Kan. 824.

A person taking property from another under a bona fide claim of right, and with the purpose of applying it to the payment of a debt from the latter to himself, is not guilty of robbery, for in such case the animus furandi is lacking; 90 Ga. 701.

One who is present and aids and abets a robbery is punishable as a principal, though he receives none of the money, and the amount taken is immaterial; 104 Mo. 368.

ROCK GAS. See GAS.

ROM, RICHARD. See EJECTMENT; PLEDGES.

ROGATION DAYS. See ROGATION WEEK.

ROGATION WEEK. The second week before Whit Sunday, thus called from the three fasts observed therein, the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, called Rogation days, because of the extraordinary prayers then made for the fruits of the earth, or as a preparation for the devotion of Holy Thursday. R. & L. Dict. See GANG-WEEK; GRASS WEEK.

ROGATORY LETTERS. See LETTERS ROGATORY.

ROGUE. A French word, which in that language signifies proud, arrogant. In some of the ancient English statutes it means an idle sturdy beggar, which is its meaning in law. Rogues are usually punished as vagrants. Although the word rogue is a word of reproach, yet to charge one as a rogue is not actionable; 5 Binn. 219. See 2 Dev. 163; Hard. 529.

ROGUES' GALLERY. A collection of the photographs of criminals. English. See PRISONER.

ROLE D'EQUIPAGE. The list of a ship's crew; the muster roll.

ROLL. A schedule of parchment which may be turned up with the hand in the form of a pipe or tube. Jacob, Law Dict.; 2 Hun 502.

In early times, before paper came in common use, parchment was the substance employed for making records, and as the art of bookbinding was but little used, economy suggested as the most convenient mode the adding of sheet to sheet, as was found requisite, and they were tacked together in such a manner that the whole length might be wound up together in the form of spiral rolls. Rolls of the exchequer are kept in that court relating to the revenue. The ancient manuscript registers of the proceedings in parliament were called Rolls of Parliament. A Roll of the Temple is kept in each of the two temples, called the clerk's head roll, wherein every bench, barrister, and student is taxed yearly.

The records of a court or offices.

ROLL OF A MANOR. See COURT ROLLS; COPYHOLD.

ROLLING STOCK. Rolling stock has been held in some cases to be a fixture, so far as to pass under a mortgage of the realty; 25 Ill. 357; 12 Bush 233; 3 Dill. 412. Where essential to the operation of the road, it is held to pass under a mortgage of the railroad; 56 Me. 458; 18 Md. 493; 6 Wall. 142. A mortgage of a railroad afterwards to be built, and of the rolling stock appurtenant to such road, attaches to the rolling stock as soon as it is acquired; 28 How. 117; 6 Biss. 329; 11 Wall. 459; Jones, Railr. Sec. 147. It is not essential that the rolling stock should be especially mentioned in the mortgage; general words are enough. For instance, a mortgage of a line of a railroad "with all the revenue or tolls thereof" covers rolling stock; 18 Md. 183. See also 53 Ala. 237; 4 Biss. 85. See FUTURE ACQUIRED PROPERTY.

Rolling stock has been held to be subject to execution as a chattel; 180 Ind. 97; and to attachment; 140 Mass. 131; so, when not in use; 37 N. H. 410; but where a company is insolvent or the equipment is mortgaged, it has been held not subject to execution; 8 Grant, Cas. 384. It is held that it may be sold for taxes as personal property, notwithstanding a statute declaring it to be a fixture; 31 Wis. 44; and see 51 Ia. 184, 714. It is held to be a chattel in 29 N. J. 807, reversing 28 id. 377. The better opinion is said to be that it is personalty; 8 Wood, Ry. 1981, citing 39 Ia. 55; 58 Mo. 17; 54 N. Y. 815; 87 N. H. 410; 39 N. J. Eq. 811.

It is held that a mortgage of rolling stock should be recorded as a chattel mortgage; 39 N. J. Eq. 811; but it has also been held that chattel mortgage acts do not apply; 103 U. S. 77; 8 Dill. 412. The constitutions of some states provide that rolling stock shall be considered personal property and shall be liable to execution and sale. Such is the case in Arkansas, Illinois, Kentucky, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, South Dakota, Texas, Washington, and West Virginia.

Of late years railroad companies have secured large quantities of rolling stock on deferred periodical payments, commonly known as the "car trust" plan. The contracts in some instances are drawn as leases from the builder or owner to the railroad company. In other cases they take the form of conditional sales. The earliest car trust was created in Pennsylvania in 1868. It is probable that the form of a lease or hiring of the cars, with a reservation of title in the former owner, was rendered necessary in that state because of the well-established rule there that a reservation of title under a conditional sale of a chattel is void as against the vendee's creditors, when the vendee is in possession. See SALES. The weight of authority would seem to hold that such contracts, though drawn in the form of bailments, if the aggregate of all the instalments is really the purchase price and the contract gives the "bailee" an option to purchase when all the payments have been made, are, in legal effect, conditional sales. It was said in 93 U. S. 684, in holding such a contract to be a conditional sale: "Nor is the transaction changed by giving it the form of a lease. In determining the real character of a contract, courts will always look to its purpose rather than to the name given it by the parties." So in 54 Vt. 544, the "hire" of an organ was held to be a conditional sale. To the same effect is 102 U. S. 235. See id. 1. In 102 U. S. 1, the court considered it unnecessary to decide the question. In 3 Super. Ct. Rep. (Pa.) 149, a "lease" or purchase on the instalment plan was held to be a conditional sale. So of the sale of a clock upon weekly payments, the aggregate of which amounted to the price of the article; 186 Pa. 89; s. c. 27 L. R. A. 388; but see 115 Pa. 487. In 84 Fed. Rep. 582, it was held that whether a contract for the sale of fixed machinery was a bailment or a conditional sale depended upon the intent of the parties. The contract there was held a bailment.

Statutes have been passed in nearly all the states and territories providing that conditional sales or contracts of leasing or hiring of railroad equipment shall be valid if duly acknowledged and recorded, and the name of the vendor, etc., placed on both sides of each car. Most of these acts are substantially uniform in their language. There is some diversity among them as to the place of record, some specifying the county where the principal office of the vendee is, others the counties through which its line runs, and still others the office of the secretary of state. Many of these acts were passed through the instrumentality of Joseph I. Doran, Esq., in 1881 to 1883, and others were passed in 1891 and subsequently, by the efforts of the present editor. An existing statute in Utah covers the necessary ground for the protection of these contracts. No acts exist in California, Idaho, or Nevada.

The lien on, or title to, cars thus sold is not subordinate to the lien of the company's mortgage; 99 U. S. 256; even if the contract has not been recorded; 109 U. S. 1.

Contracts of this kind usually contain a clause that the vendor or lessor may retake the property on default in the payment of instalments. Statutes in some of the states forbid the retaking of chattels sold under the instalment plan except upon the condition of refunding the purchase-money paid, less a certain proportion to cover the depreciation. See 46 Ohio St. 480.

There is a conflict of authority as to the right of the vendor to collect unpaid purchase-money after retaking the property. Some cases hold that the retaking excludes further recovery; other cases hold that the remedies are not inconsistent. See 83 L. R. A. 435, where the cases are collected. The fact that the property has been destroyed after possession has passed to the conditional vendee or lessee does not relieve him from making the periodical payments; 107 N. C. 47; 60 Miss. 48; 68 Ill. 248; contra, 2 Tex. App. 153. See also 111 Mass. 355.

Usually a clause is inserted covering this ground, and the contract provides that the vendor, upon retaking, shall sell the property and credit the proceeds on the unpaid instalments, holding the vendee for the residue then remaining unpaid.

The usual lease notes or warrants given to cover the periodical payments have been held to be negotiable instruments; 186 U. S. 268.

A car trust association is an association of capitalists formed to buy and sell rolling stock, usually for a particular road. The members furnish the funds to buy the property and the association transfers it to the railroad company, usually through the intervention of a trustee, under a conditional sale (sometimes in the form of a lease), the purchase-money being payable in a series of years, by instalments, and the title to pass in the railroad company upon the payment of the final instalment. The trustee issues certificates to the members of the association indicating the amount of their investment. The railroad company pays the instalments with interest to the trustee, who distributes to the holders of the certificates. Such an association has been held to be a partnership; 140 U. S. 846; but in 29 Fed. Rep. 410, such an association was held to be an unincorporated association resembling those partnerships which are not dissolved by the death or bankruptcy of a member, or by the assignment of a member's interest, and such as are referred to in 102 U. S. 84; 114 id. 252. They are analogous to mining partnership; 23 Cal. 208. See PARTNERSHIP. They are said to be unincorporated joint stock associations with transferable shares; Foll. Contr. 222.

As to the status of car trust cars under railroad receiverships, see LEASE; MORTGAGE; RECEIVER; RECEIVERS' CERTIFICATES.

See a pamphlet by Davis & Browne, and a paper by the present editor in Am. Bar Assn. Reports (1895).

Cars of other companies in use on a railroad are materials furnished for its operation, and claims for their loss when destroyed are properly payable by the receivers as operating expenses; 88 Fed. Rep. 636.

A railroad company receiving the cars of other companies to be hauled in its trains is bound to inspect such cars before putting them on its trains, and is responsible for the consequence of defects in them which might have been discovered by a reasonable inspection; 157 U. S. 72.

See LEX RET SITAE.

ROLLING STOCK (OF RAILWAYS) PROTECTION ACT. The act of 35 & 36 Vict. c. 50, passed to protect the rolling stock of railways from distress or sale in certain cases.

ROLLS, MASTER OF THE. See MASTER OF THE ROLLS; JUDICATURE ACTS.

ROLLS OFFICE. See RECORD OFFICE.

ROLLS OFFICE OF THE CHANCERY. An office in Chancery Lane, London, which contains rolls and records of the high court of chancery, of which the master of the rolls is keeper.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHARITIES ACT. The stat. 23 & 24 Vict. c. 134, providing a method for enjoying estates given upon trust for Roman Catholics, but invalidated by reason of certain of the trusts being superstitious or otherwise illegal. 3 Steph. Com. 76. See SUPERSTITIOUS USES; CHARITIES.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH. The legal personality of the Roman Catholic Church, and its capacity to hold property in their insular possessions, is recognized; and the fact that such property was acquired from gifts, even of public funds, is held not to affect the absoluteness of its right. 212 U. S. 465; 210 U. S. 296. See PAPACY.

ROME PENNY, ROME SCOT, or ROME FEOH. See PETER PENCE.

ROME-PENNYING. See PETER-PENCE.

ROME-SCOT. See PETER-PENCE.

ROMNEY MARSH. A tract of land in the county of Kent, England, containing twenty-four thousand acres, governed by certain ancient and equitable laws of sewers, composed by Henry de Bathe, a venerable judge in the reign of king Henry III.; from which laws all commissioners of sewers in England may receive light and direction. 3 Steph. Com. 442; 3 Bla. Com. 73.

ROOD OF LAND. The fourth part of an acre.

ROOT. The part of a tree or plant under ground from which it draws most of its nourishment from the earth. See TREE.

In a figurative sense, root is used to signify the person from whom one or more others are descended. See CONSANGUINITY; LINE.

ROPEERS. "Ropers" are persons, who by improper inducements, induce people to gaming houses in order that they may lose their money. 11 R. (Ky.) 282.

ROSE-RIAL. See RIAL.

ROTA (Lat.). A court. A celebrated court of appeals at Rome, of which one judge must be a German, one a Frenchman, two Spaniards, and eight Italians. Encyc. Brit. Its decisions had great weight, but were not law, although judged by the law. There was also a celebrated rota at Genoa about the sixteenth century, or before, whose decisions in maritime matters form the first part of Straccha de Merc. See Ingersoll's Roccus.

ROTULI SCACCARI. The rolls of the Exchequer. English.

ROTURIER. In Old French Law. One not noble. Dict. de l'Acad. Franç. A free commoner; one who did not hold his land by homage and fealty, yet owed certain services. Howard, Dict. de Normandie.

ROUP. In Scotch Law. Sale by auction. Auction. Bell, Dict. Auction.

ROUT. A disturbance of the peace by persons assembled together with an intention to do a thing which if executed would have made them rioters, and actually making a motion towards the execution of their purpose. Hawk. Pl. C. 516.

It generally agrees in all particulars with a riot, except only in this: that it may be a complete offence without the execution of the intended enterprise; id. c. 65, s. 14; 1 Russ. Cr. 253; 4 Bla. Com. 140. Where a number of persons met, staked money, and agreed to engage in a prize-fight, it was held a rout; 2 Speers 599. Not less than three assembled persons are sufficient to constitute the offence; 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 1186. See RIOT.

ROUTE. See THROUGH ROUTE.

ROUTOUSLY. A technical word, properly used in indictments for a rout as descriptive of the offence. 2 Salk. 598.

ROYAL ASSENT. See LE ROI LE VEUT; VETO.

ROYAL BURGHES. Boroughs incorporated in Scotland by royal charter. Bell.

ROYAL COURTS OF JUSTICE. The buildings, together with all the additions thereto, erected under the statute 28 & 29 Vict. c. 42, 49.

ROYAL FISH. See FISH ROYAL.

ROYAL GRANTS. Conveyances of record in England. They are of two kinds: letters patent and letters close; 2 Bla. Com. 846. See PATENT.

ROYAL HIGHWAYS. See HIGHWAYS, ROYAL.

ROYAL HONORS. In diplomatic language, by this term is understood the rights enjoyed by every empire or kingdom in Europe, by the pope, the grand duchies of Germany, and the Swiss confederation, to precedence over all others who do not enjoy the same rank, with the exclusive right of sending to other states public ministers of the first rank, as ambassadors, together with other distinctive titles and ceremonies. Vattel, Law of Nat. b. 2, c. 3, § 88; Wheat. Int. Law pt. 2, c. 8, § 2.

ROYAL HORSE GUARDS. In England, a part of the King's body-guard. See HORSE GUARDS.

ROYAL MARRIAGES ACT. See MARRIAGES ACT, ROYAL.

ROYAL MINES. See MINES AND MINING.

ROYALTY. A payment reserved by the grantor of a patent, mining lease, etc., and payable proportionately to the use made of such right., 1 Ex. Div. 810. See PATENT, RENT, Kent and Royalty.

RUBRIC. The title or inscription of any law or statute; because the copyists formerly drew and painted the title of laws and statutes in red letters (rubro colore). Aylife, Pand. b. 1, t. 8; Dict. de Jur.

RUDENESS. An impolite action, contrary to the usual rules observed in society, committed by one person against another. This is a relative term, which it is difficult to define, and must be considered with reference to the station in life which the parties occupy; 2 Hagg. Eccl. 731. See BATTERY.

RULE. A regulation or formula to which conduct must be conformed. See GENERAL RULES.

An order or direction. See ORDER. To establish by direction; to determine; to decide.

RULE ABSOLUTE. If, upon the hearing of a rule to show cause, the cause shown should be decided insufficient, the rule is made absolute, i. e. the court makes final order for the party to perform the requirements of the rule. See RULE NISI.

RULE, CONSENT. See CONSENT RULE.

RULE OF COURSE. A rule which a court authorizes their officers to grant without formal application to a judge.

RULE OF COURT. An order made by a court having competent jurisdiction. Rules of court are either general or special; the former are the laws by which the practice of the court is governed; the latter are special orders made in particular cases.

Disobedience to these is punished by giving judgment against the disobedient party, or by attachment for contempt. See RULES OF PRACTICE; GENERAL ORDERS.

RULE DAY. The regularly appointed day on which to make orders to show cause returnable.

In the United States circuit court it is the first Monday of each month, on which subpoenas are to be made returnable, and answers and replications filed.

RULE DISCHARGED. A rule set aside, either on an application made for that purpose to the court in which the proceeding is pending, or to a court of appeal. 9 Am. & Eng. Encyc., 2nd ed., 466.

RULE OF LAW. A general principle of law, recognized as such by authorities. It is called a rule because in new cases it is a rule for their decision; it embraces particular cases within general principles; 1 Bla. Com. 44; Ram, Judgm. 30; 3 B. & Ad. 34; 1 B. & C. 86; 4 Maule & S. 348. See MAXIM.

RULE NISI. In Practice. A rule obtained on motion ex parte to show cause against the particular relief sought. Notice is served on the party against whom the rule is obtained, and the case is then heard like other motions, except that the party showing cause is entitled to open and reply. The rule is made absolute unless (nisi) good cause is shown against it; 3 Steph. Com. 680.

RULE, OFFICE. See RULE OF COURSE.

RULE TO PLEAD. A rule of court requiring defendant to plead within a given time, entered as of course by the plaintiff on filing his declaration, or thereafter. On defendant's failure to put in his plea accordingly, a judgment in the nature of a judgment by default may be entered against him. In England, under the common-law Procedure Act of 1852, the rule to plead is abolished, a notice to plead indorsed on the declaration being sufficient. The Judicature Act of 1875 allows the defendant eight days for his defence after the delivery of the statement of claim.

RULE OF THE ROAD. See NAVIGATION RULES; HIGHWAY; BICYCLES.

RULE OF 1793. Where a commerce which had previously been considered a nominal monopoly is thrown open, in time of war, to all nations, by a general regulation, neutrals have no right to avail themselves of the concession, and their entrance on such trade is a breach of the impartiality they are bound to observe. 2 Halleck, Int. L. 302.

RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE. See SHELLEY'S CASE, RULE IN.

RULE TO SHOW CAUSE. An order made by the court, in a particular case, upon motion of one of the parties calling upon the other to appear at a particular time before the court, to show cause, if any he have, why a certain thing should not be done.

This rule is granted generally upon the oath or affirmation of the applicant; but upon the hearing the evidence of competent witnesses must be given to support the rule, and the affidavit of the applicant is insufficient. See RULE ABSOLUTE; RULE NISI.

RULE, SIDE-BAR. See RULE OF COURSE.

RULE OF THE WAR OF 1756. A rule relating to neutrals, practically established in 1756, and universally promulgated, providing that "neutrals are not to carry on in times of war a trade which was interdicted to them in times of peace." Chitty, Law of Nat. 166; 2 C. Rob. 186; 4 id. App.; 1 Kent 82.

RULES. Certain limits without the actual walls of the prisons, where the prisoner, on proper security previously given to the proper authority, may reside. These limits are considered, for all legal and practical purposes, as merely a further extension of the prison walls. So used in America. See 3 Bibb 202. The rules or permission to reside without the prison may be obtained by any person not committed criminally; 3 Stra. 845; nor for contempt; id. 817; by satisfying the marshal or warden or other authority of the security with which he may grant such permission. See CROSE-RULES.

Proceedings in an action out of court, and in vacation time. See 13 Gratt. 812.

RULES OF PRACTICE. Certain orders made by the courts for the purpose of regulating the practice of members of the bar and others.

Every court of record has an inherent power to make rules for the transaction of its business; which rules they may from time to time change, alter, rescind, or repeal. While they are in force, they must be applied to all cases which fall within them; they can use no discretion, unless such discretion is authorized by the rules themselves. Rules of court cannot, of course, contravene the constitution or the law of the land; 3 Pick. 512; 2 Harr. & J. 79; 1 Pet. 604; 3 S. & R. 253. See RULE OF COURT; GENERAL ORDERS.

RULES OF PROCEDURE. "Rules of procedure" are rules made by any legislative body as to the mode and manner of conducting the business of the body. They are intended for the orderly and proper disposition of the matters before it. 50 S. W. 859.

RUM. See INTOXICATING LIQUOR.

RUMOR. A general public report of certain things, without any certainty as to their truth.

In general, rumor cannot be received in evidence; but when the question is whether such rumor existed, and not its truth or falsehood, then evidence of it may be given. See LIBEL; EVIDENCE.

RUMP PARLIAMENT. The remnant of the Long Parliament after the expulsion by Cromwell in 1648 of those who opposed his purposes. It was dissolved by Cromwell in 1653, but twice revived for brief sessions, ending finally in 1659. Webster.

RUN. A watercourse of a small size. 2 Bibb 354. The word is sometimes used interchangeably with creek. 7 Wheat. 162.

RUN. To take effect in point of place, as of a writ running in given localities; or in point of time, as of the running of the Statute of Limitations. R. & L. Dict.

To stroll without restraint or confinement; as, for an animal "to run at large." Anderson.

To pass, spread, communicate; as, in a statute providing for the payment of damages by a person who set a fire that "run upon the land" of another. Id.; 30 Conn. 306.

A covenant "runs with land" when the liability to perform it, or the right to take advantage of it, passes to the assignee or purchaser. Id.; 1 Sm. L. C. 137-228.

Warrants of commitment and indictment "run in the name" of a state when they bear upon their face the name of the proper state as the nominal actor or prosecutor. Id.

RUNCINUS (Lat.). A nag. 1 Thomas, Co. Litt. 471.

RUNNING ACCOUNT. An open account. See 2 Pars. Contr. 351; ACCOUNT; MERCHANTS' ACCOUNTS; LIMITATIONS.

RUNNING AT LARGE. A term applied to animals estray, wandering apparently without owner or keeper, and not confined to any certain place. The phrase has been judicially construed in a number of recent cases. In 50 Vt. 190, a hound, in close pursuit of a fox, and out of sight and hearing of its master, was held not to be within the meaning of a statute permitting any one to kill a dog "running at large off the premises of the owner or keeper, without a collar with the keeper's name on it." Animals escaping from the owner's premises cannot be said to be running at large; the phrase implies permission or assent, or at least some fault, on the owner's part; 21 Hun 249; but contra, 53 Ia. 632. See 52 Cal. 653; 23 Alb. L. J. 504. An animal running on the range where it was permitted to run by its owner has been held not an estray, especially where the owner was known to the person taking it up; 4 Oreg. 206; 27 Wisc. 423; 29 Ia. 487. See ESTRAY; POUND.

RUNNING DAYS. Days counted in succession, without any allowance for holidays. The term is used in settling lay-days or days of demurrage, which see.

RUNNING WITH THE LAND. A technical expression applied to covenants real which affect the land. See COVENANT.

RUNNING LANDS. In Scotch Law. Lands where the ridges of a field belong alternately to different proprietors. Bell, Dict.

RUNNING POLICY. One which contemplates successive insurance and provides that the object of the policy may be from time to time defined by additional statements or endorsements. Cal. Civ. Code § 2597.

It covers such goods, at such amounts of insurance, in such storehouses and places, and at such rates of premiums, as from time to time shall be agreed upon and indorsed on the policy or in a book attached thereto, the purpose being to obviate the necessity of executing a fresh policy for every transaction. Richards, Insur. Law, 3rd ed., 22; 169 N. Y. 143; 138 N. Y. 16.

RUNNING OF THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. A metaphorical expression, by which is meant that the time mentioned in the statute of limitations is considered as passing. See LIMITATIONS.

RUNNING SWITCH. A "running switch" is made by first starting the train with sufficient speed to give it momentum, and by uncoupling the engine and the car or cars, and turning the switch that led onto a parallel track, at the proper time, so that the engine would pass onto the parallel track; and by a quick throwing of the switch, the car that had been detached from the front of the engine would pass down the main line. 149 Ky. 55, 147 S. W. 942.

RURAL DEAN. Rural deans, or decani rurales, certainly existed during the Anglo-Saxon period. It was then their duty to exercise many of the functions subsequently exercised by the archdeacon. About the thirteenth century, the archdeacon took over most of the work of the rural deans, and comparatively little was heard of them until within the last hundred years. Now they form part of the machinery of every diocese. The preparation of children for confirmation is the most important part of their work. They are required also to execute all process and writs directed to them by the bishop, and to report to him on the lives of the clergy of the various parishes within the respective rural deaneries; but these latter duties are largely theoretical. Every archdeaconry is an aggregation of rural deaneries. Byrne. See RURAL DEANERY.

RURAL DEANERY. The circuit of the jurisdiction of a rural dean. Every diocese is divided into archdeaconries, each archdeaconry into rural deaneries, and each rural deanery into parishes. Abbott; Cowel. See RURAL DEAN.

RURAL SANITARY AUTHORITIES. See SANITARY AUTHORITIES.

RURAL SERVITUDE. See SERVITUDE.

RUSE DE GUERRE (Fr.). Literally, a trick in war. A stratagem. It is said to be lawful among belligerents, provided it does not involve treachery and falsehood. Grotius, Droit de la Guerre, liv. 3, c. 1, § 9.

RUSTICUM JUDICIUM. A rough judgment or decision, applied in maritime law when the blame for a collision is undiscoverable. 3 Kent 231.

RUTA (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name given to those things which are extracted or taken from land: as, sand, chalk, coal, and such other things. Pothier, Pand. l. 50.

RYOT. In India. A peasant, subject, or tenant of house or land. Whart. Dict.

S. C. Abbreviation for same case; select cases; or supreme court. Anderson.

S S. A collar formerly worn on state occasions by the Lord Chief Justice of England, and of the Common Pleas and the Lord Chief Baron—now only by the first named of these (q. v.).

SABBATH. A name sometimes used for Sunday (q. v.).

Sabbath and Sunday are used indiscriminately to denote the Christian Sabbath, Sunday; 64 N. C. 591.

SABBATH-BREAKING. The desecration of the Lord's day. 45 Md. 432. See SUNDAY.

SABBULONARIUM. A gravel pit, or liberty to dig gravel and sand; money paid for the same. Cowel.

SABINIANS. A sect of lawyers whose first chief was Atticus Capito, and the second Caelius Sabinus, from whom they derived their name. Clef des lois Rom.

SABLE. The heraldic term for black. It is called Saturn by those who blazon by planets, and Diamond by those who use the names of jewels. Engravers commonly represent it by numerous perpendicular and horizontal lines crossing each other. Whart. Law Lex.

SAC, SAK (Lat. saca or sacha). An ancient privilege, which a lord of a manor claimed to have in his court, of holding plea in causes of trespass arising among his tenants, and imposing fines touching the same.

SACABURTH, SACABERE (from sac, cause, and burh, pledge). He that is robbed and puts in surety to prosecute the felon with fresh suit. Britton, c. 15, 29; Bracton, l. 3, c. 32; Cowel.

SACCUS CUM BROCHIA. A service or tenure of sending a sack and a broach (pitcher) to the sovereign for the use of the army. Bract, l. 2, c. 16.

SACQUIER. In Maritime Law. The name of an ancient officer, whose business was to load and unload vessels laden with salt, corn, or fish, to prevent the ship's crew defrauding the merchant by false tale, or cheating him of his merchandise otherwise. Laws of Oleron, art. 11, published in an English translation in 1 Pet. Adm. xiv. See ARRAMEUR; STEVEDORE.

SACRAMENTALES (L. Lat. sacramentum, oath). Compurgatores, which see. Jurors. Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.

SACRAMENTUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A gage in money laid down in court by both parties that went to law, returned to him who had the verdict on his side, but forfeited by the party who was cast, to the exchequer, to be laid out in sacris rebus, and therefore so called. Varro, lib. 4. de Ling. Lat. c. 38.

An oath, as a very sacred thing. Ainsworth, Dict.; Vicat, Voc. Jur. Sacramentum Fidei. The oath of fealty. See FEALTY.

The oath taken by soldiers to be true to their general and country. Id.

SACRAMENTUM DECISIONIS (Lat.). The voluntary or decisive oath of the civil law, where one of the parties to a suit, not being able to prove his case, offers to refer the decision of the cause to the oath of his adversary, who is bound to accept or make the same offer on his part, or the whole is considered as confessed by him. 8 Bla. Com. 342.

SACRILEGE, SACRILEGIUM. The act of stealing, from the temples or churches dedicated to the worship of God, articles consecrated to divine uses. Ayliffe, Parerg. 476; Cowell. Also, the alienation to laymen of property given to pious uses. Par. Ant. 890.

SADISM. Active algolagnia or the gratification of sexual desire by inflicting pain. It is to be distinguished from masochism or passive algolagnia which is the gratification of the sexual instinct by suffering pain. In religion, Sadism is shown in religious sacrifices, persecutions, hell-fire doctrines, the puritanical suppression of harmless pleasures, and in many hymns that dwell on suffering, etc. Bridges, Outline Abn. Psych. 73, 83. See MASOCHISM.

SEEMEND. An umpire, arbitrator. Anc. Inst. Eng.

SEVITIA (Lat.). Cruelty. To constitute sevitia there must be such a degree of cruelty as to endanger the party's suffering bodily hurt. 1 Hagg. Cons. 35; 2 Maas. 150; 4 id. 587.

SAFE. (n). A place for keeping things in safety. Specifically, a strong and fireproof receptacle (as a movable chest of steel, etc., or a closet or vault of brickwork) for containing money, valuable papers, or the like. Also, a ventilated or refrigerated chest or closet for securing provisions from noxious animals or insects. Webster.

(adj.) Free from danger of any kind, as safe from enemies, safe from disease, safe from storms, safe from the malice of foes, etc. 14 Bush (Ky.) 590. See REASONABLY SAFE.

SAFE-CONDUCT. A written permission given by a belligerent government, or one of its naval or military commanders, enabling an enemy subject to go to a particular place for a particular object. Risley, Law of War 156.

According to common usage, the term passport is employed on ordinary occasions for the permission given to persons when there is no reason why they should not go where they please; and safe-conduct is the name given to the instrument which authorizes certain persons, as enemies, to go into places where they could not go without danger unless thus authorized by the government.

A safe-conduct is said to be a name given to an instrument which authorizes an enemy or an alien to go into places where he could not go without danger, or to carry on trade forbidden by the laws of war; it may cover either persons or things, while a passport usually is given to a friend and applies only to persons. 2 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 823.

They may be given for a certain time only and revoked for cause, the holder being allowed to withdraw in safety.

The grantor of the safe-conduct tacitly pledges himself to protect the holder of it and to punish any person subject to his command who may violate it. Should the holder be detained beyond the time limited, by illness or some cause over which he has no control, he should still be protected, but if he otherwise exceeds the limited time, he is subject to the ordinary rules of war or to penalties, if such are imposed by the law of the place; Risley, L. of War 156.

For a limited territory, they may be framed by a commander; but when general, they must proceed from the supreme authority.

The name of an instrument given to the captain or master of a ship to proceed on a particular voyage: it usually contains his name and residence, the name, description, and destination of the ship, with such other matters as the practice of the place requires. This document is indispensably necessary for the safety of every neutral ship.

The act of congress of April 30, 1790, s. 27, punishes the violation of any safe-conduct or passport granted under the authority of the United States, on conviction, with imprisonment, not exceeding three years, and a fine at the discretion of the court.

See PASSPORT; 18 Viner, Abr. 272.

SAFE DEPOSIT COMPANY. A company which maintains vaults for the deposit and safekeeping of valuables in which compartments or boxes are rented to customers who have exclusive access thereto, subject to the oversight and under the rules and regulations of the company. It was formerly the custom for banks to accept gratuitously the custody of boxes containing securities for their customers; but this custom has been discontinued since the establishment of companies making that their special business. The relation of the company to the depositor is rather that of bailor and bailee, though it has been said that there is a resemblance to the relation of landlord and tenant, but that it exists merely in form; 9 Harv. L. Rev. 181; but a case of joint renting, cited infra, seems to the contrary. The reasons given for the relation of bailor and bailee are that by analogy to the case of an agreement for board and lodging, there is no interest acquired by the depositor in the real estate, and the agreement of the company for safekeeping established the relation of bailor and bailee; id. 132. This view has been sustained in the courts; 123 N. Y. 57; 90 id. 4. In the latter case the plaintiff had an allotment of space in a storage house for the safekeeping of household furniture under an agreement that the same would be securely kept and guarded. The action was brought to recover damages for the loss of the property by theft committed by persons in charge of the building, and the relation of the parties was described by Earl, J., as "a species of bailment like that existing in the case of a depositor in a safe deposit company who hires a box for his valuables and keeps the key." In such case he says further, that the company, without special contract, would be held to at least ordinary care, the duty of which would arise from the nature of the business and the relation of the parties.

From this relation springs naturally the obligation and liability of the company, and where the contract was that the depositor was to "keep a constant and adequate guard and watch over and upon the safe," and the bonds were stolen, there being no evidence that the vault was broken or the lock tampered with, it was held to throw upon the company the burden of showing whether it was guilty of negligence, and that question was properly left to the jury; 85 Pa. 391.

Where property was taken from the safe under a search warrant against the depositor, the description in which did not actually correspond with the property taken, the company was held liable for not resisting so far as it was able to do, and contenting itself with a mere protest; 153 N. Y. 57. The burden of proof in actions against such companies for damages on account of negligence is, in accordance with the general rule in similar cases, upon the plaintiff unless, as in the Pennsylvania case above cited, there is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant which demands an explanation and a prima facie case is made by the bailor when he shows such loss or damage to the chattels as ordinarily does not happen if such care as the law requires has been exercised; Edw. Bailm. § 899; 14 Mo. App. 481; 46 N. Y. 490; 9 Harv. L. Rev. 134.

An important question arises as to the position and duty of the company where legal proceedings are taken against the property of the depositor, and the conclusion from an examination of the subject is thus stated: "The extent of their duty is reached in satisfying themselves beyond question that the process is legal and regular; and that, this being so, the company is exempt from all responsibility for the subsequent acts of the officer under it; . . . that the company cannot be subjected to garnishment or trustee process; that the only process by which property deposited with it can be reached is through seizure by the sheriff under direct attachment; also that the company is not liable for property of third persons taken from the safe of the debtor, either as his property or because confused with this property." 9 Harv. L. Rev. 135. That there can be no garnishment in such case would seem to arise from the principle that to be subjected to it, a bailee must have more than constructive possession; as, in the case of baggage in transportation, horses in a livery stable, etc.; Waples, Attachment § 458. The point was directly decided with respect to a safe deposit company in 6 Phila. 91; and as to a locked trunk deposited in a bank vault in 7 Cush. 487.

The property in the safe may be seized under a direct attachment; 67 Barb. 304; 123 N. Y. 57. The officer may be directed in the order of attachment to open the safe, and the company's officers may be required to give such assistance as will not lead to a breach of trust; 9 Harv. L. Rev. 139. It has been held that an officer may force the door of a warehouse if refused admittance by those in charge of it; 18 Vt. 186; and in the case of a safe deposit company the officers and representatives of the company were not allowed to be present at the time of the opening of the safe by the sheriff; 67 Barb. 304.

In case of a joint rental of a safe by two or more persons, they were treated as co-tenants of real estate, and a renewal of the lease obtained by one of the renters in his own name was held to inure to the benefit of the co-tenants; 40 N. Y. St. 813. Where one co-tenant abstracted, without authority, a stock certificate and transferred it to an innocent purchaser for value, it was held that it had not been intrusted to the possession of the wrongdoer either directly or by implication, and he was not authorized to remove it from the box and the transfer passed no title; 52 Fed. Rep. 520.

SAFE LOADING PLACE. A place where a vessel can be rendered safe for loading by reasonable measures of precaution. 14 Q. B. D. 105; 54 L. J. Q. B. 121.

SAFE PLACE DOCTRINE. In Mine. The duty to make safe the place where the miner is extracting coal, being a duty not fixed by law, but by the mining contract, or, in the absence of a contract, by the rule or custom in force in the mine at the time, it is possible for the respective duties of the miner and the mine operator to vary in different mines.

Generally speaking, however, the making safe of the miner's working place, i. e., the place where he is extracting coal, may be divided into three duties: (1) the duty of examining the roof and of determining when protection must be provided against possible falling of the roof, and whether ordinary props will be sufficient protection, or whether timbering is necessary; (2) the duty of placing the props in position, when ordinary props have been deemed insufficient protection. By "prop" is meant an upright post surmounted by a square block wedged between the top of the post and the roof. 161 Ky. 335, 170 S. W. 980.

SAFE FLEDGE. A surety given that a man shall appear upon a certain day. Bracton, l. 4, c. 1.

SAFEGUARD. A protection of the king to one who is a stranger, who fears violence from some of his subjects for seeking his right by course of law. Reg. Orig. 86.

Protection granted by an officer commanding belligerent forces, for persons or property within the limits of their commands, and against the operations of their own troops. 2 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 835.

SAFELY. "Safely and securely" in a declaration in bailment means with due care. 15 L. J. C. P. 182.

SAFETY APPLIANCE ACT. Act of March 2, 1893, c. 196, 27 Stat. 531, as amended by Act of March 2, 1903, c. 978, 32 Stat. 943. The act requires that all locomotives, cars, and similar vehicles used on any railway engaged in interstate commerce shall be equipped with certain designated safety appliances, regardless of whether such vehicles are used in moving intrastate or interstate traffic. 4 Michie, Carriers, 3450.

SAID. Before mentioned. In contracts and pleadings it is usual and proper, when it is desired to speak of a person or thing before mentioned, to designate them by the term said or afore-said, or by some similar term; otherwise the latter description will be ill for want of certainty. Com. Dig. Plead. (C. 18); Gould, Pl. § 68. Adopted in 28 Tex. App. 379.

The reference of the word said is to be determined, in any given case, by the sense. The relative same refers to the next antecedent, but in the interpretation of a written instrument, the word said does so only when the plain meaning requires it; 2 Kent 555; 10 Ind. 373. See 97 Ind. 503.

SAILING. It is sometimes important, in the construction of a charter party, or marine insurance policy, to know when a vessel commenced her voyage, and to this end to determine what constitutes a sailing. It has been held that complete readiness for the sea, with the intention of proceeding at once on the voyage, is sufficient, though head winds should prevent any actual progress; 20 Pick. 275; see 32 Fed. Rep. 843; but the word sail is held to be a technical word and to mean to start on a voyage; 34 L. J. C. P. 195; so a ship which drew out from its wharf and anchored in a river, whence it proceeded the next day, sailed on the latter day; [1898] 1 Q. B. 27. It has also been held that some measurable progress, though by tow-boat, is also necessary; 4 W. N. C. Pa. 415; See NAVIGATION, RULES OF.

If the vessel quits her moorings and removes, though only to a short distance, being perfectly ready to proceed upon her voyage, and is by some subsequent occurrence detained, that is, nevertheless, a sailing; 8 B. & Ad. 514. There can be no "sailing" without a clear intention on the part of the master to proceed directly on his voyage; [1898] 1 Q. B. 27. Moving from the wharf into the stream may be enough; id. See 37 Am. L. Reg. n. s. 201, an article by Erskine Hazard Dickinson.

As advanced freight is frequently made payable at or within a certain time after final sailing from the port of loading, there has been much discussion as to the meaning of both of these terms. In the leading English case, Parke, B., considered that final sailing "meant more than if the word sailing were used alone," that it had reference to the particular port of Cardiff, out of which the vessel sailed, meaning a final departure and being out of the limits of the artificial port, at sea, ready to proceed upon her voyage; 38 L. J. Ex. 169. Where the ship left the harbor to anchor in the roadstead and lie there until the crew should be completed, without the intention of returning to the harbor, it was held that she had not sailed; 24 L. J. Q. B. 840; so also where the master took the vessel out of the port and left her in the road under easy sailing, while he returned ashore to complete her papers; 28 id. 239. "Final sailing" I apprehend means getting clear of the port for the purpose of proceeding on the voyage; Lindley, L. J., in 9 Q. B. D. 679.

SAILING INSTRUCTIONS. In Maritime Law. Written or printed directions, delivered by the commanding officer of a convoy to the several masters of the ships under his care, by which they are enabled to understand and answer his signals, to know the place of rendezvous appointed for the fleet in case of dispersion by storm, by an enemy, or by any other accident.

Without sailing instructions no vessel can have the full protection and benefit of convoy. Marsh. Ins. 368.

SAILORS. Seamen; mariners. See SEAMEN; SHIPPING ARTICLES.

ST. MARTIN LE GRAND, COURT OF. An ancient court in London, of local importance, formerly held in the church from which it took its name.

SAIO. A tip-staff or sergeant-at-arms. Cowell. In Gothic Law. The ministerial officer of a court or magistrate, who brought parties into court, and executed the orders of his superior. Spelman thinks the word may be derived from the Sax. sagol, or saiol, a staff, giving it the sense of the modern tipstaff. Burrill.

SAISIE-ARRET. In French Law. An attachment of property in the hands of a third person.

SAISIE-EXECUTION. In French Law. A writ of execution by which the creditor places under the custody of the law the movables of his debtor, which are liable to seizure, in order that out of them he may obtain payment of the debt due by him. La. Code of Pract. art. 641; Dalloz, Dict. It is a writ very similar to the fieri facias of the common law.

SAISIE-FORAINNE. In French Law. A permission given by the proper judicial officer to authorize a creditor to seize the property of his debtor in the district which he inhabits. Dalloz, Dict. It has the effect of an attachment of property, which is applied to the payment of the debt due.

SAISIE-GAGERIE. In French Law. A conservatory act of execution, by which the owner or principal lessor of a house or farm causes the furniture of the house or farm leased, and on which he has a lien, to be seized, in order to obtain the rent due to him. It is similar to the distress of the common law. Dalloz, Dict.

SAISIE-IMMOBILIERE. In French Law. A writ by which the creditor puts in the custody of the law the immovables of his debtor, that out of the proceeds of their sale he may be paid his demand.

SALADIN'S TENTH. A tax imposed in England and France, in 1188, by Pope Innocent III., to raise a fund for the crusade undertaken by Richard I. of England and Philip Augustus of France, against Saladin, Sultan of Egypt, then going to besiege Jerusalem. Encyclo. Lond.; Whart.

The tax was one-tenth of all goods and chattels; it did not extend to land. Juries were employed to assist in the assessment. It was the first tax on personal property. Byrne.

SALARY. A reward or recompense for services performed.

It is usually applied to the reward paid to a public officer for the performance of his official duties. (Adopted in 24 Fla. 29.)

Salary is also applied to the reward paid for the performance of other services; but if it be not fixed for each year it is called honorarium. Pothier, Pand. According to M. Duvergier, the distinction between honorarium and salary is this. By the former is understood the reward given to the most elevated professions for services performed; and by the latter the price of hiring of domestic servants and workmen; 19 Toullier, n. 208, p. 292, note.

There is this difference between salary and price: the former is the reward paid for services or for the hire of things; the latter is the consideration paid for a thing sold; Lep. Elem. § 907. Salary seems to denote a higher degree of employment and is suggestive of a larger compensation for more important services than wages, which indicates inconsiderable pay; 69 Hun 291. See also 42 Alb. L. J. 332; 99 Pa. 542; 10 Md. 85, where salary is regarded as a per annum compensation, while wages are defined as compensation paid or to be paid by the day, week, etc.

SALE. An agreement by which one of two contracting parties, called the seller, gives a thing and passes the title to it, in exchange for a certain price in current money, to the other party, who is called the buyer or purchaser who, on his part, agrees to pay such price. 2 Kent 363; Pothier, Vente, n. 1.

Ordinarily a transfer of property for a fixed price in money or its equivalent. 110 U. S. 471; 47 Fed. Rep. 604.

An executed sale is both a contract and a conveyance.

This contract differs from a barter or exchange in this; that in the latter the price or consideration, instead of being paid in money, is paid in goods or merchandise susceptible of a valuation. 12 N. H. 390; 43 Ia. 194; 85 Ind. 409; 21 Vt. 520. See PRICE. It differs from accord and satisfaction, because in that contract the thing is given for the purpose of quieting a claim, and not for a price; and from bailment, because there the agreement is for the return of the subject-matter, in its original or an altered form, while in sale it is for the return of an equivalent in money; L. R. 3 P. C. 101; 81 Tex. 505; and see 100 Mass. 198; 79 Pa. 488; 39 Conn. 70; 55 Ill. 45; 150 U. S. 312.

An onerous gift, when the burden it imposes is the payment of a sum of money, is, when accepted, in the nature of a sale. When partition is made between two or more joint owners of a chattel, it would seem the contract is in the nature of a barter. See 11 Pick. 311.

An absolute sale is one made and completed without any condition whatever.

A conditional sale is one which depends for its validity upon the fulfillment of some condition.

A forced sale is one made without the consent of the owner of the property, by some officer appointed by law, as by a marshal or a sheriff, in obedience to the mandate of a competent tribunal. This sale has the effect to transfer all the rights the owner had in the property, but it does not, like a voluntary sale of personal property, guarantee a title to the thing sold; it merely transfers the rights of the person as whose property it has been seized. This kind of a sale is sometimes called a judicial sale.

A private sale is one made voluntarily, and not by auction.

A public sale is one made at auction to the highest bidder. Auction sales sometimes are voluntary, as when the owner chooses to sell his goods in this way, and then as between the seller and the buyer the usual rules relating to sales apply; or they are involuntary or forced, when the same rules do not apply.

A voluntary sale is one made freely without constraint by the owner of the thing sold: this is the common case of sales, and to this class the general rules of the law of sale apply.

A sale in gross is one without regard to quantity. 77 Va. 616.

An offer to sell imposes no obligations until accepted according to its terms; and an offer rejected cannot be afterward accepted; 119 U. S. 149. See OFFER.

Parties. As a general rule, all persons aut juris may be either buyers or sellers; Story, Sales § 9. See PARTIES. But no one can sell goods and convey a valid title to them unless he be owner or lawfully represent the owner; nemo dat quod non habet; Benj. Sales § 6; 2 Ad. & E. 495; 89 Ill. 540; 56 N. H. 158; 115 Mass. 129. And even an innocent purchaser from one not the owner, or his proper representative, acquires no valid title; 13 M. & W. 608; Benj. Sales § 6; 54 Ind. 141; 61 N. Y. 477.

An innocent purchaser of property from a bailee for hire acquires no title, and on disposing of the property is liable to the bailor for its value; 155 Pa. 208. But see MARKET OVERT. Another exception is that one not the owner, even a thief, may make a valid transfer of negotiable instruments, if they are in the usual state in which they commonly pass on delivery, provided the buyer has been guilty of no fraud in taking them. The bona fide holder of such negotiable instruments, and also of bank-notes, or money, lost or stolen, who has paid a valuable consideration or furnished an equivalent, can retain title against any former owner; even against one from whom such chattel has been stolen; 20 Pick. 515; 32 Vt. 125; 8 Conn. 336; 6 Tex. 515; 3 Burr. 1516; 5 B. & Ad. 909; 10 Ad. & E. 794; Benj. Sales (4th ed.) § 15. So (arguendo) of coupon bonds of the ordinary kind; 2 Wall. 110, disapproving Gill v. Cubit, 3 B. & C. 466; and approving Goodman & Harvey, 4 Ad. & El. 870; also a lost or stolen bill or note; arguendo in 101 U. S. 357; but otherwise of a lost or stolen bill of lading; id.

Where two parties in good faith buy the same property, the one first receiving possession is entitled to hold it; 47 Mo. App. 84.

There is a class of persons who are incapable of purchasing except sub modo, as infants and married women, insane persons and drunkards; Benj. Sales § 21; and another class, who, in consequence of their peculiar relation with regard to the owner of the thing sold, are totally incapable of becoming purchasers while that relation exists; such as trustees, guardians, assignees of insolvents, and, generally, all persons who, by their connection with the owner, or by being employed concerning his affairs, have acquired a knowledge of his property, as attorneys, conveyancers, and the like.

Mutual assent. The consent of the contracting parties, which is of the essence of a sale, consists in the agreement of the will of the seller to sell a certain thing to the buyer for a certain price, and in the will of the buyer to purchase the same thing for the same price. It must, therefore, be mutual, intended to bind both parties, and must co-exist at the same moment of time; Benj. Sales § 89. Thus, if a condition be affixed by the party to whom an offer is made, or a modification requested, this constitutes a rejection of the offer, and a new proposal, which must be accepted by the first proposer, otherwise there would be no assent by the parties to the same thing, at the same time; 4 De G. J. & S. 616; 84 U. C. Q. B. 410; 1 Bradw. 153. It follows that the assent must correspond with the offer in every particular; 8 C. E. Green 612; 14 Pet. 77; 43 Vt. 161; 118 Mass. 232.

Goods delivered to one for examination, with an option to buy, may be retaken by the owner before the exercise of the option; 4 Misc. Rep. 89.

When there has been a mistake made as to the article sold, there is no sale, because no mutual agreement upon the subject of the sale; as, for example, where a broker, who is the agent of both parties, sells an article and delivers to the seller a sold note describing the article sold as "St. Petersburg clean hemp," and a bought note to the buyer as "Riga Rhine hemp," there is no sale; 4 Q. B. 747; 112 Mass. 82; 49

N. Y. 588.

The consent is certain when the parties expressly declare it. This, in some cases, it is requisite should be in writing. By the statute of frauds no sale of goods, etc., for the price of £10 sterling and upwards, is valid, except the buyer shall accept part of the goods and actually receive the same, or give something in earnest to bind the bargain or in part payment, or some note or memorandum be made, signed by the party to be charged. This applies to both executed and executory contracts of sale.

The writing may be a letter. See LETTER; 4 Bingh. 658; 3 Metc. Mass. 207; 16 Me. 458.

See ACCEPTANCE; EARNEST; PART PAYMENT; PARTY TO BE CHARGED; GOODS, WARES, AND MERCHANDISE; NOTE OR MEMORANDUM; FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

When a party, by his acts, approves of what has been done, as if he knowingly uses goods which have been left at his house by another who intended to sell them, he will by that act confirm the sale.

One who has accepted and used goods cannot refuse to pay for them on the ground that he never ordered them; 152 U. S. 200.

Care must be taken to distinguish between an agreement to enter into a future contract of sale, which would be called an executory contract of sale, and pass no title until executed, and a present actual agreement to make a sale, which passes the title immediately.

The distinction between executed and executory contracts of sale depends upon the intention of the parties. When the vendor appropriates goods to the vendee, or, in other words, signifies his intention that the right of property shall pass at once, and the vendee assents, the law will give effect to the intention and the title will pass immediately; 104 Mass. 202; 54 N. Y. 167; 14 B. Monr. 413. This principle remains the same,—whether the goods are sold for cash or on credit, whether they are to be delivered forthwith or at a future time; whether they have yet to be weighed, measured, or set apart, or whether they are still unfinished; and by the terms of the agreement, the vendor has either to complete them, or in some way add to their value. These circumstances may be reason for supposing that the parties do not mean to pass the title, but will not defeat the intention to do so if it exists; Lectures on Contracts, by Prof. Hare; 1 Q. B. 399; 2 B. & C. 540; 102 Mass. 443; 13 Pick. 175; 6 Rand. 473.

The thing sold. There must be a thing which is the object of the sale; for if the thing sold at the time of the sale had ceased to exist, it is clear there can be no sale; Benj. Sales § 76; 5 Maule & S. 228; 11 Pet. 63; 20 Pick. 139; if, for example, you and I being in Philadelphia, I sell you my house in Cincinnati, and at the time of the sale it be burned down, it is manifest there was no sale as there was not a thing to be sold. Where the thing does not exist at the date of the contract the sale is void: as where, unknown to the parties, corn on a vessel not yet arrived, had, before the sale, been sold at an intermediate port; 3 H. L. C. 673. Where, after the sale, and without fault of the seller, the thing sold perished, the seller is released; 107 Mass. 514; 70 Me. 288; but it is otherwise if property has passed, though the goods were left in the seller's possession; 82 L. J. Q. B. 164. On a contract of future sale, if the subject-matter perishes before property has passed, the contract is avoided. It is evident, too, that no sale can be made of things not in commerce: as, the air, the water of the sea, and the like.

In general, there must be an agreement as to the specific goods which form the basis of the contract of sale; in other words, to make a perfect sale the parties must have agreed, the one to part with the title to a specific article, and the other to acquire such title.

In an unconditional contract of sale of specific goods, title passes at once, without delivery; 143 U. S. 834; 3 B. & C. 869, though it is said that no title vests in the buyer under a cash sale till the price is paid; 141 Mass. 483. Other cases hold that title passes, but the vendor has a lien for the price. Where no time is agreed upon for payment, it is presumed to be a cash sale; 58 Cal. 431; 111 Mass. 489; 76 Ill. 338. If the seller delivers possession upon the understanding of immediate payment, he may reclaim the goods in case he is not paid; 31 Wis. 176; 53 N. Y. 426; 18 Pa. 91.

Where goods sold have to be selected from a larger mass of uniform quality, some cases hold that title passes when the sale is made; 19 N. Y. 330; 137 Ill. 393; 39 Conn. 413; this is approved as the true rule in Hare, Contr. 425. Other cases hold that the property does not pass till the separation is complete; 11 Cush. 573; 50 Ind. 268; 9 Ore. 66. If the larger mass consists of units of varying quality or value, it is held that the property does not pass till selection; Tiff. Sales 95.

Where the seller is to do anything to the goods to put them in shape to deliver under the contract, this is a condition precedent to the vesting of the property in the buyer; Blackb. Sales 151; and so where anything is to be done for the purpose of ascertaining the price, as weighing, testing, etc.; id. But it is said that the latter rule is too broad and that the property is presumed to pass to the buyer; when weighing, testing, etc., alone remain to be done by the buyer; Graves, Title to Pers. Prop. 50. This presumption is stronger when the buyer receives possession; id.

Where a brewer's carter took orders for jars of beer, and delivered the jars to the customers' houses, making his collections the following week, there being no mark to show that any particular jar had been appropriated to any particular customer, until delivery, it was held that the sale was made at the customers' house; [1895] 2 Q. B. 229.

Where a contract provides for the sale, delivery, and setting up of machinery and for payment of part of the price on receipt of the bill of lading, and the residue at stated times thereafter, it was held that the delivery of the machinery completed the sale; 140 U. S. 43.

The thing sold must have an actual or potential existence and be specifically identified and capable of delivery; otherwise it is not strictly a sale, but an executory agreement; 2 Kent 468.

In the sale of non-existent chattel, at law, if the seller has a potential interest in it, the sale is a valid sale in presenti to take effect in futuro; but if the contract concerns a mere possibility or expectation, the transaction will not take effect unless the seller, after the chattel has come into existence, ratifies the contract, or the buyer, with his consent, gets possession; Graves, Title to Pers. Prop. 41. A potential interest would include the wool to grow upon a man's own sheep, but not on those of another. A sale of fish to be caught did not pass the property in them when caught; 108 Mass. 847. An assignment of future wages, there being no existing contract of service, is invalid; 1 Gray 105; otherwise if the wages are to accrue under an existing contract of service; 2 Gray 265.

One may sell a crop of hay to be grown on his field or wool from his sheep or the milk that his cows will yield the coming month, and the sale is valid; but he can only make a contract to sell, and not an actual sale, where the subject is something to be afterwards acquired, as the sale of any sheep, etc., or any goods, which he may attain the title to within the next six months; Benj. Sales § 79.

The statutes as to the assignment of an invention before patent embraces only perfected inventions. There can, properly speaking, be no assignment of an incomplete invention, although a contract to convey a future invention may be valid; Curt. Pat. § 160. A contract to transfer inventions not yet in being is not an assignment; 2 Rob. Pat. § 771.

But in equity the sale takes effect as soon as the chattel comes into existence, without further act of the parties; 10 H. L. C. 209. See 3 Pom. Eq. § 1288; but see 46 Am. Dec. 718; 78 id. 731.

As to mortgages or sales of unplanted crops, some cases hold them invalid; 9 Bush 318; others hold them valid to transfer a legal title; 51 Cal. 620; others hold them valid only to transfer an equitable title; 89 Ala. 403; 48 Miss. 513. See 4 Am. Dec. 559.

The delivery of crops to be grown is not essential to pass title, crops being an exception to the rule that no title can vest in property not in existence; 143 U. S. 840.

The sale of grain in an elevator, part of a mass, passes the title of the vendor without separation; 111 Mass. 490; 4 Ill. 314.

In case of unascertained goods, part of a larger quantity, the seller usually has the right to select the particular goods. The selection is fixed and title passes on delivery to the buyer, and, usually, upon the delivery to a carrier, unless the contract is for a delivery to the buyer at the place of destination.

It is held that where delivery is made to a carrier C. O. D. (q. v.), the property does not pass; 146 Mass. 68; 3 Colo. 176; 58 Vt. 140; contra, 130 Pa. 138; 73 Me. 278; 104 N. C. 25. When goods are delivered by the seller to the postoffice the title vests in the buyer; [1898] A. C. 204.

In shipbuilding contracts, where payments are to be made as the work progresses, property does not pass till the work is complete; 89 Mass. 397; 81 Pa. 18; 1 Houst. 506, 546. But in England it passes when the first instalment is paid, and subsequent additions to the work become the property of the buyer; 5 B. & Ald. 942; 4 Ad. & E. 448; so also in 1 Cliff. 370; 27 Ind. 522.

Where goods are delivered to a carrier, but the bill of lading is made out to the seller's order, the property does not pass to the buyer; 74 N. Y. 568; 84 Ala. 173; so where the seller ships the goods consigned to himself; 58 Ill. 494.

A buyer has a right to a reasonable opportunity to inspect the goods before he accepts them; Tiff. Sales 197.

When goods are to be paid for on delivery at a certain place, title will not pass till delivery; 153 Pa. 440; 89 id. 147; 113 Mass. 891.

The price. To constitute a sale, there must be a price agreed upon. The presumption is that where the price is not definitely ascertained, the title remains in the vendor until a computation has been made; Blackb. Sales 122; 24 N. H. 336; 11 Cush. 573; 78 Ga. 66. But this may be rebutted by proof that the parties intended to have the right of property vest in the purchaser at once; 39 Conn. 413; 53 Ga. 638; 19 N. Y. 330. Upon the maxim id. certum est quod reddi certum potest, a sale may be valid although it is agreed that the price for the thing sold shall be determined by a third person; 4 Pick. 179. See 10 Bingh. 382, 487; 11 Ired. 166. A contract of sale, is valid though no time of payment is agreed on, the law implying payment on delivery; 96 Mich. 175.

The price must be an actual or serious price, with an intention on the part of the seller to require its payment; if, therefore, one should sell a thing to another, and by the same agreement he should release the buyer from the payment, this would not be a sale, but a gift; because in that case the buyer never agreed to pay any price, the same agreement by which the title to the thing is passed to him discharging him from all obligations to pay for it. As to the quantum of the price, that is altogether immaterial unless there has been fraud in the transaction. The price must be certain or determined; but it is sufficiently certain if, as before observed, it be left to the determination of a third person; 4 Pick. 179. And an agreement to pay for goods what they are worth is sufficiently certain; Coxe N. J. 261. The title to property may pass to the vendee without fixing an absolute price, if the circumstances attending the transaction show the same to be the intention of the parties; 83 Ala. 221; 100 N. C. 59.

If the passing of property is made to depend upon doing some act as a condition, such as paying the price, the property remains in the seller, though possession may be in the buyer. Apart from statute, the buyer, in most states, takes no title which can be reached by creditors or which he can transfer even to a bona fide purchaser, except subject to the seller's rights; 118 U. S. 663; though in Pennsylvania the rule is otherwise, and also in Illinois, Kentucky, and Maryland. In Pennsylvania transactions which are in legal effect conditional sales on the instalment plan, have been sustained when drawn in the language of bailments with an option of purchase, but the rule there seems uncertain.

The buyer in conditional sales ordinarily acquires an interest which he may sell or which may be attached; and may maintain trover if his possession is wrongfully invaded. The seller may mortgage his interest and it is subject to attachment by his creditors.

Upon breach of condition, the seller may retake or replevin the goods or sue to recover their value. In some states, in a suit to recover their value, he need not allow for payments on account; and if he reclaim the goods, the buyer is not entitled to recover instalments paid; 89 Ill. 233; 7 Daly 297; in others, the buyer is held to be entitled to an account for instalments paid; 23 Mich. 260; 81 Ga. 230; 25 Minn. 530. In some states by statute he must repay the instalments less a proportion for wear and use. An action will not lie for the residue of the purchase-money after the properties have been retaken by the vendor; 43 Minn. 409.

Where there is a contract for leasing property with an option of buying it, with a provision allowing its return to the seller, upon such return of the property, equity will decree a return of the money paid on account of its purchase, less the amount of damages to the property and reasonable pay therefor; 142 U. S. 313. The cases are collected in 82 L. R. A. 455.

Statutes exist in many states which provide that conditional sales of chattels with a reservation of title in the vendor are void as against third parties purchasing from the vendee or against his creditors, unless recorded. In nearly all the states there are similar statutes relating specially to the conditional sale of railroad rolling stock. See ROLLING STOCK.

A common transaction is the hire of furniture and other like chattels, on the instalment plan, called hire-purchase in England, by which "an intending purchaser of goods is put into immediate possession thereof and agrees to pay a fixed sum by fixed periodical instalments; the amount payable for each instalment is expressly declared to be nothing more than hire-money for the use of the goods during the period intervening between two consecutive instalments, and the lender agrees that on a certain number of instalments, making up the total sum, being paid, the hirer shall become the owner of the goods. On default in the payment of any instalment, power is reserved to the lender to resume possession of the goods." Law Mag. & Rev., Feb. 1896.

Where one had hired a piano on this plan and after paying some instalments on it, pledged it to a third party, against whom the lender brought suit, the house of lords sustained the lender's title; 11 L. T. R. 448.

A contract for the hire-purchase of a chattel, the title to pass when the last instalment is paid, is a conditional sale; 85 Ga. 741; a. c. 9 L. R. A. 373; 46 Ill. 47; the court will look to the purpose of the contract rather than to the name given to it; 93 U. S. 664; contra, 115 Pa. 487, where the cases are somewhat at variance with other decisions, due to the necessity of sustaining conditional sales, held invalid in that state, by calling them bailments. See ROLLING STOCK.

A conditional vendee under an installment purchase contract cannot return the goods when not fully paid for and escape liability for the future instalments; 53 Conn. 4.

Sale to arrive. A sale of goods to arrive per Argo, or on arrival per Argo, is construed to be a sale of goods subject to a double condition precedent: that the ship arrives and the goods are on board; 5 M. & W. 639; Ry. & M. 406. In such case, title to the goods does not pass till their arrival; 16 N. Y. 597.

Sale for illegal purpose. A sale of goods for the purpose of smuggling is invalid; 8 Term 454; but not when a foreigner sold the goods abroad having no concern in the smuggling; 1 Cowp. 84. See 50 N. H. 253. The mere knowledge of the vendor that the goods sold would be used for an illegal purpose does not render the sale illegal; 50 N. H. 253; 82 Vt. 110; 8 Cliff. 494. See Benj. Sales § 511, n.

Where a buyer is insolvent and has no intention to pay for goods, the sale may be avoided by the seller; 98 U. S. 631; 87 N. Y. 1; but the mere knowledge on the buyer's part that he will be unable to pay for them, will not alone form a fraudulent intent; Tiedm. Sales § 170; there must be other facts of a suspicious nature, such as re-selling them at a reduced price; id. In Pennsylvania, it is not enough to show that the buyer was insolvent and did not intend to pay for the goods; some artifices must be shown; 21 Pa. 367.

A Massachusetts act of 1884 makes it a crime for any one to sell any property under representation that anything other than what is specifically stated to be the subject of the sale is to be delivered, etc., as a part of the transaction. In a case under this act it appeared that a retail dealer in tobacco offered to each purchaser a selection of a photograph among a number exposed for his choice. A conviction under this act was set aside upon the ground that what was sold in this case was specifically understood to be the subject of the sale. In a case under a like act in New York, the buyer purchased coffee and received a present as a part of the transaction. It appeared that the presents were lying in full view of the purchasers who could make their choice if they bought as much as two pounds of coffee. The act was held to be unconstitutional; 100 N. Y. 389. A Maryland act was held to be unconstitutional only so far as related to transactions which were dependent upon chance; 74 Md. 563. See LOTTERY.

A New York act (1898) provides that a seller who publicly advertises statements with respect to quantity, quality, value, price, method of production, or manufacture, which are untrue or calculated to mislead, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. See DECRET; MISREPRESENTATION.

Real estate. The above rules apply to sales of personal property. The sale of real estate is governed by other rules. When a contract has been entered into for the sale of lands, the legal estate in such lands still remains vested in the vendor, and it does not become vested in the vendee until he shall have received a lawful deed of conveyance from the vendor to him; and the only remedy of the purchaser at law is to bring an action on the contract and recover pecuniary damages for a breach of the contract. In equity, however, after a contract for the sale, the lands are considered as belonging to the purchaser, and the court will enforce his rights by a decree for a specific performance; and the seller will be entitled to the purchase-money; Wms. R. P. 127. See SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

In general, the seller of real estate does not guarantee the title; and if it be desired that he should, this must be done by inserting a warranty to that effect.

Section 8 of the statute of frauds provides that no interest in land shall be created unless by deed or note in writing signed by the party or his agent, authorized by writing, or by act of operation of law.

The question whether sales of standing timber involves any interest in land has been much mooted. The majority of cases seem to support the following propositions: 1. Where the vendor has expressly stipulated that the trees may remain standing on the land a given number of years if the purchaser elects. Here, as they derive more or less growth and increase from the soil, there is some reason to hold that the sale involves an interest in land. It has in fact been considered a sale, not only of the trees as they then are, but as they will be at the end of the stipulated period with all the additions to them subsequently acquired by the soil. See 6 Seld. 114; 50 Barb. 302; 57 id. 243; 45 N. H. 818; 40 id. 804. 2. Where the trees are to stand for an indefinite time and to be severed solely at the pleasure of the buyer, the statute of frauds requires a written agreement. See 37 Vt. 157; 43 id. 809.

See ACCEPTANCE; CONTRACT; DELIVERY; PARTIES; STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU; WARRANTY; EARNEST; FRAUDS; STATUTE OF CONSIDERATION; PRICE; GOODS; WARES; AND MERCHANDISE; NOTE OR MEMORANDUM; SAMPLE; MORTGAGE; ROLLING STOCK; TRADING STAMPS; OPENING BIDDINGS.

Under the civil law, in a contract of sale the seller was not bound to make the buyer absolute master (dominus) of the thing sold, as he would have been in a stipulation. What he was bound to do was this: 1. To deliver the thing itself (præstare, tradere), to give free and undisturbed possession of it (possessorem vacuum tradere), and to give lawful possession of it (præstare licere habere). 2. If the buyer was disturbed in his possession by the real owner (evictio), to recompense him for what was lost. 3. To secure the buyer against secret faults; if such faults were discovered, either compensation might be claimed by an actio æstimatoria, reducing the price to a greater or less amount, according as the seller had or had not knowledge of the defect, or at the option of the buyer, the contract might be rescinded by an action actio redhibitoria, and the thing returned (facere ut rursus habeat venditor quod habuerat). Just. Inst., 8th ed. 365.

Sale and Barter—Distinguished. To sell property is, in the strict signification of the word "sell," to transfer it from one to another, in consideration of a price paid or agreed to be paid in current money. A "sale" differs from a "barter" in this, that in the latter, the consideration instead of being paid in money, is paid in goods or merchandise susceptible of a valuation. 12 Bush (Ky.) 241. See CASH; FORCED SALE; SOLD OR REMOVED FOR SALE.

SALE ON APPROVAL. See SALE.

SALE-NOTE. A memorandum given by a broker to a seller or buyer of goods, stating the fact that certain goods have been sold by him on account of a person called the seller to another person called the buyer. Sale-notes are also called bought and sold notes. See BOUGHT NOTE.

SALE OR RETURN. When goods are sent from a manufacturer or wholesale dealer to a retail trader, in the hope that he may purchase them, with the understanding that what he may choose to take he shall have as on a contract of sale, and what he does not take he will retain as a consignee for the owner, the goods are said to have been sent on sale and return.

The goods taken by the receiver as on sale will be considered as sold, and the title to them is vested in the receiver of them; the goods he does not buy are considered as a deposit in the hands of the receiver of them, and the title is in the person who sent them. 1 Bell, Com. 268.

Contracts of sale or return exist where the privilege of purchase or return is not dependent upon the character or quality of the property sold, but rests entirely upon the option of the purchaser to retain or return; and the title passes to the purchaser subject to his option to return the property; 150 U. S. 312; upon return the title reverts (a condition subsequent); Tiff. Sales 93.

SALESMAN. One who in addition to procuring orders for weather strips, also supervised their being placed in position, held to be a salesman, his principal business being that of procuring orders. 180 Fed. 498. See TRAVELING SALESMAN, MERCHANT AND SALESMAN.

SALFORD HUNDRED COURT OF RECORD. An inferior and local court of record having jurisdiction, if the cause of action arise wholly or in part within the Hundred of Salford. Its jurisdiction and procedure correspond to those of a county court. Byrne.

SALIC OR SALIQUE LAW. The name of a code of laws, so called from the Salians, a people of Germany who settled in Gaul under their king Pharamond.

The most remarkable law of this code is that which regards succession. De terra vero salica nulla portio hereditatis transit in mulierem, sed hoc virilis sexus acquirit; hoc est, filii in ipsa hereditate succedunt: no part of the salique land passes to women, but the men alone are capable of taking; that is, the sons succeed to the inheritance. This has always excluded women from the throne of France.

SALINE LAND. Land containing salt deposits. Stand. Dict. See 221 U. S. 452 for construction of § 8 of the Utah Enabling Act concerning saline lands.

SALISBURY COURT. See PRIVILEGED PLACES.

SALMANNUS. In the Law of the Salian Franks of the 5th century. A person, later (A. D. 1108) named the salmannus—the salesman—was a third person who was called in to aid in completing the transfer of property in certain cases. The donor handed to him a symbolic staff which he in due season handed over in solemn form to the donee. 12 Harv. L. R. 445-6.

SALOON. A place of refreshment. 26 Mich. 325. An apartment for a specified public use. 45 N. W. Rep. (Ia.) 408; 20 Nev. 282. In common parlance, the word is used to designate a place where intoxicating liquors are sold, and this restricted meaning may be given to saloons, where the context or other circumstances requires it; 13 Neb. 434; 40 Mich. 401; 105 Mass. 40; but it is held that it does not necessarily import a place where liquors are sold; 26 Mich. 323; 23 Tex. App. 384. The word has a much broader meaning than dram shop. To constitute a saloon it is not necessary that ardent spirits should be offered for sale and that it should be a business requiring a license under the revenue laws of the state; 50 Ark. 561. See LIQUOR LAWS.

SALOON KEEPER. Insurance. The inhibition in a policy refers only to the personal occupation of the deceased at the time of his death, and although a person was the owner of a half interest in a saloon, but did not render any personal service therein for six months prior to his death, he was not the "keeper" of the "saloon." 110 Ky. 26, 60 S. W. 850.

SALT. In an insurance policy salt does not include saltpetre. 1 Park. 245.

SALUTE. A coin made by Henry V., after his conquests in France.

In the army and navy an honor paid to a distinguished personage, when troops or squadrons meet, when officers are buried, or to celebrate an event or show respect to a flag and on many other ceremonial occasions. Cent. Dict.

Upon the arrival of a man of war in a foreign port the salutes and other ceremonials toward the port and its authorities are prescribed in full detail by the naval regulations. A ship of war entering a harbor or passing by a port or castle should pay the first salute except when the sov-foreign or his ambassador is on board, in which case the salute should be made first on the shore; Woodley, Introd. Int. Law, 4th ed. § 88.

No salute is to be fired in honor of any nation, or official of any nation not formally recognized by the United States; Snow, Lect. Int. Law 70. See 3 Phill. Int. Law.

SALVAGE. In Maritime Law. A compensation given by the maritime law for service rendered in saving property or rescuing it from impending peril on the sea or wrecked on the coast of the sea, or, in the United States, on a public navigable river or lake, where interstate or foreign commerce is carried on. 1 Sumn. 210, 418; 13 How. 468; 1 Blatchf. 420; 5 McLean 359.

The property saved. The only proper subjects of salvage are vessels or ships used for the purpose of being navigated, and goods which at one time formed the cargoes of such vessels, whether found on board, or drifting, or cast on shore; [1897] A. C. 347. It has been held that there can be no salvage against a floating dry dock intended to be permanently moored to the shore; 119 U. S. 625; nor against coal barges on the Mississippi river, which were mere boxes without tackle, apparel, furniture, master, or crew, and which were sold with the coal or broken up for old lumber; 46 Fed. Rep. 204; nor a floating structure intended to be moored alongside a wharf for carts containing refuse to drive over it to a dumping boat; 38 Fed. Rep. 158; nor a pile-driving machine erected on a floating platform; 69 Fed. Rep. 1005; nor a gas-float fifty feet long by twenty wide moored in a river to give light to vessels; [1897] A. C. 337; as to rafts of timber, quære; see id.

When a ship was almost becalmed on the high seas, a floating chest was found and with but little trouble taken on board. It contained seventy doubloons. It was held that the finders were not entitled to the whole property, though there were no marks of ownership, but should be compensated by a moiety as for salvage services. The other moiety was directed to be paid into court; Fed. Cas. 6620. Passengers' lives may be the subject of salvage services, by statute. See 53 Alb. L. J. 404.

A person who offers useful services to a vessel in distress without any previous contract, is a salvor; 24 U. S. App. 559.

Salvage, after actual compensation for the services rendered, is a gratuity for the benefit of commerce, as an encouragement for like services and efforts; no amount of reward to owners and machinery will so stimulate efforts to save life and property as will moderate awards to master and crew who are the effective agents to set the machinery in motion; 13 U. S. App. 662.

"Salvage consists (1) of an adequate compensation for the actual outlay of labor and expense made in the enterprise; and (2) of the reward as bounty allowed from motives of public policy, as a means of encouraging such exertions. In determining the amount of an award the leading considerations are: the degree of danger from which the rescue is made; value of the property saved; risk to the salvors; the value of property risked by salvors and the dangers to which it was exposed; the skill shown and the time and labor spent." 23 U. S. App. 435.

Moral considerations and questions of policy enter largely into salvage cases. 2 Hagg. 8.

The peril. In order to found a title to salvage, the peril from which property was saved must be real, not speculative merely; 1 Cra. 1; 1 Ben. Adm. 166; but it need not be such that escape from it by any other means than by the aid of the salvors was impossible. It is sufficient that the peril was something extraordinary, something differing in kind and degree from the ordinary perils of navigation; 1 Curt. C. C. 233; 2 id. 350. See 9 C. C. App. 292; 40 Fed. Rep. 909; 41 id. 103. All services rendered at sea to a vessel in distress are salvage services; 1 W. Rob. 174; 8 id. 71. But the peril must be present and pending, not future, contingent, and conjectural; 1 Sumn. 216; 3 Hagg. Adm. 844. It may arise from the sea, rocks, fire, pirates, or enemies; 1 Cra. 1; see 22 Ct. Cls. 408; or from the sickness or death of the crew or master; 1 Curt. C. C. 376; 2 Wall. Jr. 59; 1 Swab. 84.

The saving. In order to give a right to salvage, the property must be effectually saved; it must be brought to some port of safety, and it must be there in a state capable of being restored to the owner, before the service can be deemed completed; 1 Sumn. 417; 1 W. Rob. 329, 406; 35 Fed. Rep. 796; 37 id. 661. The salvage services must be performed by persons not bound by their legal duty to render them; 1 Hagg. Adm. 227; 2 Spinks, Adm. 253. The property must be saved by the instrumentality of the asserted salvors, or their services must contribute in some certain degree to save it; 4 Wash. C. C. 651; Ole. 402; though, if the services were rendered on the request of the master or owner, the salvor is entitled to salvage though the services were slight and the property was saved mainly by a providential act; 5 McLean 359; 1 Newb. 130; 2 W. Rob. 91; Bee 90.

Towage services are sometimes the subject of compensation as salvage. Mere expediting the voyage of a vessel, by towing, is not salvage; but salvage was allowed in the case of a steamship who had broken her main shaft, but could sail fairly well, the weather also being favorable, in which condition she was towed ninety miles; 1 Spinks, A. & E. 169, said to be the extreme case; Kennedy, Civil Salvage 22; courts are liberal to such claims in respect of the amount of danger necessary to render towage a salvage source; id.

The place. In England it has been held that the services must be rendered on the high seas, or, at least, extra corpus comitatus, in order to give the admiralty court jurisdiction to decree salvage; but in this country it is held that the district courts of the United States have jurisdiction to decree salvage for services rendered on tide waters and on the lakes or rivers where interstate or foreign commerce is carried on, although infra corpus comitatus; 12 How. 468; 1 Blatchf. 420; 5 McLean 359.

The amount. Some foreign states have fixed by law the amount or proportion to be paid for salvage services; but in England and the United States no such rule has been established. In these countries the amount rests in the sound discretion of the court awarding the salvage, upon a full consideration of all the facts of the case. It generally far exceeds a mere remuneration pro opere et labore, the excess being intended, upon principles of sound policy, not only as a reward to the particular salvor, but also as an inducement to others to render like services; 2 Cra. 240; 1 C. Rob. 312, n.; 3 id. 333; 3 Hagg. Adm. 95. But it is equally the policy of the law not to provoke the salvor's appetite of avarice, nor encourage his exorbitant demands, nor teach him to stand ready to devour what the ocean has spared; Gilp. 75. Adequate rewards encourage the tendering and acceptance of salvage services; exorbitant demands discourage their acceptance and tend to augment the risk and loss of vessels in distress. 7 Notes of Cas. 579. Salvage viewed as a reward is not properly the subject of a binding contract in advance. Courts of admiralty fully examine into the circumstances of the service in the interest of the property saved, and award no more than a reasonable sum, and are not bound by the amount agreed on beforehand; 45 Fed. Rep. 933. But a salvage agreement for services to be performed on the high seas will not be set aside merely because only one of the contracting parties was at a disadvantage. But, if in addition to that circumstance, the sum required by the intending salvor appears to the court exorbitant, the agreement will be set aside as inequitable; [1891] P. 175. The amount is determined by a consideration of the peril to which the property was exposed, the value saved, the risk to life or property incurred by the salvors, their skill, the extent of labor or time employed, and the extent of the necessity that may exist in any particular locality to encourage salvage services; 3 Hagg. Adm. 121; 1 Gall. 133; 1 Sumn. 413; 2 Sprague 102. An ancient rule of the admiralty allowed the salvors one-half of the property saved, when it was absolutely derelict or abandoned; but that rule has been latterly distinctly repudiated by the high court of admiralty and our supreme court, and the reward in cases of derelict is now governed by the same principles as in other salvage cases; 20 E. L. & E. 607; 4 Notes of Cas. 144; 19 How. 161. While there is no rule of giving salvors of a derelict a moiety, or other specific proportion of the value of the property saved, and the award is to be assessed as in other cases of salvage, still there are usually present three special elements which tend to increase the award: the high degree of danger to which the property is exposed; the difficulty of approaching a derelict vessel without any aid in boarding her; and the necessity of supplying men to steer her; [1897] Pr. Div. 50. But it is usual to give half of the value, and even seven-eighths have been given. See 2 Blatch. 323.

Risking life to save the lives of others is an ingredient in salvage service which will enhance the salvage upon the property saved; Davis 61; 3 Hagg. Eccl. 84. No salvage was formerly due for saving life merely, unaccompanied by any saving of property; 1 W. Rob. 330; unless it was the life of a slave; Bee 226, 290. But the saving of life in addition to property was held to increase the award of salvage on the property; Br. & L. 344. By statute 17 & 18 Vict. salvage was extended to the saving of life and the award therefor was given priority over other salvage. If the vessel is not of large enough value to pay the award, it is payable out of the Mercantile Marine Fund.

"It is the value of the property which is restored to the owner that is to be considered, and of which a proportion is to be awarded as salvage in salvage cases, and not the original value imperilled. The exact value of the property saved, when large, is but a minor element in computing salvage, and as it increases, the rate per cent. given is rapidly reduced." 13 U. S. App. 662.

Where part of a cargo saved consists of specie, it must bear its share of the common burden; 86 Fed. Rep. 840; up to the time when it was removed, but not of the expense of getting the ship afloat after the specie was removed; 62 id. 104. There is no distinction in the proportion of salvage charges against different parts of a cargo; 4 Asp. 885.

The fact that a vessel receives injuries in the course of salvage operations will tend to reduce the amount of compensation; 83 Fed. Rep. 715.

A salvage award will not be set aside as too large, unless so grossly excessive as to shock the conscience of the appellate court; 82 Fed. Rep. 751.

The property saved. Salvage is properly a charge apportionable upon all the interests and property at risk in the voyage which derive any benefit from the salvage service; 1 Stor. 469. Qui sentit commodum sentire debet et onus. It follows that salvage expenses incurred in saving ship, cargo, and freight in one common and continuous service are apportionable upon them all, according to their respective values; but expenses incurred for any one interest separately, or any two interests only, are chargeable wholly to it or to them; 2 W. Rob. 315; 7 E. & B. 528; 2 Pick. 1; 11 id. 60; 4 Whart. 301; 5 Du. 310. Goods of the government pay the same rate as if owned by individuals; 3 Sumn. 308; Edw. Adm. 79; but not the mails; Marv. Salv. 132. But, it is said, no proceedings in rem can be instituted against public ships or stores on them, or against property of the state on a private ship; though the question is not always raised, and the British Admiralty usually appeals and submits to the judgment of the court in the case of claims for saving public stores, and foreign governments have sometimes requested the British Admiralty to award as an arbitrator in respect of their property when saved; Kennedy, Civil Salvage 61. See 5 P. D. 197, where the subject was reviewed. Vessels of war belonging to a foreign neutral power cannot be arrested in our ports for salvage; 7 Cra. 116.

Salvage is not allowed on the clothing left by the master and crew on board the vessel which they abandon, but this should be returned free of charge; Ware 378; or for saving from a wreck bills of exchange or other evidences of debt, or documents of title; Daves 20.

The wearing apparel of passengers is not liable for salvage services; L. R. 3 A. & E. 490; this extends only to apparel with the usual changes for the voyage and not to trunks in the hold; 36 Fed. Rep. 703.

Wreck was formerly limited to those portions of ship or cargo which are stranded. But by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, it includes jetsam and derelict, and, in salvage law, it includes any part of a ship or cargo aground or afloat; Kennedy, Civil Salvage 53.

The right to salvage for saving life depends upon something—ship, cargo, or freight—having been preserved; 8 P. D. 117; and such salvage can be recovered only against the party to whom the property belonged; 15 P. D. 146; i. e. from the ship if the cargo was lost; or from the cargo, if the ship was lost. The value of the property saved is the limit of recovery; 2 P. D. 157. Life salvors may claim against the property saved, although its preservation was not due to salvage services; 2 P. D. 145. Taking passengers from a burning vessel at sea is not the subject of salvage under the British act; L. R. 3 A. & A. 487.

The liability to pay salvage is not confined to the actual legal owners of the property saved, but extends to those who have an interest in the property, and whose interests have been saved by the placing of the property itself in security; 15 Prob. Div. 142.

A tug being partly in fault in colliding with a schooner, is not entitled to salvage for towing the schooner into port; 52 Fed. Rep. 323.

Bar to salvage claim. An express explicit agreement, in distinct terms, to pay at all events, whether the property shall be saved or not, a sum certain, or a reasonable sum, for work, labor, and the hire of a vessel in attempting to save the property, is inconsistent with a claim for salvage; and when such agreement is pleaded in bar and proved, any claim for salvage will be disallowed; 2 Curt. C. C. 350; 2 W. Rob. 177. See 123 U. S. 40. An agreement fairly made and fully understood by the salvors, to perform a salvage service for a stipulated sum or proportion to be paid in the event of a successful saving, does not alter the nature of the service as a salvage service, but fixes the amount of compensation. But such an agreement will not be binding upon the master or owner of the property unless the court can clearly see that no advantage has been taken of the party's situation, and that the rate of compensation agreed upon is just and reasonable; 1 Stor. 323; 1 Sumn. 207; 1 Blackf. 414. A custom in any particular trade that vessels shall assist each other without claiming salvage is legal, and a bar to a demand for salvage in all cases where it properly applies; 1 W. Rob. 440. See supra.

Forfeiture or denial of salvage. Embezzlement of any of the goods saved works a forfeiture of the salvage of the guilty party; Ware 880; 1 Sumn. 828; and, in general, fraud, negligence, or carelessness in saving or preserving the property, or any gross misconduct on the part of the salvors in connection with the property saved, will work a total forfeiture of the salvage, or a diminution of the amount; 2 Cra. 240; 1 W. Rob. 497; 3 id. 123; 2 E. L. & E. 554; 6 Wheat. 152; 6

Salvors rescuing a derelict property are bound to care for its preservation while they retain possession; 64 Fed. Rep. 202.

Distribution. The distribution of salvage among the salvors, like the amount, rests in the sound discretion of the court. In general, all persons, not under a pre-existing obligation of duty to render assistance, who have contributed by their exertions to save the property, and who have not forfeited their rights by their misconduct, are entitled to share in the salvage, as well those who remain on board the salvor vessel in the discharge of their duty, but are ready and willing to engage in the salvage enterprise, as those who go on board and navigate the wreck; Ware 483; 2 Dods. 132; 2 W. Rob. 115; 2 Cra. 240. The apportionment between the owners and crew of the salvor ship depends upon the peculiar circumstances of each case: such as, the character, size, value, and detention of the vessel, its exposure to peril, and like considerations, and the number, labor, exposure, and hazard of the crew. In ordinary cases, the more usual proportion allowed the owners of a salvor sail-vessel is one-third; 2 Cra. 240; 1 Sumn. 425; 3 id. 579. The owner of a steam-vessel, if of considerable value, is often allowed a larger proportion; Marv. Wreck & Salv. 247. The master's share is usually double that of the mate, and the mate's double that of a seaman, and the share of those who navigate the derelict into port, or do the labor, double that of those who remain on board the salvor vessel. But these proportions are often varied according to the circumstances, so as to reward superior zeal and energy and discourage indifference and selfishness; 3 Hagg. Adm. 121. See Abb. Shipp., 13th ed. 1021.

In marine insurance, the salvage is to be accounted for by the assured to underwriters in an adjustment of a total or salvage loss, or assigned to the underwriters by abandonment or otherwise; 2 Phill. Ins. § 1726. And so, also, the remnant of the subject insured or of the subject pledged in bottomry, and (if there be such) in that of a fire insurance, and of the interest in the life of a debtor (if so stipulated in this case), is to be brought into the settlement for the loss in like manner; 2 Dutch. 541; 15 Ohio 81; 2 N. Y. 235; 4 La. 289; 2 Sumn. 157.

The liability to pay salvage is not confined to the actual legal owners of the property saved, but it extends to all those who have an interest in the property and whose interests have been saved; 15 Prob. Div. 142.

Provision is made in R. S. § 4652 for salvage for the recapture of vessels or other property captured by any force hostile to the United States, before the capture. See the next titles; WRECK; RECAPTURE.

SALVAGE CHARGES. In Insurance. All those costs, expenses, and charges necessarily incurred in and about the saving and preservation of the property imperilled, and which, if the property be insured, are eventually borne by the underwriters. Stevens, Av. c. 2, § 1.

SALVAGE CORPS. In Insurance. A corps controlled and paid by insurance companies to attend fires and protect property. 151 Ky. 644, 152 S. W. 799.

SALVAGE LOSS. That kind of loss which it is presumed would, but for certain services rendered and exertions made, have become a total loss. It also means, among underwriters and average-adjusters, a mode of settling a loss, under a policy, in cases where the goods have been necessarily sold at a port short of the port of destination, in consequence of the perils insured against. In such cases, though the property be not abandoned to the underwriter, the principle of abandonment is assumed in the adjustment of the loss. The underwriter pays a total loss. The net proceeds of the sale of the goods, after deducting all the expenses, are retained by the assured, and he credits the underwriter with the amount; 2 Phill. Ins. § 1480.

SALVOR. In Maritime Law. A person who saves property or rescues it from impending peril on the sea or when wrecked on the coast of the sea, or, in the United States, on a public navigable river or lake where interstate commerce is carried on, and who is under no pre-existing contract or obligation of duty by his relation to the property to render such services. 1 Hagg. Adm. 236; 1 Curt. C. C. 378.

In general the crew cannot claim as salvors of their own ship or cargo, they being under a pre-existing obligation of duty to be vigilant to avoid the danger, and when in it to exert themselves to rescue or save the property, in consideration of their wages merely; 1 Hagg. Adm. 226; 2 Mas. C. C. 319. But if their connection with the ship be dissolved, as by a capture, or the ship or cargo be voluntarily abandoned by order of the master, sine spe revertendi aut recuperandi, such abandonment taking place bona fide and without coercion on their part, and for the purpose of saving life, their contract is put an end to, and they may subsequently become salvors; 16 Jur. 572; 3 Sumn. 270; 2 Cra. 240; Daves 121. A passenger; 3 B. & P. 612, n.; 1 W. N. C. (Pa.) iv. 48 Fed. Rep. 479; 33 id. 684; a pilot; 10 Pet. 108; Gilp. 65; Lloyd's agent; 8 W. Rob. 181; an agent; [1892] Prob. 366; official persons; 3 Wash. C. C. 587; 1 C. Rob. 46; officers and crews of naval vessels; 2 Wall. Jr. 67; 1 Hagg. Adm. 158; 15 Pet. 518; coast guards; Bened. Adm. § 300 a; may all become salvors, and, as such, be entitled to salvage for performing services in saving property, when such services are not within or exceed the line of their proper official duties. But it is said that neither crew, pilot, ship's agent, nor public servants can, under ordinary circumstances, be salvors; Kennedy, Civil Salvage 25; nor can passengers; 2 Hagg. 3.

The fact that a part owner in a salvaging ship also has an interest in the saved property, will not prevent him from sharing in the salvage; 51 Fed. Rep. 916. An incorporated wrecking and salvage company may be granted salvage awards as liberally as natural persons so engaged; 40 Fed. Rep. 301.

The finders of a derelict (that is, a ship or goods at sea abandoned by the master and crew without the hope or intention of returning and resuming the possession) who take actual possession with an intention and with the means of saving it, acquire a right of possession which they can maintain against all the world, even the true owner, and become bound to preserve the property with good faith and bring it to a place of safety for the owner's use. They are not bound to part with the possession until their salvage is paid, or the property is taken into the custody of the law preparatory to the amount of salvage being legally ascertained; Davies 20; Ole. 462; Ware 339. If they cannot with their own force convey the property to a place of safety without imminent risk of a total or material loss, they cannot, consistently with their obligations to the owner, refuse the assistance of other persons proffering their aid, nor exclude them from rendering it under the pretext that they are the finders and have thus gained the right to the exclusive possession. But if third persons unjustifiably intrude themselves, their services will inure to the benefit of the original salvors; 1 Doda. 414; 3 Hagg. Adm. 156; Ole. 77. See SALVAGE.

If a first set of salvors fall into distress, and are assisted by a second or third set, the first or second do not lose their claim to salvage, unless they voluntarily and without fraud or coercion abandon the enterprise, but they all share together according to their respective merits; 1 Sumn. 400; 1 W. Rob. 406; 2 id. 70. When a vessel stands by and renders services to another, upon request, even though no benefit result from her doing so, she is entitled to salvage; 8 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 203. In cases of ships stranded or in distress, not derelicts, salvors do not acquire an exclusive possession as against the owner, the master, or his agent. While the master continues on board, he is entitled to retain the command and control of the ship and cargo and to direct the labor. The salvors are assistants and laborers under him; and they have no right to prevent other persons from rendering assistance, if the master wishes such aid; 3 Hagg. Adm. 383; 2 W. Rob. 307; 2 E. L. & E. 351. When the ship has been relieved from its peril, salvors forfeit no right and impair no remedy by leaving the ship; 1 Hagg. Adm. 156; 1 Newb. 275. Their remedy to recover salvage is by libel or suit in the district court of the United States, sitting as a court of admiralty.

SALVUS PLEGIUS. A safe pledge; called, also, "certus plegius," a sure pledge. Bract. 160 b.

SAME. Same does not always mean identical. It frequently means of the kind or species, not the specific thing. 40 Ia. 487, 493. See Stroud, Dict.

In the expression "deliver policies and receive premiums on the same," means them — the policies. Anderson; 40 Iowa 493.

Same Offense. In the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution, an offense which is the same in law and in fact. Id.; 1 Hughes 560.

Same Property. The tenant of a stock farm was to draw out the "same property" he put into the business. Held, that the same description of stock, of equivalent value, was meant. Id.; 66 Ill. 99.

Same v. Same. The same plaintiff against the same defendant; the same case as first cited. Id.

SAMPLE. A small quantity of any commodity or merchandise, exhibited as a specimen of a larger quantity called the bulk.

A part shown as a specimen. 33 Gratt. 909.

When a sale is made by sample, the vendor warrants the quality of the bulk to be equal to that of the sample; Benj. Sales § 648; and if it afterwards turn out that the bulk does not correspond with the sample, the purchaser is not, in general, bound to take the property on a compensation being made to him for the difference; 1 Camp. 113. See 4 Camp. 22; 5 Johns. 395; 13 Mass. 139; 3 Rawle 37; 14 M. & W. 651. It is held that the vendor does not warrant goods, as fit for a particular purpose; 37 S. C. 7.

To constitute a sale by "sample," the contract must be made solely with reference to the sample; 13 Mass. 139; 40 N. Y. 113. Not every sale where a sample is shown is a sale by sample; there must be an understanding, expressed or implied, that the sale is by sample; 10 Wall. 383; 19 Md. 157. The mere exhibition of a sample is but a representation that it has been fairly taken from the full; 5 N. Y. 73. In Pennsylvania it has been held that in the absence of fraud or representation as to the quality, a sale by sample is not in itself a warranty of the quality of the goods, but simply a guaranty that the goods shall be similar in kind and merchantable; 63 Pa. 819; but the rule was changed by statute in 1887, the decision having been unsatisfactory to the profession and the public.

Although goods sold by sample are not in general deemed to be sold with an implied warranty that they were merchantable, the facts and circumstances may justify the inference that this implied warranty is superadded to the contract; L. R. 4 Ex. 49. If a manufacturer agrees to furnish goods according to sample, the sample is to be considered as if free from any secret defect of manufacture not discoverable on inspection, and unknown to both parties; L. R. 7 C. P. 438; but if the sale is made by a merchant, who is not a manufacturer, there is no implied warranty against secret defects; 7 Allen 29. It is an implied condition in a sale by sample that the buyer shall have a fair opportunity of comparing the bulk with the sample, and an improper refusal by the vendor to allow this will justify the buyer in rejecting the contract; 1 B. & C. 1. See Benj. Sales § 649.

SAN SALVADOR. A republic of Central America. The president is elected for four years and has a ministry. The national assembly is elected for two years by universal suffrage. There is a high court and a court of appeal. The code of laws is adopted from the Spanish and Napoleonic Codes.

SANCTION. That part of a law which inflicts a penalty for its violation or bestows a reward for its observance. Sanctions are of two kinds,—those which redress civil injuries, called civil sanctions, and those which punish crimes, called penal sanctions. 1 Hoffm. Leg. Outl. 279; Ruth. Inst. b. 2, c. 6, s. 6; Toull. tit. pré. 86; 1 Bla. Com. 56. See LAW.

SANCTUARY. A place of refuge, where the process of the law cannot be executed.

Sanctuaries may be divided into religious and civil. The former were very common in Europe,—religious houses affording protection from arrest to all persons, whether accused of crime or pursued for debt. This kind was never known in the United States, and was abolished in England by statute 21 Jac. I. c. 28.

Civil sanctuary, or that protection which is afforded to a man by his own house, was always respected in this country. The house protects the owner from the service of all civil process in the first instance, but not if he is once lawfully arrested and takes refuge in his own house. See DOOR; HOUSE; ARREST.

No place affords protection from arrest in criminal cases: a man may, therefore, be arrested in his own house in such cases, and the doors may be broken for the purpose of making the arrest. See ARREST.

SANE MENTIS. Of sound mind. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 7, § 1.

SANE. Whole; sound; in healthful state. It is applicable equally to the mind and to the body. 5 N. J. L. 661.

SANE MEMORY. That understanding which enables a man to make contracts and his will, and to perform such other acts as are authorized by law. See LUNACY; MEMORY; NON COMPOS MENTIS.

SANG, SANC. Blood. These words are nearly obsolete.

SANQUINEM EMERE. A redemption by villains, of their blood or tenure, in order to become freemen.

SANGUIS. The right or power which the chief lord of the fee had to judge and determine cases where blood was shed. Mon. Ang. t. i. 1021.

SANIS. A kind of punishment among the Greeks; inflicted by binding the malefactor fast to a piece of wood. Encyc. Lond.

SANITARY AUTHORITIES. Persons having jurisdiction over their respective districts in regard to sewerage, drainage, supply of water, prevention of nuisances, etc. See HEALTH; QUARANTINE.

Sanitary authorities also have jurisdiction in matters coming under the head of "local government." Urban sanitary authorities are the corporations or the district councils which respectively have jurisdiction in boroughs, towns, and urban districts. Rural sanitary authorities are the rural district councils which have jurisdiction in poor law parishes and unions not being within an urban district. A port sanitary authority is one having jurisdiction over a port. London is subject to special acts. Byrne.

SANITY. The state of a person who has a sound understanding; the reverse of insanity.

The sanity of an individual is always presumed; 5 Johns. 144; 1 Pet. 163; 1 Hen. & M. 476; 4 Wash. C. C. 262. See INSANITY.

SANS CECQUE. The same as Abaque hoc, which see.

SANS FRAIS. Without expense.

SANS IMPEACHMENT DE WASTE. Without impeachment of waste. Litt. § 152.

SANS NOMBRE (Fr. without number). In English Law. A term used in relation to the right of putting animals on a common. The term common sans nombre does not mean that the beasts are to be innumerable, but only indefinite, not certain; Willis 227; but they are limited to the commoner's own commonable cattle, levant et couchant, upon his lands, or as many cattle as the land of the commoner can keep and maintain in winter. 5 Term 48; 1 Wms. Saund. 28, n. 4.

SANS PLUS (L. Fr.). Without more; without further words.

SANS RECOURS (Fr. without recourse). Words which are sometimes added to an indorsement by the indorsee to avoid incurring any liability. 7 Taunt. 160; 3 Cra. 193; 7 Id. 159; 12 Mass. 172; 14 S. & R. 325. See INDORSEMENT.

SANS WASTE (L. Fr.). Without waste.

SASINE. In Scotch Law. The ceremony of the symbolical tradition of land, answering to livery of sasine of the English law. 4 Kent 459.

SATISDATIO (Lat. satis, and dare). In Civil Law. Security given by a party to an action to pay what might be adjudged against him. It is a satisfactory security in opposition to a naked security or promise. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; 3 Bla. Com. 291.

SATISFACTION (Lat. satis, enough, facio, to do, to make). In Practice. An entry made on the record, by which a party in whose favor a judgment was rendered declares that he has been satisfied and paid.

In many states provision is made by statute, requiring the mortgagee to discharge a mortgage upon the record, by entering satisfaction in the margin, or by separate instrument, to be recorded on the margin. The refusal or neglect to enter satisfaction after payment and demand renders the mortgagee liable to an action after the time given him by the respective statutes for doing the same has elapsed, and subjects him to the payment of damages, and, in some cases, treble costs. In Indiana and New York, the register or recorder of deeds may himself discharge the mortgage upon the record on the exhibition of a certificate of payment and satisfaction signed by the mortgagee or his representatives, and attached to the mortgage, which shall be recorded. See MORTGAGE. As to accord and satisfaction, see ACCORD.

In Equity. The donation of a thing, with the intention, expressed or implied, that such donation is to be an extinguishment of some existing right or claim in the donee. See LEGACY; CUMULATIVE LEGACY.

SATISFACTION, CONTRACTS TO. A term used to express a class of contracts in which one party agrees to perform his promise to the satisfaction of the other. The cases have been recently classified by an able writer (Prof. Lawson, in 46 Cent. L. J. 860) as follows:—1. Where the fancy, taste, sensibility, or judgment of the promisor are involved. 2. Where the question is merely one of operative fitness or mechanical utility. In the first class the courts refuse to say that where a man agrees to pay if he is satisfied with the performance, he should be compelled to pay if some one else is satisfied with it. The courts recognize that in matters of taste or opinion there is no absolute standard as to what is good or bad. Hence, where the subject-matter is a suit of clothes; 113 Mass. 136; a bust of the defendant's husband; 44 Conn. 218; a portrait of the defendant's daughter; 39 Mich. 49; a cabinet organ; 2 Atl. Rep. (Va.) 583; a set of artificial teeth; 7 Pitts. L. J. 140; a carriage; 2 C. B. n. s. 779; a steam-heater for a house; 26 Atl. Rep. (Pa.) 745; a play to be written by an author for an actor; 34 N. Y. Supp. 292; a design for a bank-note; 10 N. Y. Supp. 5; 14 id. 153; the question is not one for the court or jury to decide, but for the promisee alone.

So where the contract gives the master a right to discharge a servant if he is satisfied that the servant is incompetent; 54 Am. Rep. 714; or to employ him so long as he is satisfactory; 24 Hun 115; 6 Lans. 280; or to pay for services if they are satisfactory; 8 N. Y. Supp. 485.

In the second class of cases, the writer maintains that the same principle of law should be applied, and gives a number of cases where it has been applied; where the subject-matter of the agreement was the making of a book-case; 7 Gray 171; the sale of a harvesting machine; 50 Mich. 565; the sale of a steam fire engine; 24 Fed. Rep. 893; of a cord binder; 83 Minn. 33; a steamboat; 11 Hun 70; an elevator; 109 Pa. 297; steam fans; 66 Wis. 218; a printing press; 36 Fed. Rep. 414; a grain binder; 85 N. W. Rep. (Mich.) 841; a gas machine; 99 Mass. 183; a fanning mill; 43 Ill. 445.

The promisee, to come under the rules in the above cases, must act in good faith; his dissatisfaction must be actual, not feigned; real, not merely pretended; 40 Vt. 345; 108 Pa. 297; 43 Vt. 538. He must not act from caprice; 130 Pa. 66. He must, if a test is necessary to determine its fitness, give that test or allow it to be made; 63 Md. 198; 66 Wis. 218; 83 Pac. Rep. (Wash.) 763; 80 Fed. Rep. 705; 26 Atl. Rep. (Pa.) 745, holding that where the promisor dies before the test is made, the right to reject vests in his executor.

So an article to be manufactured cannot be rejected before it is substantially completed, so that the promisor will be able fairly to determine whether it was or would be satisfactory to him; 108 Pa. 297.

In a contract to furnish ventilating machinery, to the buyer's satisfaction, in order to justify a refusal of the work, some reasonable ground of dissatisfaction must be shown, and the existence of such ground is for the jury; 18 N. Y. L. J., following 103 N. Y. 289.

That the goods are not satisfactory does not give the purchaser the right to reject them and to claim damages for the breach of contract of the seller; 15 Atl. Rep. (Conn.) 403; nor to keep them and recover damages in an action for the contract price; 36 Fed. Rep. 414; 19 Me. 147.

If one agrees to perform to the satisfaction of another, he cannot recover without fulfilling the terms of the contract.

But, (1) in matters of personal taste the promisee is the sole judge as to whether he is or ought to be satisfied; 113 Mass. 136; 44 Conn. 218; 155 Pa. 394.

(2) In sales of goods where the promisor can be put substantially in statu quo the promisee is the sole judge; 50 Mich. 565; 66 Wis. 218.

(3) In contracts for work and labor other than such as are to satisfy a matter of personal taste, where the work and labor would be wholly lost to the promisor if refused, the courts tend to the view that the promisee must be satisfied when he ought to be; 101 N. Y. 887; 149 Mass. 284. See Huffcutt's Ans. Contr. 348.

There are a few cases which are apparently discordant, but which will be found, as Prof. Lawson observes, to rest on the difference between executory contracts of sale, and contracts for work and labor which have been done on the house or land of the promisee; 149 Mass. 284; 116 N. Y. 280; 106 id. 292; 9 N. W. Rep. (Mich.) 427; 81 Fed. Rep. 943; 21 So. Rep. (Ala.) 983; 14 Mo. App. 508. The cases in 127 Mo. 188; 2 Johns. 895; 45 Hun 75, appear to be really discordant.

SATISFACTION PIECE. In English Practice. An instrument of writing in which it is declared that satisfaction is acknowledged between the plaintiff and defendant. It is signed by the attorney, and on its production and the warrant of attorney, to the clerk of the judgments, satisfaction is entered on payment of certain fees. Lee, Dict of Pract. Satisfaction.

SATISFACTORY. The word "satisfactory" used in a contract where the buyer was to pay for the article if "satisfactory," leaves the decision in the matter to the purchaser. 133 Ky. 351, 117 S. W. 950; 161 Ky. 627, 171 S. W. 198. See SUCCESSFUL AND SATISFACTORY MANNER.

SATISFACTORY EVIDENCE. That which is sufficient to induce a belief that the thing is true; in other words, it is credible evidence. 8 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3049.

SATISFACTORY LEASE. Under an agreement to pay commissions for negotiating a "satisfactory lease" the lessor cannot arbitrarily refuse to accept a lease negotiated; 29 S. W. Rep. (Mo.) 1001.

SATISFACTORY PROOF. Where a city charter authorized contracts for street improvements to be given to the lowest bidder "who shall give satisfactory proof of his" ability to properly perform the work, it was held that the board of public works could not exercise an arbitrary discretion in awarding the contract, but must base their discretion on facts reasonably tending to support its determination. 31 Atl. Rep. (N. J.) 618.

That amount of proof, as applied to evidence, which ordinarily satisfies an unprejudiced mind, beyond reasonable doubt. Anderson; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 2.

SATISFIED. When applied to a note or bond, paid. 1 Root 306.

Supplied fully, with what is required; freed from doubt or uncertainty; convinced. Id. "Entirely satisfied" implies a firm and thorough assent of the mind and judgment to the truth of a proposition. This may exist notwithstanding a possibility that the fact may be otherwise. Anderson; 39 Cal. 335.

SATISFIED TERMS ACT. The stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 112, passed to abolish satisfied outstanding terms of years in land. By this act, terms which shall henceforth become attendant upon the inheritance, either by express declaration or construction of law, are to cease and determine. This in effect abolishes outstanding terms; 1 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 296, 297; Wms. R. P. pt. iv. c. 1; Moz. & W.

SATURDAY'S STOP. A space of time from evening on Saturday till sunrise on Monday, in which it was not lawful to take salmon in Scotland and the northern parts of England. Cowel.

SAVING CLAUSE. In a legal instrument a clause exempting something which might otherwise be subjected to the operation of the instrument. In an act of parliament, a saving clause which is repugnant to the body of such act is void. 1 Co. 118. See CONSTRUCTION.

SAVING THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. The saving or preserving a debt from being barred by the operation of the statute.

SAVINGS BANK. An institution in the nature of a bank, established for the purpose of receiving deposits of money, for the benefit of the persons depositing, to accumulate the produce of so much thereof as shall not be required by the depositors, their executors or administrators, at compound interest, and to return the whole or any part of such deposit, and the produce thereof to the depositors, their executors or administrators, deducting out of such produce so much as shall be required for the necessary expenses attending the management of such institution, but deriving no benefit whatever from any such deposit or the produce thereof. Grant, Bank., 5th ed. 202; Bolles, Banks & Dep. 177.

Savings banks are not banking institutions in the commercial sense of that phrase and are not to be classed as national banks in determining the validity of state taxation of the latter; 125 U. S. 60.

Savings banks cannot do business as banks of discount unless by statute; 12 Blatch. 209. It has been considered that savings banks are trustees for depositors; 68 Me. 396; 32 N. J. Eq. 163; and therefore subject to the jurisdiction of equity; 28 N. J. Eq. 552; they have been held to be agents for the depositor; 38 Conn. 203; and debtors; 92 N. Y. 7; 122 id. 135; 180 Mass. 443. That the rights of the depositors are of a two-fold character and occupy a position similar to that of stockholders in an ordinary corporation, see 1 Moraw. Corp. § 391; but as long as the institution is solvent the depositors are mere creditors; id.

Where the by-laws require the presentation of the pass-book, as a condition precedent to the withdrawal of the deposit and this regulation is printed in the book, it becomes a part of the contract between the parties; 91 Pa. 315; 141 Mass. 33. In case of the loss of the pass-book, the depositor has the right to receive his money without producing it; 14 R. I. 68.

It has been held that after payment to one who was apparently in lawful possession of the pass-book, the real depositor cannot recover unless upon proof of want of care on the part of the officers of the savings banks. See 101 N. Y. 58. And even where the pass-book contains a stipulation that the deposit may be paid to any one who presents the book, the officers are still bound to use reasonable care; 59 N. H. 1. A by-law that a savings bank shall not be liable to pay a depositor when it has already paid the holder of his pass-book which had been stolen, is not binding unless the depositor has notice of it; 68 N. W. Rep. (Mich.) 118.

In case of insolvency the assets are distributable among the depositors; 93 Mo. 503. In 28 N. J. Eq. 552, the court made an order scaling down the deposits and authorized the savings bank to continue business. By statute in New York courts may scale down deposits of insolvent savings banks and authorize them to continue business.

The surplus of a savings bank belongs in equity to its depositors, and as a part of its deposits in the same sense as the stipulated interest is; 154 N. Y. 122; and is exempt from taxation as much as deposits; 18 N. Y. L. J. 1841 (S. C. of N. Y., since affirmed).

Postoffice saving banks were established in England in 1861. The act authorized the postmaster-general, with the consent of the treasury, to cause his officers to receive deposits in all towns in which a branch office for that purpose was appointed, for remittance to the principal office, and to repay the same, under such regulations as should be prescribed. Deposits are payable ten days after demand, with interest at the rate of two pounds ten shillings per cent. per annum. The deposits are paid over to the national debt commissioners and by them invested in such securities as are lawful for the funds of other savings banks. Any deficiency is made good out of the consolidated fund; 8 Steph. Com. 88.

SAVOY. One of the ancient privileged places or sanctuaries. 4 Steph. Com. 227, n. See PRIVILEGED PLACES.

SAXON LAKE. The laws of the West Saxons. Cowel.

SAY ABOUT. Words frequently used in contracts to indicate an uncertain quantity. They have been said to mark emphatically the vendor's purpose to guard himself against being supposed to have made an absolute promise as to quantity;

21 W. R. 609. There a sale of all the spurs manufactured, say about 600, was held to be complied with by tender of 496 spurs. See 2 B. & Ad. 108; 5 Gray 589; 8 Pet. 181.

SCAB. See BLACKLEG.

SCACCARIUM. A chequered cloth resembling a chess-board which covered the table in the Exchequer, and on which, when certain of the king's accounts were made up, the sums were marked and scored with counters. Hence the court of exchequer or curia scaccarii derived its name. 3 Bla. Com. 44.

SCALA. Scale; the scale. Burrill. See SCALAM.

SCALAM. The old way of paying money into the Exchequer. Cowel.

SCALING LAWS. A term used to signify statutes establishing the process of adjusting the difference in value between depreciated paper money and specie. Such statutes were rendered necessary by the depreciation of paper money necessarily following the establishment of American independence. And, more recently, to discharge those debts which were made payable in Confederate money. The statutes are now obsolete.

SCANDAL. A scandalous verbal report or rumor respecting some person.

SCANDALOUS MATTER. In Equity Pleading. Unnecessary matter criminating of the defendant or any other person, alleged in the bill, answer, or other pleading, or in the interrogatories to or answers by witnesses. Adams, Eq. 306. Matter which is relevant can never be scandalous; Story, Eq. Pl. § 270; 15 Ves. 477; see 42 N. J. Eq. 249, and the degree of relevancy is of no account in determining the question; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 19; 2 Ves. 21; 15 id. 477. Where scandal is alleged, whether in the bill; 2 Ves. 631; answer; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 313; or interrogatories to or answer of witnesses; 2 Y. & C. 445; it will be referred to a master at any time; 2 Ves. 631; and, by leave of court, even upon the application of a stranger to the suit; 6 Ves. 514; 3 Beav. 82; and matter found to be scandalous by him will be expunged; Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 286, 892; 4 Hen. & M. 414; at the cost of counsel introducing it, in some cases; Story, Eq. Pl. § 268. The circuit court has an inherent power to strike out scandalous matter on their own motion and in the absence of pleading, and may order a bill to be struck from its files and to permit the complainant to file a new bill excluding such matter; 85 Fed. Rep. 55. The presence of scandalous matter in the bill is no excuse for its being in the answer; 19 Me. 214. Parts of an answer, though immaterial as a defence and scandalous, will not be suppressed when intended to meet charges of bad faith in the bill; 84 Fed. Rep. 379.

SCANDALUM MAGNATUM (L. Lat. slander of great men). Words spoken in derogation of a peer, a judge, or other great officer of the realm. 1 Vent. 60. This was distinct from mere slander in the earlier law, and was considered a more heinous offence. Bull. N. P. 4; Webb's Poll. on Torts 283 b.

It depended on early English statutes which after being long obsolete in practice were repealed in 1887. See 3 Bla. Com. 124.

SCAUSAGE, SCHEVAGE, SCHEWAGE, or SHEWAGE. A kind of toll or custom, exacted by mayors, sheriffs, etc., of merchant strangers, for wares showed or offered for sale within their liberties. Prohibited by 19 Hen. VII. c. 7. Cowel.

SCHEDULE. In Practice. When an indictment is returned from an inferior court in obedience to a writ of certiorari, the statement of the previous proceedings sent with it is termed the schedule. 1. Saund. 209 a, n. 2.

Schedules are also frequently annexed to answers in a court of equity, and to depositions and other documents, in order to show more in detail the matter they contain than could otherwise be conveniently shown.

The term is frequently used instead of inventory.

SCHIREMAN. A sheriff; the ancient name of an earl.

SCHIRRENS-GELD. A tax paid to sheriffs for keeping the shire or county court. Cowel.

SCHISM—Division. A "schism" is a division or separation in a church or denomination of Christians, occasioned by diversity of opinions; breach of unity among the people of the same religious faith. And it is used in the statute in connection with the word "division," which certainly imports no more than a separation of the society into two parts, without any change of faith or ulterior relations. 5 Bush (Ky.) 401.

SCHISM-BILL. An act passed in the reign of Queen Anne to restrain Protestant dissenters from educating their own children, and forbade all tutors and schoolmasters to be present at any dissenting place of worship.

SCHOOL. An institution of learning of a lower grade than a college or a university. A place of primary instruction. Webster, Dict. As used in the American reports, the term generally refers to the common or public schools existing under the laws of each state and maintained at the expense of the public.

Public school is synonymous with common school; 103 Mass. 97; but the term is not limited to a school of the lowest grade; it includes all schools from those lower than grammar schools to high schools, but not one founded by a charitable bequest which vests the order and superintendence of it in a board of trustees; id.

When the legislature has placed the management of public schools under the exclusive control of directors, trustees, and boards of education, the courts have no rightful authority to interfere by directing what instruction shall be given, or what book shall be used therein; 23 Ohio St. 211; s. c. 13 Am. Rep. 233. A statute establishing separate systems of schools for white and colored children is not in violation of the fourteenth amendment of the constitution of the United States. And where appropriate schools for colored children are maintained, such children may be lawfully excluded from schools established for white children; 48 Col. 86; s. c. 17 Am. Rep. 405; 48 Ind. 327; s. c. 17 Am. Rep. 739; 93 Ind. 303; 45 Ark. 121; 95 U. S. 504; nor did such exclusion violate any constitutional right before the fourteenth amendment was adopted; 5 Cush. 108. But it has been held that unless the legislature clearly confers upon boards of education the power to establish separate schools for white and colored children, the power does not exist; 25 Pac. Rep. (Kan.) 616. A Chinese pupil cannot be excluded from a public school; 66 Cal. 473. A mandamus will lie compelling trustees to admit colored children to public schools where separate schools are not provided for them; 7 Nev. 342; s. c. 8 Am. Rep. 713.

Reading the Bible in the public schools is sectarian instruction; 76 Wis. 177 (under the language of the constitution and laws); contra, 89 Me. 379; 12 Allen 127; 93 Ill. 283; 64 Ia. 367; 23 Ohio St. 211.

In Ohio, the constitution of the state does not enjoin or require religious instruction or the reading of religious books in the public schools of the state.

The legislature having placed the management of the public schools under the exclusive control of directors, trustees and boards of education, the courts have no rightful authority to interfere by directing what instruction shall be given or what books read therein; 23 Ohio St. 211.

In that case an injunction was granted by the court below to restrain the Board of Education of Cincinnati from prohibiting the reading of the Bible in the public schools and the decree was reversed. For the history of the case, arguments, and opinions, see "The Bible in the Public Schools," published in Cincinnati, 1870.

A writ of mandamus to compel the discontinuance of Bible reading in the common schools was granted by a unanimous court, upon the ground that it was sectarian instruction, forbidden by the state constitution; 70 Wis. 177; s. c. 7 L. R. A. 330.

This case was followed by Carpenter, J., in a case in Detroit, Pfeiffer v. School Board, May, 1897.

In a Pennsylvania case it was held by Edwards, J., that the reading of the Holy Scriptures, in either version, as a part of the opening exercises in our public schools, does not violate any constitutional provision. It is not in contravention of art. 1, § 3, nor art. 10, § 2; 7 Dist. Rep. Pa. 598.

The argument of Richard H. Dana, Jr., in the case in 38 Me. 370, has been published in pamphlet form.

In an action by a father for the expulsion of his child from school for a refusal to comply with the orders of her instructor to read the Bible as a part of the course of instruction, a non-suit was granted and confirmed on the ground that an action could not be maintained by a parent, for want of direct pecuniary injury; 38 Me. 376; and an action by the child by her next friend was not sustained upon the ground that the action by the school committee was discretionary and could not be reviewed.

A student of the University of Illinois, after six years' acquiescence in the regulations requiring attendance at chapel, absented himself, disclaiming any conscientious scruples on the subject and was dismissed; an application for a mandamus to reinstate him was denied upon the ground that the rule requiring attendance upon chapel was not a violation of the constitutional provision that "no person shall be required to attend on or support any ministry or place of worship, against his consent;" 137 Ill. 296.

A bill by a taxpayer for an injunction to restrain school directors from allowing the schoolhouse to be used by any society or organization for the purpose of a religious meeting-house, was dismissed on demurrer; 93 Ill. 61. But it has been held that school directors have no authority to permit public school buildings to be used for holding sectarian religious meetings or public lyceum meetings, or for any other purpose than school purposes, but they may permit them to be used for lectures of an educational nature; 182 Pa. 251.

A public school teacher has no authority to compel a pupil to pursue a certain study against the wishes of its parent; 35 Wis. 59; 59 Ill. 567; 87 Ill. 303; contra, 108 Ind. 31; 105 Mass. 475; 48 Vt. 444; 84 Me. 379; 59 N. H. 473; 29 Ohio St. 69. A teacher has no right to punish a child for neglecting or refusing to study certain branches from which the parents of the child have requested that it might be excused, or which they have forbidden it to pursue, if those facts are known to the teacher. The proper remedy is to exclude the pupil from the school; 50 Ia. 145; 35 Wis. 59.

Directors; 105 Mass. 475; and teachers; 48 Vt. 444; may expel or suspend pupils for sufficient cause, as for breach of discipline; 46 Vt. 452; or for general immoral character; 8 Cush. 160; for refusal to take part in musical exercises; 108 Ind. 31; for refusal to write English compositions; 32 Vt. 224; for absence contrary to rules; 48 id. 444; for refusal on the part of the parents to sign and return periodical written reports of the pupil's standing; 52 N. W. Rep. (Neb.) 710; for misbehavior outside of the school tending to injure the school and subvert the master's authority; 52 Vt. 114; for a father's refusal to permit the master to whip the child or to correct him himself; 30 S. W. Rep. 269; by reason of the parent visiting the school when in session and using offensive language to the teacher; 29 S. E. Rep. (Ga.) 896, in which case the court cited a letter from Bleckley, C. J., to the court relating to the case. In 71 Mo. 828, it was held that the proper remedy for truancy was not expulsion, but it is also held that the conduct of a pupil at a boarding school, in continually playing truant, and finally leaving for his home, is ground for expulsion; 30 S. W. Rep. (Tex.) 268.

Truancy is an offence not known to the common law, but it is held that boys between the ages of twelve and fifteen who refuse to attend school and wander about public places during school hours are truants under a statute: 36 Atl. Rep. (Me.) 1001, which case see as to correction for that offence. Where the rules of a boarding school provide that there will be no reduction in case of withdrawals, and that all payments will be forfeited on expulsion, there can be no recovery; 30 S. W. Rep. (Tex.) 268.

It is usually provided by constitution or statute that school facilities must be provided for children of the proper age, and compulsory education has been established in Connecticut, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, Massachusetts, Montana, Vermont, Washington, Wyoming, Wisconsin, Rhode Island, Ohio, and Pennsylvania.

School directors cannot terminate a contract with a teacher by doing away with the particular school; 1 Ind. App. 138.

In the absence of any express stipulation to that effect there is no contract to give a scholarship to the candidate who obtains the highest marks in the scholarship examination; [1895] 1 Ch. 480.

A college has no right to refuse arbitrarily to examine a student for a degree. See N. Y. L. J., June 27, 1891.

Within the scope of his powers the decision of a state superintendent of schools is conclusive and will be enforced by mandamus; 31 Atl. Rep. (N. J.) 168.

See Am. & E. Encyc. Law; Taylor, Public Schools; VACCINATION; LANDS, PUBLIC; EDUCATION; CORRECTION; ASSAULT; BATTERY. And as to correction, see also 35 Am. L. Reg. 98.

See COMPULSORY SCHOOL ATTENDANCE ACTS; GRADED SCHOOL; PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

SCHOOL DISTRICT. See GRADED SCHOOL DISTRICT.

SCHOOL FUND. The words "school fund" under § 186, Constitution of Kentucky, do not embrace escheated property. 140 Ky. 789, 131 S. W. 797.

SCHOOLMASTER. One employed in teaching a school. See SCHOOL.

The schoolmaster is entitled to be paid for his services, by those who employ him. See 1 Bingh. 357; 8 J. B. Moore 368. His duties are to teach his pupils what he has undertaken, and to have a special care over their morals. See 1 Stark. 421; ASSAULT. The salary of a public school teacher is not attachable by trustee process while in the hands of city officials whose duty it is to pay it; 54 Ga. 21; S. C. 21 Am. Rep. 273.

SCHOUT. Belg. (from schuld, debt). In Dutch Law. An officer of a court who convenes the judges and demands from them justice for litigating parties. Usually translated sheriff. Burrill; O'Callaghan's New Netherlands, i. 101.

The school fiscal was an important officer in New Netherlands. His duties were equivalent to those performed among us by a sheriff and an attorney-general. Id. ibid. 102.

SCENERY. Where a contract provided for the furnishing of scenery and fixtures for a theatre it was held that painting the walls did not fall within the denomination either of scenery or fixtures. 4 R. I. 364.

SCIENCE. The knowledge of many, methodically digested and arranged, so as to be attainable by one; a body of principles and deductions to explain the nature of some matter. 33 La. Am. 637. See 13 Wend. 205; BOOKS OF SCIENCE.

Depends upon abstract or speculative principles. "Art" relates to practice or performance—is practical skill as directed by theory or science; the mere application of knowledge. Rifle-shooting is not a "science." Anderson; 33 La. Am. 637. The term "science" cannot, with propriety, be applied to a work of so fluctuating and fugitive a form as that of a newspaper or price-current, the subject-matter of which is daily changing, and is of mere temporary use. Prices-current, catalogues of merchandise, a scoring-sheet for games, a chart of patterns for dresses, blank account-books, and the like are not subjects of the copyright laws passed in execution of the foregoing power. Id.; 2 Paine 392.

Scientific Works. A medical expert may cite standard authorities as sustaining his views, and then they may be used by the opposite side to discredit him; but they may not be read as evidence or argument. Id.; 77 N. C. 58, 59.

SCIENDUM (L. Lat.). In English Law. The name given to a clause inserted in the record by which it is made "known that the justice here in court, in this same term, delivered a writ thereupon to the deputy sheriff of the county aforesaid, to be executed in due form of law." Lee, Dict. Record.

SCIENTER (Lat. knowingly). The allegation in a pleading of knowledge; Webb's Poll. Torts 614; on the part of a defendant or person accused, which is necessary to charge upon him the consequence of the crime or tort.

A man may do many acts which are justifiable or not, as he is ignorant or not ignorant of certain facts. He may pass a counterfeit coin, when he is ignorant of its being counterfeit, and is guilty of no offence; but if he knew the coin to be counterfeit, which is called the scienter, he is guilty of passing counterfeit money.

Where evidence of the scienter has been given, it may be rebutted, as where the charge is passing counterfeit money, the defendant may show that the bill was genuine or that under the circumstances he had reason to suppose it was, or that he examined a counterfeit detector in regard to it; 8 Wis. 187. Proof of a conspiracy to put forth counterfeit bills is admissible to show the scienter as against one of the parties to it; 19 Conn. 238.

In an action against the owner of a dog, alleged to be a dangerous animal, the fact that it is a watch-dog, chained during the day and loosed at night, is sufficient without further proof of scienter; 35 La. Ann. 1091.

The averment of a scienter in an indictment is not sufficient to supply omission of the positive statement that the defendant did the act; 2 McCord 877; and a charge in an indictment that the defendant passed, etc., a counterfeit, without alleging that he knew it to be such, is insufficient even after verdict; 105 U. S. 611.

SCILICET (Lat. scire, to know, licet, it is permitted: you may know: translated by to wit, in its old sense of to know). That is to say; to wit; namely.

It is a clause to usher in the sentence of another, to particularize that which was too general before, distribute what was too gross, or to explain what was doubtful and obscure. It neither increases nor diminishes the premises or habendum, for it gives nothing of itself; it may make a restriction when the preceding words may be restrained; Hob. 171; 1 P. Wms. 18; Co. Litt. 180 b, n. 1.

When the scilicet is repugnant to the precedent matter, it is void: for example, when a declaration in trover states that the plaintiff on the third day of May was possessed of certain goods which on the fourth day of May came to the defendant's hands, who afterward, to wit, on the first day of May, converted them, the scilicet was rejected as surplusage; Cro. Jac. 428. And see 6 Binn. 15; 8 Saund. 291, note 1.

Stating material and traversable matter under a scilicet will not avoid the consequences of a variance: 1 M'Cl. & Y. 277; 2 B. & P. 170, n. 2; 4 Johns. 450; 2 Pick. 323; nor will the mere omission of a scilicet render immaterial matter material; 2 Saund. 206 a; even in a criminal proceeding; 2 Camp. 307, n. See 3 Term 68; 8 Maule & S. 173.

SCINTILLA (Lat.). A spark; a remaining particle; the least particle.

SCINTILLA OF EVIDENCE. The doctrine that where there is any evidence, however slight, tending to support a material issue, the case must go to the jury, since they are the exclusive judges of the weight of the evidence. 43 Ga. 328; 106 Mass. 271; 40 Mo. 151; 87 id. 462; 85 La. 585; 48 Vt. 838. In the United States courts and in England, it has been decided that the more reasonable rule is, "that before the evidence is left to the jury, there is, or may be, in every case, a preliminary question for the judge, not whether there is literally no evidence, but whether there is any upon which a jury can properly proceed to find a verdict for the party producing it, upon whom the burden or proof is imposed;" 94 U. S. 278; 11 How. 373; 9 Wall. 197; 13 C. B. 916; 8 C. B. n. s. 150.

The old rule is likewise exploded in several of the states, whose courts are now in the constant habit of ordering nonsuits against the complaint of the plaintiff; 49 N. J. L. 671; 76 Me. 132; 1 Greene 494; 9 Gill 331; 20 N. H. 351; 49 N. Y. 671; or giving peremptory instructions to the jury to find for one party or the other; 71 N. C. 451; 15 Kan. 244; or of sustaining demurrers to the evidence, in cases where there is confessedly some evidence supporting a material issue. This is done under the guise of various expressions, which seem to leave the ancient prerogative of the jury intact. In Maryland, the judge achieves this result by determining the legal sufficiency of the evidence; 7 Gill & J. 20; and in Missouri by determining its legal effect; 9 Mo. 113. See Thomps. Chrg. Jury § 30; Thomps. Jur. § 2246.

SCINTILLA JURIS (Lat. a spark of law or right). A legal fiction resorted to for the purpose of enabling feoffees to uses to support contingent uses when they come into existence, thereby to enable the statute of uses, 27 Hen. VIII., to execute them. For example, a shifting use: a grant to A and his heirs to the use of B and his heirs, until C perform an act, and then to the use of C and his heirs. Here the statute executes the use in B, which, being coextensive with A's seisin, leaves no actual seisin in A. When, however, C performs the act, B's use ceases, and C's springs up, and he enjoys the fee-simple; upon which the question arises, out of what seisin C's use is served. It is said to be served out of A's original seisin; for upon the cesser of B's use it is contended that the original seisin reverted to A for the purpose of serving C's use, and is a possibility of seisin, or scintilla juris. See 4 Kent 238, and the authorities there cited, for the learning upon this subject; Burton, R. P. 48; Wilson, Springing Uses 59; Washb. R. P.

SCIRE FACIAS (Lat. that you make known). The name of a writ (and of the whole proceeding) founded on some public record. Fost. Fed. Pr. 301.

Public records, to which the writ is applicable, are of two classes, judicial and non-judicial.

Judicial records are of two kinds, judgments in former suits, and recognizances which are of the nature of judgments. When founded on a judgment, the purpose of the writ is either to revive the judgment, which because of lapse of time—a year and a day at common law, but now varied by statutes—is presumed in law to be executed or released, and therefore execution on it is not allowed without giving notice, by scire facias, to the defendant to come in, and show if he can, by release or otherwise, why execution ought not to issue; or to make a person, who derives a benefit by or becomes chargeable to the execution, a party to the judgment, who was not a party to the original suit. In both of these classes of cases, the purpose of the writ is merely to continue a former suit to execution. When the writ is founded on a recognition, its purpose is, as in cases of judgment, to have execution; and though it is not a continuation of a former suit, as in the case of judgments, yet, not being the commencement and foundation of an action, it is not an original, but a judicial, writ, and at most is only in the nature of an original action. When founded on a judicial record, the writ must issue out of the court where the judgment was given or recognition entered of record, if the judgment or recognition remains there, or if they are removed out of the court where they are; 3 Bla. Com. 410, 421; 8 Gill & J. 859; 2 Wms. Saund. 71, notes. See 78 Ill. 78; 68 Tex. 473.

Scire facias to revive a judgment being a continuation of the suit, jurisdiction thereon is in the court where the judgment was rendered, regardless of the residence of the parties; 71 Tex. 108. A scire facias to revive a judgment being regarded in Pennsylvania as a substitute for an action of debt on the judgment, a judgment so revived without service or appearance has no binding force as against a defendant who resides in another state; 161 U. S. 643; and in Vermont it is held that when judgment is thus revived the plaintiff cannot recover in another state thereon after the limitation has run against the original judgment; 35 Atl. Rep. (Vt.) 499. A judgment may be revived at common law on a writ and alias writ of sci. fa. with return of nilhil as to each; 52 Mo. App. 251; but such revival on two returns of nilhil operates merely to keep in force the local lien and does not stop the running of the statute of limitations in another state where the defendant resides; 161 U. S. 642.

Non-judicial records are letters patent and corporate charters. The writ, when founded on a non-judicial record, is the commencement and foundation of an original action; and its purpose is always to repeal or forfeit the record. Quo warranto is the usual and more appropriate remedy to forfeit corporate charters and offices; and scire facias, though used for that purpose, is more especially applicable to the repeal of letters patent. When the crown is deceived by a false suggestion, or when it has granted anything which by law it cannot grant, or where the holder of a patent office has committed a cause of forfeiture, and other like cases, the crown may by its prerogative repeal by scire facias its own grant. And where by several letters patent the self-same thing has been granted to several persons, the first patentee is of right permitted, in the name and at the suit of the crown by scire facias, to repeal the subsequent letters patent; and so, in any case of the grant of a patent which is injurious to another, the injured party is permitted to use the name of the crown in a suit by scire facias for the repeal of the grant. This privilege of suing in the name of the crown for the repeal of the patent is granted to prevent multiplicity of suits; 2 Wms. Saund. 72, notes. A state may by scire facias repeal a patent of land fraudulently obtained; 1 H. & M.H. 102. See REPEAL; PATENT.

Scire facias is also used by government as a mode to ascertain and enforce the forfeiture of a corporate charter; 3 Wood, Ry. L. 208, n.; where there is a legal existing body capable of acting, but who have abused their power; it cannot, like quo warranto (which is applicable to all cases of forfeiture), be applied where there is a body corporate de facto only, who take upon themselves to act, but cannot legally exercise their powers. In scire facias to forfeit a corporate charter, the government must be a party to the suit; for the judgment is that the parties be ousted and the franchises be seized into the hands of the government; 3 Kent 313; 10 B. & C. 240; 5 Mass. 330; 10 S. & R. 140; 4 Gill & J. 1; 9 id. 305; 4 Gill 404. See QUO WARRANTO.

Scire facias is also used to suggest further breaches on a bond with a condition, where a judgment has been obtained for some but not all of the breaches and to recover further instalments where a judgment has been obtained for the penalty before all the instalments are due; 1 Wms. Saund. 58, n. 1; 4 Md. 875.

By statute, in Pennsylvania, scire facias is the method of proceeding upon a mortgage.

The pleadings in scire facias are peculiar. The writ recites the judgment or other record, and also the suggestions which the plaintiff must make to the court to entitle him to the proceeding by scire facias. The writ, therefore, presents the plaintiff's whole case, and constitutes the declaration, to which the defendant must plead; 1 Blackf. 297. And when the proceeding is used to forfeit a corporate charter, all the causes of forfeiture must be assigned in distinct breaches in the writ, as on a bond with a condition is done in the declaration or replication. And the defendant must either disclaim the charter or deny its existence, or deny the facts alleged as breaches, or demur to them. The suggestions in the writ, disclosing the foundation of the plaintiff's case, must also be traversed if they are to be avoided. The scire facias is founded partly upon them and partly upon the record; 2 Inst. 470, 678. They are substantive facts, and can be traversed by distinct pleas embracing them alone, just as any other fundamental allegation can be traversed alone. All the pleadings after the writ or declaration are in the ordinary forms. There are no pleadings in scire facias to forfeit a corporate charter to be found in the books, as the proceeding has been seldom used. There is a case in 1 P. Wms. 207, but no pleadings. There is a case also in 9 Gill 379, with a synopsis of the pleadings. Perhaps the only other case is in Vermont; and it is without pleadings. A defendant cannot plead more than one plea to a scire facias to forfeit a corporate charter: the statutes of 4 & 5 Anne, ch. 18, and 9 Anne, ch. 20, allowing double pleas, do not extend to the crown; 1 Chitty, Pl. 479; 1 P. Wms. 220.

SCIRE FACIAS AD AUDIENDUM ERRORES (Lat.). The name of a writ which is sued out after the plaintiff in error has assigned his errors. Fitzh. N. B. 20; Bac. Abr. Error (F). Where a scire facias ad audiendum errores describes correctly, in its recital, the parties to the judgment complained of, but in the citing part brings in parties whose names do not appear in the writ of error, the irregularity in the scire facias may be cured by amendment; 30 Fla. 210.

SCIRE FACIAS AD DISPROBANDUM DEBITUM (Lat.). The name of a writ in use in Pennsylvania, which lies by a defendant in foreign attachment against the plaintiff, in order to enable him, within a year and a day next ensuing the time of payment to the plaintiff in the attachment, to disprove or avoid the debt recovered against him. Act, June 13, 1836.

SCIRE FACIAS FOR THE CROWN. The summary proceeding by extent is only resorted to when a crown debtor is insolvent, or there is good ground for supposing that the debt may be lost by delay. Whart. Law Lex.

SCIRE FACIAS QUARE RESTITUTIONEM NON. A writ which lies where execution on a judgment has been levied, but the money has not been paid over to the plaintiff, and the judgment is afterwards reversed in error or on appeal; in such a case a scire facias is necessary before a writ of restitution can issue. Chit. 682.

SCIRE FECI (Lat. I have made known). In Practice. The return of the sheriff, or other proper officer, to the writ of scire facias, when it has been served.

SCIRE FIERI INQUIRY. In English Law. The name of a writ formerly used to recover the amount of a judgment from an executor.

The history of the origin of the writ is as follows: When on an execution de bonis testatoris against an executor the sheriff returned nulla bona and also a devastavit, a scire facias de bonis propriis might formerly have been issued against the executor, without a previous inquisition finding a devastavit and a scire facias. But the most usual practice upon the sheriff's return of nulla bona to a scire facias de bonis testatoris was to sue out a special writ of scire facias de bonis testatoris, with a clause in it, "et si tibi constare poterit," that the executor had wasted the goods, then to levy de bonis propriis. This was the practice in the king's bench till the time of Charles I.

In the common pleas a practice had prevailed in early times upon a suggestion in the special writ of scire facias of a devastavit by the executor, to direct the sheriff to inquire by a jury whether the executor had wasted the goods, and if the jury found he had, then a scire facias was issued out against him, and, unless he made a good defence thereto, an execution de bonis propriis was awarded against him.

The practice of the two courts being different, several cases were brought into the king's bench on error, and at last it became the practice of both courts, for the sake of expedition, to incorporate the scire facias inquiry, and scire facias into one writ, thence called a scire fieri inquiry—a name compounded of the first words of the two writs of scire facias and scire facias, and that of inquiry, of which it consists.

This writ recites the scire facias de bonis testatoris sued out on the judgment against the executor, the return of nulla bona by the sheriff, and then, suggesting that the executor had sold and converted the goods of the testator to the value of the debt and damages recovered, commands the sheriff to levy the said debt and damages of the goods of the testator in the hands of the executor, if they could be levied thereof, but if it should appear to him by the inquisition of a jury that the executor had wasted the goods of the testator, then the sheriff is to warn the executor to appear, etc. If the judgment had been either by or against the testator or intestate, or both, the writ of scire facias recites that fact, and also that the court had adjudged, upon a scire facias to revive the judgment, that the executor or administrator should have execution for the debt, etc. Cliff, Entr. 650; Lilly, Entr. 664.

Although this practice is sometimes adopted, yet the most usual proceeding is by action of debt, on the judgment, suggesting a devastavit because in the proceeding by scire fieri inquiry the plaintiff is not entitled to costs unless the executor appears and pleads to the scire facias: 1 Saund. 219, n. 8. See 3 Archb. Pr. 934.

SCIREWYTE. The annual tax or prestation paid to the sheriff for holding the assizes or county courts. Par. Ant. 573.

SCOLD. See COMMON SCOLD.

SCOPE. Design, aim, or purpose. 75 Ill. 248. As ordinarily used, extent, limits, etc.

Scope of Authority. The terms "scope of authority" and "course of employment" as applied to a servant's acts, are not susceptible of accurate definition, since what acts are within the scope of the servant's employment so as to render the master liable therefor must be gathered from the surrounding circumstances, the master's liability depending upon his consent, express or implied, to the servant's acts. 130 Ky. 380, 113 S. W. 429.

The term "scope of authority" is not susceptible of accurate definition. Where authority is conferred to act for another, without special limitation it carries with it by implication, authority to do all things necessary to its execution, and hence where a servant's employment involves the exercise of discretion or use of force becomes, as to third persons, the discretion and act of the master, though the servant abused his authority and disregarded the master's private instructions, if he was acting within the general scope of his employment. 130 Ky. 381, 113 S. W. 429.

Scope of Business. "Scope of business," as the term is used, with relation to the power of partners to bind the firm, generally includes what is reasonably necessary to the successful conduct of the business in which they are actually engaged. 53 S. W. 41.

SCOT AND LOT. In English Law. See LOT AND SCOT.

SCOTALE. An extortion by officers of the forests who kept ale-houses and compelled people to drink there under fear of their displeasure. Manw. For. Laws, pt. 1, 216.

SCOTCH MARRIAGES. See GRETNA GREEN.

SCOTCH PEERS. Peers of the kingdom of Scotland; of these sixteen are elected by the rest and represent the whole body. They are elected for one parliament only. See PEERS.

SCOTLAND. See UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

SCOUNDREL. An opprobrious title, applicable to a person of bad character. General damages will not lie for calling a man a scoundrel, but special damages may be recovered when there has been an actual loss; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2250; 1 Chitty, Pr. 44.

SCRAP. See WASTE.

SCRAWL. A mark which is to supply the place of a seal. 2 Pars. Contr., 8th ed. 589. See SCROLL.

SCRIBE. See CANCELLARIUS.

SCRIP. A certificate or schedule. Evidence of the right to obtain shares in a public company; sometimes called scrip certificate, to distinguish it from the real title to shares. Whart. L. Dict.; 15 Ark. 12. Sometimes, in this country, it indicates a substitute for a cash dividend, usually payable out of future earnings. Land scrip is a certificate that the holder is entitled to take up so much (usually government-) land. The possession of such scrip is prima facie evidence of ownership of the shares therein designated; Add. Contr. 203rd. It is not goods, wares, or merchandise within the statute of frauds; 16 M. & W. 66. Scrip certificates have been held negotiable; L. R. 10 Ex. 337; Dos Passos, Stockbrokers 486. Where the interest of a mortgage bond may, at the option of the mortgagor, be paid in scrip, if he allows the day for payment to pass without exercising such option, the interest must be paid in money; 122 U. S. 637. See DIVIDEND; STOCK.

SCRIP DIVIDEND. See STOCK; DIVIDEND.

SCRIP STOCK. See STOCK.

SCRIPT. The original or principal instrument, where there are part and counterpart.

SCRIVENER. A person whose business it is to write deeds and other instruments for others; a conveyancer.

Money scriveners are those who are engaged in procuring money to be lent on mortgages and other securities, and lending such money accordingly. They act also as agents for the purchase and sale of real estates.

An attorney, qua attorney, is not a scrivener; 18 E. L. & Eq. R. 402.

To be considered a money scrivener, a person must be concerned in carrying on the trade or profession as a means of making a livelihood. He must in the course of his occupation receive other men's money into his trust and custody, to lay out for them as occasion offers; 3 Camp. 538.

SCROLL. A mark intended to supply the place of a seal made with a pen on a deed or other instrument of writing. Mitch. R. E. & Conv. 474, 455. In Mississippi and Florida it has been held, that "a scroll attached to a written instrument has the effect of a seal, whenever it appears from the body of the instrument, the scroll itself, or the place where affixed, that such scroll was intended as a seal;" 42 Miss. 304; 9 Sm. & M. 34. In Tennessee and Minnesota the word "seal" affixed to the name has been held equivalent to a seal or scroll; 1 Swan 333; 57 Minn. 499; and so where the word seal is printed and appears opposite the name; 150 Pa. 329; otherwise in Virginia and Indiana. In Wisconsin and Pennsylvania a printed "L. S." inclosed in brackets, in the usual place of a seal, is sufficient; 5 Wis. 546 (see 140 N. Y. 249); or in the latter state a seal made with a flourish of the pen; 1 S. & R. 72; 121 Pa. 192. In Georgia a printed "L. S." annexed to the maker's signature constitutes a seal by adoption where the instrument recites that it is executed under the maker's hand and seal; 81 Ga. 453. An expression in the body of the instrument denoting that it is sealed is sufficient, whatever the scroll may be; 5 Mo. 79; 1 Morris (La.) 43; 5 Harr. (Del.) 351; 13 La. Ann. 524. See Martindale, Conveyancing; SEAL.

SCRUET ROLL (called, also, Scrut Finium, or simply Scrut). In Old English Law. A record of the bail accepted in cases of habeas corpus. The award was set down in the remembrance roll, together with the cause of commitment, the writ and return were put on file, the bail was recorded in the scruet. 3 Howell, St. Tr. 134, arg. For remembrance roll, see Reg. Mich. 1654, § 15.

SCRUTATOR (Lat. from scrutari, to search). In Old English Law. A bailiff whom the king of England appointed in places that were his in franchise or interest, whose duty was to look after the king's water-rights: as, flotsam, jetsam, wreck, etc. 1 Hagr. Tracts 23; Pat. 27 Hen. VI. parte 2, m. 20; Pat. 6 Ed. IV. parte 1, m. 22.

SCUTAGE (from Lat. scutum, a shield). Knight-service. Littleton § 90. The tax which those who, holding by knight-service, did not accompany the king, had to pay on its being assessed by parliament. Scutage certain was a species of scutage where the compensation for service was fixed. Littleton § 97; Reg. Orig. 88.

SCYREGEMOTE. The name of a court among the Saxons. It was the court of the shire, in Latin called curia comitatus, and the principal court among the Saxons. It was holden twice a year for determining all causes both ecclesiastical and secular.

SE DEFENDENDO (Lat.). Defending himself. Homicide se defendo may be justifiable.

SEA. The ocean; the great mass of water which surrounds the land, and which probably extends from pole to pole, covering nearly three-quarters of the globe. Waters within the ebb and flow of the tide are to be considered the sea. Gilp. 526.

A large body of salt water communicating with the ocean is also called a sea; as, the Mediterranean sea, etc.

Very large inland bodies of salt water are also called seas; as, the Caspian sea, etc.

"A sea," in nautical language, may mean a general disturbance of the surface of the water occasioned by a storm, and breaking it up into the roll and lift of waves following or menacing each other; some particular wave or surge, separate from its fellows; 101 N. Y. 463.

As a boundary in a conveyance, includes the beach to low water mark; 84 Me. 14.

The high seas include the whole of the seas below high water mark and outside the body of the county. Couls. & F. on Waters. See 2 Ex. Div. 62; HIGH SEAS.

The open sea is public and common property, and any nation or person has ordinarily an equal right to navigate it or to fish therein; 1 Kent 27; Ang. Tide-Waters 44; and to land upon the sea-shore. Bened. Adm. 224-257.

Every nation has jurisdiction over the person of its own subjects in its own public and private vessels when at sea; and so far territorial jurisdiction may be considered as preserved; for the vessels of a nation are in many respects considered as portions of its territory, and persons on board are protected and governed by the laws of the country to which the vessel belongs. The extent of jurisdiction over adjoining seas is often a question of difficulty, and one that is still open to controversy. As far as a nation can conveniently occupy, and that occupation is acquired by prior possession or treaty, the jurisdiction is exclusive; 1 Kent 29-31. This has been heretofore limited to the distance of a common-shot, or marine league, over the waters adjacent to its shore; 2 Cra. 187, 234; 1 Cra. C. C. 62; Bynkershoek, Qu. Pub. Juris. 61; 1 Azuni, Marit. Law 185, 204; Vattel 207. See LEAGUE; SEAMAN; ADMIRALTY; ARM OF THE SEA; LOW WATER MARK; LITUS MARIS; TERRITORIAL WATERS; SEA-SHORE; LEGISLATIVE POWER; MARITIME BELT.

SEA BATTERIES. Assaults by masters in the merchant service upon seamen, at sea.

SEA DAMAGED. In a contract for sale of goods shipped or to be shipped, the phrase, "Sea damaged, if any, to be taken at a fair valuation," contemplates the risk of damage to the goods by perils of the sea, and does not restrict to any particular ship the subsequent transportation of such goods to their destination. 161 U. S. 57. See PERILS OF THE SEA.

SEA-GREENS. In Scotch Law. Grounds overflowed by the sea in spring tides. Bell, Dict.

SEA-LETTER. SEA-BRIEF. In Maritime Law. A document which should be found on board of every neutral ship; it specifies the nature and quantity of the cargo, the place from whence it comes and its destination. Chitty, Law of Nat. 197; 1 Johns. 192. See SHIP'S PAPERS.

SEA POSTAGE. The difference reached by subtracting inland postage from the total postage. 28 Ct. Cl. 1.

SEA-SHORE. That space of land on the border of the sea which is alternately covered and left dry by the rising and falling of the tide; or, in other words, that space of land between high and low water mark. Hargrave, St. Tr. 12; 6 Mass. 435; 1 Pick. 180; 5 Day 22; 15 Me. 237; 2 Zab. 441; 4 De G. M. & G. 206; 4 Conn. 382; s. c. 16 Am. Rep. 51, n.; 123 Mass. 361; 23 Tex. 358; 70 Cal. 286; 34 Miss. 21. See TIDE; TIDE-WATER.

At common law, the sea-shore, in England, belongs to the crown; in this country, to the state; Ang. Tide-Wat. 20; 3 Kent 347; 27 E. L. & E. 242; 6 Mass. 435; 1 Pick. 180; 60 N. Y. 56; 16 Pet. 367; 3 How. 221; 3 Zab. 624. In England, the sovereign is not the absolute proprietor, but holds the sea-shore subject to the public rights of navigation and fishery; and if he grants it to an individual, his grantee takes subject to the same rights; Phear, Rights of Water 45-55; Ang. Tide-Wat. 21. So in this country it has been held that the rights of fishery and navigation remain unimpaired by the grant of lands covered by navigable water; 6 Gill 121. But the power of the states, unlike that of the crown, is absolute except in so far as it is controlled by the federal constitution; Ang. Tide-Wat. 59. The states, therefore, may regulate the use of their shores and the fisheries thereon, provided such regulations do not interfere with the laws of congress; 4 Wash. C. C. 371; 18 How. 71; 4 Zab. 80; 2 Pet. 245. And see TIDE-WATER; RIVER; FISHERY.

The public right of fishing includes shrimping and gathering all shell-fish or other fish whose natural habitat is between high and low water mark; 5 Day 22; 2 B. & P. 472; 22 Me. 353.

In Massachusetts and Maine, by the colony ordinance of 1641, and by usage arising therefrom, the proprietors of the adjoining land on bays and arms of the sea, and other places where the tide ebbs and flows, go to low water mark, subject to the public easement, and not exceeding one hundred yards below high water mark; 6 Mass. 439; 19 Pick. 191; 3 Kent 429; Dane, Abr. c. 63, a. 8, 4. It was a question whether this ordinance extended to New Hampshire; 17 N. H. 537. A description of lands extending to the sea-shore will not include the shore itself; 6 Mass. 439; 13 Gray 257; 31 Me. 134; but it is the general rule that the owner of land holds to low water mark, although bounded by stakes and stones on the bank of the river; 1 Whart. 181; 5 Dana 181; 6 Humphr. 358.

A conveyance of a wharf has been held to include flats in front of it; 6 Mass. 332; 7 Cush. 66; and as an incident sea weed cast upon them is prima facie an appurtenance belonging to the owner of the soil; 6 Hun 257; 7 Metc. 323. See LAKE; WHARF.

By the Roman law, the shore included the land as far as the greatest wave extended in winter: est autem litus maris, quatenus hibernus fluctus maximus excurrit. Inst. l. 2, t. 1, s. 3. Litus publicum est eatenus quae maxime fluctus excurrit. Dig. 50, 16, 112.

The Civil Code of Louisiana seems to have followed the law of the Institutes and the Digest; for it enacts, art. 442, that the "sea-shore is that space of land over which the waters of the sea are spread in the highest water during the winter season." See 5 Rob. 182; Dougl. 425; 1 Holst. 1; 2 Rolle. Abr. 170; Dy. 326; 5 Co. 107; Bacon, Abr. Courts of Admiralty (A); 16 Pet. 234, 367; Ang. Tide-Waters; 5 M. & W. 327; 22 Me. 350; Coul. & F. Waters; Hale's De Jure Maris, given in full in Hale, Sea Sh. and for the most part in 16 Am. Rep. 54.

SEA WEED. A species of grass which grows in the sea.

When cast upon land, it belongs to the owner of the land adjoining the sea-shore, upon the grounds that it increases gradually, that it is useful as manure and a protection to the ground, and that it is some compensation for the encroachment of the sea upon the land; 3 B. & Ad. 987; 2 Johns. 313, 323. See 5 Vt. 223; 84 N. Y. 215; 2 R. I. 218. But when cast upon the shore between high and low water mark it belongs to the public and may be lawfully appropriated by any person; 40 Conn. 382; s. c. 16 Am. Rep. 54.

SEA WORTHY. In Insurance Law. In a condition to perform a voyage.

SEAL. An impression upon wax, wafer, or some other tenacious substance capable of being impressed. 5 Johns. 239; 4 Kent 452. It does not seem necessary that an impression be made; 6 C. P. 411; Sugd. Powers 232.

Lord Coke defines a seal to be wax, with an impression. 3 Inst. 169. "Sigillum," says he, "est cera impressa, quia cera sine impressione non est sigillum." The definition given above is the common-law definition of a seal; Perkins 129, 134; Brooke, Abr. Feils 17, 30; 2 Leon. 21; 5 Johns. 239; 21 Pick. 417; but any other material besides wax may be used; 1 Am. L. Rev. 639; 5 Cush. 359.

Where the seal of a public officer does not contain the name of the state, but it is written in a blank left for that name, a verification authenticated by such a seal is insufficient; 68 N. W. Rep. 303.

Merlin defines a seal to be a plate of metal with a flat surface, on which is engraved the arms of a prince or nation, or private individual, or other device with which an impression may be made on wax or other substance on paper or parchment, in order to authenticate them; the impression thus made is also called a seal; Répert. mot Sceau; 3 McCord 583; 5 Whart. 563.

A person may adopt any seal as his own, or anything in place of a seal; 35 Fed. Rep. 337; it is not necessarily of any particular form or figure, and may consist of an outline without an enclosure, or of a single dash or flourish of the pen; and its precise form in each case depends wholly upon the taste or fancy of the person who makes it; 121 Pa. 192.

In many states, a scroll or similar device may constitute a valid seal; California, Connecticut, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Jersey, New Mexico, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia, and Wisconsin. In several states the distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments is abolished; Arkansas, California, North Dakota, South Dakota, Mississippi, Indiana, Kentucky, and Tennessee. The use of seals by private persons is unnecessary in Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, Ohio, Tennessee, Utah, and Washington. In some states official or corporate seals may be impressed on the paper itself: California, Connecticut, Dakota, Kansas, New York, Rhode Island, and Virginia. By U. S. R. S. § 8, an impression on the paper of any common process or instrument is sufficient.

When a seal is affixed to an instrument it makes it a specialty, and consideration is presumed; 2 Bla. Com. 446; 94 U. S. 76; but the presumption does not extend to contracts in restraint of trade where actual consideration is wanting; 3 Bing. 327; or where the real consideration was illegal; Whart. Contr. § 495; but where the distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments is abolished by statute, any failure of consideration may be shown; 27 Ia. 251; 21 Ala. 88. One seal may serve for a number of signers; 47 Am. Rep. 521; 36 Am. Dec. 511; although the contrary was held in 7 Gill & J. 248; 5 Md. 327. It is said the burden is upon a party to prove the adoption of another's seal; and the question of the adoption of a seal has been held to be for the jury; 3 Dev. 420. The same contract may be the specialty of one and the parol agreement of another party to it; 20 Ill. 389; whether a mark or character is a seal depends upon the intention of the executant, as shown by the paper; 160 U. S. 514.

It is not necessary to recite in a deed that it is under seal; 34 Am. Dec. 539; 22 Cal. 157; 20 Ill. 339; although the contrary is held in Virginia and Alabama; 1 Wash. C. C. 170; 4 Ala. 140; and is recognized in New Jersey; 16 N. J. L. 324; and in many jurisdictions, conclusions are expressed as to what language in an instrument is a recognition of the seal, it being held that the use of the technical language of specialties is sufficient; 15 Ala. 43; 12 Johns. 197; or if the fact of the seal appears in the attestation clause; 5 Sawy. 510. The word "seal" written or printed within a scroll is held to be a sufficient seal; 42 Miss. 304; 28 Pa. 489; contra, 2 Rand. 440; 1 E. D. Smith 335. A recital in an instrument that it is sealed, will not make it a specialty; 66 Ill. 501; 68 Me. 160.

When an instrument concludes with the words, "witness our hands and seals," and is signed by two persons, with only one seal, the jury may infer from the face of the paper that the person who signed last adopted the seal of the first; 6 Pa. 302.

An executory contract under seal, ignorantly made in pursuance of a parol authority, will be sufficient to maintain an action, the seal being disregarded as mere excess; 60 Pa. 214.

Where a corporation executed a promissory note, payable to the order of its president, attaching thereto, before delivery, its corporate seal, it was held that the note was not a negotiable note under the law merchant, but was a specialty; 8 Fed. Rep. 534. See 1 Ohio 389; PROMISSORY NOTE; as to the origin and use of seals, see Addison, Contr. 6; SCROLL. The affixing of his private seal by a corporate officer to a contract of the corporation binds the latter only by simple contract; 14 Pet. 19; Ang. & Ames, Corp. § 295.

The public seal of a foreign state proves itself; 4 Dall. 416; and public acts, decrees, and judgments exemplified under this seal are received as true and genuine; 2 Cra. 187, 238; 7 Wheat. 273, 335; 2 Conn. 85; 6 Wend. 475; 35 Fed. Rep. 134. See 2 Munf. 53. But to entitle its seal to such authority the foreign state must have been acknowledged by the government within whose jurisdiction the forum is located; 3 Wheat. 610; 9 Ves. 347.

While an action of covenant will lie on an unsealed instrument in the state where executed, it will not lie in the state requiring a sealed instrument to support such action; 8 Pet. 302; nor is the rule different where, by the lex loci contractus, a scroll or other device is recognized as a seal, but is not in the state of the forum; 8 How. 471. Whether any seal is required upon a protest of a bill of exchange is determined by the lex loci contractus; 13 How. 472; 106 U. S. 540. A scroll does not amount to a seal of office; 15 Neb. 470; or a corporate seal; 10 Allen 251.

The seal of a notary public is taken judicial notice of the world over; 2 Esp. 700; 5 Cra. 535; 6 S. & R. 484; 3 Wend. 173; 1 Gray 175; but it must not be a scroll; 4 Blackf. 158. Judicial notice is taken of the seals of superior courts; Com. Dig. Evidence (A 2); not so of foreign courts; 3 East 221; 0 id. 192; except admiralty or marine courts; 2 Cra. 187; 4 id. 292, 435; 3 Conn. 171. See Story, Conf. Laws § 643; 2 Phill. Ev. 454, notes.

In Louisiana and other civil-law jurisdictions the effects of a deceased person are taken into public custody by being sealed, and the details of the action of officials in connection therewith are carefully regulated by statute.

SEAL DAYS. In English Practice. Motion days in the court of chancery, so called because every motion had to be stamped with the seal, which did not lie in court in the ordinary sittings out of term. Whart. Dict.

SEAL FISHERIES. The controversy concerning the sealing interest in Bering sea between the United States and Great Britain has involved an elaborate discussion with respect to the characteristics and habits of the seals, and the question whether their custom of going in herds through the open sea to certain islands at stated periods of the year for breeding purposes, made them the lawful prey of any captor, or whether the United States could assert over them a property right growing out of the fact that unquestionably the home of the animal was in the territory of the United States. This subject occupied the attention of the Paris tribunal under the treaty for the settlement of claims growing out of the seizure of vessels engaged in the seal fishery. The discussions were of great interest and extended to the general question so much mooted by writers on the subject, whether international law had any real basis other than the mere consent of nations to specific propositions. That particular controversy was decided against the United States and the proceedings may be referred to for information on the subject. See INTERNATIONAL LAW.

Rev. St. § 1956 prohibits the killing within the limits of Alaska Territory of fur seals and various other fur-bearing animals under penalty of fine and imprisonment, and forfeiture of vessels found engaged in violating the section, but power is given to the secretary of the treasury to make regulations authorizing the killing of such animals.

Rev. St. § 1957 provides for the prosecution of offences under the preceding section in the United States district courts of California, Oregon, and Washington.

Rev. St. § 1958 authorizes the secretary of the treasury to remit the fine where in his opinion it was incurred without wilful negligence or fraud.

By act of Feb. 21, 1893, it was provided that when any international arrangement for the protection of fur seals should be concluded, the provisions of R. S. § 1956 should be extended over all that portion of the Pacific ocean included in such international arrangement; 2 Sup. 89. By act of Dec. 21, 1897, all citizens of the United States or owing an allegiance thereto are prohibited from killing, capturing, or hunting fur seals in the waters of the Pacific ocean north of Lat. 33° N. and including Bering sea and the sea of Okhotsk, or from equipping vessels for that purpose under penalty of fine and imprisonment and forfeiture of the vessel. Any seals found in any vessel of the United States within the waters specified are presumed to have been unlawfully killed, and the importation into the United States of fur seals' skins is prohibited under penalty of being seized and destroyed; Stat. 55 Cong. 2d Sess. 236.

It has been held by United States courts that the waters of Bering sea are those within the three-mile zone from Alaska; 73 Fed. Rep. 318; 143 U. S. 472. R. S. § 1956 is violated though the animals are taken by boats sent out to a distance from the vessel seized; 60 Fed. Rep. 914. See 50 id. 108. A vessel is liable to forfeiture if her boats take seals within the prohibited zone though she does not go there; 77 Fed. Rep. 908, under act of 1894. R. S. § 1958 does not authorize the secretary of the treasury to remit forfeiture of a vessel condemned by the United States district court for Alaska for being engaged in killing fur seals; 18 Op. Atty. Gen. 564.

See FISHERY.

SEAL OFFICE. In English Practice. The office at which certain judicial writs are sealed with the prerogative seal, and without which they are of no authority. The officer whose duty it is to seal such writs is called "sealer of writs."

SEAL OF THE UNITED STATES. The seal used by the United States in congress assembled shall be the seal of the United States, viz.: ARMS, paleways of thirteen pieces argent and gules; a chief azure; the escutcheon on the breast of the American eagle displayer proper, holding in his dexter talon an olive-branch, and in his sinister a bundle of thirteen arrows, all proper, and in his beak a scroll, inscribed with this motto, "E pluribus unum." For the CREST: over the head of the eagle which appears above the escutcheon, a glory, or breaking through a cloud, proper, and surrounding thirteen stars, forming a constellation argent on an azure field. REVERSE, a pyramid unfinished. In the zenith, an eye in a triangle, surrounded with a glory proper: over the eye, these words, "Annuit cœptis." On the base of the pyramid, the numerical letters MDCCCLXXVI; and underneath, the following motto: "Novus ordo seclorum." Resolution of Congress, June 20, 1782; R. S. § 1798. See 1 Cra. 158. It is in the custody of the secretary of state; R. S. § 1794.

SEAL-PAPER. A document issued by the lord chancellor previously to the commencement of the sittings, detailing the business to be done for each day in his court, and in the courts of the lords justices and vice-chancellors. The master of the rolls in like manner issued a seal-paper in respect to the business to be heard before him. Sm. Ch. Pr. 9.

SEALED AND DELIVERED. The common formula of attestation of deeds and other instruments, written immediately after the witnesses' names.

SEALER. An officer in chancery who sealed the writs and instruments.

According to the Sealer of the year 1798, his attendance was "Perpetual"; he did business at "all Hours" and he had "No Holidays"; but nevertheless he, along with the Deputy Sealer and the Chaff Wax and the Deputy Chaff Wax, was abolished by s. 23 of the Court of Chancery Act, 1852. Byrne.

SEALING A VERDICT. In Practice. The putting a verdict in writing, and placing it in an envelope, which is sealed. To relieve jurors after they have agreed, it is not unusual for the counsel to agree that the jury shall seal their verdict and then separate. When the court is again in session, the jury come in and give their verdict in all respects as if it had not been sealed; and a juror may dissent from it if since the sealing he has honestly changed his mind; 8 Ohio 406; 1 Gilm. 383.

7; Laws of Wisbuy, art. 19; Bened. Adm. 377.

The term seamen, in its most enlarged sense, includes the captain as well as other persons of the crew; in a more confined signification, it extends only to the common sailors; 3 Pardessus, n. 667. But the mate; 1 Pet. Adm. 246; the cook and steward; 2 id. 268; and engineers, clerks, carpenters, firemen, deck-hands, porters, and chamber-maids, on passenger-steamers, when necessary for the service of the ship; 1 Conkl. Adm. 107; 2 Pars. Marit. Law 583; are considered, as to their rights to sue in the admiralty, as common seamen; and persons employed on board of steamboats and lighters engaged in trade or commerce on tide-water are within the admiralty jurisdiction; while those employed in ferry-boats are not; Gilp. 203, 532. Persons who do not contribute their aid in navigating the vessel or to its preservation in the course of their occupation, as musicians, are not to be considered as seamen with a right to sue in the admiralty for their wages; Gilp. 516. Persons employed upon a flat boat with an engine erected thereon, mainly employed in constructing bulkheads and to assist in moving materials to and fro, are to be regarded as rendering maritime services, so as to give them a lien on the vessel for their wages; 84 Fed. Rep. 200. One who brings a vessel to her home port, and lays her up there, i. e. anchors her out of the channel, pumps her out, dries her sails, sees to her fastenings, and renders other services usually performed by mariners, is entitled to a lien for his compensation; 59 Fed. Rep. 297. See LIEN.

Seamen are employed either in merchant-vessels for private service, or in public vessels for the service of the United States.

Seamen in the merchant-vessels are required to enter into a contract in writing, commonly called shipping articles, which see. This contract being entered into, they are bound, under severe penalties, to render themselves on board the vessel according to the agreement; they are not at liberty to leave the ship without the consent of the captain or commanding officer; and for such absence, when less than forty-eight hours, they forfeit three days' wages for every day of absence; and when the absence is more than forty-eight hours at one time, they forfeit all the wages due to them, and all their goods and chattels which were on board the vessel, or in any store where they may have been lodged at the time of their desertion, to the use of the owners of the vessel; and they are liable for damages for hiring other hands. They may be imprisoned for desertion until the ship is ready to sail.

A consular officer of the United States may discharge a seaman on the application of the master, for any cause sanctioned by the usages and principles of maritime law, as recognized in the United States, on the payment of the wages then earned; and all claims for wages for the remainder of the voyage is thereby cut off and barred; 36 Fed. Rep. 442.

On board, a seaman is bound to do his duty to the utmost of his ability; and when his services are required for extraordinary exertions, either in consequence of the death of other seamen or on account of unforeseen perils, he is not entitled to an increase of wages, although it may have been promised to him; 2 Camp. 317; 38 U. S. App. 219. For disobedience he could formerly be imprisoned or punished with stripes; but the correction must be reasonable; 4 Mas. 508; 2 Day 294; 1 Wash. C. C. 316; but see CORRECTION; ASSAULT; BATTERY; and, for just cause, may be put ashore in a foreign country; 1 Pet. Adm. 186; 2 id. 268; 2 East 145. By act of congress, Sept. 28, 1850, it is provided that flogging in the navy and on board of vessels of commerce be abolished. And this prohibits corporal punishment by stripes inflicted with a cat, and any punishment which in substance amounts thereto; 1 Curt. C. C. 501. See 35 Fed. Rep. 153. A master may punish a seaman who refuses to do his duty, and may, if he is incorrigible, discharge him, confine him, or deprive him of privileges; but forfeiture of wages cannot be superadded to corporal punishment, and it is not within the ordinary powers of a master to imprison a sailor on shore; 54 Fed. Rep. 633.

Seamen are entitled to their wages, of which one-third is due at every port at which the vessel shall unlade and deliver her cargo before the voyage be ended; and at the end of the voyage an easy and speedy remedy is given them to recover all unpaid wages. When taken sick, a seaman is entitled to medical advice and aid at the expense of the ship, such expense being considered in the nature of additional wages and as constituting a just remuneration for his labor and services; Gilp. 435; 2 Mas. 541; 40 Fed. Rep. 904. In case of sickness preventing a performance of duty, if the malady be not occasioned by the mariner's misconduct, the full wages are payable; and if a sailor dies on the voyage, his heirs shall have his full wages; 41 Fed. Rep. 224; See 134.

The right of seamen to wages is founded not in the shipping articles, but in the services performed; See 395; and to recover such wages the seaman has a triple remedy,—against the vessel, the owner, and the master; Gilp. 592; See 254. But he cannot claim wages to the end of the voyage when he has obtained his discharge at his own solicitation, and against the advice and even against the expostulation of the master; 40 Fed. Rep. 903. The legislation of most maritime countries, ancient and modern, established that the contract of a seaman always involved, to a certain extent, the surrender of his personal liberty during the life of the contract, and the necessities, and perhaps the safety, of navigation have called into existence legislation, by nearly all maritime nations, for the purpose of securing the personal attendance of the crew on board and for their criminal punishment for their desertion or absence without leave; and it is, therefore, a natural and equitable result that the expenses of their confinement and the wages of their substitutes whilst they are refusing to work should be deducted from their wages; 85 Fed. Rep. 978. In cases of desertion of seamen, the proper expenses for their arrest and detention, and the cost of supplying substitutes whilst so detained, and also the cost of any damage to property by them, may be deducted from their wages; id.

When destitute in foreign ports, American consuls and commercial agents are required to provide for them, and for their passage to some port of the United States, in a reasonable manner, at the expense of the United States; and American vessels are bound to take such seamen on board at the request of the consul, but not exceeding two men for every hundred tons of the ship, and transport them to the United States, on such terms, not exceeding ten dollars for each person, as may be agreed on. See R. S. §§ 4534-4591; SEAMEN'S FUND.

A seaman becomes one of the crew of a merchant vessel from the time he signs the shipping articles, and of a man of war from the time he is detailed to her service. 183 U. S. 424.

Seamen in the public service are governed by particular laws. See NAVY; NAVAL CODE; LIEN; DESERTION OF A SEAMAN; SHIPS; PARTIES.

SEAMEN'S FUND. By the act of July 16, 1798, a provision is made for raising a fund for the relief of disabled and sick seamen: the master of every vessel arriving from a foreign port into the United States is required to pay to the collector of customs at the rate of twenty cents per month for every seaman employed on board of his vessel, which sum he may retain out of the wages of such seamen; vessels engaged in the coasting trade, and boats, rafts, or flats navigating the Mississippi with intention to proceed to New Orleans, are also laid under similar obligations. The fund thus raised is to be employed by the president of the United States, as circumstances shall require, for the benefit and convenience of sick and disabled American seamen. Act of March 8, 1802, s. 1.

By R. S. § 4584, it is provided that when a seaman is discharged in a foreign country with his own consent, or when the ship is sold there, he shall, in addition to his usual wages, be paid three months' wages into the hands of the American consul, two-thirds of which are to be paid to such seamen on his engagement on board any vessel to return home, and the remaining one-third is retained in aid of a fund for the relief of distressed American seamen in foreign ports. See 11 Johns. 66; 12 id. 143; 1 Mas. 45; 4 id. 541; Edw. Adm. 239.

SEARCH. In Criminal Law. An examination of a man's house, premises, or person, for the purpose of discovering proof of his guilt in relation to some crime or misdemeanor of which he is accused. See SEARCH WARRANT.

By act of March 2, 1799, s. 68, it is enacted that every collector, naval officer, and surveyor, or other person specially appointed by either of them for that purpose, shall have full power and authority to enter any ship or vessel or any dwelling-house in the daytime, upon taking proper measures, to search for goods forfeited for non-payment of duties; R. S. § 3068.

In England a prisoner arrested for an indictable offence may be searched for the purpose of finding upon him any property which will afford material evidence for the prosecution or any weapon or instrument which might be used for the purpose of escape or of inflicting injury on himself or others. There does not appear to be any authority permitting the search of prisoners for other purposes than the above, and there have been cases in which the court has directed property taken from an unconvicted person and not necessary to be used for the purpose of evidence, to be returned to him. It is said that money not connected with the offence charged should not be taken from a prisoner. Women should be employed to search female prisoners. The person's lodgings and effects may also be searched. In England special statutory provisions as to searching are made in the case of numerous specified crimes; see Haycraft, Ex. Pow. in Rel. to Crime.

Where one was fined for drunkenness and the mayor, as a committing magistrate, found certain money on his person and applied it, against his protest, to the payment of the fine, and the prisoner insisted upon his right to accept imprisonment in place of a fine, it was held that the mayor was justified; 19 Co. Ct. Rep. p. 669.

Officers making arrests may seize articles on a prisoner and retain them for the purposes of evidence against him, though they belong to other parties; 36 Wash. L. Rep. 421. See PRISONER.

An English (1897) act provides that police magistrates may order the return of such articles, or, if not claimed, may make such order as to their disposal as they deem proper. See RES JUDICATA, as to this act.

In Practice. An examination made in the proper lien office for mortgages, liens, judgments, or other incumbrances against real estate. The certificate given by the officer as to the result of such examination is also called a search.

Conveyancers and others who cause searches to be made ought to be very careful that they should be correct with regard to the time during which the person against whom the search has been made owned the premises; to the property searched against, which ought to be properly described; and to the form of the certificate of search. In England, by the act of 1897, a search may be ordered by telegraph.

See JUDICATURE; LIEN.

See CORPORATION.

SEARCH, RIGHT OF. In International Law. The right existing in a belligerent to visit and search a neutral vessel at sea. On the continent of Europe this is called the right of visit. A distinction was formerly maintained by England between visitation and search. The former was claimed in time of peace, to ascertain whether a merchant vessel was justly entitled to the protection of the flag she had hoisted. The distinction was repudiated by Mr. Webster and by Wheaton and Kent (who concede the right of approach for the same purpose) and by Story, J., in 11 Wheat. 42. Visitation and search are no longer permissible in time of peace; 3 Whart. Dig. Int. L. § 327; except where a cruiser is sent in pursuit of a merchant vessel which has left its port under the suspicion of having committed a fraud upon the revenue, or some other crime; Snow, Lect. Int. L. 159.

The right does not extend to examine the cargo, nor does it extend to a ship of war, it being strictly confined to the searching of merchant-vessels. The exercise of the right is to prevent the commerce of contraband goods. Although frequently resisted by powerful neutral nations, yet this right appears now to be fixed beyond contravention; 1 C. Rob. 840; 11 Wheat. 42. Unless in extreme cases of gross abuse of his right by a belligerent, the neutral has no right to resist a search; 1 Kent 154.

The right of search does not exist in time of peace except upon reasonable ground to believe that the vessel is a pirate. By the Treaty of Washington, 1863, Great Britain and the United States concede a mutual right of search in certain latitudes where there is reasonable ground to believe that the flag of either country is being used to cover the African slave trade.

The right, in time of war, can be exercised by a belligerent's war-vessel or a privateer. It exists even though the neutral vessel have a government mail on board; 5 Wall. 28; neutral public ships are not subject to it; 1 Kent 158.

In making a search the ship papers are first examined, and if anything suspicious appear, the ship and cargo may be examined. If the search is resisted, or if the ship's papers (q. v.) are unsatisfactory or are absent or are destroyed or concealed, the ship may be captured. The right does not extend to persons on board. A neutral when searched is bound to have and produce proper papers. If a neutral ship resists search, both ship and cargo are liable to confiscation; 4 C. Rob. 408.

In treaties made by the United States it has generally been stipulated that the declaration of the commander of the convoy that the vessels under his charge belong to his flag and, when bound to an enemy's port, that they carry no contraband of war, shall be sufficient, and European nations, except England, have generally excepted from search merchant vessels under the convoy of public ships of the same state; and such is the opinion of most continental writers. Lord Stowell and English writers have held the opposite opinion as to the right of search in such case; 2 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 284; and so Kent holds; 1 Kent 157, and Story, J., in 2 Cra. 438. Sailing under an enemy's convoy is conclusive ground of confiscation in England; 2 Halleck, Int. L. 286; so also 2 Cra. 438 (a dictum by Story, J.), and 1 Kent 157.

By the navy regulations, 1876, United States vessels of war are not to take under their convoy the vessels of any power at war with another, with which we are at peace, nor vessels of a neutral, unless for some special reason. Commanding officers are forbidden to permit vessels under their protection to be searched or retained by a belligerent.

The exercise of search is not a trespass; but if the cruiser capture the vessel as prize, and upon adjudication there is no probable cause, the cruiser is responsible; 2 Mas. 439.

As to the right of search—or rather of visitation—in time of peace, especially in its connection with the suppression of the slave-trade, see Wheat. Right of Search; Webster, Works, vol. 6, 829; 3 Phillimore, Int. Law, Visit and Search; Morse, Citizen-ship 75.

SEARCH WARRANT. In Practice. A warrant requiring the officer to whom it is addressed to search a house, or other place, therein specified, for property therein alleged to have been stolen, and, if the same shall be found upon such search, to bring the goods so found, together with the body of the person occupying the same, who is named, before the justice or other officer granting the warrant, or some other justice of the peace, or other lawfully authorized officer.

It should be given under the hand and seal of the justice, and dated.

Originally search warrants were used almost exclusively for the discovery of stolen property, but of late years their use has been extended to searches for intoxicating liquors; 54 N. H. 104; 150 Mass. 164; gaming implements; 119 id. 332; and the like. The United States laws provide for the search in the daytime only, by any custom-house officer under a search warrant; Rev. Stat. § 3006. Ownership in some specific person must be alleged in the information; 64 Ia. 800.

The constitution of the United States, Amendm. art. 4, declares that "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated; and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the person or thing to be seized." See 11 Johns. 500; 3 Cra. 447; Story, Const. 1900; 116 U. S. 816.

Hale, 2 Pl. Cr. 140, recommends great caution in granting such warrants:—first, that they be not granted without oath made before a justice of a felony committed, and that the complainant has probable cause to suspect that the goods are in such a house or place, and his reason for such suspicion, see 2 Wils. 283; 1 Dowl. & R. 97; 18 Mass. 236; 5 Ired. 45; 1 R. I. 464; second, that such warrants express that the search shall be made in the daytime (but in this country this limitation is not observed; 25 Conn. 278; 145 Mass. 182; third, that they ought to be directed to a constable or other proper officer, and not to a private person; fourth, that they ought to command the officer to bring the stolen goods, and the person in whose custody they are, before some justice of the peace. See 6 B. & C. 332; 5 Metc. Mass. 98. They should designate the place to be searched; 1 M. & W. 255; 2 Metc. 329; 2 J. J. Marsh. 44; 6 Blackf. 249; 1 Conn. 40; 10 Johns. 288. The description "suspected place" is not sufficient; 8 Par. Cr. C. 656. It has been said that "the description of the place to be searched should be as certain in a warrant as would be necessary in a deed to convey such place;" 41 Me. 254. Trespass will not lie against a party who has procured a search warrant to search for stolen goods, if the warrant be duly issued and regularly executed; 6 Wend. 382; but if the warrant itself shows that the magistrate had no jurisdiction, the officer who serves it will be a trespasser; 19 How. St. Tr. 1029; 5 Ired. 45. And see 6 Me. 421; 2 Conn. 700; 11 Mass. 500; 2 Litt. 281; 6 Gill & J. 877.

Search warrants are available only in public prosecutions and not to enforce private rights; 18 Gray 454, where it was said: "Even in those cases, if we may rely on the authority of Lord Coke, their legality was formerly doubted; and Lord Camden said that they crept into the law by imperceptible practice. But their legality has long been considered to be established, on the ground of public necessity; because, without them, felons and other malefactors would escape detection." At common law they were confined to places, but in California it is held that a search warrant may be authorized by law for the person; 66 Cal. 284. See Cooley, Const. Lim., 6th ed. 364; 1 Archb. Cr. Pr. & Pl. 126, note; 1 Bish. New Cr. Proc. ch. 16; GENERAL WARRANT.

SEARCHER. See LAND WAITER.

SEAT OF JUSTICE. The county seat; the place where the courthouse, jail, and county offices are located; the place where the chancery, circuit, and county courts are held, and where the county records are kept. 20 S. W. Rep. (Tenn.) 502.

SEATED LANDS. In the early land legislation of some of the United States, seated is used, in connection with improved, to denote lands of which actual possession was taken. 5 Pet. 468.

Lands which are actually resided upon, cultivated, or occupied. Residence without cultivation or cultivation without residence, or both together, constitute seated lands. 6 Watts 269; 4 Pa. 214; 55 id. 98; 73 id. 418. See UNSEATED LANDS.

SEAWORTHINESS. In Maritime Law. The sufficiency of the vessel in materials, construction, equipment, officers, men, and outfit, for the trade or service in which it is employed.

It is that quality which fits a ship for carrying safely the particular cargo which it takes on board for the voyage for which it is destined. 8 U. S. App. 580.

Under a marine policy on ship, freight, or cargo, the fitness for the service of the vessel, if there is no provision to the contrary at the outset, is an implied condition, non-compliance with which defeats the insurance; 2 Johns. 231; 1 Whart. 359; 1 Camp. 1; 5 Pick. 21; 2 Ohio 211; 3 B. & Ald. 73; 6 Cow. 270; 3 Hill N. Y. 259; 4 Mas. 439; 20 Wend. 287; 1 Pet. C. 410; 1 Wall. Jr. 273; 1 Curt. C. 278; 26 Pa. 192; 4 H. L. C. 253; Ole. 110; 12 Md. 348.

It is of no consequence whether the insured was aware of the condition of the ship, or not. His innocence or ignorance is no answer to the fact that the ship was not seaworthy. When the want of seaworthiness arises from justifiable ignorance of the cause of the defect, and is discovered and remedied before any injury occurs, it is not to be considered as a defect; 1 Johns. 241; 1 Pet. 183; 2 B. & Ald. 73. See 136 U. S. 408.

The warranty of seaworthiness is absolute and extends to latent defects; 10 F. D. 103. Seaworthiness varies with the place of voyage, the class of ship, and the nature of the cargo; 2 F. & F. 263.

It includes a master having competent skill in navigation; 3 C. & P. 18; and a sufficient and competent crew; 7 B. & C. 798; and proper equipment, including proper medicines and necessities for the voyage; 3 Esp. 257.

A vessel is not seaworthy if the cargo is so badly stowed that it is difficult and dangerous to navigate the ship; 2 F. & F. 663; or if she is not properly disinfected for the carriage of cattle; 12 Q. B. Div. 297; or has a defective crank-shaft; 10 P. D. 103; as to unseaworthiness by reason of not employing a pilot, it is said that if a vessel sails from a port where there is a pilot and the navigation requires one, the master must employ one; 3 B. & Ad. 889; but in entering a port, if the master uses due diligence to obtain a pilot but cannot find one, and, being competent himself, attempts to enter a harbor without one, it is not a breach of the warranty of seaworthiness; 3 B. & Ad. 383.

The warranty of seaworthiness in a time policy is complied with if the vessel be seaworthy at the commencement of the risk; 124 U. S. 405. Where a vessel sprung a leak, and was lost without encountering any sea peril, it was held that she was not seaworthy, heavy seas not being a sea peril within the meaning of a policy of marine insurance; 42 Fed. Rep. 861.

The opinion of carpenters who have repaired the vessel, however they may strengthen the presumption that the ship is seaworthy, when it is favorable, is not conclusive of the fact of seaworthiness; 4 Dowl. 269. The presumption prima facie is for seaworthiness; 1 Dowl. 836. See 40 Fed. Rep. 847. And it is presumed that a vessel continues seaworthy if she was so at the inception of the risk; 20 Pick. 389. See 1 Brev. 252. Where nothing is said on the subject, seaworthiness is an implied condition of a hiring of shipping; 78 Mich. 158. Any sort of disrepair left in the ship, by which she or the cargo may suffer, is a breach of the warranty of seaworthiness. A deficiency of force in the crew, or of skill in the master, mate, etc., is a want of seaworthiness; 1 Camp. 1; 4 Du. N. Y. 234; 30 Fed. Rep. 784. See 48 Fed. Rep. 463. But if there was once a sufficient crew, their temporary absence will not be considered a breach of warranty; 2 B. & Ald. 73; 1 Johns. Cas. 184; 1 Pet. 183. A charge of unseaworthiness by reason of the pilot's intoxication is not sustained when there is no evidence that he was not perfectly capable when the vessel left port, or, if he was not, that the master knew the fact, and where the pilot, when sober, was one of the best; 41 Fed. Rep. 374. A vessel may be rendered not seaworthy by being overloaded; 2 B. & Ald. 320; or by having a defective compass; 138 U. S. 403. The burden of the proof of seaworthiness is on the one who alleges it; 3 Q. B. Div. 594. The fact that a ship after being eleven hours at sea in fair weather began to leak so that she was obliged to run for a harbor of refuge, is sufficient to throw the burden of proof on the carrier even if it is not sufficient proof of unseaworthiness; 75 Fed. Rep. 74.

It can never be settled by positive rules of law how far this obligation of seaworthiness extends in any particular case, for the reason that improvements and changes in the means and modes of navigation frequently require new implements, or new forms of old ones; and these, though not necessary at first, become so when there is an established usage that all ships of a certain quality, or those to be sent on certain voyages or used for certain purposes, shall have them; 2 Pars. Marit. Law 134. Seaworthiness is, therefore, in general, a question of fact; 1 Pet. 170, 184; 9 Wall. 526; 116 N. Y. 590.

SEAWORTHY FOR THE VOYAGE. The words in the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876, mean that the ship must be "in a fit state, as to repairs, equipment, and crew, and in all other respects, to encounter ordinary perils of the voyage." They do not include "a neglect properly to use the appliances on board a vessel well equipped and furnished." [1894] App. Cas. 222, approving 5 M. & W. 405.

SEBASTOMANIA. In Medical Jurisprudence. Religious insanity or monomania.

SECESSION. The act of withdrawing; separation.

The attempted secession of eleven of the states from the United States government led to the civil war of 1861-65, and gave rise to many important decisions affecting the mutual relations of the national and state governments, and the rights of citizens under contracts made before and during the war. And first, as to the Power or Right of Secession.

The union of the states was never a purely artificial relation. By the articles of confederation the union was declared to be perpetual, and the constitution was ordained to form a more perfect union. But this by no means implies the loss of individual existence on the part of the states; the constitution looks throughout to an indestructible union of indestructible states; and the more recent states are no less subject to this principle than the original ones. Considered as transactions under the constitution, the ordinance of secession adopted by any one of the seceding states, and all the acts of her legislature intended to give effect to that ordinance, were absolutely null and without operation in law. The state did not cease to be a state, nor her citizens, citizens of the union. The war of secession was therefore treason. It is the practice of modern governments when attacked by formidable rebellion to concede belligerent rights; this establishes no rights except during the war. Legal rights could neither be created nor defeated by the action of the government of the Confederate States. Neither the pretended acts of secession nor the magnitude of the war could constitute a confederate state government de facto, so as to create civil rights which could outlast the war, except that acts necessary to peace and good order among citizens, such as those relating to private relations and private property, which would be valid if emanating from a lawful government, must be regarded in general as valid when proceeding from an actual, though unlawful, government; 7 Wall. 700; 1 Abb. U. S. 50; Chase's Dec. 138.

As to the validity of contracts. Where one engaged actively in the service of the rebel government purchased cotton which was afterwards sold, and the proceeds paid into the treasury, held, that his purchase of the cotton was illegal and void and gave him no title thereto; 43 U. S. 603; 21 Wall. 350. The Confederate government had no corporate power to take, hold, or convey a valid title to property, real and personal, and a purchaser of cotton from said government during the rebellion acquired no title thereto; 4 C. 91.

Confederate bonds. The bonds issued by the seceding states do not constitute a valid consideration for a promissory note; 15 Wall. 439; and so of the securities known as confederate treasury notes; 1 Abb. U. S. Rep. 251; but a promise to pay in "Confederate notes" in consideration of the receipt of such notes and of drafts payable by them, is neither a nudum pactum nor an illegal contract; 18 Wall. 483.

Validity of statutes. When the military forces of the Confederate government were overthrown, it perished, and with it all its enactments. But the legislative acts of the several states forming the confederacy stand on different grounds, and so far as they did not impair or tend to impair the supremacy of the national authority or the just rights of citizens under the constitution, they are in general to be treated as valid and binding; 96 U. S. 177; 97 id. 594; 1 Chase's Dec. 167; 7 Wall. 733; 22 id. 99.

Payments made under the Confederate sequestration acts were void and gave no title. See 96 U. S. 193.

Decisions of the Confederate courts. Judgments of such courts merely settling the rights of private parties actually within their jurisdiction, not tending to defeat the just rights of citizens of the United States, nor in furtherance of laws passed in aid of the rebellion, are valid; 1 Woods 357; 97 U. S. 501; and a judgment of the court of Georgia in St. Louis v. R. & N. O. R. Co., 15 Wall. 610, of November, 1861, for the purchase-money of slaves, was held a valid judgment when entered, and enforceable in 1871; 10 Am. L. Reg. s. 641. But during the war, the courts of states in rebellion had no jurisdiction of parties residing in states which adhered to the national government; 10 Am. L. Reg. s. 33. See further, 15 Wall. 610; 12 Op. Att. Gen. 141, 182; 13 id. 149; 45 Ga. 370; 20 Grant 31; 13 Wall. 646; Hurd's Theory of Nat. Govt.; RECONSTRUCTION; CONFEDERATE STATES; CONFEDERATE MONEY; WAR.

SECK. A want of remedy by distress. Littleton, s. 213. See RENT. Want of present fruit or profit, as in the case of the reversion without rent or other service, except fealty. Co. Litt. 151 b, n. 5.

SECOND-CLASS MATTER. See MAIL MATTER.

SECOND COUSINS. Those who are related, being descended from the same great-grandfather, or great-grandmother. L. R. 19 Ch. Div. 204. See LEGACY.

SECOND DELIVERANCE. The name of a writ given by statute of Westminster 2d, 13 Edw. I. c. 2, founded on the record of a former action of replevin. Co. 2d Inst. 341. It commands the sheriff, if the plaintiff make him secure of prosecuting his claim and returning the chattels which were adjudged to the defendant by reason of the plaintiff's default, to make deliverance. On being nonsuited, the plaintiff in replevin might, at common law, have brought another replevin, and so ad infinitum, to the intolerable vexation of the defendant. The statute of Westminster restrains the plaintiff when nonsuited from so doing, but allows him this writ, issuing out of the original record, in order to have the same distress delivered again to him, on his giving the like security as before; 3 Bla. Com. 150.

SECOND DISTRESS. See DISTRESS.

SECOND-HAND EVIDENCE. This term is sometimes applied to hearsay evidence, and should not be confounded with secondary evidence. See POW. EV.

SECOND SURCHARGE, WRIT OF. The name of a writ issued in England against a commoner who has a second time surcharged the common. 3 Bla. Com. 239.

SECONDARY. An officer who is second or next to the chief officer; as, secondaries to the protonotaries of the courts of king's bench or common pleas; secondary of the remembrancer in the exchequer, etc. Jacob, L. Dict.

SECONDARY BOYCOTT. See BOYCOTT.

SECONDARY CONVEYANCES, or derivative conveyances, are those which presuppose some other conveyance precedent, and only serve to enlarge, confirm, alter, restrain, restore, or transfer the interest granted by such original conveyance. 2 Sharsw. Illa. Com. 234*.

SECONDARY EVIDENCE. That evidence which is admissible after proof which accounts satisfactorily for the absence of the evidence. The rule which requires the production of the best evidence of which the case in its nature is susceptible, is adopted for the prevention of fraud and is essential to the administration of justice; 31 Fed. Rep. 313. For discussion of this subject see EVIDENCE.

Secondary evidence includes:

1. Examined copies, exemplifications, office copies, and certified copies.
2. Other copies made from the original and proved to be correct.
3. Counterparts of documents as against the parties who did not execute them.
4. Oral accounts of the contents of a document given by some person who has himself seen it; Steph. Dig. Ev. art. 70. A good illustration of the rule respecting such evidence is that in an action to recover a stock subscription, the subscription paper is primary evidence; the stock ledger is secondary; 51 Fed. Rep. 409.

SECONDARY USE. A use limited to take effect in derogation of a preceding estate, otherwise called a "shifting use" as a conveyance to the use of A and his heirs, with a proviso that when B returns from India, then to the use of C and his heirs. 1 Steph. Com. 546.

SECONDS. In Criminal Law. Those persons who assist, direct, and support others engaged in fighting a duel.

Where the principal in deliberate duelling would be guilty of murder, the second is considered equally guilty. It has been contended that the second of him who is killed is equally guilty with the second of the successful principal; but this is denied by Hale, who considers such a one guilty only of a great misdemeanor; 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 311.

SECRET COMMITTEE. A secret committee of the house of commons is a committee especially appointed to investigate a certain matter, and secrecy being deemed necessary in furtherance of its objects, its proceedings are conducted with closed doors. All other committees are open to members of the house, although they may not be serving upon them. Brown.

SECRET OFFICIAL BALLOT. One furnished by public authority to the voters at the polls, and marked by each voter in private at the polls, and then and there deposited. 154 Ky. 520, 157 S. W. 1147.

SECRET PARTNERSHIP. One where the existence of certain persons as partners is not avowed to the public. 49 N. H. 225. See PARTNERS.

Generally used in contradistinction to notorious and open partnership. Whether the business is carried on in the name and firm of one partner only, or of him and company, would in this respect, make no difference. 5 Pet. (U. S.) 555; 49 N. H. 225.

SECRET SERVICE. A branch of government service concerned with the detection of counterfeiting and other offences, civil or political, committed or threatened by persons who operate in secrecy. It is under the charge and direction of the treasury department.

SECRETARY. An officer who, by order of his superior, writes letters and other instruments. He is so called because he is possessed of the secrets of his employer. This term was used in France in 1343, and in England the term secretary was first applied to the clerks of the king, who being always near his person were called clerks of the secret, and in the reign of Henry VIII. the term secretary of state came into use.

In the United States the term is used to denote the head of a department: as, secretary of state, etc. See DEPARTMENT.

SECRETARY OF EMBASSY. An officer appointed by the sovereign power to accompany a minister of the first or second rank, and sometimes, though not often, of an inferior rank.

He is, in fact, a species of public minister; for, independently of his protection as attached to an ambassador's suite, he enjoys in his own right the same protection of the law of nations, and the same immunities, as an ambassador. But private secretaries of a minister must not be confounded with secretaries of embassy or of legation. Such private secretaries are entitled to protection only as belonging to the suite of the ambassador.

SECRETARY OF LEGATION. An officer employed to attend a foreign mission and to perform certain duties as clerk.

He is considered a diplomatic officer; R. S. § 1674. The salary of a secretary of embassy, or the secretary of a minister plenipotentiary, is the same as that of a secretary of legation.

SECRETARY OF STATE. In the United States. The chief officer of the State Department of the Federal Government. He is subordinate to the President and subject, like heads of other branches of the Executive, to the direction of Congress. He also has charge of the United States Seal. Each State has a similar official. English.

In England. Acts of Parliament frequently speak of the "Secretary of State" as if there were only one. But the expression means "one of His Majesty's principal Secretaries of State for the time being," unless a contrary intention appears. The principal Secretaries of State are those for the Home Department, for Foreign Affairs, for the Colonies, for the War Department, for Air, and for India. Not more than five of them, and not more than five of their under-secretaries—each of them has a parliamentary under-secretary—may sit in the House of Commons at the same time. Each Secretary of State can do anything which any one of the others is empowered to do; but for purposes of administrative convenience each of them confines himself to such matters as properly appertain to his own department. Byrne.

SECRETS OF STATE. A judge at Nisi Prius has no power to compel a witness to produce documents connected with affairs of State, if their production would be injurious to the public service; and that question must be determined, not by the Judge, but by the head of the department having the custody of the documents.

The case, however, is different, where the head of the department does not personally attend at the trial, but sends a subordinate with the documents, to be produced or not as the Judge may think proper: Per Pollock, C. B., Bramwell, B., and Wilde, B.

Whenever the Judge is satisfied that the document may be made public without prejudice to the public service he ought to compel its production, notwithstanding the reluctance of the head of the department to produce it. 5 H. & N. 838.

SECTA (Lat. secur, to follow). The persons, two or more in number, whom the plaintiff produced in court, in the ancient form of proceedings, immediately upon making his declaration, to confirm the allegations therein, before they were called in question by the defendant's plea. Bracton 214 a. The word appears to have been used as denoting that these persons followed the plaintiff into court; that is, came in a matter in which the plaintiff was the leader or one principally concerned. The actual production of suit was discontinued very early; 3 Bla. Com. 205; but the formula "et inde producit sectam" (for which in more modern pleadings "and thereupon he brings suit" is substituted) continued till the abolition of the Latin form of pleadings. Steph. Pl., And. ed. 171. The count in dover and writs of right did not so conclude, however; 1 Chitty, Pl. 309. A suit or action. Hob.

20; Bracton 399 b. A suit of clothes. Cowel; Spelman, Gloss.

SECTA AD CURIAM. A writ that lay against him who refused to perform his suit either to the county court or the court-baron. Cowel.

Ad Furnum. Suit due a public bake-house.

Ad Molendrinum. A service arising from the usage, time out of mind, of carrying corn to a particular mill to be ground. 3 Bla. Com. 235. A writ adapted to the injury lay at the old law. Fitzh. N. B. 123.

Ad Torrale. Suit due a man's kiln or malt-house. 3 Bla. Com. 235.

Curie. Suit at court. The service due from tenants to the lord of attending his courts-baron, both to answer complaints alleged against themselves, and for the trial of their fellow-tenants. 2 Bla. Com. 54.

SECTA FACIENDA PER ILLAM QUE HABET ENICIAM PARTEM. A writ to compel the heir, who has the elder's part of the co-heirs, to perform suit and services for all the coparceners. Reg. Orig. 177.

SECTA REGALIS. A suit or service by which all persons were bound twice in a year to attend the sheriff's tourn.

SECTA UNICA TANTUM FACIENDA PRO PLURIBUS HEREDITATIBUS. A writ for an heir who was distrained by the lord to do more suits than one, that he should be allowed to do one suit only in respect of the land of divers heirs descended to him. Cowel.

SECTARIAN. A Roman Catholic orphanage where the pupils are instructed in the doctrines of their church is a sectarian institution within a constitutional provision forbidding the use of public funds for sectarian purposes. 16 Nev. 373. See RELIGION.

A religious sect is a body of number of persons united in tenets, but constituting a distinct organization or party by holding sentiments or doctrines different from those of other sects or people. In the sense intended by the constitution of Nevada, every sect of that character is "sectarian." Anderson; 16 Nev. 385.

SECTATORES. A man's followers. Suits of court among the Saxons. 1 Reeve's Hist. Eng. L. 22.

SECTION. A part separated from the rest, a division, a portion, as, specifically, a distinct part of a book or writing; the subdivision of a chapter; the division of a law or other writing, a paragraph, an article. 23 Neb. 128. The smallest numbered subdivision of a statute, code, textbook, etc., which contains a distinct subject. A paragraph (q. v.); an article. 23 Neb. 128.

SECTION OF LAND. A parcel of government land containing six hundred and forty acres. The lands of the United States are surveyed into parcels of six hundred and forty acres; each such parcel is called a section.

These sections are divided into half-sections, each of which contains three hundred and twenty acres, and into quarter-sections of one hundred and sixty acres each. See 2 Washb. R. P.

SECTIS NON FACIENDIS. A writ for a woman, who, for her dower, ought not to perform suit of court. Reg. Orig. 174.

SECTORES (Lat.). In Roman Law. Bidders at an auction. Babington, Auct. 2.

SECULAR. Temporal things; of the world; worldly. 14 N. H. 139.

SECURITATIS PACIS. A writ that lay for one who was threatened with death or bodily harm by another, against him who so threatened. Reg. Orig. 98.

SECURITIES. See VALUABLE SECURITIES.

SECURITY. That which renders a matter sure; an instrument which renders certain the performance of a contract. A person who becomes the surety for another, or who engages himself for the performance of another's contract. See 8 Blackf. 481. See FIRST-CLASS; HERITABLE SECURITY.

SECURITY FOR COSTS. In Practice. In some courts there is a rule that when the plaintiff resides abroad he shall give security for costs, and until that has been done, when demanded, he cannot proceed in his action.

This is a right which the defendant must claim in proper time; for if he once waives it he cannot afterwards claim it: the waiver is seldom or perhaps never expressly made, but is generally implied from the acts of the defendant. When the defendant had undertaken to accept short notice of trial; 2 H. Bla. 573; or after issue joined, and when he knew of plaintiff's residence abroad, or, with such knowledge, when the defendant takes any step in the cause, these several acts will amount to a waiver; 5 B. & Ald. 702; 3 Wash. Ty. 518. It is never too late, however, if the motion do not delay the trial; 1 Yeates 176. See 1 Johns. Ch. 202; 1 Ves. 896; Bright. Costs 257.

The fact that the defendant is out of the jurisdiction of the court will not alone authorize the requisition of security for costs: he must have his domicile abroad; 1 Ves. 396. A wife petitioning for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain from her husband, who resides in the state, the custody of their child, cannot be required without proofs to give bond as a non-resident, since her domicile is prima facie the same as her husband's; 181 Ind. 489. When the defendant resides abroad, he will be required to give such security although he is a foreign prince. See 11 S. & R. 131; 1 Miles, Pa. 321; 2 id. 402. A general affidavit is sufficient on moving for security for costs; the particulars of the defence need not be specified; 1 W. N. Cas. (Pa.) 134; a rule of court requiring non-residents to enter security for costs does not violate article iv. sec. 2 of the constitution, which provides that citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of the citizens in the several states; 19 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 339; 9 Md. 194; 13 W. Va. 299.

SECUS (Lat.). Otherwise.

SEDERUNT, ACTS OF. Ancient ordinances of the court of session in Scotland, by which authority is given to the court to make regulations equivalent to the Regule Generales of the English courts. Various modern acts give the court such power; Whart. Dict.

SEdge FLAT. A tract of land below high water mark. 34 Conn. 421.

SEDITION. In Criminal Law. The raising commotions or disturbances in the state: it is a revolt against legitimate authority. Erskine, Inst. 4. 4. 14.

The distinction between sedition and treason consists in this: that though the ultimate object of sedition is a violation of the public peace, or at least such a course of measures as evidently engenders it, yet it does not aim at direct and open violence against the laws or the subversion of the constitution. Allison, Crim. Law 580.

The obnoxious and obsolete act of July 14, 1798, 1 Story, Laws 543, was called the sedition law, because its professed object was to prevent disturbances.

SEDUCED. Means that a virtuous woman has been corrupted, deceived, and drawn aside from the path of virtue which she was pursuing, by such acts and wiles, in connection with a promise of marriage, as were calculated to operate upon a virtuous woman. 106 Mo. 585; 108 id. 658.

SEDUCING TO LEAVE SERVICE. See ENTRICE.

SEDUCTION. The act or crime of persuading a female, by flattery or deception, to surrender her chastity. Webster.

The wrong of inducing a female to consent to unlawful sexual intercourse, by enticements and persuasions overcoming her reluctance and scruples. 111 N. C. 215. See 17 Or. 288; 98 Mo. 368. And seduction may occur whether the woman is conscious or not; 96 Cal. 55. In civil cases, seduction and debauching are generally used as substantially similar terms; 73 Mich. 588.

Mere illicit intercourse is not seduction, although a promise of marriage be made; 33 Mich. 113; there must be some promise, deception, art, or influence of the seducer whereby chastity is surrendered; 55 Am. Dec. 542; 97 Mo. 668. Force is not an element of seduction, although force is used after consent is obtained; 31 N. W. Rep. 585.

The complainant must be chaste at the time of the seduction, and a reasonable doubt as to such fact is fatal to a recovery; 51 La. 467. Chastity, in the civil or criminal action, means actual personal virtue, and not reputation; 68 Am. Dec. 708; and requires specific acts of lewdness for impeachment; 26 N. Y. 203. Previous chastity is presumed; 42 N. W. Rep. 938. As to what may be shown to establish lack of chastity, see 7 S. W. Rep. 103; 5 La. 389; 7 N. W. Rep. 707; 43 N. W. Rep. 562; 11 S. W. Rep. 732; 88 Mo. 88. Chastity must be affirmatively shown where the statute requires that the person seduced be of good repute; 101 Pa. 215. Although a woman may have fallen, if she repent and reform, she is the object of seduction; 87 Am. Dec. 401; 73 Ala. 527.

Most states have enacted statutes making seduction a crime. What allurements are sufficient to constitute seduction, is for the jury to determine; 82 La. 262; and the courts allow considerable latitude in the evidence; 87 Mich. 518; 79 Ia. 703.

The indictment should allege the essential elements of the crime as defined by statute; 73 Ala. 527. Where there are several counts the prosecution cannot be compelled to elect; 70 N. Y. 38.

The statutes generally require—that seduction be accomplished by promise of marriage; 102 Pa. 408; which need not be valid; 63 Ind. 198; provided the seduced was ignorant of its invalidity; 106 Mass. 339; and it may have been made some time prior to the seduction; 70 N. Y. 38; and the defendant may have intended to fulfil it; 27 Conn. 319; and he need not be of lawful age to marry; 48 Am. Rep. 17. Chastity of character must be alleged; 13 Md. 585; the previous character of the prosecutrix is to be determined by the jury; 18 Ia. 372. Chastity is always an issue; 86 Ala. 34; but is always presumed, and the burden of impeaching it is on the defendant; 73 Ia. 663.

The statutes generally require the evidence of the complainant to be corroborated; 104 Mo. 644; but as to what must be corroborated there is much confusion; 4 Minn. 325; 110 N. Y. 188; 73 Ala. 527.

The seduction of a married woman is known as criminal conversation, for which the husband has an action against the seducer; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 40. In England the statute 20 & 21 Vict. ch. 85, § 59, deprives the husband of the action but allows him damages in a suit for divorce where the seducer is made co-respondent. See CRIM. CON.

As to the seduction or alienation of a husband's affections, see ENTRICE.

At common law the woman herself has no action for damages, though practically the end is reached by a suit for breach of promise of marriage, in many cases, but in some states the rule has been altered by statute. The parent, as being entitled to the services of his daughter, may maintain an action in many cases grounded upon that right, but only in such cases; 6 M. & W. 55; 7 Ired. 408; 4 N. Y. 93; 14 Ala. N. S. 235; 11 Ga. 603; 13 Gratt. 730; 3 Sneed 29; 6 Ind. 282; 10 Mo. 634; 130 N. Y. 239. In England the parent's right of action terminates when the child leaves the parent's house without the intention of returning; 5 East 45; but in America the right of action depends on the will of the parent, not the child; if he has not divested himself of a right to require his child's services, he may recover, even though at the time of the injury she was in another's service with his permission; 9 Johns. 387; 8 C. Big. L. C. Torts 286; 16 S. W. Rep. 4; otherwise if his power over the child was gone at the time of the seduction. If the control was divested by fraud, the parent has still a right of action; 2 Stark. 493. Specific acts of service are not necessary to a right of action: the right to the service is enough; Big. Torts 146. The right of action continues after the majority of the child, if the relation of master and servant continues; 8 Vroom 53; 84 Wis. 639; 48 Ill. App. 371. See 111 N. C. 215. It is not necessary that pregnancy should ensue; Big. Torts 147; contra, 1 Exch. 61; where the proper consequence of the defendant's act was a loss of the child's health, resulting in an incapacity for service, an action lies; 104 Mass. 232; especially where sexual disease is communicated to the child; Big. Torts 147. The daughter's consent does not affect the parent's right to recover; 5 Lans. 454. If the mother, after the father's death, is the child's guardian, she has a right of action; Big. Torts 149; apart from the mother's guardianship, she has a right of action so long as the daughter continues to give her services to her mother. See 51 N. Y. 424. Where the daughter in her illness returns to her mother and is taken care of by her, the mother may sue for the seduction; 5 Cow. 106; contra, 2 Watts 474; 14 Ala. 235. See, generally, as to the mother's right of action, Big. L. C. Torts 302. Any one standing in loco parentis, and entitled to, or receiving, in his own right, the services of a minor, is entitled to maintain the action; Big. Torts 152; 2 C. & P. 303. If the parent consented to the seduction, or rendered it easy by his misconduct or neglect, he cannot recover; Peake 240; Big. Torts 151.

It is competent to show that the seduced yielded to defendant's solicitations under promise of marriage; 91 Mich. 611; but the mere promise of marriage as the inducement is not sufficient, where she was not seduced by any arts, wiles, or blandishments; 97 Mo. 668.

While the loss of services is the gist of the action, yet, when that has once been established, the jury may give damages commensurate with the real injury inflicted on the plaintiff. See Big. L. C. Torts 294. By statutes, seduction has been made a criminal offence in some states.

SEE. The diocese of a bishop.

SEED-GRAIN LOANS. This phrase applies to loans made under the Minnesota Law, 1893, c. 225, 226. Chapter 225 is entitled "An act to appropriate money for seed-grain loans to farmers in this state whose crops were destroyed by hail or storm last year." The act appropriates $75,000 out of the state treasury for such purpose, and provides that any person desiring to avail himself of the benefits of the act shall file his application with the town clerk, who shall forward it to the county auditor, who shall publish a notice that the board of county commissions will meet at his office on a day named for the purpose of considering the allowance of relief to such applicants, etc. Chapter 226 amends chapter 225 in several particulars, and declares the seed-grain loan a lien on the land for which the loan was made, "and upon the crop of grain raised each year by the person receiving such loan until such amount is fully paid." 75 Minn. 118.

SEEDS. The substance which nature prepares for the reproduction of plants or animals.

Seeds which have been sown in the earth immediately become a part of the land in which they have been sown: quæ sata solo cedere intelliguntur. Inst. 2. 1. 82.

SEEM. The word "seem" is synonymous with the word "appear." 46 S. W.

217. See APPEAR.

SEIGNIOR, SEIGNEUR. Among the feudists, this name signified lord of the fee. Fitch, N. B. 23. It is still used in French Canada. The most extended signification of this word includes not only a lord or peer of parliament, but is applied to the owner or proprietor of a thing; hence the owner of a hawk, and the master of a fishing vessel, is called a seigneur. 37 Edw. III. c. 19; Barrington, Stat. 258. Seignior in gross, a lord without a manor.

SEIGNIORAGE. In England. The profit made at the mint on the coinage of money. The levying of a duty on all coined money was anciently one of the royal prerogatives. The statute 18 Car. 2, c. 5, s. 1 put an end to seigniorages by providing that all gold and silver brought to the mint should be coined without any charge of assaying and coining. Since then no seigniorage has been charged on gold; but the statute 56 Geo. 3, c. 68, s. 9, provided that for the coining of every pound weight of silver the mint should charge four shillings. The acts of Charles II. and George III. were repealed by a 20 of the Coinage Act, 1870, which, while providing that all gold coin brought to the mint should be assayed and coined free of charge, provided that the mint might issue silver coins of the weight and fineness set out in Schedule I, the effect being that down to recent years the mint could purchase silver at such a price in the open market that there was always a profit on the silver coinage. But the war of 1914-1918 caused such an increase in the price of silver that silver coin was being coined at a very heavy loss to the mint. The Coinage Act, 1920, put an end to that state of things by providing that silver coins instead of being, as they were under the Act of 1870, thirty-seven parts of silver to three parts of alloy, should be half silver and half alloy; and this has had the effect of again giving the mint a profit on the coinage of silver.

Bronze coinage has always been merely token money, and there has always been a profit on it to the mint. It was unknown before 1660. The question of the prerogative right to seigniorage never arose in connection with it. Byrne.

SEIGNIORY. In English Law. The rights of a lord, as such, in lands. Swinb. Wills 174.

SEISIN. The completion of the feudal investiture, by which the tenant was admitted into the feud and performed the rights of homage and fealty. Stearns, Real Act. 2; Mitchell, R. E. & Conv. 225. Possession with an intent on the part of him who holds it to claim a freehold interest. 8 N. H. 58; 1 Washb. R. P. 35. Ex vi termini, the whole legal title. 48 Minn. 462.

"Seisin is a technical term to denote the completion of that investiture, by which the tenant was admitted into the tenure, and without which no freehold could be constituted or pass." 1 Burr. 110, per Lord Mansfield.

This definition is said to be more applicable to the ceremony of livery of seisin than to seisin itself, while the definition of seisin as possession, does not lay sufficient stress on what is really the most important element in seisin—the element of title; 12 L. Quart. Rev. 240.

It is said that seisin is of practical importance at the present day in England in those rare cases where land is conveyed by an infant under the custom of gavelkind, and where a man claims an estate by curtesy. If feoffments were abolished and the law of curtesy made similar to that of dower, seisin would be completely obsolete, as it is in all other respects; 12 L. Quart. Rev. 240, 251.

Immediately upon the investiture or livery of seisin the tenant became tenant of the freehold; and the term seisin originally contained the idea of possession derived from a superior lord of whom the tenant held. There could be but one seisin, and the person holding it was regarded for the time as the rightful owner; Littleton § 701; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur.

180. In the early history of the country, livery of seisin seems to have been occasionally practiced. See 1 Washb. R. P. 5th ed. § 84; Colony Laws (Mass.) 33, 35; Smith, Land. & T. 6, n.

In Connecticut, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and Ohio, seisin means merely ownership, and the distinction between seisin in deed and in law is not known in practice; 4 Day 305; 14 Pick. 251. A patent by the commonwealth, in Kentucky, gives a right of entry, but not actual seisin; 3 Bibb 67.

Seisin in fact is possession with intent on the part of him who holds it to claim a freehold interest.

Seisin in law is a right of immediate possession according to the nature of the estate. Cowel; Com. Dig. Seisin (A 1, 2).

If one enters upon an estate having title, the law presumes an intent in accordance, and requires no further proof of the intent; 13 Metc. 357; 4 Wheat. 218; 8 Cra. 239; but if one enters without title, an intent to gain seisin must be shown; 5 Pet. 403; 9 Id. 53. Seisin once established is presumed to continue till the contrary is shown; 5 Metc. Mass. 178. Seisin will not be lost by entry of a stranger if the owner remains in possession; 1 Salk. 246; 9 Metc. 418. Entry by permission of the owner will never give seisin without open and unequivocal acts of disseisin known to the owner; 10 Gratt. 305; 9 Metc. 418. Simple entry by one having the freehold title is sufficient to regain seisin; 4 Mass. 416; 25 Vt. 316; 10 Pet. 412; 8 Cra. 247. The heir is invested with the seisin by law upon descent of the title; 24 Pick. 78. As a general proposition, by the law in this country, the making, delivery, and recording of a deed of lands passes the seisin without any formal entry being necessary. This is generally by force of the statutes of the several states,—in some such a deed being in terms declared to be equivalent to livery of seisin, and in others dispensing with any further act to pass a full and complete title; 4 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 45, n., 47, n.; Smith, Landl. & T. 6, n.; 3 Dall. 489.

The seisin could never be in abeyance; 1 Prest. Est. 255; and this necessity gave rise to much of the difficult law in regard to estates enjoyable in the future. See 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 156.

SEISIN OX. In Scotch Law. A perquisite formerly due to the sheriff when he gave possession to an heir holding crown lands. It was long since converted into a payment in money proportioned to the value of the estate. Bell, Dict.

SEISINA HABENDA. A writ for delivery of seisin to the lord, of lands and tenements, after the sovereign, in right of his prerogative, had had the year, day, and waste, on a felony committed, etc. Reg. Orig. 165.

SEIZING OF HERIOTS. Taking the best beast, etc., where an heriot is due, on the death of the tenant. 2 Bla. Com. 422; Whart. Dict.

SEIZURE. In Practice. The act of taking possession of the property of a person condemned by the judgment of a competent tribunal to pay a certain sum of money, by a sheriff, constable, or other officer lawfully authorized thereto, by virtue of an execution, for the purpose of having such property sold according to law to satisfy the judgment. 54 N. W. Rep. (Wis.) 20. The taking possession of goods for a violation of a public law; as, the taking possession of a ship for attempting an illicit trade; 2 Cra. 127; 4 Wheat. 100; 1 Gall. 75; 2 Wash. C. C. 187, 567; 6 Cow. 404.

The seizure is complete as soon as the goods are within the power of the officer; 16 Johns. 287; 2 N. S. M.C. 892; 2 Rawle 142; 3 Id. 401; Wats. Sher. 172, approved 84 Wis. 80.

The taking of part of the goods in a house, however, by virtue of a feri facias in the name of the whole, is a good seizure of all; 8 East 474. As the seizure must be made by virtue of an execution, it is evident that it cannot be made after the return-day; 2 Caines 243; 4 Johns. 450. See DOOR; HOUSE; SEARCH WARRANT; CORPORATION.

SEIZURE QUOUSQUE. When a copyhold tenant dies intestate, his heir is bound to come to the lord for admittance within a certain time, and pay the fine on admittance; if he does not appear, the lord may seize the land quousque (i. e. "until" he does appear), and enjoy the rents and profits in the meantime. Seizure quousque is rather in the nature of a forfeiture, but in some manors there are customs that, after neglect or refusal to appear within a certain time, the land shall be absolutely forfeited. R. & L. Dict.; Ell. Copyh. 140.

SELECT. See APPOINT.

SELECTI JUDICES (Lat.). In Roman Law. Judges who were selected very much like our juries. They were returned by the praetor, drawn by lot, subject to be challenged and sworn. 3 Bla. Com. 866.

SELECTION OR ELECTION. Doctrine of. When a chattel mortgage is given upon a certain number of cattle of a certain description without specifying or identifying the particular cattle mortgaged, and the mortgagor owns more of the kind described than the number mortgaged, the mortgagor impliedly invests his grantee with the right to select the stated number or quantity and this is called the "doctrine of selection or election." 115 Ky. 470, 78 S. W. 171.

SELECTMEN. The name of certain town officers in several states of the United States, who are invested by the statutes of the states with extensive powers for the conduct of the town business.

SELF-CRIMINATION. See IN-CRIMINATION.

SELF-DEFENCE. In Criminal Law. The protection of one's person and property from injury. Whart. Crim. Law 97. A man may defend himself, and even commit a homicide for the prevention of any forcible and atrocious crime which if completed would amount to a felony; 17 Ala. n. s. 587; 5 Ga. 85; 1 Jones N. C. 100; 30 Miss. 619; 14 B. Monr. 103, 614; 3 Wash. C. C. 515; and, of course, under the like circumstances, mayhem, wounding, and battery would be excusable at common law; 4 Bla. Com. 180. A man may repel force by force even to the taking of life; 45 Vt. 308; 134 Ind. 46; in defence of his person, property, or habitation, or of a member of his family, against any one who manifests, intends, attempts, or endeavors, by violence or surprise, to commit a forcible felony, such as murder, rape, robbery, arson, burglary, and the like; 88 Pa. 265; 8 Bush 481. In these cases he is not required to retreat; 57 Ind. 80; but he may resist, and even pursue his adversary, until he has secured himself from all danger; 7 J. J. Marsh. 478; 4 Bingh. 623; 45 La. Ann. 969; but see 7 N. Y. 396. A man may defend his dwelling to any extremity; and this includes whatever is within the curtilage of his dwelling-house; 8 Mich. 150. Where one finds another trying to break into his house in the night-time he may employ such force as to prevent his doing so, and if the other threatens to kill him and makes a motion as if to do so and puts him in fear of his life, he is not bound to retreat, but may use such force as is necessary to repel the assault; 162 U. S. 499. In deciding what force is necessary, a person need only act upon the circumstances as they appear to him at the time. See 24 Tex. 454; 23 Ill. 17.

In the case of homicide the law permits the resistance of force or seriously threatened force, actually impending or reasonably apparent, by force sufficient to repel the actual or apparent danger, and no more; 96 Ala. 81. The law of self-defence justifies an act done "in an honest and reasonable belief of immediate danger;" 143 U. S. 18. To justify a homicide, however, on the ground of self-defence, there must have been not only the belief but also reasonable ground for believing that at the time of killing the deceased, he was in imminent or immediate danger of his life or great bodily harm; 80 Fla. 234; 99 Cal. 1; 27 Tex. App. 562; 28 S. C. 201; and to justify shooting, on apparent necessity, the circumstances must have been such as to induce the mind of a reasonably prudent person to entertain the belief that the defendant was in imminent peril of his life or great bodily harm; 97 Ala. 54; there must be a reasonable apprehension of immediate danger justified by the circumstances; 89 Va. 619.

Reasonable fear does not mean the fear of a coward, but the fear of a reasonably courageous man; 92 Ga. 468; 89 Mont. 77; 79 Ga. 696; fear that one's life is in danger will not excuse a homicide in the absence of an overt act or hostile demonstration on the part of the deceased.

A question whether a homicide is committed in repelling an attack is a question of fact not necessarily dependent upon the duration or quality of the reflection by which the act may have been preceded; 151 U. S. 303. One assailed on his own grounds, without provocation, by a person armed with a deadly weapon and apparently seeking his life, is not obliged to retreat and may defend himself with such means as are within his control; 158 U. S. 530; 95 Ky. 823; 86 id. 99. So a person who has had an angry altercation with another person may be justified in arming himself for self-defence; and if, on meeting his adversary afterwards, he kills him, but not in necessary self-defence, his crime may be manslaughter or murder, according to the circumstances on the occasion of the killing, and is not necessarily murder by reason of his having previously armed himself; 155 U. S. 271. Accordingly it is wrong to charge that the intentional arming of himself with a pistol by a defendant, even if with a view to self-defence, would make a case of murder unless the actual affray developed a case of self-defence; 157 U. S. 675.

Where the accused embarks in the quarrel with no felonious intent or malice or purpose of doing bodily harm or killing, and, under reasonable belief of imminent danger, inflicts a deadly wound, it is not murder; 162 U. S. 466; but where a difficulty is intentionally brought on for the purpose of killing the deceased, the fact of imminent danger to the accused constitutes no defence; 162 U. S. 466.

What is or what is not an overt demonstration of violence sufficient to justify a resistance which ends in the death of the party making the demonstration varies with the circumstances and is a question for the jury; 160 U. S. 208.

If a person, under the provocation of offensive language, assaults the speaker personally, but in such a way as to show that there is no intention to do him serious bodily harm, and then retreats under such circumstances as show that he does not intend to do anything more, but in good faith withdraws from further contest, his right of self-defence is restored when the person assaulted, in violation of law, pursues him with a deadly weapon, and seeks to take his life, or do him great bodily harm; 164 U. S. 546; 88 Ala. 4; Whart. Hom. § 488; 158 U. S. 550, 564; but there must be a real and bona fide surrender and withdrawal on the part of the original aggressor, otherwise he will continue to be so regarded; Whart. Cr. L. 9th ed. § 498. The meaning of the principle is that the law will always leave the original aggressor an opportunity to respond before he takes the life of his adversary; Bish. Cr. L. 7th ed. § 871; 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 702. It is "for the jury to say whether the withdrawal was not in good faith or was a mere device by the accused to obtain some advantage of his adversary"; 164 U. S. 546. It is said of the two United States cases cited that they "consistently united in expressing a judicial policy on the subject of self-defence which is not only logical in principle, but commends itself to the practical sense of justice"; 55 Alb. L. J. 268; to the same effect in substance are recent cases in state courts; 124 Mo. 897;

The possession of a good conscience is not an indispensable prerequisite to justification of action in the face of imminent and deadly peril, nor does the intrinsic rightfulness of the occupation or situation of a party, having in itself no bearing upon or connection with an assault, impose a limitation upon the right to repel it; 153 U. S. 614.

The doctrine of constructive self-defence comprehends the principal civil and domestic relations; therefore master and servant, parent and child, husband and wife, killing an assailant in the necessary defence of each, respectively, are excused, the act of the relation being construed the same as the act of the party himself; 4 Bla. Com. 186; 32 Fla. 56; strangely enough, there seems to be no authority for placing a brother or sister in this category, though they doubtless occupy as good a position as a stranger; 25 Alb. L. J. 187. See 2 Bish. Cr. L. 877.

A man may defend himself when no felony has been threatened or attempted. First, when the assailant attempts to beat another and there is no mutual combat; as where one meets another and attempts to commit or does commit an assault and battery on him, the person attacked may defend himself; 4 Den. 448; 24 Vt. 218; 3 Harring. Del. 22; 3 Brev. 515; 5 Gray 475; 3 C. & P. 31; but it is not true as a general proposition, that one who is assaulted by another with a dangerous weapon is justified in taking the life of the person so assaulting him; 45 La. Ann. 14; and in case of an offer or attempt to strike another, when sufficiently near, so that there is danger, the person assailed may strike first, and is not required to wait until he has been struck; Bull. N. P. 18. Second, when there is a mutual combat upon a sudden quarrel. In these cases both parties are the aggressors; and if in the fight one is killed, it will be manslaughter at least, unless the survivor can prove two things, viz.: that before the mortal stroke was given he had refused any further combat, and had retreated as far as he could with safety; 8 N. Y. 396; 4 D. & B. 491; 15 Ga. 117; 1 Ohio St. 66; 1 Hawks 78, 210; and that he killed his adversary from necessity, to avoid his own destruction; 32 Me. 279; 2 Halst. 220; 11 Humphr. 200; 2 N. Y. 193; Cox, N. J. 424; 25 Ala. n. s. 15.

A person assaulted by another, whom he kills, cannot set up the plea of self-defence if he could have safely retreated or have disarmed the other without danger to himself, and believed himself able to do so; 86 Ala. 13; id. 595; 83 id. 33; 74 La. 653.

The settled rule that where a person having authority to arrest and using the proper means for that purpose is resisted, he can repel force with force, and, if the party making the resistance is unavoidably killed, the homicide is justifiable, may be invoked by a person who resists and kills the officer, if he was ignorant of the fact that he was an officer; 153 U. S. 614.

A man may defend himself against animals, and he may during the attack kill them, but not afterwards; 1 C. & P. 106; 10 Johns. 365; 13 id. 12. See Horr. & T. Cas. on Self-Defence, where cases are collected. See JUSTIFICATION; MURDER; HOMICIDE.

SELF-DESTRUCTION. This term in an insurance policy is synonymous with, not more comprehensive than, suicide. It does not include an intentional though insane killing of one's self. "The act, whether described by words of Saxon or of Latin origin, or partly of the one and partly of the other, 'dying by his own hand,' 'self-killing,' 'self-slaughter,' 'suicide,' 'self-destruction,' without more, cannot be imputed to a man who, by reason of insanity (as is commonly said), 'is not himself';" 150 U. S. 468. See SUICIDE.

SELF-DISSERVING EVIDENCE. See SELF-REGARDING EVIDENCE.

SELF-EXECUTING PROVISIONS. See CONSTITUTIONAL; and also Thompson, Corp. § 8004.

SELF-INCRIMINATION. See FORMER TRIAL.

SELF-REGARDING EVIDENCE. That evidence for or against a party which is afforded by the language or demeanor of himself or of those who represent him. When in favor of the party supplying it, the evidence may be said to be "self-serving," when otherwise, "self-disserving," and these terms are also applicable to the statement and demeanor of witnesses.

Self-serving evidence is not originally admissible except where part of the document is used against the party, who is entitled to have the whole of it laid before the jury who may consider such statements as are self-serving, and give such weight to them as they see fit; 5 Taunt. 245; 2 D. & Ry. 358. See CONFESSION.

Self-disserving statements are termed "admissions" in civil cases and "confessions" in criminal cases. See those titles. They are also classified as "plenary" when the statements are not absolutely inconsistent with the existence of fact different from those indicated by it. See, generally, Best, Evidence §§ 518-577.

SELF-SERVING EVIDENCE. See SELF-REGARDING EVIDENCE.

SELION OF LAND. A ridge of ground rising between two furrows, containing no certain quantity, but sometimes more and sometimes less. Termes de la Ley.

SELL. Affecting Real Estate.

The word "sell" in an agreement, affecting, but not in terms granting or conveying, real estate, will not be given any more effect upon the title than is necessary to accomplish the purpose of the transaction stated in the agreement. 203 U. S. 120.

Selling by Sample. The words, "selling by sample," mean taking orders for future delivery as a commercial traveler. 129 Ky. 744, 112 S. W. 903.

Selling Race. A "selling race" is one in which the owner of every horse entered as a contestant places a price on it before the race takes place, and when the race is over the winning horse is sold at auction at not less than the price previously fixed. If the price thus obtained is greater than that set by the owner, the surplus constitutes a fund for the contesting owner of one or more of the defeated horses. 8 Ky. R. 432.

SELLER. One who disposes of a thing in consideration of money; a vendor.

This term is more usually applied in the sale of chattels, and that of vendor in the sale of estates. See SALE.

SELLING FOR THE ACCOUNT. See FOR THE ACCOUNT.

SELLING PUBLIC OFFICES.

Buying or selling any office in the gift of the crown, or making any negotiation relating thereto, was deemed a misdemeanor under stats. 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 16, and 49 Geo. III. c. 126. 2 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 681.

SEMBLE (Fr. it seems). A term frequently used before the statement of a point of law which has not been directly settled, but about which the court have expressed an opinion and intimated what a decision would be.

SEMPERITIA. The collected decisions of the emperors in their councils Whart. Dict.

SEMI-COLON. According to well established grammatical rules, this is a point only used to separate parts of a sentence more distinctly than a comma. 78 N. Y. 220.

SEMI-MATRIMONY. Half-marriage. Concubinage was so called in the Roman law. Tafl. Civ. L. 273.

SEMI-PROOF. In Civil Law. Presumption of fact. This degree of proof is thus defined: "Non est ignorandum probationem semiprobam eam esse, per quam res geste fides aliqua fit iudici; non tamen tanta ut jure debeat in pronuncianda sententia eam sequi." Mascardus, de Prob. vol. 1 Quest. 11, n. 1, 4.

SEMI-TONTINE DIVIDEND. See INSURANCE, Tontine Insurance.

SEMI-TONTINE INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

SEMINARY. A place of education. Any school, academy, college, or university in which young persons are instructed in the several branches of learning which may qualify them for their future employments. Webster, Dict.

The word is said to have acquired no fixed and definite legal meaning. 12 N. Y. 229.

SEMINAUFRACTION (Lat.). A term used by Italian lawyers, which literally signifies half-shipwreck, and by which they understand the jetsam, or casting merchandise into the sea to prevent shipwreck. Locre, Esp. du Code de Com. art. 409. The state of a vessel which has been so much injured by tempest or accident that to repair the damages, after being brought into port, and prepare her for sea, would cost more than her worth. 4 Bost. L. Rep. 120.

SEMPER PARATUS (Lat. always ready). The name of a plea by which the defendant alleges that he has always been ready to perform what is demanded of him. 3 Bla. Com. 303. The same as Tout temps prest.

SEN. This is said to be an ancient word which signified justice. Co. Litt. 61 a.

SENAGE. Money paid for synodals.

SENATE. The name of the less numerous of the two bodies constituting the legislative branch of the government of the United States, and of the several states.

The Senate of the United States is composed of two senators from each state, chosen by the legislature thereof for six years; and each senator has one vote. The equal suffrage of the states in the senate is secured to them beyond the ordinary power of amendment; no state can be deprived thereof without its consent. Art. 5. The senate has been, from the first formation of the government, divided into three classes. The rotation of the classes was originally determined by lot, and the seats of one class are vacated at the end of the second year, so that one-third of the senate is chosen every second year. Const. art. 1, § 3. This provision was borrowed from a similar one in some of the state constitutions, of which Virginia gave the first example.

The qualifications which the constitution requires of a senator are that he should be thirty years of age, have been nine years a citizen of the United States, and, when elected, be an inhabitant of that state for which he shall be chosen. Const. art. 1, § 3. See CONGRESS.

SENATORS OF THE COLLEGE OF JUSTICE. The judges of the court of session in Scotland are so called.

SENATUS. In Roman Law. The senate. Also the place where the senate met. Calv. Lex.

SENATUS CONSULTUM (Lat.). In Roman Law. A decree or decision of the Roman senate, which had the force of law.

When the Roman people had so increased that there was no place where they could meet, it was found necessary to consult the senate, instead of the people, both on public affairs and those which related to individuals. The opinion which was rendered on such an occasion was called senatus consultum. Inst. 1. 2. § 5; Clef. des Lois Rom.; Merlin, Répert. These decrees frequently derived their titles from the names of the consuls or magistrates who proposed them; as senatus-consultum Claudianum, Libonianum, Velleianum, etc., from Claudius, Libonius, Velleius.

Ayliffe, Pand. 30.

SENATUS DECRETA. (Decisions of the senate.) Private acts concerning particular persons merely.

SENESCHAL. A steward; also one who has the dispensing of justice. Co. Litt. 61 a.

SENESCHALLO ET MARESHALLO QUOD NON TENEBAT PLACITA DE LIBERO TENEMENTO. A writ addressed to the steward and marshal of England, inhibiting them to take cognizance of an action in their court that concerns freehold. Reg. Orig. 185.

SENESCHALLUS (Lat.). A steward. Co. Litt. 61 a.

SENILE DEMENTIA. See DEMENTIA; DOTAGE.

SENILITY. The state of being old. When on account of senility the party is unable to manage his affairs, a committee will be appointed as in case of lunacy; 1 Collier, Lun. 66; 2 Johns. Ch. 232; 4 Call 423; 12 Ves. Jr. 443; 8 Mass. 129; 19 Ves. Jr. 285.

SENIOR. The elder. This addition is sometimes made to a man's name, when two persons bear the same, in order to distinguish them. In practice, when nothing is mentioned, the senior is intended; 3 Miss. 59. See NAME.

One older in office, or whose entrance upon an office was anterior to that of another. 44 Ohio St. 6. See 126 Mass. 603.

SENTENCE. A judgment, or judicial declaration made by a judge in a cause. The term judgment is more usually applied to civil, and sentence to criminal, proceedings.

Sentences are final, when they put an end to the case; or interlocutory, when they settle only some incidental matter which has arisen in the course of its progress. See Aso & Man. Inst. b. 3, t. 8, c. 1.

A sentence exceeding the term allowed by law will be reversed upon certiorari; 3 Brews. 80. Under some circumstances a sentence may be suspended after conviction; 43 N. J. L. 113; 115 Mass. 138. But a single sentence exhausts the power of the court to punish the offender, after the term is ended or the judgment has gone into operation; 18 Wall. 163; 125 Mass. 317; 57 Pa. 301. See ACCUMULATIVE SENTENCES.

The court may set a day for the execution of a prisoner after the time originally fixed has elapsed. The prisoner may be held in confinement after the first day fixed for execution has passed; 146 U. S. 271. Upon the affirmance of a judgment, sentencing a prisoner to death, there is nothing which requires that he shall be sentenced anew by the trial court; 143 U. S. 442.

Where a court has jurisdiction of the person and the offence, the imposition of a sentence in excess of what the law permits does not render the authorized portion of the sentence void, but only such part as may be in excess; 153 U. S. 48; so, on a plea of guilty, if the court had authority to impose the punishment actually adjudged on a conviction of a higher grade of the offence; 42 Pac. Rep. (Kan.) 373.

Where the judgment on the first count is reversed and there is arrest of judgment under the second, a term of imprisonment under the third may be made to commence on the day fixed for the first count; 153 U. S. 398.

Failure in the sentence to name the crime for which the prisoner was sentenced may be supplied by reference to the rest of the record; 151 U. S. 393.

Where a verdict against one for embezzling money received by him as an assistant postmaster, was taken on embezzlement alone, without, as required by law, finding the amount embezzled as a fine, and was reversed for that reason, the trial court was without authority to fix the fine without the finding of a jury, and as he could not be put in jeopardy again, he was discharged; 68 Fed. Rep. 536.

When a sentence different from that authorized by law has been imposed and the judgment has been reversed for that error, and the cause remanded to the trial court with instructions to proceed therein according to law, the trial court resumes jurisdiction of the cause at the point where the error supervened and may resentence the defendant and impose the penalty provided by law, although part of the void sentence has been executed; 68 Fed. Rep. 473.

Statutes providing for a severer punishment when a criminal is convicted of a second or third offence are not in violation of the constitutional provision that no one shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offence; 159 U. S. 673. The doctrine is that the subsequent punishment is not for the first offence, but for persistence in crime; 47 Cal. 113; 115 Ill. 583; 158 Mass. 598; 48 Wis. 647. For the same reason, they are not open to the objection that they are ex post facto, even when the prior convictions occurred before the passage of the act imposing the additional penalty; 45 Cal. 429; 155 Mass. 163; 50 Ohio St. 428; 9 Gratt. 738. Such statutes cannot apply to the case of a conviction for an offence committed after that for which the prisoner is on trial, but for which he is first tried; 9 Gratt. 738.

The indictment must allege that the defendant had been previously convicted, sentenced, and imprisoned (once or twice, as the case may be) in some penal institution for felonies (as such penalties are usually only prescribed for felonies or penitentiary offences), describing each separately; 130 Mass. 85; 158 Mass. 599; 113 Mo. 538; 50 Ohio St. 428. As a general rule the courts have no discretion in the matter of imposing sentence under the habitual criminal acts; 158 Mass. 598; 50 Ohio St. 428. It is not necessary, unless required by statute, that the subsequent conviction or convictions should be for the same identical offence or character of offence. It is sufficient if the accused has been convicted of any one of the offences of the grade named; 115 Ill. 583. The previous offences must have been penitentiary offences, and not merely made so by repeated convictions for what would otherwise have been misdemeanors; 22 S. E. Rep. (Va.) 874.

See ACCUMULATIVE SENTENCES; JUDGMENT; HABITUAL CRIMINALS' ACT. See CUMULATIVE SENTENCE.

As to parole and indeterminate sentences, see PRISONER; 31 Am. L. Rev. 74.

SENTENCE OF DEATH RECORDED. A custom in the English courts, now disused, of entering sentence of death on the record which is not intended to be pronounced. The effect was the same as if it had been pronounced and the offender relieved.

SEPARALITER (Lat. separately). A word sometimes used in indictments to show that the defendants are charged separately with offences which without the addition of this word would seem, from the form of the indictment, to be charged jointly; as, for example, when two persons are indicted together for perjury, and the indictment states that A and B came before a commissioner, etc., this is alleging that they were both guilty of the same crime, when by law their crimes are distinct, and the indictment is vicious; but if the word separaliter is used, then the affirmation is that each was guilty of a separate offence. 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 174.

SEPARATE ACTION. An action is so called which each of several persons must bring when they are denied the privilege of joining in one suit. See JOINDER.

SEPARATE ESTATE. That which belongs to one only of several persons; as, the separate estate of a partner, which does not belong to the partnership. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1519.

The separate estate of a married woman is that which belongs to her and over which her husband has no right in equity. It may consist of lands or chattels. 4 Barb.

409; 1 Const. 452.

See MARRIED WOMAN.

SEPARATE GENERAL VERDICT.

A "separate-general verdict" is the finding upon any of the issues, in favor of the plaintiff or the defendant. 83 Ky. 27.

SEPARATE MAINTENANCE.

The allowance made by a husband to his wife for her separate support and maintenance. In general, if a wife is abandoned by her husband, without fault on her part, and left without adequate means of support, a bill in equity will lie to compel the husband to support her, without asking for or procuring a decree of divorce; Schoul. Hus. & W. § 485; 50 Miss. 694; 30 N. J. Eq. 359.

When this allowance is regularly paid, and notice of it has been given, no person who has received such notice will be entitled to recover against the husband for necessities furnished to the wife, because the liability of the husband depends on a presumption of authority delegated by him to the wife, which is negated by the facts of the case; 2 Stark. Ev. 699.

SEPARATE PROPERTY.

"Separate property" of a  feme covert  is that of which she has the exclusive control, independent of her husband, and the proceeds of which she may dispose of as she pleases, and is imparted to it by the instrument by which it is held. 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 198.

SEPARATE TRIAL. See JOINDER.

SEPARATION.

A cessation of cohabitation of husband and wife by mutual agreement.

Contracts of this kind are generally made by the husband for himself and by the wife with trustees; 3 Paige, Ch. 483; 4 id. 516; 5 Bligh n. s. 339; 1 Dow & C. H. L. 519. This contract does not affect the marriage, and the parties may at any time agree to live together as husband and wife. The husband who has agreed to a total separation cannot bring an action for criminal conversation with the wife; 4 Viner, Abr. 173; 2 Stark. Ev. 698; Shelf. Marr. & D. 608. Articles of separation are no bar to proceedings for divorce for subsequent cause; 4 Paige 516; 33 Md. 401. Under recent legislation, separation deeds are legalized in England; L. R. 11 Ch. D. 508; Schoul. Hus. & W. §§ 476, 479; Bish. M. D. & S. 1489.

Reconciliation after separation supersedes special articles of separation, in courts of law and equity; 1 Dowl. P. C. 243; 11 Ves. 532; 9 Cal. 479. Public policy forbids that parties should be permitted to make agreements for themselves to hold good whenever they choose to live separate; 5 Bligh n. s. 367. And see 1 C. & P. 36; 11 Ves. 526; 2 S. & S. 372; 1 Y. & C. 28; 3 Johns. Ch. 521; 1 Des. Eq. 45, 198; 8 N. H. 350.

SEPARATION A MENSA ET THORO.

A partial dissolution of the marriage relation.

By the ecclesiastical or canon law of England, which had exclusive jurisdiction over marriage and divorce, marriage was regarded as a sacrament and indissoluble. This doctrine originated with the church of Rome, and became established in England while that country was Catholic; and though after the reformation it ceased to be the doctrine of the church of England, yet the law remained unchanged until the recent statute of 30 & 31 Vict. (1867) c. 85, and amendments; Bish. Marr. & D. §§ 66, n. 225; 1 Bish. M. Div. & S. § 1377. Hence, as has been seen in the article on divorce, a valid marriage could not be dissolved in England except by what has been termed the omnipotent power of parliament.

This gave rise, in the ecclesiastical courts, to the practice of granting divorces from bed and board, as they used to be called, or judicial separation, as they are called in the recent statute 30 & 31 Vict. c. 85, § 7; Bish. Marr. & D. §§ 66, n. 225; 1 Bish. M. D. & S. § 1377. From England this practice was introduced into this country; and though in some of the states it has entirely given way to the divorce a vinculo matrimonii, in others it is still in use, being generally granted for causes which are not sufficient to authorize the latter.

The only causes for which such a divorce is granted in England are adultery and cruelty. In this country it is generally granted also for wilful desertion, and in some states for other causes.

The legal consequences of a separation from bed and board are much less extensive than those of a divorce a vinculo matrimonii or a sentence of nullity. Such a separation works no change in the relation of the parties either to each other or to third persons, except in authorizing them to live apart until they mutually come together. In coming together, no new marriage is required; neither, it seems, under the general law, are any new proceedings in court necessary; but the reconciliation, of its own force, annuls the sentence of separation; 5 Pick. 461; 4 Johns. Ch. 187; 2 Dall. 128; Cro. Eliz. 908.

Nor does such a separation, at common law and without statutory aid, change the relation of the parties as to property. Thus, it neither takes away the right of the wife to dower, nor the right of the husband to the wife's real estate, either during her life or after her death, as tenant by her curtesy; neither does it affect the husband's right in a court of law to reduce into possession the choses in action of the wife; though in equity it may be otherwise; 2 Pick. 316; 5 id. 61; 6 W. & S. 85; Cro. Eliz. 908; 4 Barb. 295.

It should be observed, however, that in this country the consequences of a judicial separation are frequently modified by statute. See Bishop, Marr. & D. §§ 660-693, Bish. M. D. & S. § 1832.

Of those consequences which depend upon the order and decree of the court, the most important is that of alimony. See ALIMONY. In respect to the custody of children, the rules are the same as in case of divorce a vinculo matrimonii; Bish. Marr. & D. c. 25. See DIVORCE; 2 Bish. M. D. & S. § 1185; Macq. Husb. & W. 220; Browne, Div. 29.

SEPTENNIAL ACT. In England, stat. 1, Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 38, giving Parliament the right to continue in session seven years but no longer. English.

SEPTUM. An enclosure; any place paved in. Cowel.

SEPULCHRE. The place where a corpse is buried. The violation of sepulchres is a misdemeanor at common law.

The right of a widow to remove the body of her husband from its place of original sepulchre is dependent on her consent to the first interment; 26 Atl. Rep. (R. I.) 42. See DEAD BODY; CEMETERY.

SEQUESTRATION SUBSUO PERICULO.

(Let him come or take the consequences.) A writ that lay where a summons ad warrantandum was awarded, and the sheriff returned that he had nothing whereby he might be summoned, then issued an alias and a pluries, and if he came not in on the pluries, this writ issued. O. N. B. 163.

A writ anciently used where three successive summonses ad warrantandum (to warranty) had been ineffectual. Byrne.

SEQUEL. A small quantity of meal given to the servants at a mill where corn was ground, under the names of knaveship, bannock, and lock or gowpen. Ersk. Prin. 211. See THIRLAGE.

SEQUELA CAUSÆ. The process and depending issue of a cause for trial. Cowel.

SEQUELA CURIÆ. Suit of court. Cowel.

SEQUELA VILLANORUM. The family retinue and appurtenances to the goods and chattels of villeins, which were at the absolute disposal of the lord. Par. Ant. 216.

SEQUESTER. In Civil and Ecclesiastical Law. To renounce. Example: when a widow comes into court and disclaims having anything to do or to intermeddle with her deceased husband's estate, she is said to sequester. Jacob, Law Dict.

SEQUESTRATIO. The separating or setting aside of a thing in controversy from the possession of both the parties that contend for it; it is twofold—voluntary, done by consent of all parties; and necessary, when a judge orders it.

SEQUESTRATION. In Chancery Practice. A writ of commission, sometimes directed to the sheriff, but usually to four or more commissioners of the complainant's own nomination, authorizing them to enter upon the real or personal estate of the defendant, and to take the rents, issues, and profits into their own hands, and keep possession of or pay the same, as the court shall order or direct, until the party who is in contempt shall do that which he is enjoined to do and which is especially mentioned in the writ. Newl. Ch. Pr. 18; Blake, Ch. Pr. 108.

A process for contempt, used by chancery courts, to compel a performance of their orders and decrees. 88 Ga. 381.

Upon the return of non est inventus to a commission of rebellion, a sergeant-at-arms may be moved for; and if he certifies that the defendant cannot be taken, a motion may be made upon his certificate for an order for a sequestration; 2 Madd. Ch. Pr. 203; Blake, Ch. Pr. 103. It is the process formerly used instead of an attachment to secure the appearance of persons having the privilege of peerage or parliament, before a court of equity; Adams, Eq. 328.

Under a sequestration upon means process, as in respect of a contempt for want of appearance or answer, the sequestrators may take possession of the party's personal property and keep him out of possession, but no sale can take place, unless perhaps to pay expenses; for this process is only to form the foundation of taking the bill pro confesso. After a decree it may be sold. See 8 Bro. C. C. 72, 372; 2 Cox, Ch. 224; 1 Ves. 86.

A judgment of sequestration does not dissolve the corporation against which it is rendered, but it may appeal from an adverse judgment in an action brought by it and pending when the judgment of sequestration was rendered; 68 Hun 401.

See, generally, as to this species of sequestration, 19 Viner, Abr. 325; Buc. Abr. Sequestration; Com. Dig. Chancery (D 7, Y 4); 1 Hov. Suppl. to Ves. 25; 7 Vern., Raithby ed. 58, n. 1, 421, n. 1.

In Contracts. A species of deposit which two or more persons, engaged in litigation about anything, make of the thing in contest with an indifferent person, who binds himself to restore it, when the issue is decided, to the party to whom it is adjudged to belong. La. Code, art. 2942; Story, Bailm. § 45. See 19 Viner, Abr. 325; 1 Vern. 58, 420; 2 Ves. 23.

In Louisiana. A mandate of the court, ordering the sheriff, in certain cases, to take in his possession, and to keep, a thing of which another person has the possession, until after the decision of a suit, in order that it be delivered to him who shall be adjudged entitled to have the property or possession of that thing. This is what is properly called a judicial sequestration. See 1 Mart. La. 79; 1 La. 439; La. Civ. Code 2941, 2948.

SEQUESTRATOR. One to whom a sequestration is made.

A depository of this kind cannot exonerate himself from the care of the thing sequestered in his hands, unless for some cause rendering it indispensable that he should resign his trust. La. Civ. Code, art. 2947.

Officers appointed by a court of chancery and named in a writ of sequestration. As to their powers and duties, see 2 Madd. Ch. Pr. 205; Blake, Ch. Pr. 103.

SEQUESTRE. In Roman Law, a deposit made with a stakeholder or middleman pending the decision of a certain event, or dispute. R. & L. Dict.; Dig. 16, 3, 17, 1. See SEQUESTRE; SEQUESTRATIO; SEQUESTRATOR; SEQUESTRATIO; SEQUESTER; DÉPÔT; DEPOSIT.

SEQUESTRE. The French for the Roman sequestro (q. v.). See DÉPÔT; SEQUESTRATION; SEQUESTRATIO; SEQUESTER; DEPOSIT.

SERF. In Feudal Law. A term applied to a class of persons who were bound to perform very onerous duties towards others. Pothier, Des Personnes.

There is this essential difference between a serf and a slave: the serf was bound simply to labor on the soil where he was born, without any right to go elsewhere without the consent of his lord; but he was free to act as he pleased in his daily life: the slave, on the contrary, was the property of his master, who might require him to act as he pleased in every respect, and who might sell him as a chattel. Lepage, Science du Droit, c. 2, art. 2, § 2.

SERGEANT-AT-ARMS. An officer appointed by a legislative body, whose duties are to enforce the orders given by such bodies, generally under the warrant of its presiding officer.

SERIATIM (Lat.). In a series; severally: as, the judges delivered their opinions seriatim.

SERIOUS. Important, weighty, momentous, and not trifling. 74 Ill. 231. A serious injury is defined by statute in Ohio to be any such injury as shall permanently or temporarily disable a person receiving it from earning a livelihood by manual labor; Ohio L. 1892, 136, and serious bodily injury is held to be one which gives rise to apprehension, or is attended with great danger. 21 Tex. App. 317.

Serious Disease or Complaint. In a life insurance policy, the words "serious disease or complaint" mean that, any permanent or material impairment of health is serious, one attended by danger, giving rise to apprehension, a grave, important, weighty trouble. 149 Ky. 717, 149 S. W. 998.

SERJEANTS-AT-LAW. A very ancient and the most honorable order of advocates at the common law.

They were called, formerly, countours, or serjeant-countours, or countours of the bench (in the old law-Latin phrase, banci narratores), and are mentioned by Matthew Paris in the life of John I., written in 1335. They are limited to fifteen in number, in addition to the judges of the courts of Westminster, who were always admitted before being advanced to the bench.

The most distinctive feature in the Serjeant's dress in olden times was the "coif," a close-fitting head-covering of lawn or silk. He was invested with this on the day of his call by the chief justice of the king's bench, and it was not doffed even in the presence of the sovereign. It is supposed that the coif was invented for the purpose of hiding the clerical tonsure. This concealment became desirable after the law of 1317, which debarred churchmen from their lucrative practice in the courts.

The most valuable privilege formerly enjoyed by the serjeants was the monopoly of the practice in the court of common pleas. A bill was introduced into parliament for the purpose of destroying this monopoly, in 1755, which did not pass. In 1833, a warrant under the sign manual was directed to the judges of the common pleas, commanding them to open that court to the bar at large. The order was received and complied with. In 1839, the matter was brought before the court and decided to be illegal; 10 Bingh. 571; 6 Bingh. N. C. 187, 232. The statute 9 & 10 Vict. c. 54, has since extended the privilege to all barristers; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 27, n. Upon the Judicature Act coming into operation, the institution and office of serjeant-at-law virtually came to an end; Weeks, Att. at Law § 38. See Experiences of Serjeant Ballantine, Lond. 1862; Pulling, Order of Coif; INNS OF COURT; FARNYDON INN.

SERJEANTS' INN. The Inn to which the serjeants-at-law belonged, near Chancery Lane, formerly called Faryndon Inn. See INNS OF COURT; 8 Steph. Com. 11th ed. 292, n. It no longer exists.

SERJEANTY. In English Law. A species of service which cannot be due or performed from a tenant to any lord but the king, and is either grand or petit.

"The exact idea of serjeanty as conceived in the thirteenth century," says a recent writer on this subject, "is not one easily defined." Several different classes of men were grouped together under one heading, the bond between them being very slight, and the distinction between serjeanty and knight's service on the one hand and socage on the other is hard to determine; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 293.

Grand serjeanty consisted in some service immediately respecting the person or dignity of the sovereign; as, to carry the king's standard or to be his constable or marshal, his butler or chamberlain, or to perform some military service; Litt. § 153. The honorable parts of this tenure were retained and its oppressive incidents swept away by stat. 12 Car. II. c. 24. Termes de la Ley; 2 Bla. Com. 73; while petit serjeanty required some inferior service, not strictly military or personal, to the king; as, the annual render of a bow, a sword, a lance, or an arrow; Litt. § 159; and this service, Littleton continues, is but socage in effect, as it was no personal service but a certain rent. It has, however, been overlooked by this writer that, whilst it is clearly not a predial service or service of the plough, and in all respects liberum et commune socagium, it was, nevertheless, held of the king, and by way of eminence was dignified by the title of parvum servitium regis, and in this light was respected by Magna Charta when it enacted that no wardship of lands or body should be claimed by the king in virtue of a tenure by petit serjeanty; 2 Bla. Com. 82.

SERVAGE. Where a tenant, besides his rent, finds one or more workmen for his lord's service. King John brought the Crown of England in servage to the see of Rome; 2 Inst. 174; Whart. Dict.

SERVANTS. In Louisiana. A term including slaves and, in general, all free persons who let, hire, or engage their services to another in the state, to be employed therein at any work, commerce, or occupation whatever, for the benefit of him who has contracted with them, for a certain sum or retribution, or upon certain conditions. La. Civ. Code, art. 155.

Personal Relations. Domestics; those who receive wages, and who are lodged and fed in the house of another and employed in his service. Such servants are not particularly recognized by law.

One who serves, or does service, voluntary or involuntary; a person who is employed by another for menial offices or for other labor, and is subject to his command; a person who labors or exerts himself for the benefit of another, his master or employer; a subordinate helper. Webster, approved in 115 Mo. 1. They are called menial servants, or domestics, from living infra mœnia, within the walls of the house. 1 Bla. Com. 324; Wood, Inst. 53.

The right of the master to their services in every respect is grounded on the contract between them.

Laborers or persons hired by the day's work or any longer time are not considered servants; 3 S. & R. 551. See 12 Ves. 114; 16 id. 486; 2 Vern. 546; 8 Desc. & C. 832; 2 Mart. La. N. s. 652; DOMESTIC OPERATIVE; MASTER AND SERVANT.

SERVANT'S LIABILITY. (1) The liability of a servant to his master for any damage or expense caused by his negligence or misconduct, whether such damage be directly to the property of the master, or whether it arises from the compensation or reparation which the master has been obliged to make to third persons to satisfy his liability for the acts of the servant. 20 A. & E. Ency. L. (2nd ed.) 51.

(2) His liability for an injury occurring to a fellow servant by reason of his neglect to use proper care and skill. Id. vol. 12, p. 903.

(3) His liability, in conjunction with his master, directly to a third person for injury resulting from actual misfeasance, or tort on his part. Id. vol. 20, p. 52. See ASSUMPTION OF RISK; ASSUMED RISK; MASTER'S LIABILITY.

SERVE. In practice. To deliver with judicial effect; to deliver so as to charge a party, in law, with such delivery; to execute.

SERVI. Bondmen or servile tenants.

SERVICE. In Contracts. The being employed to serve another.

In cases of seduction, the gist of the action is not the injury which the seducer has inflicted on the parent by destroying his peace of mind and the reputation of his child, but for the consequent inability to perform those services for which she was accountable to her master or her parent, who assumes this character for the purpose. See SEDUCTION; 2 M. & W. 539; 7 C. & P. 523.

In Feudal Law. That duty which the tenant owed to his lord by reason of his fee or estate.

The services, in respect of their quality, were either free or base, and in respect of their quantity, and the time of exacting them, were either certain or uncertain. 3 Bla. Com. 62.

In Civil Law. A servitude.

In Practice. The execution of a writ or process. Thus, to serve a writ of capias signifies to arrest a defendant under the process; Kirb. 48; 2 Aik. 338; 11 Mass. 181; to serve a summons is to deliver a copy of it at the house of the party, or to deliver it to him personally, or to read it to him; notices and other papers are served by delivering the same at the house of the party, or to him in person.

But where personal service is impossible, through the non-residence or absence of a party, constructive service by publication is, in some cases, permitted, and is effected by publishing the paper to be served in a newspaper designated in the order of court and by mailing a copy of the paper to the last known address of the party.

Substituted service is a constructive service made upon some recognized representative, as where a statute requires a foreign insurance company doing business in the state of Massachusetts to appoint the insurance commissioner of the state their attorney, "upon whom all lawful processes in any proceeding against the company may be served with like effect as if the company existed in that commonwealth;" 16 Am. L. Rev. 421. Questions are constantly arising as to the validity of service on some particular agent of a foreign corporation within state statutes giving jurisdiction in suits against such corporations. It was held in Louisiana that any service sufficient as against a domestic corporation might be, by law, sufficient against a foreign one, and consequently, that such service might be made upon the president of the latter while temporarily within the jurisdiction of the court in which the suit was commenced; 47 La. Ann. 389; but the rule laid down by the federal courts is that such service is insufficient; 166 U. S. 518; 53 Fed. Rep. 850. See FOREIGN CORPORATION. But it was held by the circuit court that when the manager of a corporation goes into another state on business of the corporation, service of summons against the corporation in a suit relating to that business may be made on him there; 85 Fed. Rep. 757.

"It is useful in all cases to consult the careful opinion in U. S. v. American Bell Tel. Co., 29 Fed. 17, and to re-state the three conditions which it is there said must concur or co-exist in order to give the federal courts jurisdiction in personam over a corporation created in another state:

"(1) It must appear as a matter of fact that the corporation is carrying on its business in the state where it is served with process; (2) that such business is transacted or managed by some agent or officer appointed by and representing the corporation in each state; and (3) the existence of some local law making such corporation, or foreign corporations generally, amenable to suit there, as a condition, express or implied, of doing business in the state." 83 Fed. Rep. 823.

Service of a subpoena in New York on a foreign steamship company may be made on its financial agent who is the head of a firm which is the general agent of the company; 150 U. S. 653.

A salaried agent, empowered to solicit advertisements for a non-resident newspaper corporation, and to make contracts therefor, and receive payment, and who carries on business at an office having the name of the newspaper on its windows, is a "managing agent," on whom valid service of process against the corporation may be made under the New York Code; 82 Fed. Rep. 694.

In an action against a foreign corporation service on an officer who is also the attorney in fact of the plaintiff to institute and prosecute the action is invalid and confers no jurisdiction; 46 S. C. 1.

Service by publication is in general held valid only in proceedings in rem, where the subject-matter is within the jurisdiction of the court, as in suits in partition, attachment, for the foreclosure of mortgages, and the enforcement of mechanics' liens. In many of the states statutes have been passed to meet this class of cases. In purely personal actions, service by publication is invalid, upon the well-settled principle that the person or thing proceeded against must be within the jurisdiction of the court entertaining the cause of action. 27 Am. L. Reg. 92; 95 U. S. 704; 103 id. 439; Story, Conf. L. § 539. See 144 U. S. 41.

No court can exercise, at common law, jurisdiction over a party unless he is served with the process within the territorial jurisdiction of the court, or voluntarily appears; 149 U. S. 194.

Where suit was brought in Massachusetts against a non-resident, and he, in Pennsylvania, accepted service of process, it was held that this did not give the court jurisdiction; 72 Pa. 110.

A notice served in another state upon a person alleged to be a stockholder in a Missouri corporation must be personally made upon him within the territorial jurisdiction of the court which issued it; 144 U. S. 41. The process does not run outside of the state; 25 U. S. App. 70.

Substituted service will be allowed upon a defendant who was within the jurisdiction when the writ issued, but had left the country (though not to evade service), before service could be made; 77 L. T. R. 335.

Where a suit is brought to enforce a lien on real estate in the district to remove a cloud on the title, the plaintiffs are entitled to get substituted service on a non-resident party in order to bring him within the jurisdiction of the court; 31 U. S. App. 486.

The fact that duly qualified officers of a township live outside the township, but within the county, does not necessarily render invalid the service of a notice upon them as officers of the township; 4 U. S. App. 616.

Some states, however, have gone so far as to allow suits in chancery to be maintained against non-residents upon constructive service of process by publication; 15 Am. L. Reg. 2. Proceedings in divorce are sometimes recognized as forming an exception to the rule; 1 Bish. Mar. Div. & S.p. § 837; Bish. Mar. & D. § 150.

A suit in equity in the federal court is commenced by suing out process and a bona fide attempt to serve it; 85 Fed. Rep. 627.

Priority of jurisdiction between two courts of concurrent jurisdiction is determined by the date of the service of process; 80 N. Y. 271; 84 Fed. Rep. 639; as to criminal cases, see 16 Wall. 366. As to the effect of service in relation to the commencement of actions see LIMITATION.

See DIVORCE; FOREIGN JUDGMENT; NON-RESIDENT.

When the service of a writ is prevented by the act of the party on whom it is to be served, it will, in general, be sufficient if the officer do everything in his power to serve it; 1 Mann. & G. 238.

If the service of a summons is not illegal, but slightly irregular, and the irregularity does not appear on the face of the return, it will not be set aside on motion, but the objection must be raised by plea; 15 U. S. App. 400.

As to what constitutes the being in the service of the United States within the meaning of an act relating to longevity pay, see that title.

SERVITIUM LIBERUM. See FREEHOLD.

SERVITIUM REGALE. Royal service, or the prerogatives that within a royal manor, belonged to the lord of it, viz.: power of judicature in matters of property; of life and death in felonies and murders; right to waifs and estrays; remitting of money; assize of bread and beer, and weights and measures. Whart. Dict.

SERVITORS OF BILLS. Such servants or messengers of the marshal belonging to the king's bench as were heretofore sent abroad with bills or writs to summon men to that court, being now called "tipstaves." Blount; 2 Hen. IV. c. 23.

SERVITUDE. In Civil Law. The subjection of one person to another person, or of a person to a thing, or of a thing to a person, or of a thing to a thing.

A right which subjects a land or tenement to some service for the use of another land or tenement which belongs to another master. Domat, Civ. Law, Cushing's ed. § 1018.

A mixed servitude is the subjection of persons to things, or things to persons.

A natural servitude is one which arises in consequence of the natural condition or situation of the soil.

A personal servitude is the subjection of one person to another: if it consists in the right of property which a person exercises over another, it is slavery. When the subjection of one person to another is not slavery, it consists simply in the right of requiring of another what he is bound to do or not to do: this right arises from all kinds of contracts or quasi-contracts. Lois des Bât. p. 1, c. 1, art. 1.

A real or predial servitude is a charge laid on an estate for the use and utility of another estate belonging to another proprietor. La. Code, art. 843. When used without any adjunct, the word servitude means a real or predial servitude. Lois des Bât. p. 1, c. 1; Mitch. R. E. & Conv. 49. Real servitudes are divided into rural and urban.

Rural servitudes are those which are due by an estate to another estate, such as the right of passage over the serving estate, or that which owes the servitude, or to draw water from it, or to water cattle there, or to take coal, lime, and wood from it, and the like.

Urban servitudes are those which are established over a building for the convenience of another, such as the right of resting the joists in the wall of the serving building, of opening windows which overlook the serving estate, and the like. Dalloz, Dict. Servitudes.

This term is used as a translation of the Latin term servitus in the French and Scotch Law. Dalloz, Dict.; Paterson, Comp. and by many common-law writers. 3 Kent 434; Wash. Easem., and in the Civil Code of Louisiana. Service is used by Wood, Taylor, Harris, Cowper, and Cushing in his translation of Domat. Much of the common-law doctrine of easements is closely analogous to, and probably in part derived from, the civil-law doctrine of servitudes.

In common law the use of the word servitude is as a correlative of easement: where one person has an easement which creates a burden upon the property of another, the latter is said to be burdened with a servitude. Servitus aqua ducenda, a right of leading water to one's own land over that of another. Inst. 2. 3. pr.

Servitus aqua educenda, a right of conducting water from one's own land unto a neighbor's. Dig. 8. 3. 29.

Servitus aqua haurienda, a right of drawing water from another's spring or well. Inst. 2. 3. 2.

Servitus cloacæ mittenda, a right of having a sewer through a neighbor's estate. Dig. 8. 1. 7.

Servitus fumi immitendi, a right of conducting smoke or vapor through a neighbor's chimney or over his ground. Dig. 8. 5. 8.

Servitus itineris, a right of way on horseback or in a carriage. This includes a servitus actus. Inst. 2. 3.

Servitus luminum, a right to have an open place for receiving light into a chamber or other room. Domat. l. 1. 4; Dig. 8. 2. 4.

Servitus oneris ferendi, a servitude of supporting a neighbor's building.

Servitus pascendi, a right of pasturing one's cattle on another's lands. Inst. 2. 3. 2.

Servitus pecoris ad aquam adaptandam, a right of driving one's cattle on a neighbor's land to water.

Servitus prædii rustici, a rural servitude. Servitus prædii urbani, an urban servitude.

Servitus prædiorum, a servitude on one estate for the benefit of another. See PRÆDIAE.

Servitus projiciendi, a right of building a projection into the open space belonging to a neighbor. Dig. 8. 2. 2.

Servitus prospectus, a right of prospect.

SERVUS (Lat.). A slave.

The institution of slavery is traced to the remotest antiquity. It is referred to in the poems of Homer; and all the Greek philosophers mention it without the slightest censure. Aristotle justified it on the ground of a diversity of race. The Roman jurists rest the institution of slavery on the law of nations; in a fragment of Florentinus copied in the Institutes of Justinian, servitude is defined, Servitus autem est constitutio juris gentium, qua quis dominico alieno contra naturam subicitur. D. 1, 5, 4, 1; Inst. 1, 3, 2. The Romans considered that they had the right of killing their prisoners of war, manu capti; and that by preserving their lives, servati, they did not abandon but only postponed the exercise of that right. Such was, according to their ideas, the origin of the right of the master over his slave. Hence the etymology of the words servi, from servati, and mancipia, from manu capti, by which slaves were designated. It is, however, more simple and correct to derive the word servus from servire. Inst. 1, 3, 3. Children born of a woman who was a slave followed the condition of their mother; servi nascuntur aut paut.

A free person might be reduced to slavery in various ways: by captivity, ex captivitate. The Roman who was taken prisoner by the enemy lost all his rights as a citizen and a freeman; thus, when Regulus was brought to Rome by the Carthaginian ambassadors he refused to take his seat among the senators, saying that he was nothing but a slave. But if he had made his escape and returned to Rome, all his rights would have been restored to him by the jus postliminii; and the whole period of his captivity would have been effaced, and he would have been considered as if he had never lost his freedom. According to the law of the Twelve Tables, the insolvent debtor became the slave of his creditor, by a judgment rendered in a proceeding called manus injectio,—one of the four legis actiones. The thief taken in the act of stealing, or while he was carrying the thing stolen to the place where he intended to conceal it, was deprived of his freedom, and became a slave. So was a person, who, for the purpose of defrauding the state, omitted to have his name inscribed on the table of the census. The illicit intercourse of a free woman with a slave without the permission of his master, the sentence to a capital punishment and the sentence to work perpetually in the mines,—in metallum dati,—made the culprit the slave as his punishment (servi pene). The ingratitude of the emancipated slave towards his patron or former master and the fraud of a freeman who had suffered himself to be sold by an accomplice (after having attained the age of twenty years) in order to divide the price of the sale, were so punished.

Liberty being inalienable, no one could sell himself; but in order to perpetrate a fraud on the purchaser, a freeman was offered for sale as a slave and bought by an innocent purchaser; after the price had been paid and divided between the confederates, the pretended slave claimed and, of course, obtained his freedom. To remedy this evil and punish this fraud, a senatus consultum issued under Claudius provided that the person who had thus suffered himself to be sold should lose his liberty and remain a slave. In the social and political organization slaves were not taken into consideration; they had no status. Quod attinet ad jus civile, servi nullis habentur. Servitutem mortalitatis fere comparamus. With regard to the master there was no distinction in the condition of slaves: they were all equally subject to the domini potestas. But the master some times established a distinction between the servi vicarii and the servi ordinarii: the former exercised a certain authority over the latter. But there was a marked difference between those slaves of whom we have been speaking and the coloni censiti, adscripti et tributarii, who resembled the serfs of the middle ages. 1 Ortolan 27; 1 Etienne 68 et seq.; Lagrange 93. See SLAVE.

SESSION. The time during which a legislative body, a court, or other assembly, sits for the transaction of business; as, a session of congress, which commences on the day appointed by the constitution, and ends when congress finally adjourns before the commencement of next session; the session of a court which commences at the day appointed by law, and ends when the court finally rises. Approved 64 Ill. 86.

A term.

SESSION COURT. See COURT OF SESSION.

SESSION LAWS. A term used to designate the printed statutes as passed at the successive legislative sessions of the various states. In Pennsylvania they are usually called pamphlet laws. See PAMPHLET.

SESSIONAL ORDERS. Certain orders agreed to by both houses of parliament at the commencement of each session, and in force only during that session. May, P. L.

SESSIONS OF THE PEACE. In English Law. Sittings of justices of the peace for the execution of the powers which are confided to them as such.

Petty sessions (or petit sessions) are sittings held by one or more justices for the trial of minor offences, admitting to bail prisoners accused of felony, and the like purposes.

When sitting for purposes of preliminary inquiry, the public cannot claim admittance; but it is otherwise when sitting for purposes of adjudication.

Special sessions are sittings of two or more justices on a particular occasion for the exercise of some given branch of their authority, upon reasonable notice given to the other magistrates of the hundred or other division of the county, city, etc., for which they are convened. See stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 33.

The counties are distributed into divisions, and authority given by various statutes to the justices acting for the several divisions to transact different descriptions of business, such as licensing alehouses, or appointing overseers of the poor, surveyors of the highways, etc., at special sessions. 3 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 37.

General sessions of the peace are courts of record, holden before the justices, whereof one is of the quorum, for execution of the general authority given to the justices by the commission of the peace and certain acts of parliament.

See COURT OF GENERAL QUARTER SESSIONS OF THE PEACE.

SET ASIDE. To annul; to make void; as, to set aside an award.

When proceedings are irregular, they may be set aside on motion of the party whom they injuriously affect. See ASIDE.

SET OF EXCHANGE. The different parts of a bill of exchange, taken together. Each part is a perfect instrument by itself; but the parts are numbered successively, and upon payment of any one the others become useless. See Chitty, Bills 173; Pars. Notes & B.

SET-OFF. In Practice. A demand which a defendant makes against the plaintiff in the suit for the purpose of liquidating the whole or a part of his claim. See 7 Fla. 320.

A set-off was unknown to the common law, according to which mutual debts were distinct, and inextinguishable except by actual payment or release; Waterm. Set-Off; 1 Rawle 293; Babington, Set-Off 1.

The statute 2 Geo. II. c. 23, which has been generally adopted in the United States, with some modifications, in cases of mutual debts, however, allowed the defendant to set his debt against the other, either by pleading it in bar, or giving it in evidence, when proper notice had been given of such intention, under the general issue. The statute, being made for the benefit of the defendant, is not compulsory; 8 Watts 39; the defendant may waive his right, and bring a cross-action against the plaintiff; 2 Camp. 594; 9 Watts 179.

It seems, however, that in some cases of intestate estates and of insolvent estates, perhaps owing to the peculiar wording of the law, the statute has been held to operate on the rights of the parties before action brought or an act done by either of them; 2 Rawle 293; 3 Binn. 135; Bac. Abr. Bankrupt (K). See 7 Gray 101, 425.

Set-off takes place only in actions on contracts for the payment of money; as, assumption, debt, and covenant; and where the claim set off grows out of a transaction independent of the contract sued on; 31 Conn. 393; the claims to be set off against each other must both be due. In a suit by a railroad company, the company's coupons which had matured during the suit are admissible under a set-off, but not those that had matured after the appointment of a receiver of the plaintiff company; 25 U. S. App. 306. An unliquidated claim cannot be set off against one which is for a stipulated amount. Damages for malicious prosecution cannot be set off in an action for rent; 24 U. S. App. 21. A set-off is not allowed in actions arising ex delicto; as, upon the case, trespass, replevin, or detinue; Bull. N. P. 181; 4 E. D. Sm. 102. And an independent tort cannot be made a defence against another tort, either by way of set-off or counter-claim; 117 Ind. 556; 39 Kan. 183; nor is a set-off available as a defence to an action of tort; 14 So. Rep. (Ala.) 790. Nor can there be a set-off to a set-off; 86 Ala. 523. The right of set-off, except in equity, is a matter of local legislation, and the federal court will follow the rules established by the tribunals of the state in which it is sitting; 73 Fed. Rep. 980.

In Pennsylvania, if it appear that the plaintiff is overpaid, then defendant has a certificate of the amount due to him, which has the effect of a verdict against the plaintiff; Purd. Dig. 487; 10 Pa. 436. But the plaintiff may suffer a nonsuit, notwithstanding a plea of set-off; 7 Watts 496.

The matters which may be set off may be mutual liquidated debts or damages; but unliquidated damages cannot be set off; 3 Bosw. 560; 34 Pa. 239; 34 Ala. n. s. 659; 20 Tex. 31; 2 Head 467; 3 Ia. 163; 1 Blackf. 394; 6 Halst. 397; 5 Wash. C. C. 232. Damages for malicious prosecution cannot be set off in an action for rent; 24 U. S. App. 21. There must be a mutuality in claims to authorize a set-off; 62 Mich. 517. The statutes refer only to mutual unconnected debts; for at common law, when the nature of the employment, transaction, or dealings necessarily constitute an account consisting of receipts and payments, debts and credits, the balance only is considered to be the debt, and therefore in an action it is not necessary in such cases either to plead or give notice of set-off; 4 Burr. 2221. By joining his wife in a suit for her legacy, a husband exercises his election to treat it as joint property; and in such case her debt, dum sola, may be set off, but not his own debt; if he sues alone, his debt may be set off, but not hers dum sola; 4 Del. Ch. 117.

A purchaser of goods from the agent of a known principal cannot set off a sum owing to him from the agent; 83 Fed. Rep. 66.

A claim, an action to recover which would be barred by statute, is also barred as a set-off; 61 Vt. 65; but a plea of set-off cannot be defeated by the statute of limitations, where the claim offered to be set off was a legal subsisting claim at the time the right of action accrued to the plaintiff on the claim in the suit; 83 Ala. 420.

Set-off against the government will only be allowed after the claim has been rejected by the accounting department, or where a statute permits it; 9 Crn. 213. There can be no recovery on an independent claim against a state; 4 Dall. 303.

A depositor in an insolvent bank, who had indorsed a note that was subsequently discounted by said bank, can, in a suit by the bank to recover the amount of the note, set off his deposit against this amount, when the note matured after the insolvency of the bank; 49 Fed. Rep. 337. See 146 U. S. 499. A debt from an insolvent not due at the time of his making an assignment for the benefit of creditors, may be set off by the creditor against a debt due from him to the insolvent at the time of the assignment; 43 Hun 73; 85 id. 619. Where mutual obligations have grown out of the same transaction insolvency on the one hand justifies the set-off of the debt due upon the other; 146 U. S. 499. A stockholder indebted to an insolvent corporation for unpaid shares cannot set off against this trust fund for creditors a debt due him by the corporation; 139 U. S. 417.

Judgments in the same rights may be set off against each other, at the discretion of the court; 3 Bibb 233; 3 Watts 78; 3 Halst. 172; 18 Tex. 541; 30 Ala. n. s. 470; 4 Ohio 90; 7 Mass. 140, 144; 8 Cow. 126; 112 N. Y. 655. Equitable set-off cannot be pleaded by way of answer, but the relief sought must be invoked by bill or cross-bill; 30 S. W. Rep. (Tenn.) 960. See Montague, Babington, Set-Off; 10 L. R. A. 378; DEFAUCATION; LIEN; RECOURMENT.

Set-Off and Discount Distinguished. A "set-off" and a "discount" are separate and distinct matters. The first is an independent debt or demand, which the debtor has against the creditor, and which he can use to counter-balance the demand of the latter against him, either in whole or in part. The second is a right which the debtor has to an abatement of the demand against him, in consequence of a partial failure of the consideration or on account of some equity arising out of the transaction on which the demand is founded. 1 Met. (Ky.) 598.

SET ON FOOT. Arrange; place in order; set forward; put in the place of being ready. 53 Fed. Rep. 598. See NEUTRALITY.

SETI. As used in mining laws, lease. Brown

SETTLE. To adjust or ascertain; to pay.

Two contracting parties are said to settle an account when they ascertain what is justly due by one to the other; when one pays the balance or debt due by him, he is said to settle such debt or balance. 11 Ala. n. s. 419.

SETTLED CASE ON APPEAL. That power of the record of appeal which consists of a statement prepared by the appellant's counsel setting forth so much of the testamentary proceedings had in the court below as may be material to the questions intended to be required of the appellate court, subject to amendments of the opposing counsel and to a statement of the trial judge. In other states the word appeal book or paperbook is applied. 15 Alb. L. J. 242.

SETTLEMENT. A residence under such circumstances as to entitle a person to support or assistance in case of becoming a pauper.

It is obtained in various ways, to wit: by birth; by the legal settlement of the father, in the case of minor children; by marriage; by continued residence; by the payment of requisite taxes; by the lawful exercise of a public office; by hiring and service for a specified time; by serving an apprenticeship; and perhaps some others, which depend upon the local statutes of the different states. See 1 Bla. Com. 868; 1 Dougl. 9; 6 S. & R. 103, 565; 10 id. 179.

In Contracts. An agreement by which two or more persons who have dealings together so far arrange their accounts as to ascertain the balance due from one to the other; payment in full.

The conveyance of an estate for the benefit of some person or persons. See ANTE-NUPTIAL CONTRACT; WIFE'S EQUITY.

Settlement and Entry.

The words "settlement and entry" apply only to the act of settling upon the soil and making entry at a land office, as, for example, under the homestead laws; mining lands are acquired, not by settlement and entry, but by location and development. 260 U. S. 553.

See DIRECT SETTLEMENT; FINAL SETTLEMENT; RING SETTLEMENT.

SETTLEMENT, DEED OF. A deed made for the purpose of settling property, i. e. arranging the mode and extent of the enjoyment thereof. The party who settles property is called the settler; Brown. See SETTLEMENT. In England, the term was used prior to 1862, indicating in relation to a corporation the same things as articles or memorandum of association. Cook, St. & Stockh. § 16.

Also, the instrument whereby formerly, in England, a joint stock company was formed; this is now achieved by articles of association (q. v.). R. & L. Dict.

SETTLEMENT ESTATE DUTY. See DEATH DUTIES.

SETTLER. A person who, for the purpose of acquiring a pre-emption right, has gone upon the land in question, and is actually resident there. See 27 Minn. 222. See LANDS, PUBLIC; SETTLEMENT, DEED OF; ACTUAL SETTLER.

SETTLING A BILL OF EXCEPTIONS, or a CASE. When an appellant has prepared and served on respondent a bill of exceptions, or a case, such as he proposes should be submitted to the appellate court, if the respondent considers it in any respect incorrect, he prepares and serves amendments. If the appellant will not consent to these, the questions on which they differ are carried before the judge who tried the cause, and he decides them according to his minutes and recollection of what took place. This decision, which forms a final adjustment of the bill or case, is called settling it, or the settlement of it. Abbott.

SETTLING DAY. The day on which transactions for the "account" are made up on the Stock Exchange. Whart. Dict. The settling days for English and foreign stocks and shares occur twice a month, the middle and the end. Those for consols are once in every month, generally near the commencement of the month; Moz. & W. A conspiracy to obtain a settling day by fraudulent means in order to defraud buyers of shares, or a conspiracy by fraudulent means to raise or lower the price of shares with intent to defraud buyers or sellers, is an indictable offence; 1 Q. B. D. 730; 3 M. & S. 67; 2 Lind. Part. *711, 816.

SETTLING A DECREE. See SETTLING A BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

SETTLING ISSUES. In English Practice. Deciding the forms of the issues to be determined in a trial, according to the provisions of the Judicature Act of 1875. Sched. I. ord. 26; 8 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 549.

SEVER. In Practice. To separate; to insist upon a plea distinct from that of other co-defendants.

SEVERAL. Separate; distinct. Exclusive, individual, appropriated. In this sense it is opposed to common; and it has been held that the word could not be construed as equivalent to respective; 67 N. Y. 848; though it has been construed to mean all; 42 N. J. Eq. 501.

More than two, but not very many. 58 Ala. 153; several hundred dollars includes seven hundred dollars. Id. See JOINT

AND SEVERAL; ENTIRE.

SEVERAL CONTRACTS. See ENTIRE AND SEVERAL CONTRACTS.

SEVERAL FISHERY. See FISHERY.

SEVERAL ISSUES. This occurs where there is more than one issue involved in a case. 8 Steph. Com. 560.

SEVERAL OBLIGATION. See OBLIGATION.

SEVERAL TAIL. An entail severally to two; as, if land is given to two men and their wives, and to the heirs of their bodies begotten; here the donees have a joint estate for their two lives, and yet they have a several inheritance, because the issue of the one shall have his moiety, and the issue of the other the other moiety. Cowel.

SEVERAL TENANCY. A tenancy which is separate, and not held jointly with another person.

SEVERALLY. Distinctly, separately, apart from others. 124 Ill. 471. When applied to a number of persons the expression severally liable usually implies that each one is liable alone. 21 N. Y. 301.

SEVERALTY, ESTATE IN. An estate which is held by the tenant in his own right only, without any other being joined or connected with him in point of interest during the continuance of his estate. 2 Bla. Com. 179.

SEVERANCE. The separation of a part of a thing from another; for example, the separation of machinery from a mill is a severance, and in that case the machinery, which while annexed to the mill was real estate, becomes by the severance personalty, unless such severance be merely temporary. Mitch. R. E. & Conv. 20; 8 Wend. 587.

In Pleading. When an action is brought in the name of several plaintiffs, in which the plaintiffs must of necessity join, and one or more of the persons so named do not appear, or make default after appearance, the other may have judgment of severance, or, as it is technically called, judgment ad sequendum solum.

But in personal actions, with the exception of those by executors, and of detinue for charters there can be no summons and severance; Co. Litt. 139.

After severance, the party severed can never be mentioned in the suit nor derive any advantage from it.

When there are several defendants, each of them may use such plea as he may think proper for his own defence; and they may join in the same plea, or sever, at their discretion; Co. Litt. 303 a; except, perhaps, in the case of dilatory pleas; Hob. 245, 250. But when the defendants have once united in the plea they cannot afterwards sever at the rejoinder, or other later stage of the pleading. See, generally, Brooke, Abr. Summ. and Sev.; 3 Rolle 488.

Of Estates. The destruction of any one of the unities of a joint tenancy. It is so called because the estate is no longer a joint tenancy, but is severed.

A severance may be effected in various ways, namely: by partition, which is either voluntary or compulsory; by alienation of one of the joint tenants, which turns the estate into a tenancy in common; by the purchase or descent of all the shares of the joint tenants, so that the whole estate becomes vested in one only. Comyns, Dig. Estates by Grant (K. 5); 1 Binn. 175.

SEVERE. Within the meaning of a life insurance policy, severe illness means such an illness as has, or ordinarily does have, a permanent, detrimental effect upon the physical system. 20 Fed. Rep. 569; 64 N. Y. 236.

SEWAGE PURPOSES. Where the effluent water from a sewage farm flows into a pool, the cleansing, levelling, and concreting the bottom of that pool to prevent the accumulation of sewage is a work for "sewage purposes." 56 L. J. Ch. 150; 32 Ch. D. 431; Stroud.

SEWER. A subterranean passage for drainage, usually constructed and maintained by a municipal corporation.

A drain or passage to carry off water and filth underground. Webst. Dict.

A conduit or canal constructed, especially in a town or city, to carry off superfluous water, soil, and other matters; a public drain. Cent. Dict.

A fresh-water trench or little river, encompassed with banks on both sides, to carry the water into the sea and thereby preserve the lands against inundation, etc. See Callis, Sew. 80, 99; Cowel. Properly, a trench artificially made for the purpose of carrying water into the sea, river, or some other place of reception. Crabb, R. P. a. 113; 110 Mass. 433. A ditch or trench through marshy places to carry off water. Spelman, Gloss. See Washb. Easem.

The general corporation act in Pennsylvania provides for the construction of sewerage systems by private corporations by consent of the local authorities.

The authority to construct public sewers is not incident to corporate powers, if ample provision is made by general statutes; 83 Me. 352; but permission may be granted to a private person to lay an under-drain in the street from his premises, without the consent of abutting lot-owners; 150 Pa. 451.

Where general laws place the duty of constructing sewers on municipal officers, the municipality cannot be held liable for negligence; 83 Me. 352; or for injuries to one who falls into a sewer which they negligently leave unguarded.

Damages for the negligent construction of a sewer must be confined to actual, not prospective, damages at time of suit; 88 Tenn. 415.

A municipal corporation owes to the public a duty in the construction of its sewers not to injure the gas mains or other under-ground conveniences and is responsible to any one injured in consequence of a breach of that duty, although the performance of it had been delegated to an independent contractor; [1898] 1 Q. B. 315, where it was held that when a gas main was broken by the negligence of the contractors, and an explosion took place in a private house because of the escape of the gas from the broken main, the municipality was liable, the damages not being too remote.

Generally a city will be enjoined from using or building a sewer so as to create a nuisance; 142 Ill. 197; 127 N. Y. 281; and a license for discharge of sewage from a particular district will not authorize the discharge from a larger one; 127 id. 591; but an injunction was refused to restrain the discharge of sewage from one district into another, where the first district had private connections with the sewer, the remedy being a suit against the inhabitants; [1891] 8 Ch. 527. Authority to carry a sewer under a highway does not grant power to discharge it into a river; 1 Hen. & M. 399; at a place that destroys navigation or the use of a dock; 126 Mass. 867; or into a private canal; 117 Mass. 896.

A borough has a right to make a sewer which empties into a natural stream, though it increased the flowage; 40 Pa. 864; and may permit citizens to lay a drain pipe into it to carry off their surplus water; 150 Pa. 451.

A landlord making a sewer under his tenant's land, without his consent, is liable for damages caused by the tenant stopping the sewer; 40 L. T. N. S. 180; but if the nuisance is created by a tenant, a grantee subject to the tenancy is not liable to third persons; 157 Mass. 117.

A drain passing through private ground, but receiving the drainage of more than one building, is held to be a sewer; [1894] 1 Q. B. 233.

The construction of sewers does not impose an additional burden on a highway;

23 Vt. 367; 29 Conn. 363; 27 N. Y. 304; 18 Allen 159, 311, 391; see 99 U. S. 635; but in Pennsylvania it is contra as to country roads; 18 Co. Ct. Rep. (Pa.) 670. And the consent of abutting owners is required, where they are constructed by private corporations; 160 Pa. 372. See POLLUTION.

SEX. The physical difference between male and female in animals.

In the human species the male is called man, and the female woman. Some human beings whose sexual organs are somewhat imperfect have acquired the name of hermaphrodite.

SEXHINDMEN. See HINDEN; HOMINES.

SEXTERY LANDS. Lands given to a church for maintenance of a sexton or sacristan. Cowel.

SEXTON. The name of this functionary is a corruption of sacristan, the person who in pre-Reformation times had charge of the sacred vessels, the vestments and the like. In some of the cathedrals, the office of sacristan or sexton, in its ancient sense, is still held by a minor canon. Now, the sexton is sometimes merely a person who has charge of the church and its contents, and who rings the church bell, in which case the appointment generally lies with the churchwardens; but the incumbent generally appoints if, as is sometimes the case, the sexton is clerk as well as sexton, or if, as happens in some parishes, the sexton merely looks after the church yard and digs graves. In many places, however, the sexton, without regard to the particular nature of his duties, is elected by the parishioners in select vestry or by the churchwardens and the parishioners. His tenure of office, like everything else connected with him, also depends upon local custom; in some cases he holds merely during pleasure, while in others it is a freehold for life except in case of proved misconduct. In 1729 it was decided in England that a woman could hold the office. Byrne.

SHACK. See COMMON.

SHADE TREES. Trees standing upon the land of an owner on the border of a public highway, are "shade trees," within the meaning of a statute. 109 S. W. 340.

SHADOW. To follow or attend closely like a shadow; to keep close to and watch without being observed. Stand. Dict. Commonly used with reference to activities of detectives (q. v.).

SHALL. The various meanings of this word range under two general classes according as it is used as implying futurity or implying a mandate, as the words shall be born in a will in the absence of a context are words of futurity; 6 App. Cas. 471; and where a statute declares a thing shall be done, the natural and proper meaning is that a peremptory mandate is enjoined; Stroud, L. Dict., which see for classifications of cases in which the word has been held to be used in a directory and others in which it is used in a peremptory sense. It is held in the United States that it is to be construed as may, unless a contrary intention is shown. 95 U. S. 170.

Shall Go. It is well settled that the use of the words "shall go" or "descend" do not import a contingency, or make anything necessary to precede the vesting of a remainder, but only express the time when a remainder shall take effect in possession, not when it shall become vested. 43 S. W. 677.

SHAM PLEA. See PLEA.

SHANGHAING OF SAILORS. To ship as a sailor when drugged or drunk. Stand. Dict.

Whoever, with intent that any person shall perform service or labor of any kind on board of any vessel engaged in trade and commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, or on board of any vessel of the United States engaged in navigating the high seas or any navigable water of the United States, shall procure or induce or attempt to procure or induce, another, by force or threats or by representations which he knows or believes to be untrue, or while the person so procured or induced is intoxicated or under the influence of any drug, to go on board of any such vessel, or to sign in any wise enter into any agreement to go on board of any such vessel to perform service or labor thereon; or whoever shall knowingly detain on board of any such vessel any person so procured or induced to go on board thereof, or to enter into any agreement to go on board thereof, or by any means herein defined; or whoever shall knowingly aid or abet in the doing of any of the things herein made unlawful, shall be fined not more than $1000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both. Criminal Code of U. S. § 82.

SHANTIES. Double-boxed buildings 30 by 15 feet with an ell attachment, and four or five other buildings appurtenant thereto, such as smoke-houses, privies, stables, and woodhouse, are "shanties," within the meaning of a covenant in a deed not to erect "shanties" on the land conveyed. 123 S. W. 1195.

SHARE. A portion of anything. Sometimes shares are equal, at other times they are unequal.

As to shares in corporation law, see CORPORATION; PERSONAL PROPERTY; STOCK; STOCKHOLDER.

The proportion which descends to one of several children from his ancestor is called a share. The term share and share alike signifies in equal proportions. See PART.

See FOUNDERS' SHARES; PREFERRED SHARE.

Share and Share Alike. "Share and share alike" indicate a severance of interest. 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 551.

See CAPITAL STOCK.

SHARE CERTIFICATE. See STOCK.

SHARE AND SHARE ALIKE. In equal shares or proportions.

SHAREHOLDER. See STOCKHOLDER.

SHARPING CORN. A customary gift of corn which, at every Christmas, the farmers in some parts of England give to their smith for sharpening their plough-irons, harrow-tines, etc. Blount.

SHAVE. To buy any security for money at a discount. 2 Den. 293; also, to obtain the property of another by oppression and extortion. Id.

SHEADING. A riding, tithing, or division in the Isle of Man, where the whole island is divided into six sheadings, in each of which there is a coroner or chief constable appointed by a delivery of a rod at the Tinewald court or annual convention. King, Isle of Man 7.

SHEEP. A wether more than a year old. 4 C. & P. 216.

SHEEP SILVER. A service turned into money which was paid because anciently the tenants used to wash the lord's sheep.

When applicable it is not affected by the testator's intention; 23 Atl. Rep. (N. J.) 587. It is equally applicable to conveyances by deed and limitations by will; 4 Kent *217. If applied to real estate, it enlarges the estate for life into an inheritance, and makes the tenant for life a tenant in fee; it makes the tenant for life of personality an absolute owner; 4 Kent 227.

SHELLEY'S CASE, RULE IN. "When the ancestor, by any gift or conveyance, taketh an estate of freehold, and in the same gift or conveyance an estate is limited, either mediately or immediately, to his heirs in fee or in tail, the heirs are words of limitation of the estate, and not words of purchase." 1 Co. 104.

This rule has been the subject of much comment. Its origin can be deduced from feudal tenure; 4 Kent 217. It is given by Mr. Preston, Estates, pp. 263, 419, as follows: When a person takes an estate of freehold, legally or equitably, under a deed, will, or other writing, and in the same instrument there is a limitation by way of remainder, either with or without the interposition of another estate, of the same legal or equitable quality, to his heirs, or heirs of his body, as a class of persons to take in succession from generation to generation, the limitation to the heirs entitles the ancestor to the whole estate. See 35 B. Monr. 282; Hargr. Law Tracts 489, 551; 2 Kent 214.

If the limitation be to one and the heirs of the body, he takes an estate tail; if to one and his heirs generally, a fee-simple; 1 Day 299; 2 Yeates 410.

It does not apply where the ancestor's estate is equitable and that of the heirs legal; 1 Curt. C. C. 419.

The rule was adopted as a part of the common law of this country, and in many of the states still prevails. It has been abolished in most of them. The subject has been exhaustively treated in Pennsylvania, and the numerous decisions will be found analyzed and arranged in tabular form in an essay by J. P. Gross, Esq. (Harrisburg, 1877). The rule has been held applicable to instruments in which the words, "heirs" or "heirs" are used; 3 W. & S. 38; "issue"; 3 W. & S. 100; 30 Pa. 138; 45 id. 179; "child" or "children"; 7 W. & S. 288; 50 Pa. 483; "son" or "daughter"; 3 S. & R. 431; 70 Pa. 335; "next of kin"; "offspring"; 36 Pa. 117; "descendants" and similar expressions are used in the technical sense of the word heirs. Chief Justice Gibson states the operation of the rule as follows: "It operates only on the intention (of the deviser) when it has been ascertained, not on the meaning of the words used to express it. The ascertainment is left to the ordinary rules of construction peculiar to wills. . . . It converts the ancestor an estate for life, in the first instance, and, by force of the devise to his heirs, general or special, the inheritance also, by conferring the remainder on him, as the stock from which alone they can inherit." 13 Pa. 311, 334. Although a fee is given in the first part of a will, it may be restrained by subsequent words, so as to convert it into a life estate; 45 Pa. 347. See 75 id. 319; 83 id. 242, 377; 87 id. 144; id. 214; 91 id. 301; Hayes on Estat. Tail *53. See 9 Yerg. 20; 17 L. J. Rep. (H. of L.) 170.

SHEPWAY, COURT OF. See COURTS OF THE CINQUE PORTS.

SHERIFF (Sax. scyre, shire, reve, keeper). A county officer representing the executive or administrative power of the state within his county.

The office is said by Camden to have been created by Alfred when he divided England into counties; but Lord Coke is of opinion that it is of still greater antiquity, and that it existed in the time of the Romans, being the deputy of the earl (comes), to whom the custody of the shire was originally committed, and hence the name comes; Camden 156; Co. Litt. 188 a; Dalt. Sheriff 5.

At the common law the office of sheriff might be granted to one in fee, and the grant was not void although the office should descend to an infant; 9 Co. 97 b; and the reason for the validity of such grants was that responsible deputies might be appointed on behalf of infants; 5 B. & Ald. 81. An infant cannot be appointed general deputy sheriff, but might be deputed to serve a particular writ; 1 Kan. 169.

The selection of sheriffs in England was formerly by an election of the inhabitants of the respective counties, except that in some counties the office was hereditary, and in Middlesex the shrievalty was and still is vested by charter in the city of London. But now the lord chancellor, in conjunction with the judges of the courts, nominates suitable persons for the office, and the king appoints. See 22 & 23 Vict. c. 21, § 42.

In this country the usual practice is for the people of the several counties to elect sheriffs.

It is the sheriff's duty to preserve the peace within his bailiwick or county. To this end he is the first man within the county, and may apprehend and commit to prison all persons who break or attempt to break the peace, or may bind them over in a recognizance to keep the peace. He is bound, ex officio, to pursue and take all traitors, murderers, felons, and rioters; has the safekeeping of the county jail, and must defend it against all rioters; and for this, as well as for any other purpose, in the execution of his duties he may command the inhabitants of the county to assist him, which is called the posse comitatus. And this summons every person over fifteen years of age is bound to obey, under pain of fine and imprisonment; Dalt. Sheriff 355; 2d Inst. 454.

In his ministerial capacity he is bound to execute, within his county, all processes that issue from the courts of justice, except where he is a party to the proceeding, in which case the coroner acts in his stead. On meane process he is to execute the writ, to arrest and take bail; when the cause comes to trial he summons and returns the jury, and when it is determined he carries into effect the judgment of the court. In criminal cases he also arrests and imprisons, returns the jury, has the custody of the prisoner, and executes the sentence of the court upon him, whatever it may be.

It is a settled principle of the common law that every man's house is his castle; accordingly, in the service of civil process, an officer may not break open the outer door of a dwelling-house. He must await his opportunity to enter peaceably without force or violence; 5 Co. 91; 19 Vt. 151; 24 Wend. 369; but having, without force, obtained admission to the house, he may go from one room to another and forcibly open any inner doors, chests, trunks, or other places where property is kept, in order to make a levy; Cowp. 1; 2 Harring. 494; 5 Johns. 352; 1 Bay 358. Where a building was kept by several tenants and had an outer door through which they all passed to gain their several apartments, it was held that an officer who entered this door might enter any other; 6 Daly 449. A building occupied for business as a work-shop, any other building not being a dwelling-house, but connected therewith, may be entered by breaking through the outer door; [1895] 2 Q. B. 663. Where a building is occupied partly as a dwelling and partly for business, a common outer door through which both parties are approached may be broken to make a levy in the store; 50 Mich. 209; but where a milliner carried on her business and resided in one room, it was held to be a trespass, when an officer made an entry by breaking; 34 Minn. 92.

In England it was formerly held that although an officer who forced the outer door of a dwelling was a trespasser, the levy made by him was good; 5 Co. 98; Year Book 18 Edw. IV. fol. 4, pl. 19; but it is now doubtful; 7 Ex. 72; 6 H. L. Cas. 443; and in the United States the doctrine is said to have met with no favor; Freeman. Ex. 256; and it is held that such a levy is void; 12 Pick. 270; 24 Wend. 369; 4 Hill 433; 47 N. H. 482.

He also possesses a judicial capacity, and may hold a court and summon a jury for certain purposes; this jurisdiction, in this respect, is at common law quite extensive. This branch of his powers, however, is circumscribed in this country by the statutes of the several states, and is generally confined to the execution of writs of inquiry, of damages, and the like, sent to him from the superior courts of law; 1 Bla. Com. 389.

He has no power or authority out of his own county, except when he is commanded by a writ of habeas corpus to carry a prisoner out of his county; and then if he conveys him through several counties the prisoner is in custody of the sheriffs of each of the counties through which he passes; Plowd. 37 a; 2 Rolle 163; 26 Tex. App. 7. If, however, a prisoner escapes and flies into another county, the sheriff or his officers may, upon fresh pursuit, take him again in such county. But he may do mere ministerial acts out of his county, if within the state, such as making out a panel or return, or assigning a bail-bond, or the like; 2 Ld. Raym. 1455; 2 Stra. 727.

To assist him in the discharge of his various duties, he may appoint an under-sheriff, and as many general or special deputies as the public service may require, who may discharge all the ordinary ministerial duties of the office, such as the service and return of process and the like, but not the execution of a writ of inquiry, for this is in the nature of a judicial duty, which may not be delegated. All acts of the under-sheriff or of the deputies are done in the name of the sheriff, who is responsible for them, although such acts should amount to a trespass or an extortion on the part of the officer; for which reason he usually takes bonds from all his subordinates for the faithful performance of their duties; Cro. Eliz. 294; Doug. 40. But a deputy sheriff cannot, as such, engage to guard the property of a private person not in the custody of the law; 58 Ark. 331.

The sheriff also appoints a jailer, who is usually one of his deputies. The jailer is responsible for the escape of any prisoner committed to his charge, and is bound to have sufficient force at his disposal to prevent a breach of the prison by a mob or otherwise; and nothing will excuse him but an act of God or the public enemy. He must not be guilty of cruelty, without sufficient cause; but he may defend himself at all hazards if attacked. In a case where a prisoner, notwithstanding his remonstrances, was confined by the jailer in a room in which was a person ill with the small-pox, which disease he took and died, it was held to be murder in the jailer; Viner, Abr. Gao. (A); 4 Term 789; 4 Co. 84; Co. 3d Inst. 34; 2 Stra. 856.

A deputy cannot depute another person to do the duty intrusted to him; although it is not necessary that his should be the hand that executes the writ; it is sufficient if he is present and assists. A deputy sheriff's return of process in his own name, with the words "deputy sheriff" added, is void; 31 Fla. 147; but a return of a levy may properly be indorsed on an execution by a third person at the discretion and in the presence of the sheriff; 98 Ala. 479. In the execution of criminal process, he may, after demanding admittance, break open the outer door of a house; but in civil actions he may not forcibly enter a dwelling-house, for every man's house is said to be his castle and fortress, as well for defence as for repose. But a warehouse, store, or barn, or the inner door of a dwelling-house after the officer has peaceably entered, is not privileged. Process or writs of any description may not be served on Sunday, except in cases of treason, felony, or breach of the peace; nor may the sheriff on that day retake a prisoner who has escaped from custody; 6 Wend. 454; 4 Taunt. 619; Cro. Eliz. 908; Cro. Car. 537; W. Jones 429; 3 B. & P. 223.

In the absence of representations of title made at a sheriff's sale of property on execution, the purchaser has no remedy against the plaintiff or sheriff for failure of title; 117 Ind. 206.

A sheriff is not liable on his bond, but is personally liable, for acts done under process void on its face; and the order of a criminal court in excess of its jurisdiction, directing him to redeliver a certain person to prison, is no protection to a sheriff, no matter what the decision of the court having jurisdiction of the habeas corpus proceeding might be; 22 Tenn. 520; but he is not liable for acts done by order of a court of competent jurisdiction; 45 La. Ann. 1221; or by a court in excess of its jurisdiction, if the process does not show that fact on its face; 61 Am. Dec. 470. He is not required to question apparently regular process; 66 Mich. 181. He is bound to serve voidable process; 11 S. E. Rep. (S. C.) 383; if the error may be amended; 2 Col. 388. See FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

If a court having jurisdiction issues a writ against specific property, the sheriff is protected in seizing it; 50 N. Y. 355; whoever owns it; 87 Ill. 617; if he take it from the defendant in the writ; 114 Mass. 570; although the plaintiff had no claim; 39 Conn. 507. See infra.

A levy on the goods of a stranger to an execution amounts to a trespass, although the goods are not touched and there is no actual taking, and to maintain the action the plaintiff must have the right of, or be in actual possession of the property at the time of the levy; and the sheriff may abandon or restrict the levy to the defendant's interests, and be thereby discharged, even though the return was not altered until after the action of trespass is begun; 128 Pa. 397.

A sheriff may not serve a writ to which he is a party; 17 Pick. 106; or in which he is interested; 43 N. H. 238.

Where there are several writs, it is the sheriff's duty to serve them in the order of their receipt; Freeman, Exec. § 197; 18 Wis. 406. Where the judgment is a lien, it is his duty to apply the proceeds to the oldest lien; 85 Am. Dec. 568; but if the defendant gives him money to apply to a junior execution, he must so apply it; 85 Pa. 166.

A sheriff cannot arrest in civil proceedings without a writ; 8 Term 187; which the person arrested is entitled to see; 13 Mass. 321; and the writ must contain the correct name of the person arrested; 9 Wend. 319; unless he is known by either name; 1 Wend. 133; but the officer is liable for arresting the wrong person, whose name is the same as that in the writ; 14 Mass. 184. Misnomer in an execution in which the same mistake occurred as in the original writ, does not affect the officer; 1 Mass. 76. See ARREST.

Where a person in custody on civil process escapes, the sheriff is liable to the plaintiff for the value of the claim; 63 N. C. 188. At common law, voluntary escape made the sheriff liable for the plaintiff's claim, and discharged the defendant; 78 Pa. 396; but if the escape was through negligence, or was involuntary, recaption before suit by the plaintiff was a bar; 10 Gratt. 529.

The sheriff must act with diligence; 38 Ala. 315; and, in the absence of instructions, execute the process according to its terms; 60 N. H. 127; 18 Barb. 56. Special instructions regarding a general writ should be followed; 34 N. H. 261; in the absence of which he should make reasonable search for the defendant and his property; Freeman, Exec. § 252. If he has doubt as to the title of the defendant, he may require indemnity; 8 Ala. 685; which is implied by instructions to proceed in a special manner; 83 Mo. 323. If he seizes the property of one not named in the writ he is liable as a trespasser; 24 Ill. 56; if he remains in a house a long time in possession of goods taken in execution, he becomes a trespasser ab initio; 8 Ex. 237.

An officer may continue to levy until the return day in order to satisfy the writ; 26 N. J. L. 124; but is liable for an excessive levy; 40 Cal. 401; and must take due care to preserve the lien on the property attached; 16 Mass. 5; in moving goods; 2 La. Ann. 162; but if the property attached perishes without his fault, he is not liable; 20 Me. 266.

See EXECUTION; ARREST; ESCAPE; LEVY; SERVICE; PROCESS.

SHERIFF-DEPUTE. The judge of a Scotch county. Bell.

SHERIFF-GELD. A rent formerly paid by a sheriff, and it is prayed that the sheriff in his account may be discharged thereof. Rot. Parl. 50 Edw. III.

SHERIFF-TOOTH. 1. A tenure by the service of providing entertainment for the sheriff at his county courts. 2. An ancient tax on land in Derbyshire. 3. A common tax levied for the sheriff's diet. Cowell; Moz. & W.

SHERIFF'S COURT. In Scotch Law. A court having an extensive civil and criminal jurisdiction.

Its judgments and sentences are subject to review by the court of session and court of justiciary. Alison, Pract. 25; Paterson, Comp. 941, n. See COMMUNAL COURTS.

SHERIFF'S COURT IN LONDON. A tribunal having cognizance of personal actions under the London (city) Small Debts Act of 1852.

The sheriff's court in London is one of the chief of the courts of limited and local jurisdiction in London. 3 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 301, 440, note (1); 3 Bla. Com. 80, note (j).

By the County Courts Act, 1867, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 142, this court is now classed among the county courts, so far as regards the administration of justice; 3 Steph., 11th ed. 30, n.

SHERIFF'S JURY. In Practice. A jury composed of no determinate number, but which may be more or less than twelve, summoned by the sheriff for the purposes of an inquisition or inquest of office. 3 Bla. Com. 258.

SHERIFF'S OFFICERS. Bailiffs who are either bailiffs of hundreds or bound-bailiffs.

SHERIFF'S SALE. A sale of property by a sheriff or his deputy, in execution of the mandate of legal process. Anderson, L. Diet.; 2 Vt. 172.

SHERIFF'S TOUR. A court of record in England, held twice every year, within a month after Easter and Michaelmas, before the sheriff, in different parts of the county.

SHERIFFALTY, or SHRIEVALTY. The office of sheriff.

SHERRERIE. A word used by the authorities of the Roman church, to specify contemptuously the technical parts of the law, as administered by non-clerical lawyers. Bacon.

SHIFT MARRIAGE. A mock marriage. Stand. Diet.

SHIFTING CLAUSE. In a settlement, a clause by which some other mode of devolution is substituted for that primarily prescribed.

SHIFTING USE. Such a use as takes effect in derogation of some other estate, and is limited expressly by the deed or is allowed to be created by some person named in the deed. Gilb. Uses 152, n.; 2 Washb. R. P. 284.

For example, a feoffment in fee is made to the use of W and his heirs till A pays £40 to W, and then to the use of A and his heirs. A very common application is in the case of marriage settlements. Wms. R. P., 10th ed. 330. The doctrine of shifting uses furnished a means of evading the principle of law that a fee could not be limited after a fee. See 2 Washb. R. P. 284; Wms. R. P., 10th ed. 330; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 453; 1 Vern. 403; 1 Edw. Ch. 34. See SECONDARY USE.

SHILLING. In English Law. The name of an English coin, of the value one-twentieth part of a pound. In the United States while they were colonies there were coins of this denomination; but they varied greatly in their value.

SHIN-PLASTER. Formerly a jocosely term for a bank-note greatly depreciated in value; also for paper money of a denomination less than a dollar. Webster.

The terms shin-plasters, small bills, small notes, have no established definitions. The object of the legislature, in passing an act to prohibit the issue and circulation of bills or notes so designated, may be supposed to be to prevent the circulation of any or all bills and notes intended and issued to be used as a circulating medium, in place of, or as a substitute for, bank-notes. Abbott; 2 Ind. 483.

SHIP. A vessel employed in navigation; Ben. Ad. § 215; for example, the terms the ship's papers, the ship's husband, shipwreck, and the like, are employed whether the vessel referred to be a brig, a schooner, a sloop, or a three-masted vessel.

The word comprehends every description of vessel navigating on any sea or channel, lake or river, to which the provisions of revised statutes, title "Merchant Marine," may be applicable; R. S. § 4612; 48

Fed. Rep. 312. See 119 U. S. 629. See 46 Fed. Rep. 204, as to what is not a ship.

A vessel with three masts, employed in navigation; 4 Wash. C. C. 530; the boats and rigging; 2 Marsh. Ins. 727; together with the anchors, masts, cables, and such-like objects, are considered as part of the ship; Pardessus, n. 599.

As to what passes by a bill of sale under the general term ship, or ship and her appurtenances, or ship, apparel, and furniture, see 1 Pars. Marit. Law 71, n. 3; AP-PAREL. The capacity of a ship is ascertained by its tonnage, or the space which may be occupied by its cargo. A majority of the owners cannot change the ownership by forming themselves into a limited company; [1895] P. 284; admiralty will authorize a majority in value of the owners of a ship to employ the ship, taking a bond for the protection of the minority; 3 Kent 151; a dissenting part-owner, receiving securities, cannot claim compensation or a share of the profits; 4 Sim. 439; and is not liable for a collision; 18 Fed. Rep. 547.

Carriers by water are to a certain extent common carriers, in all the strictness of the common-law rule; 3 Kent § 217; 19 How. 312; like common carriers, apart from express contract, they are absolutely responsible for the goods intrusted to them, and insure them against all contingencies excepting only the act of God and the enemies of the Queen. Per Lopes, L. J., in 16 Q. B. D. 633. See, also, L. R. 9 Ex. 342; 1 C. P. D. 19; this rule is said to have been established in the seventeenth century; 1 C. P. D. 430. The master of a general ship is liable where his goods were stolen by robbers; 1 Mod. 85; and an action will lie against the owners as well as the master; Carth. 58. It has been held that the owner of a private ship is subject to the same rule; L. R. 9 Ex. 638.

Lord Cockburn has denied that a carrier by sea is subject to the same liability as a common carrier by land; 1 C. P. D. 426; and Brett, J., was of opinion that he is not a common carrier, but that his liability to carry at his absolute risk arises from recognized custom; L. R. 9 Ex. 338; 7 id. 267. See article in 5 L. Q. Rev. 15. It is said that they are not common carriers, because not bound to receive all goods offered. See 1 Pars. Ship. 248.

Ships are of different kinds: as, ships of war and merchant-ships, steamships and sailing-vessels. Merchant-ships may be devoted to the carriage of passengers and property, or either alone. When propelled in whole or in part by steam, and employed in the transportation of passengers, they are subject to inspection and certain stringent regulations imposed by act of congress passed 29th Feb., 1871; R. S. §§ 4463-4500; and steam-vessels not carrying passengers are likewise subject to inspection and certain regulations; R. S. §§ 4399-4462.

Stringent regulations in regard to the number of passengers to be taken on board of sailing-vessels, and the provisions to be made for their safety and comfort, are also prescribed by R. S. § 4465.

Numerous acts of congress have been passed from time to time in reference to the registering, enrolling, licensing, employment, and privileges of the vessels of commerce owned in the United States. See R. S. §§ 4399, 4500.

Construction of the Harter Act. The act of Feb. 13, 1893, known as the Harter Act (see that title), was not intended as general legislation concerning the rights or liabilities of ship-owners, but only to deal with the carrying vessel and her own cargo. And all principles and rules of decisions previously applicable, as to the apportionment of damages in case of mutual fault, should still be followed as closely as possible and no more changes admitted than the evident intent of the act necessitates; 60 Fed. Rep. 296; 74 id. 899; s. c. 33 U. S. App. 510. In determining the effect of the statute in restricting the operation of general and well-settled principles, the course of decision has been to treat those principles as still existing, and limit the relief from their operation afforded by the statute to precisely that called for by the language of the statute, and no more. It is said that the intent of the act is that damages to the cargo arising from negligence in navigation shall be borne by the cargo owner and not by the ship, and that the act was not designed to increase or diminish the liability of the other vessel in cases of mutual fault and a division of damages; 77 Fed. Rep. 320. The requirement in the act of due diligence to exempt the owner from liability to cargo owners means not only the personal diligence of the owner but also of his agents employed to fit the vessel for sea; 82 Fed. Rep. 664. Such diligence is not exercised where no inspection is made of the cement covering the bottom of an iron steamship; 51 U.S. App. 100; s. c. 79 Fed. Rep. 978. The word management in the act relates to management on the voyage and not to the master's acts in stowing the ship; 82 Fed. Rep. 665. Insufficiency of the mechanical fog-horn on the sailing vessel because of failure to provide any means for repairing it is a lack of proper equipment under the act; 77 Fed. Rep. 329. Diligent care of the ship for the purposes of the act does not require re-docking more than once a year; 79 id. 871.

The provisions of the Harter Act relieving vessel owners from liability do not extend to foreign vessels; 83 U.S. App. 510; s. c. 74 Fed. Rep. 899; and no restrictive operation can be given to it; 73 id. 239; s. c. 44 U.S. App. 434.

The words "ex ship" are not restricted to any particular ship; and by the usage of merchants, simply denote that the property in the goods shall pass to the buyer upon their leaving the ship's tackle, and that he shall be liable for all subsequent charges of lading. They do not constitute a condition of the contract but are inserted for the benefit of the seller; 161 U.S. 57; L. R. 1 C.P. 684. See PRIZE.

As to limited liability of owners in cases of collisions, see ABANDONMENT. As to statute regarding overcrowding of steamers, see 1 U.S. App. 147.

In regard to collisions at sea where both are to blame, see paper by F. W. Raikes, 17th Rep. Int. Law Assn. 193. See COLLISION.

A vessel is deemed a part of the territory of the country to which she belongs; 150 U.S. 249; 154 U.S. 152; and although the deck of a private American vessel is considered for many purposes constructively as territory of the United States, yet persons on board of such vessels, whether officers, sailors, or passengers, cannot invoke the protection of the provisions of the constitution as to the indictment and trial by jury, until brought within the actual territorial boundaries of the United States; 140 U.S. 453. A ship becomes such when she is launched, and continues to be such so long as her identity is preserved: 'From the moment she takes the water, she becomes the subject of admiralty jurisdiction. 183 U.S. 424. See FOREIGN-GOING SHIP; HULL AND MACHINERY; PASSENGER SHIP.

SHIP-BROKER. One who transacts business relating to vessels and their employment between the owners of vessels and merchants who send cargoes.

SHIP-MONEY. An imposition formerly levied on port towns and other places for fitting out ships; revived by Charles I. and abolished in the same reign. 17 Car. I. c. 14; Whart. Dict.

SHIP'S BILL. The copy of the bill of lading retained by the master. In case of a variance between this and the bill delivered to the shipper, the latter must control; 14 Wall. 98.

SHIP'S HUSBAND. An agent appointed by the owner of a ship, and invested with authority to make the requisite repairs and attend to the management, equipment, and other concerns of the ship. He is the general agent of the owners in relation to the ship, and may be appointed in writing or orally. Abb.

Sh. 90. He is usually, but not necessarily, a part-owner; 1 Pars. Mar. Law 97. He must see to the proper outfit of the vessel in the repairs adequate to the voyage and in the tackle and furniture necessary for a seaworthy ship; must have a proper master, mate, and crew for the ship, so that in this respect it shall be seaworthy; must see to the due furnishing of provisions and stores according to the necessities of the voyage; must see to the regularity of the clearances from the custom-house and the regularity of the registry; must settle the contracts and provide for the payment of the furnishings which are requisite to the performance of those duties; must enter into proper charter-parties, or engage the vessel for general freight under the usual conditions, and settle for freight and adjust averages with the merchant; and must preserve the proper certificates, surveys and documents, in case of future disputes with insurers and freighters, and keep regular books of the ship; 4 B. & Ad. 875; 1 Y. & C. 826; 8 Wend. 144; 16 Conn. 12. These are his general powers; but, of course, they may be limited or enlarged by the owners; and it may be observed that without special authority he cannot borrow money generally for the use of the ship; though, as above observed, he may settle the accounts for furnishings, or grant bills for them, which form debts against the concern whether or not he has funds in his hands with which he might have paid them; 1 Bell, Com. § 499. Although he may, in general, levy the freight which is by the bill of lading payable on the delivery of the goods, it would seem that he would not have power to take bills for the freight and give up the possession of the lien over the cargo, unless it has been so settled by the charter-party.

He cannot insure or bind the owners for premiums; 17 Me. 147; 2 Maule & S. 485; 7 B. Monr. 595; 11 Pick. 85; 5 Burr. 2627.

As the power of the master to enter into contracts of affreightments is superseded in the port of the owners, so it is by the presence of the ship's husband or the knowledge of the contracting parties that a ship's husband has been appointed; 2 Bell, Com. 199. The ship's husband, as such, has no lien on the vessel or proceeds; 2 Curt. C. C. 427; 81 Fed. Rep. 923. See EXERCITOR MARIS.

SHIP'S PAPERS. The papers or documents required for the manifestation of the ownership and national character of a vessel and her cargo, and to show her compliance with the revenue and navigation laws of the country to which she belongs.

The want of these papers or any of them renders the character of a vessel suspicious; 2 Boulay-Paty, Droit Com. 14; and the use of false or simulated papers frequently subjects the vessel to confiscation; 15 East 46, 70, 864; or avoid an insurance, unless the insurer has stipulated that she may carry such papers; id.

The absence of any one of a ship's proper papers is not conclusive against the good faith of the ship; 1 Kent *157. Spoliation of ship's papers is an aggravated ground of suspicion and is said to be almost conclusive of guilt; 1 Dods. 480; but it is not of itself a ground of condemnation; 2 Wheat. 227.

A ship's papers are of two sorts: first, those required by the law of the particular country to which the ship belongs: as, the certificate of registry or of enrolment, the license, the crew-list, the shipping articles, clearance, etc.; and, second, such as are required by the law of nations to be on board of neutral ships as evidence of their title to that character: as, the sea brief or letter, or passport; the proofs of property in the ship, as bills of sale, etc.; the charter-party; the bills of lading; the invoices; the crew-list or muster-roll; the log-book, and the bill of health. McCulloch, Com. Dict.

The following constitute a ship's papers according to 1 Kent *157: a certificate of registry, sea-letter, muster-roll, log-book, charter-party, invoice, and bill of lading. As to what are ship's papers under the rules of various foreign nations, see 2 Hall-ock, Int. L., Baker's ed. 98.

The register, or other document in lieu thereof, together with the clearance and other papers granted by the officers of the customs to any foreign vessel, at her departure from the port from which she may have arrived, are required to be produced to the collector of any United States port previous to her entry. The master is required, within forty-eight hours after entry, to deposit the papers with the consul or vice-consul of the nation to which the vessel belongs, and to deliver to the collector of the port the certificate of such consul or vice-consul that he has done so; R. S. § 4209.

An application by a vice-consul for a permit for a vessel to depart, a bill of lading signed by the captain, a license to sail, a certificate of the custom-house official that the vessel had paid its tax for hospital dues, and a bill of health signed by the maritime sub-delegate; the bill of lading being identified by the mate and the other papers being official documents under seal executed by the Chilean authorities, are entitled to confidence and should be admitted in evidence as documents of a public nature; 86 Fed. Rep. 158. It is not necessary that they should be confirmed and sanctioned by the ordinary tests of truth; id., citing 1 Greenl. Ev. § 423.

SHIPMENT. The delivery of the goods within the time required on some vessel destined to the particular port which the seller has reason to suppose will sail within a reasonable time. It does not mean a clearance of the vessel as well as putting the goods on board where there is nothing to indicate that the seller was expected to exercise any control over the clearance of the vessel or of her subsequent management; 121 N. Y. 179. See L. R. 2 App. Cas. 455; 97 N. Y. 221; 7 Mass. 453; 105 N. Y. 404.

SHIPPER. One who ships or puts goods on board of a vessel, to be carried to another place during her voyage. In general the shipper is bound to pay for the hire of the vessel or the freight of the goods; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1030.

SHIPPING. Ships in general: ships or vessels of any kind intended for navigation. Relating to ships; as, shipping interests, shipping affairs, shipping business, shipping concerns. Putting on board a ship or vessel, or receiving on board a ship or vessel. Webster, Dict.; Worcester, Dict. See SHIP; SHIP'S PAPERS.

SHIPPING ARTICLES. An agreement, in writing or print, between the master and seamen or mariners on board his vessel (except such as shall be apprenticed or servant to himself or owners), declaring the voyage or voyages, term or terms of time, for which such seamen or mariners shall be shipped. It is also required that at the foot of every such contract there shall be a memorandum, in writing, of the day and the hour on which each seaman or mariner who shall so ship and subscribe shall render himself on board to begin the voyage agreed upon. Provision is made in the R. S. of U. S. for shipping articles, and a penalty is imposed for shipping seamen without them; R. S. § 4506 et seq.

The shipping articles ought not to contain any clause which derogates from the general rights and privileges of seamen; and, if they do, such clause will be declared void; 2 Sumn. 443; 2 Mas. 541.

A seaman who signs shipping articles is bound to perform the voyage; and he has no right to elect to pay damages for non-performance of the contract; 2 Va. Cas. 276.

See, generally, Gilp. 147, 219, 452; 1 Pet. Adm. 212; 1 Mas. 443; 5 id. 272; 14 Johns. 260; SEAMEN.

SHIPPING COMMISSIONER. An officer appointed by the several circuit courts of the United States for each port of entry, which is also a port of ocean navigation within their respective jurisdictions, which, in the judgment of such court, may require the same. His duties are: to facilitate and superintend the engagement and discharge of seamen; to secure the presence on board of the men engaged at the proper times; to facilitate the making of apprenticeship to the sea service; and such other like duties as may be required by law; R. S. §§ 4501-4508.

SHIPS OF WAR. The ports of every nation are considered as open to the ships of war of other powers with whom it is at peace. They are exempt from all forms of process in private suit and cannot be seized or interfered with by judicial proceedings to punish violation of the public laws; 7 Op. A. G. 122. Such violations are to be remedied by the offended state appealing directly to the other sovereign. But such ships must not appear as a disturbing agency in the port of a friendly state. They must conform to the rules of quarantine and anchorage, and a ship of war which refuses to comply with such local regulations may be refused admittance, or her stay limited. If any of her crew while on land infringe the laws of the country, they are subject to the local authorities, but if an offender escapes to his vessel, he cannot be pursued there; Snow, Lect. Int. Law 83. They are probably not subject to salvage claims; 1 Halleck, Int. L. Baker's ed. 217.

In international law a state has jurisdiction over its property and citizens on the high seas when carried under its own flag. This jurisdiction is sometimes based on the theory that the ships of a country are a prolongation of its territory and sometimes on the theory that the jurisdiction arises from the mere fact of property; Snow, Lect. Int. L. 147.

Woolsey says of public ships: "They are not only public property, built or bought by the government, but they are, as it were, floating barracks, a part of the public organism and represent the national dignity, and on these accounts even foreign ports are exempt from the local jurisdiction. . . . However, it is on account of the crew rather than on account of the ship itself that they have any territorial quality. Take the crew away, let the abandoned hulk be met at sea; it now becomes property, nothing more." Wheaton says: "A public vessel belonging to an independent sovereign is exempt from every species of visitation and search, even within the territorial jurisdiction of another state." The principle is universally admitted.

Public ships of a friendly nation, coming into ports of the United States, and demeaning themselves in a friendly manner are exempt from the jurisdiction of the country; 7 Cr. 118. See NEUTRALITY.

SHIRE. In English Law. A district or division of country. Co. Litt. 60a. A county.

The ancient English states, though degraded to the rank of shires, preserved their autonomy to the utmost practicable extent. They retained the state assembly, which was the supreme court of law, the king himself sitting in it as in the national assembly. In the absence of the king, the ealdorman presided in it. The shire government was not royal, but feudal. The king, in appointing the ealdorman, appointed not a servant of his will, but a prince and lord of the shire. The Anglo-Saxon shire constitution, in spite of the establishment of the empire, was an expression of still undeveloped royalty. See Essays Ang. Sax. Law 21.

SHIRE-GEMOT (spelled, also, Scire-gemote, Scir-gemot, Scyre-gemote, Shire-mote; from the Saxon scir or scyre, county, shire, and gemote, a court, an assembly).

The Saxon county court. It was held twice a year before the bishop and aldermen of the shire, and was the principal court. Spelman, Gloss. Gemotum; Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law 28.

SHIRE-MAN, or SCYRE-MAN. Before the conquest the judge of the county, by whom trials for land, etc., were determined. Toml.; Mos. & W.

SHIRE RIEVE, or SHIRE REVE
A sheriff (q. v.).

SHOOTERS. See SHOVELERS AND SHOOTERS.

SHOOTING AT RANDOM. One who intentionally shot a dog, was not in any sense, guilty of "shooting at random." 50 S. W. 843.

SHOP. A place kept and used for the sale of goods. 14 Gray 378. A building as distinguished from a place of sale which is open like a stall. 60 Mich. 426. In order to constitute a shop there must be some structure of a more or less permanent character; 6 B. & S. 803.

As used in a statute it is a house or building in which small quantities of goods, wares, or drugs and the like are sold, or in which mechanics labor, and sometimes keep their manufactures for sale. 98 N. C. 648.

In this country shops for the sale of goods are frequently called "stores." Anderson; 15 Gray 199. But strictly, a shop is a place where goods are sold by retail, and a store a place where goods are deposited. Abbott; ibid. See STORE.

SHOP-BOOKS. The books of a retail dealer, mechanic, or other person, in which entries or charges are made of work done, or goods sold and delivered to customers, commonly called "account-books," or "books of account." The party's own shop-books are in certain cases admissible in evidence to prove the delivery of goods therein charged, where a foundation is laid for their introduction. The following are the general rules governing the production of this kind of evidence. First, that the party offering the books kept no clerk; second, that the books offered by the party are his books of account, and that the entries therein are in his handwriting; third, it must appear, by some of those who have dealt with the party and settled by the books offered, that they found them correct; fourth, it must be shown that some of the articles charged have been delivered. Where entries are made by a clerk who is dead, such entries are admissible in evidence on proof of the handwriting; Steph. Ev. art. 28; 4 Ill. 120; 19 id. 898; 8 Johns. 212; 11 Wend. 588; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 117; 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 292. Where memoranda made during the day by one, are at night transcribed to a book by another, who did not know the truth of the facts recorded by the former, the book is not competent testimony and cannot be used to refresh his memory; 22 U. S. App. 648. See ORIGINAL ENTRY; MEMORANDUM; ACCOUNT BOOK.

SHOP LIFTING. See LARCENY; KLEPTOMANIA.

SHOP RIGHT. See PATENT.

SHORE. Land on the side of the sea, a lake, or a river. Strictly speaking, when the water does not ebb and flow in a river, there is no shore. See 6 Mass. 435; 23 Tex. 849; 28 N. J. L. 624, 683; 88 id. 549; RIVER; SEA.

SHORT CAUSE. A suit in the chancery division of the high court of justice, where there is only a simple point for discussion, which will probably occupy not more than ten minutes in the hearing. A suit may often be greatly accelerated by being placed on the list of short causes, which are heard one day in each week (generally Saturday) during the sittings of the court; Dan. Ch. Pr., 6th ed. 886; Hunt. Eq. Pt. I. ch. 4, s. 4. A similar provision is familiar to the practice of the courts of several of the states, but its operation is not restricted to chancery cases, and the time allowed for the hearing varies in the different courts.

SHORT ENTRY. A term used among bankers to denote the fact which takes place when a note has been sent to a bank for collection, and an entry of it is made in the customer's bank-book, stating the amount in an inner column, and carrying it out into the accounts between the parties when it has been paid.

SHORT-FORD. An ancient custom of the city of Exeter, similar to that of gavellet in London, which was in effect a foreclosure of the right of the tenant by the lord of the fee, in cases of non-payment of rent; Cowel.

SHORTHAUL. See INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

SHORT NOTICE. In English Practice. Four days' notice of trial. Wharton, Law Dict. Notice of trial; 1 Cr. & M. 499. Where short notice has been given, two days is sufficient notice of continuance; Wharton, Lex.

SHORT YEARLINGS. In stockmen's parlance, cattle about, or approximately near, one year of age, are called "short yearlings." 115 Ky. 461, 74 S. W. 185.

SHORTAGE. No allowance for shortage can be made where the contents of missing bags of sugar had been put into new bags by seamen and actually delivered; 1 U. S. App. 14.

SHOVELERS AND SHOOTERS. In Mining. "Shovelers and shooters" are men employed in coal mines whose business it is to come in and bore holes in the face of the coal for blasting, and to pull down and carry away overhanging slate. 131 Ky. 196, 114 S. W. 785.

SHOW. To make apparent or clear by evidence, to prove. 104 Pa. 138.

SHRUB. A low, small plant, the branches of which grow directly from the earth without any supporting trunk or stem. 70 Miss. 406.

SHUT DOWN. Within the meaning of an insurance policy, a saw mill which has stopped running for the winter, is shut down, though men are employed about the premises and the machinery has not been dismantled. 44 Pac. Rep. (Cal.) 922.

SHYSTER. A trickish knave; one who carries on any business, especially a legal business, in a dishonest way. 84 Minn. 343; see 40 Mich. 251.

Has reference to the professional character and standing of a lawyer. Hence, in an action for libeling one, as respects his character as a lawyer, by the use of the word, an issue as to whether the plaintiff is a lawyer or not is material. Anderson.

SI ACTIO. The conclusion of a plea to an action when the defendant demands judgment, if the plaintiff ought to have his action, etc. Obsolete.

SI ITA EST. If it be so. Emphatic words in the old writ of mandamus to a judge, commanding him, if the act alleged be truly stated (si ita est), to affix his seal to a bill of exceptions. 5 Pet. 192.

SI PRIUS. If before. Formal words in ancient writs for summoning juries. Fleta, l. 2, c. 65, § 12.

SI TE FECERIT SECURUM (Lat. if he make you secure). Words which occur in the form of writs, which originally required, or still require, that the plaintiff should give security to the sheriff that he will prosecute his claim, before the sheriff can be required to execute such writ.

SICKNESS. By sickness is understood any affection of the body which deprives it temporarily of the power to fulfil its usual functions. It has been held to include insanity. L. R. 8 Q. B. 295.

Sickness is either such as affects the body generally, or only some parts of it. Of the former class a fever is an example; of the latter, blindness. When a process has been issued against an individual for his arrest, the sheriff or other officer is authorized, after he has arrested him, if he be dangerously sick that to remove him would endanger his life or his health, to let him remain where he found him, and to return the facts at large, or simply lauguia.

SIDE-BAR RULES. In English Practice. Rules which were formerly moved for by attorneys on the side-bar of the court, but now may be had of the clerk of the rules, upon a precepe. These rules are, that the sheriff return his writ, that he bring in the body, for special imparlance, to be present at the taxing of costs, and the like. As to side-bar applications, see Mitchell, Rules 20.

See RULE OF COURSE.

SIDESMEN (testes, synodales). In Ecclesiastical Law. A kind of impanelled jury, consisting of two, three, or more persons, in every parish, who were upon oath to present all heretics and irregular persons. In process of time they became standing officers in many places, especially cities. They were called synodsmen, by corruption sidesmen; also questmen. But their office has become absorbed in that of church-warden. 1 Burn, Eccl. Law 399.

SIDEWALK. That part of a public street or highway designed for the use of pedestrians.

As used in this country it does not mean a walk or way constructed of any particular kind of material, or in any special manner, but ordinarily is used to designate that part of the street of a municipality which has been set apart and used for pedestrians, as distinguished from that portion set apart and used for animals and vehicles. 48 Minn. 201.

Generally the sidewalk is included with the gutters and roadway in the general term street; 42 Ill. 503; 76 N. Y. 174; 50 Wis. 429. It was so held in the construction of a statute providing for compensation for damages caused by changing the grade of streets; 100 Ind. 242; and in one authorizing the improvement of streets; 114 Ind. 371; but in many cases of municipal ordinances and contracts, the word street is held not to include sidewalks; 52 Cal. 440; 138 Mass. 555.

It is the duty of a municipal corporation to keep the sidewalks, as well as the roadway of the street, in repair; 74 N. Y. 264; 76 id. 174; 136 Pa. 533; but it has been held that where the absolute duty is not imposed by the charter, the obligation of the city with respect to keeping the sidewalks free from defects is less imperative than the same obligation with respect to the roadway; 51 Barb. 396; 36 id. 226; but these decisions have been questioned; 44 id. 385. One who knows of a defect in the sidewalk is bound to use particular care to avoid injury; 14 Hun 544; but the injury does not defeat recovery, if due care is used; 2 N. Y. St. 351.

The duty imposed on municipal corporations of keeping highways safe and convenient includes obstructions from ice and snow; 12 Vt. 338; 13 Pick. 343; 17 How. 161, where it was held that it was for the jury to say whether treading down and not removing the snow was a safe and convenient method of removing the obstruction.

Ice formed by melting snow and ice falling from a building simply as the result of natural laws, is not a defect for which the municipality is liable; 85 Wis. 187. There must be a breach of duty on the part of the city, such as an unusual or dangerous obstruction to travel from snow and ice, and such time must have elapsed after the creation of the obstruction as to afford a presumption of knowledge; 121 N. Y. 147. The duty of removing such obstructions is a qualified one, becoming imperative only under the circumstances mentioned; 109 id. 134. Where, however, there is by statute an absolute liability for injuries resulting from a defective sidewalk, no question of want of notice or the exercise of care is a defence; 31 W. Va. 384. The remedy for an injury resulting from a defective sidewalk is exclusively against the city, and its liability cannot be avoided by the existence of any ordinance on the subject; 105 N. Y. 202; 14 Gray 249. The right of action arises solely from negligence; 122 Ind. 39; the fact that an accident occurs is not sufficient, there must be a neglect of duty; 39 N. Y. St. 603. In order to hold the city liable for negligence in permitting an obstruction, it must have notice, but this may be constructive through the elapse of sufficient time for the presumption of notice to arise; 27 Can. 545; 18 Hun 167; 22 W. N. C. 132.

Where an awning over the sidewalk was permitted to remain in an unsafe condition by the accumulation of snow and ice, the city was held liable for injuries sustained by the fall of the awning; 13 Mete. 292; but where an accident was occasioned by ice formed by water dripping from the awning, it was held that the city was not liable and the action should have been against the owner; 22 W. N. C. Pa. 133.

In actions for damages from defective sidewalks, it was a question for the jury whether, under the circumstances, the corporation is liable; 48 Conn. 460; 185 Pa. 32. A question for their decision was whether ordinary care was used and whether the sidewalk was reasonably safe; 40 id. 134; 10 Cush. 260; or whether there was negligence in not removing the obstruction; 100 N. Y. 15; 25 Neb. 133; or whether there was a sufficient lapse of time to be considered constructive notice; 39 N. Y. St. 744.

Even if the city were negligent, a person injured by a defective sidewalk cannot recover unless he show himself in the exercise of due care; 133 Ill. 177; and if the accident occurred by reason of the plaintiff's being intoxicated, he cannot recover; 76 Wis. 499.

Where the sidewalk is manifestly dangerous it is the duty of a pedestrian to walk on the roadway; 130 Pa. 123; and he cannot recover for an injury which his own observation, prudently exercised, ought to have enabled him to avoid; 31 W. Va. 842.

A municipal corporation may require its citizens to clean the snow from their sidewalks; 105 N. Y. 202. A law requiring the abutting owners to keep sidewalks in repair is a duty cast directly upon the property owner and is in the nature of a police regulation; it is not a tax or municipal assessment; 131 Pa. 109.

Where the abutting owners permitted the sidewalk to be obstructed for an unreasonable time in loading and unloading a truck with skids so that a pedestrian was injured in passing over it, the owner was held liable; 29 App. Div. N. Y. 402; id. 800.

Where the proprietor of a theatre invites an unusual crowd to occupy his sidewalk, he is bound to greater precaution and owes a duty to pedestrians that they are not injured through any lack of care; 5 Super. Ct. Rep. (Pa.) 609. See STREET; HIGHWAY.

SIGHT. Presentment. Bills of exchange are frequently drawn payable at sight or a certain number of days or months after sight.

Bills payable at sight are said to be entitled to days of grace by the law merchant; Big. Bills & N. 92; Dan. Neg. Instr. § 617; 13 Gray 597; 42 Ala. 186; 28 Mo. 596; contra, 1 E. D. Sm. 505. Statutes have settled the question in some states.

The holder of a bill payable at sight is required to use due diligence to put it into circulation, and, if payable after sight, have it presented in reasonable time; 20 Johns. 146; 12 Pick. 399; 28 E. L. & E. 131; 13 Mass. 137; 4 Mas. 336; 5 id. 118; 1 M'Cord 322; 1 Hawks 195.

After sight in a bill means after acceptance; in a note, after exhibition to the maker; Dan. Neg. Instr., 4th ed. § 619. It is usual to leave a bill for acceptance one whole day; but the acceptance is dated as on the day it was left; Sewell, Bank.

A bill drawn payable a certain number of days after sight, acceptance waived, must be presented to fix the time at which the bill is to become due, and the term of the bill begins to run from the date of prosentment. See 4 Montreal L. Rep. 249.

Sight drafts and sight bills are bills payable at sight.

SIGILLUM (Lat.). A seal.

SIGN. To affix a signature to; to ratify by hand or seal; to subscribe in one's own handwriting. Webster; 131 Pa. 230.

In legal contemplation, "to sign" means to attach a name, or cause to be attached, by any of the known methods of impressing the name on paper with the intention of signing it. 143 Ky. 228, 136 S. W. 217.

Although in general understanding refers to writing the name at the foot or bottom of a document, is not confined to that meaning. Anderson. The primary meaning is to write one's name on paper or to show or declare assent or attestation by some sign or mark. Id.; 6 N. Y. 12-13. A "signing" may be at the beginning of a document, within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds. Id.; 14 Johns * 436. Within the meaning of that statute, also, a memorandum is "signed" if the name is printed in a letter-head, with the contract underwritten. Id.; 58 Md. 546. But it may be that a will cannot be considered as "signed" unless the testator's name is affixed at the bottom, or otherwise outside the body. Id.; 55 Mo. 339-41. See SUBSCRIBE.

SIGN MANUAL. In English Law. The signature of the king to grants or letters patent, inscribed at the top. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 347*.

Any one's name written by himself. Webster, Dict.; Wharton, Law Dict. The sign manual is not good unless counter-signed, etc.; 9 Mod. 54.

SIGNA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Those species of indicia which come more immediately under the cognizance of the senses; such as, stains of blood on the person of one accused of murder, indications of terror at being charged with the offence, and the like.

SIGNAL. A means of communication between vessels at sea or between a vessel and the shore. The international code of signals for the use of all nations assigns arbitrary meanings to different arrangements of flags or displays of lights. Where a steamer did not hear the signal but should have heard it, she is as culpable as if she had heard and disregarded it; 1 U. S. App. 72. Where a collision results through the failure of one of two colliding steamers to conform to her own signals, she is responsible for the collision; 35 U. S. App. 161. See COLLISION; VESSEL; NAVIGATION, RULES OF; FALSE LIGHTS AND SIGNALS.

Given by Conductor. Where it is customary for the conductor to give the signal to a brakeman, and for the brakeman to pass it on to the engineer, if the engineer receives the signal from the brakeman and believes that it came from the conductor, the "signal was given by the conductor." 126 S. W. 120.

SIGNATORY. A term used in diplomacy to indicate a nation which is a party to a treaty.

SIGNATURE. In Ecclesiastical Law. The name of a sort of rescript, without seal, containing the supplication, the signature of the pope or his delegate, and the grant of a pardon. Dict. Dr. Can.

In Practice. By signature is understood the act of putting down a man's name at the end of an instrument, to attest its validity. The name thus written is also called a signature.

A person's name as set down by himself. 2 N. Dak. 80.

It is not necessary that a party should write his name himself, to constitute a signature: his mark is now held sufficient, though he was able to write; 8 Ad. & E. 94; 7 L. R. Pr. 590; 8 Nev. & P. 228; 3 Curt. C. 732; 5 Johns. 144; see 96 Cal. 593; 139 N. C. 134; and the signature to a note may be by initials only; 14 L. T. 433; 1 Ames, B. & N. 145. A signature by pencil is valid; 5 B. & C. 284; or on a telegraph message given to an operator; L. R. 5 C. P. 295. The printed name of the vendor on the heading of a bill of parcels sent by him to the vendee is a sufficient signature to bind the vendor under the statute of frauds. A signature made by a party, another person guiding his hand with his consent, is sufficient; 4 Wash. C. C. 262, 269.

It is not necessary in the execution of a note, that the person executing it, if unable to write, touch the pen while the person authorized signs his name; 9 Md. App. 624; and the signature of the grantor affixed to a deed by another in the presence and at the request of the grantor is as binding as if he had personally affixed his signature; 98 Ala. 479. A person who is sui juris, will not, in the absence of a fraud, be permitted to avoid his written obligation by showing that he did not read it or hear it read; 16 Mo. App. 527. And where a promissory note was signed under the impression that it was one of some unimportant papers, the signature was held valid in the hands of an innocent third party; 43 S. W. Rep. (Ky.) 699.

One who cannot read a contract which he is about to execute is bound to procure it to be read and explained to him before he signs it, and is chargeable with knowledge of its contents whether he does so or not; 83 Fed. Rep. 437.

The signature is usually made at the bottom of the instrument; but in wills it has been held that when a testator commenced his will with these words, "I, A B, make this my will," it was a sufficient signing; 3 Lev. 1. And see Sudg. Vend. 71; 2 Stark. Ev. 605, 613. But this decision is said to be absurd; 1 Brown, Civ. Law 278, n. 16; Schoul. Wills 315. The initials "A. B." are not the signature of the judge, or a sufficient authentication of the bill of exceptions, or sufficient evidence of its allowance by the judge; 125 U. S. 240. The possession of a rubber stamp of his signature by a depositor in a bank, kept without negligence, but without notice to the bank, does not relieve the latter for having paid out money on a forged check, made from the stamp. Here an employee used the stamp to obtain a tracing of the depositor's signature; 186 Pa. 458. See Merlin, Répert. Signature, for a history of the origin of the signature; and, also, 4 Cruise, Dig. 32, c. 2, s. 73 et seq. See generally, 8 Toullier, n. 94; 1 Dall. 64; 5 Whart. 386; 2 B. & P. 233; 2 Maule & S. 286; MONOGRAM; MARK.

SIGNET. A seal commonly used for the sign manual of the sovereign. Whart. Lex. The signet is also used for the purpose of civil justice in Scotland; Bell. See WRITERS TO THE SIGNET.

SIGNIFICANCE. See CONSTRUCTION; MEANING.

SIGNIFICATION (Lat. signum, a sign, facere, to make). In French Law. The notice given of a decree, sentence, or other judicial act.

SIGNIFICAVIT (Lat.). In Ecclesiastical Law. When this word is used alone, it means the bishop's certificate to the court of chancery in order to obtain the writ of excommunication; but where the words writ of significavit are used, the meaning is the same as writ de excommunicato capiendo. 2 Burn. Eccl. Law 248; Shelf. Marr. & D. 502. Obsolete.

SIGNING JUDGMENT. In English Practice. The plaintiff or defendant, when the cause has reached such a stage that he is entitled to a judgment, obtains the signature or allowance of the proper officer; and this is called signing judgment, and is instead of the delivery of judgment in open court. Steph. Pl., And. ed. 196. It is the leave of the master of the office to enter up judgment, and may be had in vacation. 3 B. & C. 317; Tidd, P. 616.

In American Practice, it is an actual signing of the judgment on the record, by the judge or other officer duly authorized. Graham, P. 341.

SIGNING OF WILL. See CLOSE THEREOF.

SIGNUM (Lat.). A sign; a mark; a seal.

SILENCE. The state of a person who does not speak, or of one who refrains from speaking.

Pure and simple silence cannot be considered as a consent to a contract, except in cases where the silent person is bound in good faith to explain himself; in which case silence gives consent; 14 S. & R. 393; L. R. 6 Q. B. 597; 102 Mass. 135; 6 Pa. 336. But no assent will be inferred from a man's silence unless he knows his rights and knows what he is doing, nor unless his silence is voluntary.

When any person is accused of a crime or charged with any fact, and he does not deny it, in general, the presumption is very strong that the charge is correct; 5 C. & P. 832; 7 id. 832; Joy, Conf. p. 77.

The rule does not extend to the silence of the prisoner when, on his examination before a magistrate, he is charged by another prisoner with having joined with him in the commission of an offence; 3 Stark. 33; Steph. Ev. art. 7.

When an oath is administered to a witness, instead of expressly promising to keep it, he gives his assent by his silence and kissing the book.

The person to be affected by the silence must be one not disqualified to act, as, non compos, an infant, or the like; for even the express promise of such a person would not bind him to the performance of any contract.

SILENTIARIUS. One of the privy council; an usher who saw that good rule and silence were kept in the court.

SILK. Under a statute referring to silk in a manufactured or unmanufactured state, any fabric which contains silk will not necessarily be included, but silk watch-guards and silk dresses; 28 L. J. C. P. 265; silk hose; id.; and elastic webbing composed of one-third silk; 33 L. J. Ex. 187, will be so considered.

SILK GOWN. Used especially of the gowns worn by queen's counsel; hence, "to take silk" means to attain the rank of queen's counsel. Moz. & W.

SILVA CÆDUA (Lat.). By these words, in England, is understood every sort of wood, except gross wood of the age of twenty years. Bac. Abr. Tythes (C).

SILVER. The legislation on the subject of silver coinage is stated up to that date in a note to R. S. 1 Supp. 774, which with the addition of legislation subsequent to that date is as follows: Laws on silver coinage are as follows: By R. S. §§ 3513, 3516, the silver coins of the United States are limited to a trade dollar, a half dollar, a quarter dollar, and a dime. By § 3526 silver bullion is to be purchased with the bullion fund. By § 3586 the silver coins of the United States are legal tender in amounts not exceeding $5. By act of 1875, Jan. 14, ch. 15, fractional silver is to be issued in redemption of fractional currency. By act of 1876, April 17, ch. 63, this is repeated with some amendments. By Res. No. 17, of 1876, July 22, the silver coin in the treasury is to be issued in exchange for legal tender notes. The issue of fractional silver to fifty million dollars is authorized. By act of 1878, Feb. 28, ch. 20, the coinage of the standard silver dollar and the issuance of silver certificates of $10 or over is authorized. By act of 1879, June 9, ch. 12, fractional silver and lawful money of the United States may be reciprocally exchanged at the treasury or any sub-treasury in sums of $20, and fractional silver is made legal tender up to $10. By act of 1882, August 7, ch. 433, par. 6, free transportation of silver coins is authorized. By act of 1887, March 8, ch. 362, the issuance of silver certificates of one, two, and five dollars is authorized in lieu of higher denominations.

By act of July 14, 1890, the purchasing clause of the act of 1878 was repealed and the secretary of the treasury was authorized to purchase not to exceed 4,500,000 ounces of silver per month and to issue in payment thereof treasury notes. By act of 1890, Sept. 26, ch. 944, changes in the design of coins are authorized. The trade dollar was declared not a legal tender by Res. No. 17, of 1876, July 22, and by act of 1887, March 8, ch. 306, § 2 (24 Stat. L. 643). Its coinage was terminated and its redemption and recoinage into standard dollars was directed. By act of 1893, Nov. 1, repeal of the purchasing clause of the act of July 14, 1890.

SIMILAR. Denotes partial resemblance, and also sameness in all essential particulars; 127 Mass. 454. Similar offence may mean an offence identical in kind. Id.

SIMILAR DESCRIPTION. Such words as used in a tariff act import that the goods are similar in product and adopted to similar uses; not necessarily that they have been produced by similar methods of manufacture; 1 Hask. 588.

SIMILITER (Lat. likewise). In Pleading. The plaintiff's reply, that, as the defendant has put himself upon the country, he, the plaintiff, does the like. It occurs only when the plea has the conclusion to the country, and its effect is to join the plaintiff in the issue thus tendered by the defendant; Co. Litt. 126 a. The word similiter was the effective word when the proceedings were in Latin; 1 Chitty, Pl. 619; Archb. Civ. Pl. 250. See Steph. Pl. 255; 2 Saund. 319 b; Cowp. 407; 1 Stra. 651; 11 S. & R. 32.

SIMONY. In Ecclesiastical Law. The selling and buying of holy orders or an ecclesiastical benefice. Bacon, Abr. Simony. By simony is also understood an unlawful agreement to receive a temporal reward for something holy or spiritual. Code 1. 3. 31; Ayliffe, Parerg. 496.

The crime of buying or selling ecclesiastical preferment or the corrupt presentation of any one to an ecclesiastical benefice for money or reward. 40 Neb. 167.

SIMPLE. Pure; unmixed; unqualified; composed of the fewest elements.

SIMPLE AVERAGE. Particular average. See AVERAGE.

SIMPLE CONTRACT. A contract the evidence of which is merely oral or in writing, not under seal nor of record. 1 Chitty, Contr., 12th ed. 6. See 11 Mass. 30; 4 B. & Ald. 588; 2 Bla. Com. 472. See CONTRACT; PAROL.

Under the act of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 46, s. 1, in the administration of the estate, after Jan. 1, 1870, his simple contract debts are placed on an equal footing with those secured by specialty. But this does not prejudice any lien or other security, which any creditor may hold.

SIMPLE LARCENY. The felonious taking and carrying away the personal goods of another, unattended by acts of violence; it is distinguished from compound larceny, which is stealing from the person or with violence. LARCENY.

SIMPLE OBLIGATION. An unconditional obligation; one which is to be performed without depending upon any event provided by the parties to it.

SIMPLE (OR COMMON) TOOL DOCTRINE. The "simple or common tool doctrine" may be said to be a relaxation of the general rule, which makes it the duty of a master to exercise reasonable care to provide reasonably safe tools and appliances for his servants, since the general rule has no application where the tools and appliances furnished are of a simple nature, easily understood, and in which the defects, if any, can be easily and readily observed by the servant. 159 Ky. 41, 166 S. W. 625.

The "simple tool rule" will not be applied to a state of case in which it appears that a servant is injured by a piece of metal flying from defective implements, such as a hammer or anvil, when the foreman is present, using the hammer in striking a piece of hot iron for the purpose of putting it into shape.

This rule is confined to cases in which the injured employe is himself actually using the tool that caused the injury complained of. 163 Ky. 158, 173 S. W. 357.

Tools of ordinary and everyday use, which are simple in structure and requiring no skill in handling—such as hammers and axes—not obviously defective, do not impose a liability upon employer for injuries resulting from such defects. 151 N. C. 315 citing 128 N. C. 264.

SIMPLE TRUST. A simple trust corresponds with the ancient use, and is where property is simply vested in one person for the use of another, and the nature of the trust, not being qualified by the settler, is left to the construction of law. It differs from a special trust. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1896.

SIMPLE WARRANTICE. See WARRANTICE.

SIMPLEX (Lat.). Simple or single; as, charta simplex is a deed-poll or single deed. Jacob, Law Dict.

SIMPLEX DICTUM (L. Lat.) Simple averment; mere assertion without proof.

SIMPLEX JUSTICIARIUS. A style formerly used for any puisse judge who was not chief in any court.

SIMPLEX LOQUELA (L. Lat.). Simple speech; the mere declaration or plaint of a plaintiff.

SIMPLEX OBLIGATIO. A single unconditional bond.

SIMPLICITER (Lat.). Simply; without ceremony; in a summary manner.

SIMUL ET SEMEL (Lat.). Together and at one time.

SIMULATED FACT. A fabricated fact; an appearance given to things by human device, with a view to deceive and mislead.

SIMULATIO LATENS. A species of feigned disease in which disease is actually present, but where the symptoms are falsely aggravated. Beck, Med. Jur. 3.

SIMULATION (Lat. simul, together). In French Law. The concert or agreement of two or more persons to give to one thing the appearance of another, for the purpose of fraud. Merlin. Répert.

SIMUL CUM (Lat. together with). In Pleading. Words used in indictments and declarations of trespass against several persons, when some of them are known and others are unknown.

In cases of riots, it is usual to charge that A B, together with others unknown, did the act complained of; 2 Chitty, Cr. Law 488; 2 Salk. 593.

When a party sued with another pleads separately, the plea is generally entitled in the name of the person pleading, adding, "sued with —," naming the other party. When this occurred, it was, in the old phraseology, called pleading with a simul cum.

SINCE. The proper signification is after, and in its apparent sense includes the whole period between the event and the present time; 79 Me. 195; since the day named, does not necessarily include that day; 41 N. H. 201.

SINE (Lat.). Without.

SINE ANIMO REVERTENDI (Lat.). Without the intention of returning. 1 Kent's Com. 78.

SINE CONSIDERATIONE CURIAE (L. Lat.). Without the judgment of the court.

SINE CUBA (L. Lat.). Without cure or charge; without any duty attached.

SINE DECRETO (Lat.). Without authority of a judge.

SINE DIE (Lat.). Without day. A judgment for a defendant in many cases is quod eat sine die, that he may go without day. While the cause is pending and undetermined, it may be continued from term to term by dies datus. See CONTINUANCE; Co. Litt. 362 b. When the court or other body rise at the end of a session or term, they adjourn sine die.

SINE HOC. A phrase formerly used in pleading as equivalent to abque hoc (q. v.).

SINE JUDICIO (L. Lat.) Without judgment; without a judicial sentence.

SINE NUMERO (L. Lat.). Without stint or limit.

SINE PROLE. Without issue. Used in genealogical tables, and often abbreviated into "s. p."

SINECURE. In Ecclesiastical Law. A term used to signify that an ecclesiastical officer is without a charge or cure.

In common parlance, it means the receipt of a salary for an office when there are no duties to be performed.

SINGLE BILL. One without any condition, which does not depend upon any future event to give it validity.

SINGLE BOND. A deed whereby the obligor obliges himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators to pay a certain sum of money to the obligee at the day named.

SINGLE COMBAT. See WAGER OF BATTLE.

SINGLE ESCHEAT. The reversion of a person's movables to the crown because of his being declared a rebel.

SINGLE STAMP SPIRITS. "Single stamp spirits," within a statute is not confined to whiskey, but includes any distilled alcoholic spirits used as a beverage whether single or double stamped. 133 Ky 580, 118 S. W. 381.

SINGLE WOMAN. The words include a widow; 12 L. J. W. C. 74; and a married woman living apart from her husband; 12 Q. B. D. 681.

SINGULAR. In grammar, the singular is used to express only one; not plural. Johnson.

In law, the singular frequently includes the plural. A bequest to "my nearest relation," for example, will be considered as a bequest to all the relations in the same degree who are nearest to the testator; 1 Ves. Sen. 357; 1 Bro. C. C. 298. A bequest made to "my heir," by a person who had three heirs, will be construed in the plural; 4 Russ. Cr. Cas. 884.

Under the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 4, words in acts of parliament importing the singular shall include the plural, and vice versa, unless the contrary is expressly provided; Whart. Lex.

SINGULAR SUCCESSION. See UNIVERSAL SUCCESSION.

SINGULAR SUCCESSOR. A phrase in Scotch law, applied to the purchase of a specific chattel or specific land, as e. g. an executor or administrator, in contradistinction to the heir. Bell.

SINKING FUND. A fund arising from particular taxes, imposts, or duties, which is appropriated towards the payment of the interest due on a public loan and for the gradual payment of the principal. This definition was quoted and approved in 9 Neb. 453. A fund created for extinguishing or paying a funded debt. 14 N. Y. 879, cited in 30 Fed. Rep. 99. Formerly corporation mortgages usually contained a provision for a sinking fund. They are now less common.

The constitution of Pennsylvania provides that every city shall create a sinking fund which shall be inviolably pledged for the payment of the public debt. Under this provision commissioners of the sinking fund may apply the money in the sinking fund to the purchase of the funded debt of the city, and the debt to that extent is thereby paid, and it is immaterial in determining the actual debt that the commissioners of the sinking fund have no authority immediately upon purchase to cancel or destroy the obligation of the city which they have bought. Securities other than those of the city held by the sinking fund are merely an asset of the city and do not operate to the reduction of the funded debt. If payments are not made into the sinking fund as required by law the commissioner must see to it that they are made, even to the institution of legal proceedings against the city to compel payment; 162 Pa. 123. See FUNDING SYSTEM.

SIST ON A SUSPENSION. A Scotch phrase equivalent to "stay of proceedings." Bell.

SISTER. A woman who has the same father and mother with another, or has one of them only. In the first case, she is called sister, simply; in the second, half-sister. Approved in 61 How. Pr. 48.

SITIO. A measure used in Mexican land grants, equivalent to 4338.464 acres. A sitio de ganado menor or sheep ranch is equivalent to 1928.133 acres. 161 U. S. 219.

SITTINGS IN BANK, or BANC. The sittings which the respective superior courts of common law hold during every term for the purpose of hearing and determining the various matters of law argued before them.

They are so called in contradistinction to the sittings at nisi prius, which are held for the purpose of trying issues of fact.

In America, the practice is essentially the same, all the judges, or a majority of them usually, sitting in banc, and but one holding the court for jury trials; and the term has the same application here as in England. See LONDON AND MIDDLESEX SITTINGS.

SITTINGS IN CAMERA. See CHAMBERS.

SITUS (Lat.). Situation; location. 5 Pet. 524.

Real estate has always a fixed situs, while personal estate has no such fixed situs: the law rei sitae regulates real but not personal estate; Story, Conf. Laws, 9th ed. §§ 868-865. See PROPERTY; LEX LOCI; TAX; Waples, Debtor and Creditor, where the subject of the location of property is treated.

SIX ACTS, THE. The popular title of the group of English acts 60 Geo. 3, and 1 Geo. 4, cc. 1, 2, 4, 6, 8, 9: portions of c. 1 (the Unlawful Drilling Act, 1819), c. 4 (the Pleading in Misdemeanor Act, 1819), and c. 8 (the Criminal Libel Act, 1819), are still unrepealed. The "Gagging Acts" was another popular title.

The six acts in effect prohibited the training of persons to arms; authorized general searches and seizure of arms; prohibited meetings of more than fifty persons for the discussion of public grievances; repressed with heavy penalties and confiscation seditious and blasphemous libels; and checked pamphleteering by extending the newspaper stamp duty to political pamphlets. Byrnes.

SIX ARTICLES, LAWS OF. A celebrated act entitled "An act for abolishing diversity of opinion," 81 Hen. VIII. c. 14; enforcing conformity to six of the strongest points in the Roman Catholic religion, under the severest penalties; repealed by 1 Eliz. c. 1; 4 Reeve, Eng. L. 678.

SIX CLERKS IN CHANCERY. Officers who received and filed all proceedings, signed office copies, attended court to read the pleadings, etc. Abolished by 5 Vict. c. 5. 8 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 448; Spence, Eq. Jur.

SIX MONTHS' RULE. See MORTGAGE; RECEIVER.

SIXTEEN HOUR LAW. Another name for the Hours of Service Law of March 4, 1907 (chapter 2939, 34 St. pp. 1415, 1416). Section 2 of this law states: "That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, its officers or agents, subject to this act to require or permit any employe subject to this act to be or remain on duty for a longer period than sixteen consecutive hours, and whenever any such employe of such common carrier shall have been on duty for sixteen consecutive hours he shall be relieved and not required to go on duty until he has had at least ten consecutive hours off duty." 197 Fed. 630.

SKELETON BILL. In Commercial Law. A blank paper, properly stamped, in those countries where stamps are required, with the name of the person signed at the bottom.

In such case the person signing the paper will be held as the drawer or acceptor, as it may be, of any bill which shall afterwards be written above his name, to the sum of which the stamp is applicable; 1 Bell, Com. 390.

SKIAGRAPH. A permanent shadow-picture produced by Roentgen rays passing through the object and falling upon a sensitive photographic film, instead of a fluorescent screen, as in the fluoroscope. Also, the plan of a building showing its interior structure. Stand. Dict.

SKILL. The art of doing a thing as it ought to be done.

Every person who purports to have skill in a business, and undertakes for hire to perform it, is bound to do it with ordinary skill, and is responsible civilly in damages for the want of it; 11 M. & W. 488; and sometimes he is responsible criminally. See PHYSICIAN; 2 Russ. Cr. 288.

The degree of skill and diligence required rises in proportion to the value of the article and the delicacy of the operation: more skill is required, for example, to repair a very delicate mathematical instrument, than upon a common instrument; Jones, Bailm. 91; 2 Kent 458, 463; Ayliffe, Pand. 468; 1 Rolle Abr. 10; Story, Bailm. § 431; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 144.

SKIN. See FUR

SLANDER. In Torts. Words falsely spoken, which are injurious to the reputation of another.

False, defamatory words spoken of another. See ODGER, LIBEL & S. *7.

There is a distinction, probably the result of some historical accident, between slander and libel; in libel any defamatory matter is prima facie libellous while the same matter when spoken would require proof of special damage, excepting in the classes of cases mentioned infra, which are actionable per se.

Verbal slander. Actionable words are of two descriptions: first, those actionable in themselves, without proof of special damages; and, secondly, those actionable only in respect of some actual consequential damages.

Words of the first description must impute.

First, the guilt of some offence for which the party, if guilty, might be indicted and punished by the criminal courts; as, to call a person a "traitor," "thief," "highwayman," or to say that he is guilty of "perjury," "forgery," "murder," and the like. And although the imputation of guilt be general, without stating the particulars of the pretended crime, it is actionable; Cro. Jac. 114, 142; 6 Term 694; 5 B. & P. 335; 56 Ark. 100; 43 La. Ann. 967; 82 Va. 239; it is enough if the offence charged be a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; Bigel. Torts 44. If the charge is that the plaintiff has already suffered the punishment, the words, if false, are actionable; ibid.; see 5 Pa. 273; 50 Ohio St. 71.

Second, that the party has a disease or distemper which renders him unfit for society; Bac. Abr. Slander (B. 2). An action can, therefore, be sustained for calling a man a leper; Cro. Jac. 144. Imputations of having at the present time a venereal disease are actionable in themselves; 8 C. B. N. S. 9; 7 Gray 181; 23 Barb. 396; 2 Ind. 83; 2 Ga. 87. But charging another with having had a contagious disease is not actionable, as he will not on that account be excluded from society; 2 Term 473, 474; 2 Stra. 1189.

Third, unfitness in an officer, who holds an office to which profit or emolument is attached, either in respect of morals or inability to discharge the duties of the office; in such a case an action lies; 4 Co. 16 a; 5 id. 125; 1 Stra. 617; 2 Ld. Raym. 1369; Bull. N. P. 4. The holder of an office, not being an office of profit, cannot, in the absence of special damage, maintain an action of slander for words imputing to him misconduct and consequent unfitness for the office, unless the imputation relates to his conduct in the office, or unless, if true, it would lead to his removal therefrom; [1892] 1 Q. B. 797; or where the office is not one of profit, and whether there is a power of removal from the office for such misconduct or not; [1895] 1 Q. B. 571.

Fourth, the want of integrity or capacity, whether mental or pecuniary, in the conduct of a profession, trade, or business, in which the party is engaged, is actionable; as, to accuse an attorney or artist of inability, inattention, or want of integrity; 3 Wils. 187; 2 W. Bla. 750; or a clergyman of being a drunkard; 1 Binn. 178, is actionable. Words spoken of a butcher, charging him with slaughtering diseased cattle for sale for human food are actionable per se; 70 Md. 328.

Fifth, Bigelow (Torts 48) gives as a fifth class words tending to defeat an expected title: as to call an heir apparent to estates a bastard. See Cro. Car. 469.

Of the second class are words which are actionable only in respect of special damages sustained by the party slandered. Though the law will not permit in these cases the inference of damage, yet when the damage has actually been sustained the party aggrieved may support an action for the publication of an untruth; 1 Lev. 53; unless the assertion be made for the assertion of a supposed claim; Com. Dig. Action upon the Case for Defamation (D 80); Bac. Abr. Slander (B); but it lies if maliciously spoken. In this case special damage is the gist of the action, and must be particularly specified in the declaration. For it is an established rule that no evidence shall be received of any loss or injury which the plaintiff had sustained by the speaking of the words unless it be specially stated in the declaration. And this rule applies equally where the special damage is the gist of the action and where the words are in themselves actionable; Heard, Libel & S. § 51.

The charge must be false; 5 Co. 125. The falsity of the accusation is to be implied till the contrary is shown; 2 East 436; 1 Saund. 242. The instance of a master making an unfavorable representation of his servant, upon an application for his character, seems to be an exception, in that case there being a presumption, from the occasion of speaking, that the words were true; 8 B. & P. 587.

The slander must, of course, be published,—that is, must be communicated to a third person,—and in a language which he understands; otherwise the plaintiff's reputation is not impaired; 1 Rolle, Abr. 74; Cro. Eliz. 887; 1 Saund. 242, n. 8; Bac. Abr. Slander (D 3). There is no publication if the words were not understood by the persons present, nor repeated by them; 48 Ill. App. 436. The slander must be published respecting the plaintiff.

It is not enough to say that by some person or other the words used might be understood in a defamatory sense; [1897] A. C. 68. "Because some persons may choose, not by reason of the language itself, but by reason of some fact to which it refers, to draw an unfavorable inference, it does not follow that such matter is libellous; 5 C. P. D. 541.

It will afford no justification that the defamatory matter has been previously published by a third person, that the defendant at the time of his publication disclosed the name of that third person and believed all the statements to be true; Heard, Libel & S. § 148. And a repetition of oral slander already in circulation, without expressing any disbelief of it or any purpose of inquiring as to its truth, though without any design to extend its circulation or credit, or to cause the person to whom it is addressed to believe or suspect it to be true, is actionable; 5 Gray 3. It is no defence in an action of slander that the words were used to and not of plaintiff, when others were present and heard the words spoken; 89 Ga. 829.

To render the words actionable, they must be uttered without legal occasion. On some occasions it is justifiable to utter slander of another; in others it is excusable, provided it be uttered without express malice; Bac. Abr. Slander (D, 4); Rolle, Abr. 87; 1 Viner, Abr. 540. It is justifiable for an attorney to use scandalous expressions in support of his client's cause and pertinent thereto; 1 Maule & S. 280; 1 Holt 531; 1 B. & Ald. 232. See 2 S. & R. 469; 11 Vt. 536. The bona fide statements of one church member, on the trial of another before a church tribunal, that such other had committed adultery with plaintiff, not a member of the church, are privileged communications; 88 Ga. 620. Members of congress and other legislative assemblies cannot be called to account for anything said in debate. See PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

Malice is essential to the support of an action for slanderous words. Odgers, Lib. & Sl. 271. But malice is, in general, to be presumed until the contrary be proved; 4 B. & C. 247; 1 Saund. 242, n. 2; 1 East 563; 5 B. & P. 385; Bull. N. P. 8; see 53 Fed. Rep. 240; except in those cases where the occasion prima facie excuses the publication; 4 B. & C. 247. See 14 B. & R. 359; 48 Ill. App. 294. Repetition of the slander after suit begun may be shown to prove malice and aggravate damages; 48 Ill. App. 413. Defendant is not required, in an action for slander in charging plaintiff with theft, to prove the truth of the charge beyond a reasonable doubt, but a preponderance of evidence is sufficient; 67 Hun 543. An admission by defendant at plaintiff's request and in the presence of a third party that on a previous occasion he had used the alleged slanderous words, is no ground of action when it does not appear that the language was originally used in the presence of a third party; 86 Fed. Rep. 96.

The word "malicious" in defining the intent with which a slander is spoken, is not to be considered in the sense of spite or hatred against a person, but as meaning that the party is actuated by improper and indirect motives other than interest of the public; 70 Md. 328; 57 Conn. 78. See MALICE.

See as to slander of a physician, 28 Am. L. Reg. 465. As to the admissibility of evidence of the defendant's pecuniary means, see 23 Alb. L. J. 44.

Libel. If a written or printed publication tends to degrade the person about whom it is written or printed—that is, if it tends to reduce his character or reputation in the estimation of his friends or acquaintances, or the public, from a higher to a lower grade, or if it tends to disgrace him—that is, if it tends to deprive him of the favor and esteem of his friends or acquaintances or the public, or tends to render him odious, ridiculous, or contemptible in the estimation of his friends or acquaintances or the public, it is per se actionable "libel."

Spoken words are only actionable "slander" per se when they clearly and unequivocally import that the person accused is guilty of some felony or other crime of such turpitude as to render him liable upon indictment to some infamous punishment. 163 Ky. 145, 173 S. W. 380.

Slandorous Per Se. Words are "slandorous" or actionable "per se" only in cases where they are falsely spoken, and (1) impute turpitude; (2) infectious disease; (3) unfitness to perform the duties of an office or employment; (4) prejudice one in his profession or trade; (5) tend to disinherit him. 155 Ky. 2, 159 S. W. 610.

See, generally, Comyns, Dig.; Bacon, Abr.; 1 Viner, Abr. 187; Starkie, Slander; Heard, Libel & Slander; Odger, Slander; Bigelow, L. C. Torts; 1 Marvel, Del. 408; JUSTIFICATION; PUBLICATION; LIBEL.

SLANDER OF TITLE. A statement tending to cut down the extent of one's title.

"An action on the case for special damage sustained by reason of the speaking or publication of the slander of the plaintiff's title." 3 Bing. N. C. 871.

Malice, that is absence of good faith, is an essential condition of liability; 19 Ch. Div. 386; or actual malice, as well as special damage; Poll. Torts 294.

The action formerly applied only to real property; but now extends to chattels and to property rights, such as those under patents. See LIBEL, where the subject is discussed.

An assertion of title made by way of self defence or as a warning to others, is not actionable, though the claim be mistaken, if made in good faith; Poll. Torts 295; L. R. 4 Q. B. 730.

An action for slander of title is not properly an action for words spoken, but an action on the case for special damage sustained by reason of the speaking or publication of the slander of the plaintiff's title. The property may be either real or personal, and the plaintiff's interest therein may be anything that has a market value. It makes no difference whether the defendant's words be spoken, written, or printed, save as affecting the damages, which should be larger when the publication is more permanent or extensive, as by advertisement. The action is ranged under that division of actions in the digests and other writers on the text law, and is so held by the courts of the present day. The slander may be of such a nature as to fall within the scope of ordinary slander. It is essential, to give a cause of action, that the statement should be false. It is essential, also, that it should be malicious,—not malicious in the worst sense, but with intent to injure the plaintiff. If the statement be true, if there really be the infirmity in the title that is suggested, no action will lie however malicious the defendant's intention might be; Heard, Libel & S. §§ 10, 59; Poll. Torts 389. See 90 Cal. 532.

Where a person claims a right in himself which he intends to enforce against a purchaser, he is entitled, and in common fairness bound, to give the intended purchaser warning of his intention; and no action will lie for giving such preliminary warning, unless it can be shown either that the threat was made mala fide, only with intent to injure the vendor, and without any purpose to follow it up by an action against the purchaser, or that the circumstances were such as to make the bringing an action altogether wrongful; L. R. 4 Q. B. 730; 14 Cent. L. J. 187; Odger, Libel & S. 138. The denial of a complaining party's title made bona fide in assertion of the title (real or honestly believed to exist) of the party making such denial, will not sustain an action for slander of title; 101 N. C. 278.

SLANDERER. A calumniator who maliciously and without reason imputes a crime or fault to another of which he is innocent. See SLANDER.

SLAVE. One over whose life, liberty, and property another has unlimited control.

Every limitation placed by law upon the absolute control modifies and to that extent changes the condition of the slave. In every slaveholding state of the United States the life and limbs of a slave were protected from violence inflicted by the master of third persons.

Among the Romans the slave was classed among things (res). He was homo sed non persona. Heinemann, Elem. Jur. l. 1, § 75. He was considered pro nullo et mortuo, quia nec status familiae nec civitatis nec libertatis gaudet, Id. § 77. See, also, 4 Dev. 340; 9 Ga. 582. In the United States, as a person, he was capable of committing crimes, or receiving his freedom, of being the subject of homicide, and of modifying by his volition very materially the rules applicable to other species of property. His existence as a person being recognized by the law, this existence was protected by the law; 1 Hawks 217; 1 Ala. 8; 1 Miss. 85; 5 Rand. 678; 1 Yerg. 156.

In the slaveholding states the relations of husband and wife and parent and child were recognized by statutes in relation to public sales, and by the courts in all cases where such relations were material to elucidate the motives of the acts.

A slave had no political rights. His civil rights, though necessarily more restricted than the free-men's, were based upon the law of the land. He had none but such as were by that law and the law of nature given to him. The civil-law rule, "par-tus sequitur ventrem," was adopted in all the slaveholding states, the status of the mother at the time of birth deciding the status of the issue; 2 Rand. 246; 1 Hayw. 234; 1 Cooke 381; 2 Dana 432; 2 Mo. 71; 14 S. & R. 445; 8 H. & M. H. 139; 20 Johns. 1; 12 Wheat. 568; 2 Hare. 325, 496.

The slave could not acquire property; his acquisitions belonged to his master; 5 Cow. 397; 1 Ill. 633; 2 Hill, Ch. 397; 6 Humphr. 299; 2 Ala. 320; 5 B. Monr. 180; 92 U. S. 27. The peculium of the Roman slave was ex gratia, and not of right; Inst. 2. 9. 3. In like manner, negro slaves in the United States were, as a matter of fact, sometimes permitted by their masters ex gratia, to obtain and retain property. The slave could not be a witness, except for and against slaves or free negroes. This was, perhaps, the rule of the common law. None but a free-man was offshore. In the United States the rule of exclusion which we have mentioned was enforced in all cases where the evidence was offered for or against white persons; 6 Leigh 74. In most of the states this exclusion was by express statutes, while in others it existed by custom and the decision of the courts; 10 Ga. 519. In the slaveholding states, and in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, by statute, the rule was extended to include persons of color or emancipated slaves; 14 Ohio 199; 3 Harr. & J. 97. The slave could be a suitor in court only for his freedom. For all other wrongs he appeared through his master, for whose benefit the recovery was had; 9 Gill & J. 19; 1 Mo. 608; 4 Yerg. 303; 3 Brev. 11; 4 Cal. 340; 9 La. 152; 1 B. Monr. 60. The suitor for freedom was favored; 1 Hen. & M. 143; 8 Pet. 44; 2 A. K. Marsh. 467. Lapse of time worked no forfeiture by reason of his dependent condition; 8 B. Monr. 631; 1 Hen. & M. 141. The master was bound to maintain, support, and defend his slave, however helpless or impotent. If he failed to do so, public officers were provided to supply his deficiency at his expense.

Cruel treatment was a penal offence of a high grade. Emancipation of the slave was the consequence of conviction in Louisiana; and the sale of the slave to another master was a part of the penalty in Alabama and Texas.

It will be presumed that a person who was a slave before 1865 in this country is a negro; 107 N. C. 609.

The enfranchisement of a slave was called manumission. See BONDAGE; MANUMISSION; SERVUS; FREEDOM. Slavery was abolished in the United States by the thirteenth amendment to the constitution.

SLAVE-TRADE. The traffic in slaves, or the buying and selling of slaves for profit. It is either foreign or domestic.

The history of the slave-trade is as old as the authentic records of the race. Joseph was sold to Ishmaelitic slave-traders, and Egypt has been a mart for the traffic from that day to this. The negro early became a subject of it. In every slave-market he has been found, and never as a master except in Africa. The Roman mart, however, exhibited a variety of all the conquered races of the world. At Bristol, in England, for many years about the eleventh century, a brisk trade was carried on in purchasing Englishmen and exporting them to Ireland. And William of Malmsbury states that it seems to be a natural custom with the people of Northumberland to sell their nearest relations.

The African slave-trade on the eastern coast has been carried on with India and Arabia from a period difficult to be established, and was continued with British India while British ships-of-war hovered on the western coast to capture the pirates engaged in the same trade. On the western coast the trade dates from 1482. The Spaniards for a time monopolized the Portuguese soon rivalled them in its prosecution. Sir John Hawkins, in 1502, was the first Englishman who engaged in it; and queen Elizabeth was the first Englishwoman known to share in the profits.

Immense numbers of African negroes were transported to the New World, although thousands were landed in England and France and owned and used as servants. The large profits of the trade stimulated the avarice of bad men to forget all the claims of humanity; and the horrors of the middle passage, though much exaggerated, were undoubtedly very great.

The American Colonies raised the first voice in Christendom for the suppression of the slave-trade, but the interests of British merchants were too powerful with the king, who stifled their complaints. The constitution of the United States, in 1789, was the first governmental act towards its abolition. By it, congress was forbidden to prohibit the trade until the year 1808. This limitation was made at the suggestion of South Carolina and Georgia, aided by some of the New England states. Yet both of those states, by state action, prohibited the trade many years before the time limited,—Georgia as early as 1783. In 1807, an act of congress was passed which prohibited the trade after 1808, and by subsequent acts it was declared piracy. The federal legislation on the subject will be found in acts of congress passed respectively March 22, 1794, May 10, 1800, March 2, 1807, April 20, 1818, March 3, 1819, and May 15, 1820. In the year 1807, the British parliament also passed an act for the abolition of the slave-trade,—the consummation of a parliamentary struggle continued for nineteen years, and fourteen years after a similar act had been adopted by Georgia. Great efforts have been made by Great Britain, by treaties and otherwise, to suppress this trade, one being entered into at Brussels in 1806. As to the present condition of the slave trade throughout the world, see Int. Assn. (1885) 155. See Buxton's Slave-Trade, etc.; Carey's Slave-Trade; Cobb's Historical Sketch of Slavery.

SLAVERY. See INVOLUNTARY SERVITUDE; PEONAGE.

SLAY. When not used in relation to battle the word is synonymous with kill. 32 La. Ann. 351.

SLEDGE. A hurdle used to draw traitors to execution. 1 Hale, P. C. 82.

SLEEPING-CAR. The servants and employes in charge of sleeping or drawing-room cars are considered in the same light as if they were employed by the railroad company, notwithstanding the existence of a separate agreement between the railroad and the sleeping-car company, whereby the latter furnishes its own servants and conductors, and has exclusive control of the cars used on the former company's road; Beach, Railr. 1007; 19 Alb. L. J. 471; 125 Mass. 54. See 52 Fed. Rep. 262. Sleeping-car companies are not liable as innkeepers; 73 Ill. 360; 16 Abb. Pr. (N. S.) 352; 6 Ohio Dec. 83; 24 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 95; 28 Neb. 239; nor as common carriers; 73 Ill. 360; 143 Mass. 267; 40 La. Ann. 87; 151 N. Y. 163; 3 Penny. 78; 124 N. Y. 53; 60 Tex. 120; 24 Mo. App. 29; 63 Miss. 609; 52 Fed. Rep. 262; 74 id. 409; nor as a carrier providing state-rooms for his passengers; 43 How. Pr. 466.

A sleeping-car company impliedly undertakes to keep a reasonable watch on the passenger and his property; but no more; 23 Am. L. Reg. N. S. (Ky.) 788; whether the passenger is in his berth or in the wash-room; 28 Mo. App. 199; 23 S. E. Rep. (Ga.) 186; while he is asleep; 73 Ill. 360; 24 Mo. App. 29; or while occupying his berth; 143 Mass. 267. The company is liable for the watch and money of a passenger stolen while he was asleep, where it appeared that the company's servant disobeyed a regulation which required him to keep a continuous watch during the night; 10 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 324. It is the duty of a sleeping-car company to keep reasonable guard over the persons and property of passengers; 84 Ind. 474; 74 Tex. 651; 143 Mass. 267; it is liable only where there is a lack of ordinary care; 6 Ohio Dec. 85.

It is not liable for a pocket-book, containing money, negligently left by a passenger, if stolen by some one not in the company's employ, unless an agent of the company knew, before the theft, that the property had been so left; 63 Miss. 609. It is not ordinarily liable for property stolen by another passenger; 84 Ind. 474. Where a porter, acting under the rules of the company, takes charge of baggage to aid in removing it from the car, it is within the scope of his employment, and the company is liable for its loss; 44 N. E. Rep. (Ind. App.) 1010.

The company is liable—in any case—only for a reasonable amount of money and personal belongings appropriate to the circumstances of the plaintiff; 51 Fed. Rep. 796; 143 Mass. 267; 28 Mo. App. 199; 72 Ia. 238; 49 N. Y. 1111. In the absence of evidence of what is a reasonable amount, it has been held that the verdict must be for nominal damages only; 83 Mo. App. 682.

The duty of a sleeping-car company to protect its passengers from thieves cannot be waived by words printed upon the passenger's ticket or notices posted in the car; 26 S. W. Rep. (Tex.) 112. It cannot avoid its liability by posting in the car a notice disclaiming responsibility for personal property left in berths, if such notice is not known to the passenger; 143 Mass. 267.

Though a passenger negligently leave his property exposed, if it is stolen by a servant of the sleeping-car company, the company is liable; 74 Tex. 534; 23 S. W. Rep. Tenn. 70; but it is not liable where a passenger's satchel is carelessly left, during his absence from his seat, within the reach of persons outside; 143 Mass. 243; if a passenger leave a large sum of money under his pillow while he goes to the wash-room, he cannot recover; 37 Mo. App. 600; unless it was left with the porter; 50 id. 474.

Negligence on the part of the sleeping-car company's servants is not to be presumed from the mere fact of the loss, but must be shown; 28 Mo. App. 199; 6 Ohio Dec. 83; 124 N. Y. 53; 72 Ia. 228; 60 Tex. 120. Contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff may defeat his recovery; 143 Mass. 267; 51 Fed. Rep. 736; 63 Miss. 609. The presumption of negligence arising from proof of loss is rebutted by the porter's uncontradicted evidence that he watched the car till after the loss; 3 Colo. App. 340.

The railroad company is liable to a passenger who is injured through the negligence of a servant of a sleeping-car company; 38 Ohio St. 461; 102 U. S. 451; though riding in a different car from the one in which he has purchased a seat; 102 U. S. 451; even though he knew that the sleeping-car was operated by a separate corporation; see 102 U. S. 451; Wood, Ry. 1700; though the question of his knowledge was deemed important in 38 Ohio St. 461.

For an unjustifiable and wanton assault by a porter on a passenger on a railroad train who had not purchased a sleeping-car ticket, it was held that the railway company was liable, but that the sleeping-car company was not; 40 La. Ann. 87, 417. Whether the latter is to be held liable for the violent act of a porter depends upon whether the act came within the scope of his employment; 20 Fed. Rep. 100. The porter was held to be the servant of the railroad company in 120 N. Y. 117 (8 L. R. A. 224); 102 U. S. 451. Where a passenger is ejected from a sleeping-car by train hands, their act is the act of the railroad company, not of the sleeping-car company; 49 Mo. App. 75.

It has been held that where a passenger is wrongfully expelled from a sleeping-car by a servant of the railroad company, the sleeping-car company is not liable, and if expelled by a servant of the latter, the railroad company is not liable; 37 Fed. Rep. 841.

It cannot be said on demurrer that a company is not liable for injury to a passenger caused by the excessively low temperature of a car; 74 Fed. Rep. 499.

A railroad company cannot, by any arrangement with a sleeping-car company, evade the duty of providing proper means for the safe carriage of passengers; 102 U. S. 457; 16 Lea 390; 125 Mass. 54; 108 N. Y. 80.

A passenger travelling on a free pass, by which he waived action for injuries, purchased a seat in a sleeping-car, and while riding in it was injured; it was held that he was still bound by his waiver; 108 N. Y. 80.

A rule of a railroad company requiring a passenger to have a first-class ticket for his transportation before he can be assigned to a berth in a sleeping-car, is a reasonable one and can be legally enforced; 49 Ill. App. 75.

A sleeping-car company is bound to afford equal facilities to all travellers who apply for them in compliance with reasonable regulations; 100 Ill. 222; 45 Fed. Rep. 330; but it has a right to sell a section to one passenger and is not liable to a passenger to whom it has refused to sell one of the berths in such section, though it was not occupied; 45 Fed. Rep. 339. And it is not bound to furnish a berth to one who by the rules of the railroad company is not entitled thereto; 144 Mass. 6; 52 Fed. Rep. 262.

A purchaser of a section may share its use with any proper person whom he invites into it; 45 Fed. Rep. 330; and he may, on leaving the train, transfer the use of his section to another first-class passenger for the rest of the trip; 34 Am. L. Reg. 709 (Super. Ct. of Baltimore).

A passenger is entitled to occupy only the berth he pays for and which his ticket specifies; 14 S. W. Rep. (Tex.) 855.

One who has paid for a berth from one point to another is entitled to a continuous passage in it, or in one equally good, and cannot be transferred to another berth or another car at the arbitrary discretion of the company; 65 Ind. 153.

In the contract for the use of the berth there is directly involved an obligation to awaken and notify the passenger in time for him to prepare safely and comfortably to leave the train at his destination; 79 Tex. 469.

See 3 Beach, Railways § 1007; Hutchinson, Carriers, 2d ed. § 617 d; 2 Rorer, Railroads; Bishop, Non-Contract Law § 1162; 21 L. R. A. 299; 9 L. R. A. 173.

SLEEPING RENT. A fixed rent, as opposed to one varying with the profits. 2 Harr. & W. 43.

SLIP. In negotiations for a policy of insurance the "slip" is a memorandum between the parties containing the terms of the proposed insurance, and initialed by the underwriters.

Although, under the English Marine Insurance Act, 1906, s. 22 (which requires every contract of marine insurance to be expressed in a policy) the slip itself is not enforceable, it is for many other purposes of legal effect; thus, where a slip has been initiated, the assured need not communicate to the insurer facts which afterwards come to his knowledge material to the risk insured against, and the non-disclosure of those facts will not vitiate the policy afterwards executed, although it would do so if there were no slip. The slip is in fact a binding contract for the issue of the policy. Byrne.

SLIPPA. A stirrup. There is a tenure of land in Cambridgeshire by holding the sovereign's stirrup.

SLOUGH. An arm of a river flowing between islands and the main land. 55 Ia. 665.

Slough Silver. An old rent paid instead of harvest work at the castle of Wigmor, England. English.

SLUT. See BITCH.

SMALL BILLS. See SHIN-PLASTERS.

SMALL DEBTS COURTS. The several county courts established by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, for the purpose of bringing justice home to every man's door.

SMALL NOTES. See SHIN-PLASTERS.

SMART-MONEY. Vindictive or exemplary damages given beyond the actual damage, by way of punishment and example, in cases of gross misconduct of defendant. 15 Conn. 225; 14 Johns. 352; 10 Am. L. Reg. N. s. 566. That it cannot be given by jury, see 2 Greenl. Ev. § 253, n. See EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

SMEETING. Smelting, though by derivation synonymous with melting, has come to mean a melting of ores in the presence of some reagent which operates to separate the metallic element by combining with a non-metallic element. 66

Fed. Rep. 351.

SMOKE. Ordinances relating to the emission of smoke have been enacted in nearly every city and village. There is a great difference in the smoke, dirt and soot-producing qualities of fuel and in the furnaces where consumed and in the manner of stoking fires, and as the careless and unrestrained use of some fuels tends to produce and discharge into the atmosphere surrounding the places where such fuels are so carelessly used, dirt and soot-laden smoke that is injurious and disagreeable, the production and discharge of such smoke is a proper subject for reasonable police regulation. 199 N. Y. 212-13.

Explosions or Combustions. "Smoke explosions or combustions" are caused by the accumulation of smoke or gas in mines resulting from the want of pure air; such explosions never occur when the air is good. 143 Ky. 351, 136 S. W. 620.

SMOKE-SILVER. A modus of sixpence in lieu of tithe-wood. Twisdale, Hist. Vindictat. 77.

SMUGGLING. The fraudulent taking into a country, or out of it, merchandise which is lawfully prohibited.

This definition was quoted and approved by Brewer, J., in 156 U. S. 185.

"Smuggling consists in the bringing on shore, or carrying from the shore, goods and merchandise, for which the duty has not been paid, or of goods of which the importation or exportation is prohibited." 6 Mac. Abr. 258; so, in almost precisely the same words in 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 661; 1 Russ. Cr. 172; Gabh. Cr. L. 848.

In the Anti-Moety Act, June 22, 1874, it was provided:

"That for the purpose of this act, smuggling shall be construed to mean the act, with intent to defraud, of bringing into the United States, or with like intent, attempting to bring into the United States, dutiable articles without passing the same, or the packages containing the same, through the custom-house, or submitting them to the officers of the revenue, for examination." 18 U. S. Statutes at Large, ch. 391, p. 186.

SO. The terms "hence" and "therefore" are sometimes the equivalent of "so," and the latter word is thus understood whenever what follows is an illustration or conclusion from what has gone before. 33 Ind. 431.

SO HELP YOU GOD. See OATH.

SOC. See SOCAGE.

SOCAGE. A species of tenure, whereby the tenant held his lands of the lord by any certain service in lieu of all other services, so that the service was not a knight's service. Its principal feature was its certainty: as, to hold by fealty and a certain rent, or by fealty and a certain corporal service, as ploughing the lord's land for a specified number of days. 2 Bl. Com. 80.

The term socage was afterwards extended to all services which were not of a military character, provided they were fixed: as, by the annual payment of a rose, a pair of gilt spurs, a certain number of capons, or of so many bushels of corn. Of some tenements the service was to be hangman, or executioner of persons condemned in the lord's court; for in olden times such officers were not volunteers, nor to be hired for lucre, and could only be bound thereto by tenure. There were three different species of these socage tenures—one in frank tenure, another in ancient tenure, and the third in base tenure: the second and third kinds are now called, respectively, tenure in ancient demesne, and copyhold tenure. The first is called free and common socage, to distinguish it from the other two; but, as the term socage has long ceased to be applied to the two latter, socage and free and common socage now mean the same thing. Bracton; Co. Litt. 17, 86. See TENURE.

By the statute of 12 Car. II. c. 24, the ancient tenures by knight's service were abolished, and all lands, with the exception of copyholds and of ecclesiastical lands, which continued to be held in free alms (frankalmoinage), were turned into free and common socage and the great bulk of real property in England is now held under this ancient tenure. Many grants of land in the United States, made previous to the revolution, by the British Crown, created the same tenure among us, until they were formally abolished by the legislatures of the different states. In 1787, the state of New York converted all feudal tenures within its boundaries into a tenure by free and common socage; but in 1830 it abolished this latter tenure, with all its incidents, and declared that from thenceforth all lands in the state should be held upon a uniform allodial tenure, and vested an absolute property in the owners according to their respective estates. Similar provisions have been adopted by other states; and the ownership of land throughout the United States is now essentially free and unrestricted. See TENURE; SOKA.

SOCER (Lat.). The father of one's wife; a father-in-law.

SOCIAL CONTRACT, or COMPACT. The reciprocal obligations of civil society and its members: conceived of by philosophers of the period preceding the French Revolution as a form of agreement, and opposed to the state of nature. According to them, the individual gives up the right of redressing his own wrongs and yields obedience and support to the state. In return he receives public protection and defense. Stand. Dict.

SOCIAL ENJOYMENT. These words are too comprehensive to state as the object for which a corporation is to be formed, as some social enjoyments are unlawful. 2 D. R. Pa. 702.

SOCIDA (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of a contract by which one man delivers to another, either for a small recompense or for a part of the profits, certain animals, on condition that if any of them perish they shall be replaced by the bailor or he shall pay their value.

A contract of hiring, with the condition that the bailee takes upon him the risk of the loss of the thing hired. Wolff § 638.

SOCIETAS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A contract in good faith made to share in common the profit and loss of a certain business or thing, or of all the possessions of the parties. Calvinus, Lex.; Inst. 3. 26; Dig. 17. 21. See PARTNERSHIP.

SOCIETAS LEONINA (Lat.). In Roman Law. That kind of society or partnership by which the entire profits should belong to some of the partners in exclusion of the rest.

It was so called in allusion to the fable of the lion and other animals, who having entered into partnership for the purpose of hunting, the lion appropriated all the prey to himself; Dig. 17. 2. 30. 3; Poth. Traité de Société, n. 12. See 2 M'Cord 421; 6 Pick. 372.

SOCIETE. In French Law. Partnership.

Every société is either universelle, being either of all present property, or of all future gains; or particulière, being a particular contract for one definite enterprise. Generally, the modes and consequences of a dissolution of a société are the same as for that of a partnership in English law. Abbott; Brown.

SOCIETE ANONYME. An association where the liability of all the partners is limited. It had, in England, until lately no other name than that of "chartered company," meaning thereby, a joint stock company whose shareholders, by a charter from the crown, or a special enactment of the legislature, stood exempted from any liability for the debts of the concern, beyond the amount of their subscriptions. R. & L. Dict.; 2 Mill Pol. Ec. 485.

SOCIETE EN COMMANDITE. In Louisiana. A partnership formed by a contract by which one person or partnership agrees to furnish another person or partnership a certain amount, either in property or money, to be employed by the person or partnership to whom it is furnished, in his or their own name or firm, on condition of receiving a share in the profits, in the proportion determined by the contract, and of being liable to losses and expenses to the amount furnished and no more. La. Civ. Code, art. 2810; Code de Comm. 26, 33; 4 Pardessus, Dr. Com. n. 1027; Dalloz, Dict. Société Commerciale, n. 168. See Goirand; Code; COMMENDAM; PARTNERSHIP.

SOCIETIES. See INDUSTRIAL AND PROVIDENT SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY. A society is a number of persons united together by mutual consent, in order to deliberate, determine, and act jointly for some common purpose.

Societies are either incorporated and known to the law, or unincorporated, of which the law does not generally take notice.

By civil society is usually understood a state, a nation, or a body politic. Rutherford, Inst. c. 1, 2.

SODOMITE. One who has been guilty of sodomy. Formerly such offender was punished with great severity, and was deprived of the power of making a will.

SODOMY. A carnal copulation by human beings with each other against nature, or with a beast. See 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 1191; Whart. Cr. Law 570.

It may be committed between two persons both of whom consent, even between husband and wife; 8 C. & P. 604; and both may be indicted; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 484; 2 C. & K. 869. Penetration of the mouth is not sodomy; Russ. & R. 331; 31 Tex. Cr. R. 551. As to emission, see 12 Co. 36; 1 Va. Cas. 807. See 1 Russ. Cr. 698; 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 34; 8 C. & P. 417; 8 Harr. & J. 154; 94 Mich. 27.

A minor 13 years of age cannot consent to an act of sodomy committed on his person; and if he submits to it without resistance the act is still done by force; 61 Conn. 50.

A domestic fowl is an "animal" within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, punishing unnatural offences. 24 Q. B. Div. 357. But see 1 Russ. Cr. 698.

SOFT DRINKS. "Soft drinks" include all non-intoxicating beverages, but are commonly understood to mean such beverages as contain a small per cent of alcohol but not a sufficient quantity to produce intoxication when drunk in the largest practicable quantity. 142 Ky. 821, 135 S. W. 290.

SOIL. The superficies of the earth on which buildings are erected or may be erected.

The soil is the principal, and the building, when erected, is the accessory.

SOIT DROIT FAIT AL PARTIE. In English Law. Let right be done to the party. A phrase written on a petition of right, and subscribed by the king. See PETITION OF RIGHT.

SOIT FAIT COMME IL EST DESIRE. Let it be as it is desired. The royal assent to private acts of parliament.

SOKA, SOC, SOK. Jurisdiction; a power or privilege to administer justice and execute the laws; also a shire, circuit, or territory. Cowel.

In the Domesday Book and the Leges Henrici distinction between "sake and soke" is obliterated. Soke means jurisdiction and "sake and soke" is but a pleonastic phrase, which means no more than sake. Before the Norman times the idea of jurisdiction was expressed by a technical word, the meaning of which was rigorously observed. This is sacu and the word has strangely vanished from our legal vocabulary, but is still preserved even in its technical sense by the German sache; Maitl. Domesd. 259. The same writer says that of the two words sake is by far the commoner, and that sake is rarely found except in connection with sake, and when so found it seems to be merely an equivalent for the latter word. Sake originally signified a matter, a thing; hence, a matter or cause in the lawyers' sense of these terms. A "matter" in dispute between litigants, a "cause" before a court. While sake, socna, soka, is the Anglo-Saxon socn, and has for its primary meaning a seeking. The phrase "holding with sake and soke" seems to be equivalent after the Conquest with "he held freely;" Maitl. Domesd. 80; which see for a learned discussion as to the distinction between the two words.

SOKEMANS, SOCMEN. Freeholders whose holdings might be no larger than those of the villans, but who would generally, instead of the heavy services, pay fixed and not heavy rent; 1 Soc. Eng. 360. Those who held their land in socage 2 Bla. Com. 100.

SOLAR DAY. That period of time which begins at sunrise and ends at sunset; the same as "artificial day." Co Litt. 135 a.

SOLAR MONTH. A calendar month. Co Litt. 135 b; 1 W. Bla. 450; 1 Maule & S. 111; 1 Bingh. 307.

SOLARES. In Spanish Law. Lots of ground. This term is frequently found in grants from the Spanish government of lands in America. 2 White, Recop. 474.

SOLATIUM. Compensation. Especially the compensation allowed by the law for injury done to the feelings, as distinguished from the indemnification awarded for pecuniary loss sustained, or physical injury inflicted. Abbott.

SOLD NOTE. The name of an instrument in writing, given by a broker to a buyer of merchandise, in which it is stated that the goods therein mentioned have been sold to him. 1 Bell, Com. 435; Story, Ag. § 28. Some confusion may be found in the books as to the name of these notes: they are sometimes called bought notes.

SOLD OR REMOVED FOR SALE. In an act (Oct. 22, 1914) which levies a tax upon things "manufactured, sold, or removed for sale," the words "sold, or removed for sale" mean that the tax falls due in some cases before a sale is complete. 256 U. S. 448. Removal for the purpose of forwarding a sale is a removal for sale within the meaning of the act. Id.

SOLDIER. A military man; a private in the army. See TROOPS.

Soldiers re-enlisted "for clerical service and messenger duty," under act of congress of July 29, 1886, are still in the service, and under U. S. Rev. St. § 1285, are entitled to the additional pay for certificates of merit. 38 Ct. Cl. 462. See LONGEVITY PAY.

SOLE. Alone, single; used in contradistinction to joint or married. A sole tenant, therefore, is one who holds lands in his own right, without being joined with any other. A feme sole is a single woman; a sole corporation is one composed of only one natural person.

SOLEMN FORM. There are two kinds of probate; namely, probate in common form, and probate in solemn form. Probate in common form is granted in the registry, without any formal procedure in court, upon an ex parte application made by the executor. Probate in solemn form is in the nature of a final decree pronounced in open court, all parties interested having been duly cited. The difference between the effect of probate in common form and probate in solemn form is, that probate in common form is revocable, whereas probate in solemn form is irrevocable, as against all persons who have been cited to see the proceedings, or who can be proved to have been privity to those proceedings, except in the case where a will of subsequent date is discovered, in which case probate of an earlier will, though granted in solemn form, would be revoked. Abbott: Coote Prob. Pr. 5th ed., 237-239.

SOLEMNITY. The formality established by law to render a contract, agreement, or other act valid.

As the solemnization of a marriage is the consummation of a valid marriage; 33 L. J. Ch. 139; 49 id. 193; and an oath to be taken solemnly does not merely mean religiously, but with all due solemnities; 14 Q. B. D. 667. See MARRIAGE.

SOLICITATION. Solicitation to commit a crime is usually held to be punishable as a misdemeanor, though the offence solicited may not be committed; 135 Mass. 545; 37 N. J. 112; but it has been held otherwise, as, where a letter was written requesting one to commit murder, which never reached the person to whom it was addressed; 10 W. R. 109. See 29 Mich. 50; 11 Ga. 253. If the offence requires the concurrent action of two or more persons, it is doubtful whether a solicitation of one person by another to commit the offence is in itself criminal; 1 McClain, Cr. Law § 220.

The offence of this character most frequently mentioned in criminal law books is what is termed solicitation of chastity. The asking a person to commit adultery or fornication of itself is not an indictable offence; Salk. 382; 2 Chitty, Pr. 478; 34 Pa. 209; contra, 7 Conn. 267; Bish. N. Cr. L. § 767, 768. The distinction is sharply drawn by the Pennsylvania case and the Connecticut case. In the latter, solicitation to commit adultery, which was a statutory felony, was held indictable, in the former where the offence was a misdemeanor, it was not. See also Whart. Cr. L., 9th ed. § 179, and a criticism thereon in 146 Pa. 88. In England, the bare solicitation of chastity is punished in the ecclesiastical courts; 2 Chitty, Pr. 478. See Whart. Cr. Law 1738; 2 Ld. Raym. 609; Bish. Cr. Law § 767.

The civil law punished arbitrarily the person who solicited the chastity of another; Dig. 47. 11. 1.

The term solicitation is also used in connection with other offences, as, solicitation to larceny, sodomy, bribery, threatening notice. 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 767. Under the stat. of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, § 4, whoever shall solicit any one to murder any other person, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Under this act the editor of a German paper in London was indicted and found guilty, for having published an article commending the assassination of the emperor of Russia; 7 Q. B. Div. 944; 1 Bish. Cr. L. 768. Solicitation and an offer of money to commit murder, meet the test of a common-law crime (see MISDEMEANOR), constituting an act done, a step in the direction of that crime; 146 Pa. 88. On an indictment for solicitation to commit arson, evidence that the prisoner solicited other parties to burn the same building is admissible; 10 Co. Ct. Rep. Pa. 300.

SOLICITOR. A person whose business is to be employed in the care and management of suits depending in courts of chancery.

A solicitor, like an attorney, will be required to act with perfect good faith towards his clients. He must conform to the authority given him. It is said that to institute a suit he must have a special authority, although a general authority will be sufficient to defend one. The want of a written authority may subject him to the expenses incurred in a suit; 8 Mer. 12. See 1 Phil. Ev. 192; 2 Chitty, Pr. 2. In a recent English case it was held that a compromise entered into before the issue of a writ is not binding on the client; 16 L. T. N. s. 332; the English court of appeal has just held that the same rule applies where a solicitor before action accepted a small sum in discharge of his client's claim without the latter's sanction; 53 Alb. L. J. 404. See ATTORNEY AT LAW; COUNSELLOR AT LAW; PROCTOR.

Solicitors have hitherto been regarded as officers of the court of chancery; and it has been the usual course that, as soon as any one has been admitted an attorney, he should apply to be admitted a solicitor, which is done by the Master of the Rolls as a matter of course. Hunt, 2d Pl. III. c. 6. But now by the Judicature Act of 1873, s. 87, all solicitors, attorneys, and proctors are to be henceforth called solicitors of the supreme court; Moe. & W.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL. The solicitor-general of the United States is appointed by the president to assist the attorney-general in the performance of his duties, and in case of a vacancy in the office of attorney-general, or of his absence or disability, the solicitor-general has the power to exercise all the duties of that office. Except when the attorney-general in particular cases otherwise directs, he and the solicitor-general argue cases in the supreme court, in which the United States is interested. R. S. §§ 847, 859.

In English Law. A law officer of the crown, appointed by patent during the royal pleasure, who assists the attorney-general in managing the law business of the crown. Selden i. 6. 7. He is first in right of precedence; 3 Sharsw. Bl. Com. 28, n. (a), n. 9; Encyc. Brit.

SOLICITOR OF THE SUPREME COURT. The solicitors before the supreme courts, in Scotland, are a body of solicitors entitled to practise in the court of session, etc. Their charter of incorporation bears date August 10, 1797.

SOLICITOR OF THE TREASURY. The title of one of the officers of the United States, created by the act of May 29, 1880; he is appointed by the president, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, and is under the supervision of the department of justice. R. S. § 349.

SOLIDO, IN. See IN SOLIDUM.

SOLITARY CONFINEMENT. See PENITENTIARY; PUNISHMENT.

This phrase has reference to the former system of imprisonment by complete isolation of a prisoner from all human society, his confinement in a cell, so arranged that he had no direct intercourse with or sight of any human being, and no employment or instruction. In later years, this system of confinement has been modified in some instances by allowing the prisoner to see his attendants, religious adviser, legal counsel, and members of his family, such access, however, being in accordance with prison regulations. Solitary confinement has been held an additional punishment to the punishment of death, even when it has such statutory mitigations as those mentioned above. 134 U. S. 167 et seq.

SOLUTIO (Lat. release). In Civil Law. Payment. By this term is understood every species of discharge or liberation, which is called satisfaction, and with which the creditor is satisfied. Dig. 46. 3. 54; Code 8. 43. 17; Inst. 3. 80. This term has rather a reference to the substance of the obligation than to the numeration or counting of the money. Dig. 50. 16. 178.

SOLUTIO INDEBITI (Lat.). In Civil Law. The case where one has paid a debt, or done an act or remitted a claim because he thought that he was bound in law to do so, when he was not. In such cases of mistake there is an implied obligation (quasi ex contractu) to pay back the money, etc.; Poll. Contr. 489; MacKelvey, Civ. Law § 458.

SOLVENCY. The state of a person who is able to pay all his debts: as also such attitude of his property as that it may be reached and subjected by process of law, without his consent, to the payment of such debts. 116 Mo. 226; 32 id. 869; 4 Cush. 127. The opposite of insolvency (q. v.).

SOLVENDUM IN FUTURO. To be paid at a future time. English.

SOLVENT. One who has sufficient to pay his debts and all obligations. Dig. 50. 16. 114.

A person is solvent who owns property enough and so situated that all his debts can be collected from it by legal proceedings; 18 Wend. 877; 53 Barb. 547. But other cases hold that to be solvent one must be able to pay all his debts in the ordinary course of trade. See 2 N. B. R. 149; 79 La. 482. See INSOLVENCY.

SOLVERE (Lat. to unbind; to untie). To release; to pay; solvere dicimus enim qui fecit quod facere promisit. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 807.

SOLVIT AD DIEM (Lat. he paid at the day). The name of a plea to an action on a bond, or other obligation to pay money, by which the defendant pleads that he paid the money on the day it was due. See 1 Stra. 632; Rep. temp. Hardw. 183; Comyns, Dig. Plead. (2 W. 29).

This plea ought to conclude with an averment, and not to the country; 1 Sid. 215; 12 Johns. 253. See 2 Phill. Ev. 92; Coke N. J. 467.

SOLVIT POST DIEM (Lat. he paid after the day). The name of a special plea in bar to an action of debt on a bond, by which the defendant asserts that he paid the money after the day it became due. 1 Chitty, Pl. 480, 535; 2 Phill. Ev. 93.

SOMNAMBULISM (Lat. somnium, sleep; ambulo, to walk). Sleep-walking.

The mental condition in this affection is not very unlike that of dreaming. Many of their phenomena are the same; and the former differs from the latter chiefly in the larger number of the functions involved in the abnormal process. In addition to the mental activity common to both, the somnambulist enjoys the use of his senses in some degree, and the power of locomotion. He is thereby enabled to perform manual operations as well, frequently, as in his waking state. Usually, however, the action of the senses is more or less imperfect, many of the impressions being incorrectly or not at all perceived. The person walks against a wall, or stumbles over an object in his path; he mistakes some projections for a horse, strides across it, and imagines himself to be riding; he hears the faintest sound connected with what he is doing, while the voices of persons near him, and even the blast of a trumpet, are entirely unnoticed. Occasionally the power of the senses is increased to a degree unknown in the waking state. Jane Rider, whose remarkable history was published some thirty years ago, could read the almost obliterated dates of coins in a dark room, and was able to read and write while her eyes were covered with several folds of handkerchief. For the most part, however, the operations of the somnambulist consist in getting up while asleep, groping about in the dark, endeavoring to make his way out of the house through doors or windows, making signs inarticulate sounds, perhaps, and all the while unconscious of persons or things around him. The power of the perceptive faculties, as well as that of the senses, is sometimes increased in a wonderful degree. It is related of the girl just mentioned that in the fit she would sing correctly, and play at backgammon with considerable skill, though she had never done either when awake.

The somnambulist always awakes suddenly, and has but a faint conception, if any, of what he has been thinking and doing. If conscious of anything, it is of an unpleasant dream imperfectly remembered. This fact, not being generally known, will often enable us to detect simulated somnambulism. If the person on waking continues the same train of thought and pursues the same plans and purposes which he did while asleep, there can be no doubt that he is feigning the affection. When a real somnambulist, for some criminal purpose, undertakes to simulate a paroxysm, he is not at all likely to imitate one of his own previous paroxysms, for the simple reason that he knows less than others how he appeared while in them. If, therefore, somnambulism is alleged in any given case, with no other proof than the occurrence of former paroxysms unquestionably genuine, it must be viewed with suspicion if the character of the alleged paroxysm differs materially from that of the genuine ones. In one way or another, a case of simulation would generally be detected by means of a close and intelligent scrutiny, so difficult is it to imitate that mixture of consciousness and unconsciousness, of dull and sharp perceptions, which somnambulism presents. The history of the individual may throw some light on the matter. If he has had an opportunity of witnessing the movements of a somnambulist in the course of his life, this fact alone would rouse suspicion, which would be greatly increased if the alleged paroxysm presented many traits like those of the paroxysms previously witnessed.

The legal consequences of somnambulism should be precisely those of insanity, which it so nearly resembles. The party should be exempt from punishment for his criminal acts, and be held amenable in damages for torts and trespasses. Somnambulism, though possibly not technical insanity, will sometimes have the same effect as excusing crime; 78 Ky. 183; 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 385; "simply because the person committing it would not know what he was doing;" Stephen, J., in 23 Q. B. D. 168. The only possible exceptions to this principle is to be found in those cases where the somnambulist, by meditating long on a criminal act while awake, is thereby led to commit it in his next paroxysm. Hoffbauer contends that, such being generally the fact, too much indulgence ought not to be shown to the criminal acts of the somnambulist. Die Psychologie, etc., c. 4, art. 2. But surely this is a rather refined and hazardous speculation, and seems like punishing men solely for bad intentions,—because the acts, though ostensibly the ground of punishment, are actually those of a person deprived of his reason. The truth is, however, that criminal acts have been committed in a state of somnambulism by persons of irreproachable character. Tayl. Med. Jur. 744. See Gray, Med. Jur. 265; Whart. & S. Med. Jur. § 492; Rush on the Mind 302; 18 Am. Journ. of Ins. 236. Tirrell's Case, Mass.

SON. An immediate male descendant. In its technical meaning in devises, this is a word of purchase; but the testator may make it a word of descent. Sometimes it is extended to more remote descendants. 2 Des. 123, n.

SON ASSAULT DEMESNE (L. Fr. his own first assault). In Pleading. A form of a plea to justify an assault and battery, by which the defendant asserts that the plaintiff committed an assault upon him and the defendant merely defended himself.

When the plea is supported by evidence, it is a sufficient justification, unless the retaliation by the defendant were excessive and bore no proportion to the necessity or to the provocation received; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 406; 4 Denio 448.

SON-IN-LAW. The husband of one's daughter.

SONTICUS (Lat.). That which tends to delay or put off; that which authorizes or excuses delay.

SOON. Within a reasonable time. 14 Kan. 232.

As Soon As. A contract to deliver cotton "as soon as it can be picked out and shipped" was held to allow the lapse of a reasonable time, and until the usual mode of transportation could be employed. Anderson; 2 Ired. L. 429. The charter of a railroad company authorized it "as soon as it conveniently can" to construct a road, with tracks, works, appendages, etc. Held, that the company was not bound to exercise its whole authority in the beginning, when the demands of business are few. Id.; 54 Pa. 107.

SORCERY. Witchcraft (q. v.). English.

SOREHON, or SORN. An arbitrary exaction, formerly existing in Scotland and Ireland. Whenever a chieftain had a mind to revel he came down among the tenants with his followers, by way of contempt called "Gillivitts," and lived on free quarters. Bell, Dict.

SORS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A lot; chance; fortune. Calvinus, Lex.; Ainsworth, Dict. Sort. Kind. The little scroll on which the thing to be drawn by lot was written. Carpentier, Gloss. A principal or capital sum; e. g. the capital of a partnership. Calvinus, Lex.

In Old English Law. A principal lent on interest, as distinguished from the interest itself. Pryn, Collect. p. 161; Cowel. See INTERESSE.

SORTITIO. A casting of lots. Sortitio iudicium, a drawing of judges, on criminal trials, similar to the modern practice of drawing a jury. 3 Bla. Com. 366.

SOUL SCOT. A mortuary, or customary gift due ministers, in many parishes of England, on the death of parishioners. It was originally voluntary and intended as annuities for ecclesiastical dues neglected to be paid in the lifetime. 2 Sharw. Bla. Com. 425*.

SOUND MIND That state of a man's mind which is adequate to reason and comes to a judgment upon ordinary subjects like other rational men. 2 Hamilton, Syst. Leg. Med. 28.

The law presumes that every person who has acquired his full age is of sound mind, and, consequently, competent to make contracts and perform all his civil duties; and he who asserts to the contrary must prove the affirmation of his position by explicit evidence, and not by conjectural proof; 2 Hagg. Eccl. 434; 3 Add. Eccl. 86; 8 Watts 661; Ray, Med. Jur. § 92; 3 Curt. Eccl. 671.

According to law, "soundness of mind" in making a will is for the testator to have such mental capacity as to enable him to know the objects of his bounty, the character and value of his estate, and to make a rational survey of his estate, and dispose of it according to a fixed purpose of his own. 109 Ky. 325, 58 S. W. 773.

SOUND MIND AND MEMORY. This phrase does not mean a mind without a flaw, or a memory without a fault. 16 Daly 510. See WILL.

SOUNDING IN DAMAGES. When an action is brought, not for the recovery of lands, goods, or sums of money (as is the case in real or mixed actions or the personal action of debt or detinue), but for damages only, as in covenant, trespass, etc., the action is said to be sounding in damages. Steph. Pl. 126.

SOUNDNESS. General health; freedom from any permanent disease. 1 Carr. & M. 291. To create unsoundness, it is requisite that the animal should not be useful for the purpose for which he is bought, and that inability to be so useful should arise from disease or accident. 2 Mood. & R. 113, 137; 9 M. & W. 670.

In the sale of animals they are sometimes warranted by the seller to be sound; and it becomes important to ascertain what is soundness. Horses affected by roaring; a temporary lameness, which rendered the horse less fit for service; 4 Camp. 271; but see 3 Esp. Cas. 573; a cough, unless proved to be of a temporary nature; 2 Chitty, Bail. 245, 416; and a nervous horse; Ry. & M. 290; have been held to be unsound. But crib-biting is not a breach of a general warranty of soundness; Holt, Cas. 630; but see 8 Gray 430; 43 Vt. 603. The true test is whether the defect complained of renders the horse less than reasonably fit for present use; 9 M. & W. 608. See Oliph.; Hanover, on Horses; Benj. Sales § 619.

An action on the case is the proper remedy for a verbal warrant of soundness; 1 H. Bl. 17; 9 B. & C. 259; 2 Dowl. & R. 10; 1 Taunt. 566; Bac. Abr. Action on the Case (E).

SOURCES OF THE LAW. The authority from which the laws derive their force. A term used to include all the reliable testimonials of what constitutes the law.

The power of making all laws is in the people or their representatives, and none can have any force whatever which are derived from any other source. But it is not required that the legislator shall expressly pass upon all laws and give the sanction of his seal, before they can have life or existence. The laws are, therefore, such as have received an express sanction, and such as derive their force and effect from implication.

The sources are—first, the constitution of the United States; secondly, the treaties made with foreign powers; thirdly, the acts of congress; fourthly, the constitutions of the respective states; fifthly, the laws made by the several state legislatures; sixthly, the laws made by inferior legislative bodies, such as the councils of municipal corporations, and the general rules made by the courts.

The constitutions of the respective states, if not opposed to the provisions of the constitution of the United States, are of binding force in the states respectively; and no act of the state legislature has any force which is in contravention of the state constitution.

The laws of the several states constitutionally made by the state legislatures have full and complete authority in the respective states.

Laws are frequently made by inferior legislative bodies which are authorized by the legislature: such are the municipal councils of cities or boroughs. Their laws are generally known by the name of ordinances, and when lawfully ordained they are binding on the people. The courts, perhaps by a necessary usurpation, have been in the practice of making general rules and orders, which sometimes affect suitors and parties as much as the most regular laws enacted by congress. These apply to all future cases. There are also rules made in particular cases as they arise, but these are rather decrees or judgments than laws.

The facit laws, which derive their authority from the consent of the people without any legislative enactment, may be subdivided into—

The common law, which is derived from two sources: the common law of England, and the practice and decisions of our own courts. In some states it has been enacted that the common law of England shall be the law, except where the same is inconsistent with our constitutions and laws. See LAW.

Customs which have been generally adopted by the people have the force of law.

The principles of Roman law. See CIVIL LAW. The Canon law, which was adopted by the ecclesiastical courts, figures in our laws respecting marriage, divorces, wills and testaments, executors and administrators, and many other subjects.

The jurisprudence, or decisions of the various courts, have contributed their full share of what makes the law. These decisions are made by following precedents, by borrowing from the sources already mentioned, and sometimes by the less excusable disposition of the judges to legislate on the bench.

The monument where the common law is to be found are the records, reports of cases adjudicated by the courts, and the treatises of learned men. The books of reports are the best proof of what is the common law; but, owing to the difficulty of finding out any systematic arrangement, recourse is had to treatises upon the various branches of the law. The records, owing to their being kept in one particular place and therefore not generally accessible, are seldom used.

See LAW; PRECEDENT; JUDGE-MADE LAW; JUDICIAL POWER; LEGISLATIVE POWER; SYSTEMS OF LAW; CONSTITUTIONAL; TREATY; STATUTE; COMMON LAW; CIVIL LAW; PRIZE COURT.

SOUS SEING PRIVE. In Louisiana. An act or contract evidenced by writing under the private signature of the parties to it. The term is used in opposition to the authentic act, which is an agreement entered into in the presence of a notary or other public officer.

SOUTH CAROLINA. One of the original thirteen United States.

This state was originally part of the British province of Carolina, then comprehending both North Carolina and South Carolina. That province was granted by Charles II. by charter issued to eight lord proprietors, in 1663, and amended in 1665 so as to extend it between twenty-nine and thirty-six degrees thirty minutes, north latitude, drawn from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean. The first permanent settlement in South Carolina was effected in 1670 by emigrants from England who landed at Beaufort, then Port Royal, in the same year and removed to the point on the river Ashley nearly opposite the present site of Charleston; but, abandoning this position, they again removed, in 1680, to Oysterville, at the confluence of the Ashley and Cooper, where they founded Charleston.

In 1719, the colonial legislature disowned the proprietary government and threw the colony into the hands of the king, who, accordingly, assumed the control of it, but not until 1729 was the charter surrendered. In that year the shares of seven out of the eight lord proprietors were ceded. The eighth share, which belonged to the family of Lord Granville, formerly Cartaret, was retained, and laid off in North Carolina,—which was about the same time fully divided from South Carolina.

In 1772, that part of South Carolina lying west of the river Savannah was granted by the crown to the Georgia Company, under Oglethorpe. Thus South Carolina was reduced in extent, and, in consequence of subsequent arrangements, made with Georgia in 1777 in the treaty of Beaufort, and with North Carolina in the early part of the present century, the present boundaries were established.

On March 26, 1778, the first constitution was adopted,—the earliest it is believed, of the American constitutions.

SOUTH DAKOTA. One of the states of the United States.

It was admitted to the Union under the act of Feb. 22, 1889, which included also North Dakota, Montana, and Washington, which together constituted the territories of Dakota, Montana, and Washington. See NORTH DAKOTA.

SOVEREIGN. A chief ruler with supreme power; a king or other ruler with limited power. An action is not maintainable against a foreign sovereign. 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 199.

Courts of England will take judicial notice of the status of a foreign sovereign and will not take jurisdiction over him, unless he voluntarily submits to it; [1894] 1 Q. B. 149.

A foreign sovereign brought suit to restrain the defendants from using a fund in a certain way, and the defendants set up a claim for damages; it was held that the court had no jurisdiction over such claim; [1893] 1 Ch. 190.

"When a foreign sovereign comes into court for the purpose of obtaining a remedy, then, by way of defence to that proceeding (by counter-claim, if necessary), to the extent of defeating that claim, the person sued may file a cross claim . . . for the purpose of enabling complete justice to be done between them." 29 W. R. 127, per James, L. J.

It is a general rule that the sovereign cannot be sued in his own court without his consent; and hence no direct judgment can be rendered against him therein for costs, except in the manner and on the condition he has prescribed: 40 La. Ann. 856. See STATE.

In English Law. A gold coin of Great Britain, of the value of a pound sterling.

SOVEREIGN DE JURE OR DE FACTO. Who is sovereign de jure or de facto of territory is not a judicial, but a political question, the determination of which by the legislative and executive departments of any government conclusively binds the judges as well as all other officers, citizens and subjects of that government. 205 U. S. 257.

SOVEREIGN POWER. See SOVEREIGNTY. The sovereign or supreme power in every state resides in the people. Blackstone supposes the jura summi imperii, or the right of sovereignty, to reside in those hands in which the exercise of the power of making laws is placed. Our simple and more reasonable idea is that the government is a mere agency established by the people for the exercise of those powers which reside in them. The powers of government are not, in strictness, granted, but delegated powers. They are then trust powers, and may be revoked. It results that no portion of sovereignty resides in government. Anderson; 1 Sharsw. Bl. Com. 49.

SOVEREIGN STATE. One which governs itself independently of any foreign power. See SOVEREIGNTY; STATE.

SOVEREIGNTY. The union and exercise of all human power possessed in a state; it is a combination of all power; it is the power to do everything in a state without accountability,—to make laws, to execute and to apply them, to impose and collect taxes and levy contributions, to make war or peace, to form treaties of alliance or of commerce with foreign nations, and the like. Story, Const. § 207.

Abstractly, sovereignty resides in the body of the nation and belongs to the people. But these powers are generally exercised by delegation.

When analyzed, sovereignty is naturally divided into three great powers: namely, the legislative, the executive, and the judiciary; the first is the power to make new laws and to collect and repeal the old; the second is the power to execute the laws, both at home and abroad; and the last is the power to apply the laws to particular facts, to judge the disputes which arise among the citizens, and to punish crimes. See EXECUTIVE POWER; LEGISLATIVE POWER; JUDICIAL POWER.

Strictly speaking, in our republican forms of government the absolute sovereignty of the nation is in the people of the nation; and the residuary sovereignty of each state, not granted to any of its public functionaries, is in the people of the state; 2 Dall. 471.

In international law a state is considered sovereign when it is organized for political purposes and permanently occupies a fixed territory. It must have an organized government capable of enforcing law and be free from all external control. A wandering tribe of savages, or nomads, or people united merely for commercial purposes or under control of another state cannot be considered as a sovereign state. Until a state becomes sovereign in the sense above described, it is not subject to international law. The states of the American Union are each, in a certain sense, sovereign in their domestic concerns, but not in international law, and Norway is an instance of a community not sovereign in international law because bound in a union with Sweden. The fact of sovereignty is usually established by general recognition of other states, and, until such recognition is universal, no community can be considered as sovereign; Snow, Int. Law 10. See INTERNATIONAL LAW.

Every sovereign state is bound to respect the independence of every other sovereign state, and the courts of one country will not sit in judgment on the acts of the government of another, done within its own territory. 108 U. S. 250.

"The transactions of independent states between each other are governed by other laws than those which municipal courts administer; such courts have neither the means of deciding what is right, nor the power of enforcing any decision which they may make." 13 Moore, P. C. 75. And the same is the case with their dealings with the subjects of other states; Poll. Torts 103. See JURISDICTION, Between States.

Public agents, military or civil, or foreign governments, whether such governments be de jure or de facto, cannot be held responsible in any courts of the United States for things done in their own states in the exercise of the sovereignty thereof, in pursuance of the directions of their governments. 65 Fed. Rep. 577. See TORT.

As to the jurisdiction of English courts over foreign subjects and ambassadors, see 20 Law Mag. & Rev. 23.

A judgment for plaintiffs in an action against army officers in possession of land used as a fort in which the plaintiff claimed a one-third interest, was a judgment directly against the United States and will be set aside; 102 U. S. 255, reversing 8 Tex. Civ. App. 679.

SOWMING AND ROWMING. The apportioning or placing of cattle on a common, according to the rights of the different persons interested. See Bell, Dict.

SOWNE. A corruption of the French souvenir, remembered. Estreats that soune are such as the sheriff may gather. Cowel. See ESTREATS.

SPADONES (Lat.). In Civil Law. Those who, on account of their temperament or some accident they have suffered, are unable to procreate. Inst. 1. 11. 9; Dig. 1. 7. 2. 1. And see IMPOTENCE.

SPARSIM (Lat.). Here and there; a scattered manner; sparsely; dispersedly. It is sometimes used in law: for example, the plaintiff may recover the place wasted, not only where the injury has been total, but where trees growing sparsim in a close are cut. Bac. Abr. Waste (M); Brownl. 240.

SPEAKER. The title of the presiding officer of the house of representatives of the United States. The position is one of great importance, as the speaker appoints the standing committees of the house. The presiding officer of either branch of the state legislature generally is called the speaker.

Both houses of parliament are presided over by a speaker. That of the house of lords is commonly the lord chancellor, or lord keeper of the great seal, though the latter office is practically merged in that of lord chancellor. In the commons the speaker never votes, except when the votes are equal; in the lords he has a vote with the rest of the house; see May, P. L. ch. 7. See QUORUM; FLOOR-CLOUTON; MacConochie, Congressional Committees; Follett, The Speaker.

SPEAKING DEMURRER. In Pleading. One which alleges new matter in addition to that contained in the bill as a cause for demurrer. 4 Bro. C. C. 254; 2 Ves. 83; 4 Paige, Ch. 374; 85 Ala. 589.

SPEAKING WITH PROSECUTOR. A kind of imparlance, allowed in English practice, where the court permits a defendant convicted of a misdemeanor to speak with the prosecutor before judgment is pronounced; if the prosecutor declares himself satisfied, the court may inflict a trivial punishment. 4 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 280.

SPECIAL. That which relates to a particular species or kind; opposed to general: as, special verdict and general verdict; special imparlance and general imparlance; special jury, or one selected for a particular case, and general jury; special issue and general issue, etc.

The meaning of special, as used in a constitutional provision authorizing the legislature to confer jurisdiction in special cases, has been the subject of much discussion in the court of appeals of the state of New York. See 12 N. Y. 593; 18 id. 57.

SPECIAL. Metallic money issued by public authority. See also IN SPECIE.

This term is used in contradistinction to paper money, which in some countries is issued by the government, and is a mere engagement which represents specie.

In cases of salvage, specie on board is treated like any other cargo; 1 Pet. Adm. 410; 4 L. T. Rep. n. 254; 80 Fed. Rep. (C. C. A.) 340. See 15 Am. L. Rev. 416; SALVAGE.

SPECIAL ACCEPTANCE. The qualified acceptance of a bill of exchange, as payable at a particular place, and there only. Byles, Bills, 15th ed. 260, 1891. See ACCEPTANCE.

SPECIAL ACT. See STATUTE.

SPECIAL AGENT. One authorized to do one or two special things. Ross, Cont. 44. One appointed only for a particular purpose, and vested with limited powers. Chit. Cont. 285; 94 Ala. 346.

It is a general rule that he who is invested with a special authority must act within the bounds of his authority, and he cannot bind his principal beyond what he is authorized to do; 15 Johns. 44; 1 Wash. C. C. 174; Story, Ag. 17. See AGENT.

SPECIAL APPEARANCE. See COMMON APPEARANCE.

SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS. They differ from general taxation, in that they are made upon the assumption that a portion of the community is to be specially and peculiarly benefited in the enhancement of the value of property peculiarly situated as regards a contemplated expenditure of public funds. 85 Neb. 133.

SPECIAL ASSUMPSIT. An action of assumpsit brought on a special contract, which the plaintiff declares upon setting out its particular language or its legal effect.

It is distinguished from a general assumpsit, where the plaintiff, instead of setting out the particular language or effect of the original contract, declares as for a debt arising out of the execution of the contract, where that constitutes the debt. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3426.

SPECIAL BAIL. See BAIL.

SPECIAL BAILIFF. A bound bailiff (q. v.).

SPECIAL BASTARD. One whose parents afterwards intermarry. 3 Bla. Com. 335.

SPECIAL CARRIER. See PRIVATE CARRIER.

SPECIAL CASE. See AGREED CASE; CASE STATED.

SPECIAL CHARGE. A charge to a jury made, at the request of counsel for a party, upon one or more points in the case. Anderson. See CHARGE; GENERAL CHARGE.

SPECIAL COMMISSION. An extraordinary commission of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, issued by the crown to the judges when it is necessary that offences should be immediately tried and punished. Whart. Law Lex.

SPECIAL CONSTABLE. One who has been appointed a constable for a particular occasion, as in the case of an actual tumult or a riot, or for the purpose of serving a particular process.

SPECIAL COUNT. As opposed to the common counts, in pleading, a special count is a statement of the actual facts of the particular case.

SPECIAL CUSTOM. A particular or local custom. 28 Me. 95. See CUSTOM.

SPECIAL DAMAGES. See MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

SPECIAL DEMURRER. See DEMURRER.

SPECIAL DEPOSIT. A deposit made of a particular thing with the depository: it is distinguished from an irregular deposit.

A deposit made with the understanding that the identical money deposited shall be returned to the depositor. 48 Ill. App. 840.

When a thing has been specially deposited with a depository, the title to it remains with the depositor, and if it should be lost the loss will fall upon him. When, on the contrary, the deposit is irregular, as where money is deposited in a bank, the title to which is transferred to the bank, if it be lost, the loss will be borne by the bank. This will result from the same principle: the loss will fall in both instances, on the owner of the thing, according to the rule res perit domino. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1054; Edw. Bailm. 48; BAILMENT: DEPOSIT: IRREGULAR DEPOSIT.

SPECIAL ELECTION. An election for a particular emergency; out of the regular course, as one held to fill a vacancy caused by death. Abbott. See ELECTION; GENERAL ELECTION.

SPECIAL ERRORS. Special pleas in error are those which assign for error matters in confession and avoidance, as a release of errors, the act of limitations, and the like, to which the plaintiff in error may reply or demur. See PLEA.

SPECIAL EXAMINER. An examiner appointed by a court of equity in a particular case. See EXAMINERS IN CHANCERY.

Any fit person may be a special examiner. The taking of testimony by a special examiner is conducted in the same manner as before a standing examiner in chancery. The examination should take place in the presence of the parties and their attorneys; the testimony is, under the English chancery practice, taken in the narrative form, and the examiner may take down the questions and answers if he thinks fit; he cannot pass upon the materiality or relevancy of any question. When there is an objection, it should be noted, and the examiner will state his opinion thereon to the attorney and refer to it in the depositions. The depositions should not be prepared beforehand; 35 Vt. 476. Formerly it was considered that the whole of the deposition should be written down by the examiner, with his own hand; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. *906; but such is not now the usual practice. An examiner is a ministerial officer and has no power to lay down rules as to the most convenient time of taking examinations; L. R. 16 Eq. 102. He may exclude the public from the hearings; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. *906. Subpoenas may issue to bring witnesses before him. If an examiner in England dies, his successor may sign the deposition; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. *910. If the witness refuse to sign his deposition, the examiner signs it. See EXAMINERS IN CHANCERY.

SPECIAL EXECUTION. A copy of a judgment with a direction to the sheriff indorsed thereon to execute it. 47 Minn. 581.

SPECIAL FINDING. Where a jury find specially a particular fact, presumably material to the general question before them, but which does not involve the whole of that question. Moz. & W. The special findings referred to in the Revised Statutes, § 700, is not a report of the evidence, but it must be like the special verdict of a jury, a finding of the ultimate facts which the evidence establishes; 19 U. S. App. 667.

SPECIAL GRAVITY. The ratio of the weight of a body to the weight of an equal volume of some other body, taken as the standard or unit. This standard is usually water for liquids and solids, and air for gases. 6 U. S. App. 58.

SPECIAL IMPARLANCE. In Pleading. An imparlance which contains the clause, "saving to himself all advantages and exceptions, as well to the writ as to the declaration aforesaid." 2 Chitty, Pl. 407. See IMPARLANCE.

SPECIAL INDORSEMENT. An indorsement in full, which, besides the signature of the indorser, expresses in whose favor the indorsement is made; thus "Pay C D. or order, A B." See Byles, Bills, 15th ed. 172; Tiedm. Com. Paper 266.

In English practice, under the Judicature Act of 1875, a special indorsement on a writ of summons is one which may be made in all cases where a definite sum of money is claimed. When the writ is thus indorsed and the defendant does not appear within the time appointed, the plaintiff may then sign final judgment for any sum not exceeding that indorsed on the writ. See 3 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 630; Lush. Pr. 306. See INDORSEMENT.

SPECIAL INJUNCTION. An injunction obtained only on motion, usually with notice to the other party. It is applied for sometimes on affidavit before answer, and frequently upon merits disclosed in the defendant's answer. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3758. See INJUNCTION.

SPECIAL ISSUE. In Pleading. A plea to the action which denies some particular material allegation, which is in effect a denial of the entire right of action. It differs from the general issue which traverses or denies the whole declaration or indictment. Gould, Pl. c. 2, § 38. See GENERAL ISSUE; ISSUE.

SPECIAL JURY. One selected in a particular way by the parties. See JURY.

SPECIAL LAWS. See STATUTE; GENERAL LAWS.

SPECIAL LEGISLATION. See GENERAL LAWS; STATUTE.

SPECIAL LICENSE. One granted by the Archbishop of Canterbury to authorize a marriage at any time or place. 2 Steph. Com. 247.

SPECIAL MATTER. Under a plea of the general issue, a defendant may, instead of pleading specially, give the plaintiff notice, that on the trial he will give some special matter, of such and such a nature, in evidence.

Such notice is not required in an action on a sealed instrument where consideration need not be averred in the declaration, except when a failure of consideration is set up as an equitable defence.

Notice of special matter is required by R. S. § 4920 in actions at law on letters patent, in some cases. It must be given thirty days "before trial," which is said to be before the opening of the term. See 8 Rob. Pat. § 1019.

See PLEA; PLEADING.

SPECIAL NON EST FACTUM. The name of a plea by which the defendant says that the deed which he has executed is not his own or binding upon him, because of some circumstance which shows that it was not intended to be his deed, or because it was not binding upon him for some lawful reason.

SPECIAL OCCUPANT. When an estate is granted to a man and his heirs during the life of certain que vie, and the grantee die without alienation, and while the life for which he held continues, the heir will succeed, and is called a special occupant. 2 Bla. Com. 259. In the United States the statute provisions of the different states vary considerably upon this subject. In New York and New Jersey, special occupancy is abolished. Virginia, and probably Maryland, follow the English statutes. In Massachusetts and other states, where the real and personal estates of intestates are distributed in the same way and manner, the question does not seem to be material; 4 Kent 27.

SPECIAL ORDERS. See RULE OF COURT.

SPECIAL OWNER. See OWNER.

SPECIAL PAPER. A list kept in the courts of common law, and afterwards in the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court, in which list special cases, etc., to be argued are set down. Whart. Law Lex.

SPECIAL PARTNER. A partner with a limited or restricted responsibility; a limited partner. Baldwin; 3 Kent's Com. 34. There is perhaps some distinction between a special partner and special partnership. Special partner usually means the partner who, under laws authorizing formation of limited partnerships, puts in a definite capital, assumes no part (or only such as the statute permits) in the business management, and is liable only to loss of the capital contributed. But the partnership thus formed is commonly called limited partnership; and special partnership may well mean one formed for a single branch of business or subject. Abbott. See PARTNERSHIP.

SPECIAL PARTNERSHIP. See PARTNERSHIP; SPECIAL PARTNER.

SPECIAL PLEA IN BAR. See PLEA.

SPECIAL PLEADER. In English Practice. A lawyer whose professional occupation is to give verbal or written opinions upon statements submitted to him, either in writing or verbally, and to draw pleadings, civil or criminal, and such practical proceedings as may be out of the general course. 2 Chitty, Pr. 42.

Special pleaders are not necessarily at the bar; but those that are not are required to take out annual certificates under stat. 33 & 34 Vict. c. 97, ss. 60, 63; Moz. & W.

SPECIAL PLEADING. The allegation of special or new matter to avoid the effect of the previous allegations of the opposite party, as distinguished from a direct denial of matter previously alleged on the opposite side. Gould, Pl. c. 1, § 18; 3 Wheat. 246; Com. Dig. Pleading (F 15); Steph. Pl., And. ed. 240, n. See PLEADING, SPECIAL.

SPECIAL POWER. See POWER.

SPECIAL PROPERTY. That property in a thing which gives a qualified or limited right. See PROPERTY.

SPECIAL REQUEST. A request actually made, at a particular time and place; this term is used in contradistinction to a general request, which need not state the time when nor place where made. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2843.

SPECIAL RULE. See RULE OF COURT.

SPECIAL SESSIONS. See SESSIONS OF THE PEACE.

SPECIAL TAIL. See ESTATE TAIL.

SPECIAL TERM OR TERMS. See TERM.

SPECIAL TRAVERSE. See TRAVERSE.

SPECIAL TRUST. A special trust is one where a trustee is interposed for the execution of some purpose particularly pointed out, and is not, as in case of a simple trust, a mere passive depository of the estate, but is required to exert himself actively in the execution of the settlor's intention: as, where a conveyance is made to trustees upon trust to reconvey, or to sell for the payment of debts. Lew. Tr. 3, 16; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1896. See TRUST.

SPECIAL VERDICT. In Practice. A special verdict is one by which the facts of the case are put on the record, and the law is submitted to the judges. See VERDICT; Bac. Abr. Verdict (D).

See AGREED CASE; CASE STATED.

SPECIALTY. A writing sealed and delivered, containing some agreement or promise. 33 & R. 503; 1 P. Wms. 180. A writing sealed and delivered, which is given as a security for the payment of a debt, in which such debt is particularly specified. Bac. Abr. Obligation (A).

Although in the body of the writing it is not said that the parties have set their hands and seals, yet if the instrument be really sealed it is a specialty, and if it be not sealed it is not a specialty, although the parties in the body of the writing make mention of a seal. 2 S. & R. 504; 2 Co. 5 a; Perkins § 120. See BOND; DEBT; Obligation; SEAL.

SPECIFIC. Having a certain form or designation; particular; precise.

SPECIFIC GRAVITY. See SPECIAL GRAVITY.

SPECIFIC LEGACY. See LEGACY.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE. The actual performance of a contract by the party bound to fulfill it. As the exact fulfillment of an agreement is not always practicable, the phrase may mean, in a given case, not literal, but substantial performance. Waterm. Spec. Perf. § 1.

Many contracts are entered into by parties to fulfill certain things, and then the contracting parties neglect or refuse to fulfill their engagements. In such cases the party aggrieved has generally a remedy at law, and he may recover damages for the breach of the contract; but in many cases the recovery of damages is an inadequate remedy, and the party seeks to recover a specific performance of the agreement.

It is a general rule that courts of equity will entertain jurisdiction for a specific performance of agreements, whenever courts of law can give but an inadequate remedy; and it is immaterial whether the subject relate to real or personal estate; 2 Story, Eq. § 717; Pom. Contr. 28, 34; 1 S. & S. 607; 1 P. Wms. 570; 1 Sch. & L. 553; 84 Me. 195. But the rule is confined to cases where courts of law cannot give an adequate remedy; 1 Grant, Cas. 93; 18 Ga. 473; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 718; if there is an adequate legal remedy, the court will refuse specific performance, unless under all the circumstances it would be inequitable and unjust to do so; 84 Ky. 157; 30 W. Va. 790; and a decree is to be granted or refused in the discretion of the court; 38 N. H. 400; 2 La. 128; 9 Ohio St. 511; 8 Wisc. 892; 5 Harring. 74; Hempet. 245; 2 Jones, Eq. 267; 6 Ind. 259; 51 Fed. Rep. 680; 152 Pa. 529. Specific performance is not of absolute right, but one which rests entirely in judicial discretion; exercised according to the settled principles of equity and with reference to the facts of the particular case, and not arbitrarily or capriciously; 144 U. S. 224; 128 id. 433; 127 id. 686; 82 Va. 269; 99 N. C. 215; 23 Neb. 726.

A vendor of real estate may either sue at law for the purchase-money or resort to equity for specific performance; 10 U. S. App. 601.

As the doctrine of a specific performance in equity arises from the occasional inadequacy of the remedy at law upon a violated contract, it follows that the contract must be such a one as is binding at law; 35 Ala. n. s. 449; 37 U. S. App. 165; and where the existence of a contract is in doubt, equity will not, as a rule, decree specific performance, especially when it appears that the property in question was rapidly rising in value; 158 U. S. 216; and it must be executory, certain in its terms, and fair in all its parts. It must also be founded upon a valuable consideration, and its performance in specie must be practicable and necessary; and, if it be one of the contracts which is embraced in the statute of frauds, it must be evidenced in writing;

2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 751; Adams, Eq. 77; Bush, Eq. 80. The first requisite is that the contract must be founded upon a valuable consideration; 19 Ark. 51; either in the way of benefit bestowed or of disadvantage sustained by the party in whose favor it is sought to be enforced; 1 Beasl. Ch. 498; and this consideration must be proved even though the contract be under seal; 12 Ind. 589; 14 La. Ann. 606; 17 Tex. 397; a promise against a promise is not such a consideration as will support a decree of specific performance, nor does the presence of seals import such a consideration; 9 Colo. App. 259. The consideration must be strictly a valuable one, and not one merely arising from a moral duty or affection, as towards a wife and children; although it need not necessarily be an adequate one; Adams, Eq. 78. See 6 Ia. 279; 6 Mich. 364.

The second requisite is that the mutual enforcement of the contract must be practicable; for if this cannot be judicially secured on both sides, it ought not to be compelled against either party. Among the cases which the court deems impracticable is that of a covenant by a husband to convey his wife's land, because this cannot be effectuated without danger of infringing upon that freedom of will which the policy of the law allows the wife in the alienation of her real estate; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 731; 63 Pa. 335; 3 Bush 694. See 3 Wash. St. 554. To justify a decree, the proof must be clear both as to the existence of the agreement and the terms. Equity will not enforce a contract in favor of an employer as against an employee which is against conscience; 149 U. S. 315. And the actual performance of personal services by an employee will not be enforced in equity; 24 U. S. App. 239. And the contract must be mutual at the time it is entered into; 29 W. Va. 577; and specific performance of a contract will not be enforced, unless the remedy as well as the obligation is mutual, and alike attainable by both parties to the agreement; 83 Ala. 498; 73 Cal. 415.

The third requisite is that the enforcement in specie must be necessary; that is, it must be really important to the plaintiff, and not oppressive to the defendant; 1 Beasl. Ch. 497. However strong, clear, and emphatic a contract may be, and however plain the right at law, specific performance will not be decreed if it would cause a result harsh, inequitable, or contrary to good conscience; 81 Me. 365; see 144 U. S. 224; and the court is not bound to shut its eyes to the evident character of the transaction; it will never lend its aid to carry out an unconscionable bargain, but will leave a party to his remedy at law; 135 U. S. 457. Specific performance was refused of a contract for an unexpired term of years by which one party agreed to perform continuous mechanical services (in the generation of electricity), demanding the highest degree of skill, and the other to maintain costly machinery and the daily use of cars moved by electricity on the line of its railway; 109 Ala. 190. Mere inadequacy of consideration is not necessarily a bar to a specific performance of a contract; but if it be so great as to induce the suspicion of fraud or imposition, the court of equity will refuse its aid to the party seeking to enforce, and leave him to his remedy at law; 2 Jones, Eq. 267. This is upon the ground that the specific enforcement of the contract would be oppressive to the defendant. The court will equally withhold its aid where such enforcement is not really important to the plaintiff, as it will not be in any case where the damages which he may recover at law will answer his purpose as well as the possession of the thing which was contracted to be conveyed to him; Adams, Eq. 88. As a general rule, a contract to convey real estate will be specifically enforced; unless the title thereto is not marketable; 15 Cent. L. J. 8; 40 Minn. 312; 40 La. Ann. 845; while one for the transfer of personal chattels will be ordinarily denied any relief in equity; Waterm. Spec. Perf. § 16; 40 Miss. 119. An instrument defective as a deed will not be enforced as a contract to convey, if no valuable consideration passed between the parties; 49 N. J. Eq. 210. But even in the case of personal property, if the plaintiff has not an adequate remedy at law, equity will take jurisdiction; and more willingly in America than in England; Story, Eq. Jur. § 724; Blisp. Eq. 368. When goods were sold and there were no other similar goods in the market, a disposal of them by the seller has been enjoined; 33 L. J. Q. B. 335. Equity will decree the specific delivery of goods of a peculiar value; as heirlooms; 10 Ves. 139; an ancient silver altar; 3 P. Wms. 800; the celebrated Fusey horn; 1 Vern. 273; the decorations of a lodge of Freemasons; 6 Ves. 773; a faithful family slave; 3 Murphy 74. Contracts for the sale of stock will not, usually, be enforced, but the rule has been departed from; 23 Cal. 390; L. R. 3 Ch. 388; 1 S. & S. 174. A covenant for a renewal of a lease, which is indefinite as to the length of the term and rental to be paid, cannot be enforced specifically; 65 Hun 39; nor will a contract which is perpetual; 136 U. S. 393. A right to use a right of way under a traffic agreement between two railroad companies will be enforced in equity; 138 U. S. 1; and a contract between railroad companies for the joint use of a bridge and seven miles of track; 51 Fed. Rep. 309; or a contract by which one had acquired the right to use a part of the other party's railroad line for 999 years; 10 U. S. App. 98. Option contracts for the purchase or sale of land may be enforced; 12 U. S. App. 274; and the rule of non-enforcement for want of mutuality has no application to such an option contract; id. Where time is of the essence of a contract, specific performance will not be decreed after the lapse of the time specified; but it is otherwise when time is not of the essence of the contract; 23 U. S. App. 401.

A court of equity will not refuse to enforce a contract specifically which was fair when made, by reason of the increase in value of the subject-matter; 145 U. S. 459. Where the vendee bought property for $300, and paid one dollar down and then did nothing for nine years, and it appeared that the property had reached a value of $15,000, specific performance was refused; 155 U. S. 550.

Equity will enforce a contract for the exclusive rights under letters patent, and will join the breach of a negative covenant; 23 Fed. Rep. 86; 147 Mass. 185; 4 Del. Ch. 337; 34 Conn. 325. See 149 U. S. 315; including a contract to assign all future inventions relating to a certain art; 122 Pa. 392; although the agreement be oral; 73 Ia. 387; but not if the contract be unconscionable; 84 Fed. Rep. 577.

When the statute of frauds requires that a contract shall be evidenced in writing, that will be a fourth requisite to the specific execution of it. In such case the contract must be in writing and certain in its terms; but it will not matter in what form the instrument may be, for it will be enforced even if it appear only in the consideration of a bond secured by a penalty; 6 Gray 25; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 751. The specific performance of a parol contract to convey land cannot be enforced if defendant urges the statute of frauds; 99 N. C. 85.

Equity will not decree specific performance of an agreement to convey property which has no existence, or to which the defendant has no title; 128 U. S. 671. If it appear that the want of title was known to the plaintiff when he began suit, the bill will not be retained for the assessment of damages, but the plaintiff will be left to his remedy at law; id.

In applying the equity of specific performance to real estate, there are some modifications of legal rules, which at first sight appear inconsistent with them and repugnant to the maxim that equity follows the law. The modifications here referred to are those of enforcing parol contracts relating to land, on the ground that they have been already performed in part; of allowing time to make out a title beyond the day which the contract specifies; and of allowing a conveyance with compensation for defects; Adams, Eq. 55; Bishp. Eq. 364.

The principle upon which it is held that part-performance of a contract will in equity take a case out of the operation of the statute of frauds, is that it would be a fraud upon the opposite party if the agreement were not carried into complete execution; Pom. Contr. 103; 11 Cal. 28; 30 Barb. 633; 24 Ga. 402; 28 Mo. 134; 40 Me. 94. The act which is alleged to be part-performance must be done in pursuance of the contract and with the assent of the defendant. What will be a sufficient part-performance must depend on circumstances. The taking possession of the land and making improvements thereon will answer; 10 Cal. 136; 8 Mich. 463; 6 Ia. 279; 30 Vt. 516; 5 R. I. 149; 33 N. H. 32; 4 Wisc. 79; 76 Ia. 565; 82 Va. 209; though the payment of a part or even the whole of the purchase-money will not; 14 Tex. 373; 22 Ill. 643; 4 Kent 451; 103 Mass. 404; 68 N. Y. 499. See, however, 1 Harr. Del. 532; 20 Md. 37. If the purchaser have entered and made improvements upon the land, and the vendor protect himself from a specific performance by taking advantage of the statute, the plaintiff shall be entitled to a decree for the value of his improvements; 14 Tex. 331; 1 D. & B. 9. The doctrine of part-performance is not recognized in some of the states; 37 Mo. 388; 40 Me. 187; 8 Cush. 223; 13 Sm. & M. 93.

Where several parcels of land are included in one parol contract of sale, part payment of the purchase-money and the delivery of one of those parcels is sufficient to enable the purchaser to enforce specific performance of the contract as to all the parcels; 95 U. S. 96.

The doctrine of allowing time to make out a title beyond the day which the contract specifies, and which is embodied in the maxim that time is not of the essence of a contract in equity, has no doubt been generally adopted in the United States; 1 D. & B. Eq. 237; 3 Jones, Eq. 84, 240; 2 McLean 495; 57 Ill. 480. But to entitle the purchaser to a specific performance he must show good faith and a reasonable diligence; 4 Ired. Eq. 386; 3 Jones, Eq. 831. If during the vendor's delay there has been a material change of circumstances affecting the rights and interests of the parties, equity will not relieve; 15 Pa. 429.

The third equity, to wit, that of allowing a conveyance with compensation for defects, applies where a contract has been made for the sale of an estate, which cannot be literally performed in toto, either by reason of an unexpected failure in the title to part of the estate; 34 Ala. N. S. 633; 1 Hend 251; 6 Wisc. 127; or of inaccuracy in the terms of the description, or of diminution in value by a liability to charge upon it. In any such case, the court of equity will enforce a specific performance, allowing a just compensation for defects, whenever it can do so consistently with the principle of doing exact justice between the parties; Adams, Eq. 89. This doctrine has also been adopted in the United States. See 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 704; 1 Ired. Eq. 299; 1 Head 251; 70 Cal. 299.

A contract for the sale of land entered into under the belief by both parties that the vendor has title, when in fact he has none, will not be specifically enforced in equity; 140 Ill. 583. The fact that vendor's title is disputed by a third person gives him no right to refuse to convey such title as he has; and the fact will not prevent a decree for specific performance; 128 Ill. 540.

When a vendor files a bill he must show a tender of the title and an offer to perform; 40 Ill. 113; 39 Mich. 175; that is a tender of a deed; 63 Ind. 213; Tiedm. Eq. Jur. 499; but it has been held that an offer of a deed in the bill is enough; 63 N. Y. 261. See 295; 52 N. W. Rep. (S. Dak.) 586. Where a vendor announces that he will not comply with his contract, the vendor need not tender a deed before suing for specific performance; 114 Ill. 388. See PERFORMANCE. And a vendee must show a tender of the purchase-money; 67 Pa. 24; 21 Gratt. 29; 142 Ill. 258. And such tender must not be delayed till circumstances have changed; 4 Erewst. 49. The vendee need not tender the purchase-money where the vendor refuses to consider the question of sale under the contract and denies any obligation thereunder; 87 Tenn. 4.

A decree for specific performance will not be made against a vendor whose wife refuses to join in the conveyance; 75 Pa. 141.

In a suit for specific performance, the plaintiff must show that he has performed, or was ready to perform, his part of the contract, and that he has not been guilty of laches or unreasonable delay, and, where the proof leaves the case doubtful, the plaintiff is not entitled to a decree; 76 Md. 229. See 48 N. J. Eq. 638; 140 Ill. 583. Specific performance will not be decreed after an unreasonable delay; 127 U. S. 668; or where a party has been backward in claiming the relief, and has held off until circumstances have changed, so as to give him an opportunity to enforce or abandon the contract, as events might prove most advantageous; 88 Va. 75; 35 Fed. Rep. 174; 76 Cal. 590.

Specific performance of a contract to leave property by will will not be decreed, where the contract is made by a mere donee of a testamentary power of appointment; [1892] 3 Ch. 510.

Specific performance should never be granted unless the terms of the agreement sought to be enforced are clearly proved, or where it is left in doubt whether the party against whom the relief is asked in fact made such an agreement; 128 U. S. 438; 127 id. 663; and performance will not be decreed unless the proof is clear and satisfactory, both as to the existence of the agreement and as to its terms; 149 U. S. 315.

A feme covert cannot maintain a bill for specific performance; 4 Brewst. 49. A decree for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of a real estate is granted or withheld according as equity and justice seems to demand; 155 U. S. 550. See, generally, Fry; Waterman, on Specific Performance.

SPECIFIC RELIEF. See RELIEF.

SPECIFICATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. The process by which, from material either of one kind or different kinds, either belonging to the person using them or to another, a new form or thing is created; as, if from gold or silver a cup be made, or from grapes wine. Calvinus, Lex. Whether the property in the new article was in the owner of the materials or in him who effected the change was a matter of contest between the two great sects of Roman lawyers. Stair, Inst. p. 204, § 41; Mackelday, Civ. Law § 241.

SPECIFICATION. A particular and detailed account of a thing. When used in the patent law without the word claim, it means the description and claims. 6 Fed. Rep. 611. See PATENT.

In Military Law. The clear and particular description of the charges preferred against a person accused of a military offence. Tytler, Courts-Mar. 100.

SPECULATION. The hope or desire of making a profit by the purchase and resale of a thing. Pardessus, Droit Com. n. 12. The profit so made.

SPEECH. A formal discourse in public. The liberty of speech is guaranteed to members of the legislature, in debate, and to counsel in court.

The reduction of a speech to writing and its publication is a libel if the matter contained in it is libellous; and the repetition of it upon occasions not warranted by law, when the matter is slanderous, will be slander; and the character of the speaker will be no protection to him from an action;

1 Maule & S. 273; 1 Esp. 220. See DEBATE; LIBERTY OF SPEECH; SLANDER; LIBEL.

SPEED. The test of safe speed is whether it is such as allows the vessel to comply with the duty imposed on her and to avoid collision with other vessels in the situations in which she may reasonably expect to find them. 8 U. S. App. 9.

In a fog a vessel is bound to observe unusual caution and to maintain only such rate of speed as will enable her to come to a standstill by reversing her engines at full speed, before she shall collide with a vessel which she may see; 8 U. S. App. 312.

A vessel running fifteen knots an hour, when she strikes a fog bank, has not complied with the statutory requirements to go at moderate speed; 24 U. S. App. 164. See MODERATE SPEED.

SPEEDY TRIAL. The right to a speedy trial in all criminal prosecutions is given under the United States constitution.

The speedy trial to which a person charged with crime is entitled under the constitution is a trial at such a time, after the finding of the indictment, regard being had to the terms of court, as shall afford the prosecution a reasonable opportunity, by the fair and honest exercise of reasonable diligence, to prepare for trial, and if the trial is delayed or postponed beyond such period, when there is a term of court at which the trial might be had, by reason of the neglect or laches of the prosecution in preparing for trial, such delay is a denial to the defendant of his right to a speedy trial, and in such case a party confined, upon application by habeas corpus, is entitled to a discharge from custody; 3 Mont. 512.

SPELLING. The art of putting the proper letters in words in their proper order.

It is a rule that bad spelling will not vitiate a contract when it appears with certainty what is meant; for example, where a man agreed to pay thirty pounds he was held bound to pay thirty pounds; and seutene was held to be seventeen; Cro. Jac. 607; 10 Co. 133 a; 2 Rolle, Abr. 147. Even in an indictment undertold has been held as understood; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law.

A misspelling of a name in a declaration will not be sufficient to defeat the plaintiff, on the ground of variance between the writing produced and the declaration, if such name be idem sonans; as, Kay for Key; 16 East 110; 2 Stark. 29; Segrave for Seagrave; 2 Stra. 880. See IDEM SONANS; ELECTION.

SPENDTHRIFT. A person who, by excessive drinking, gaming, idleness, or debauchery of any kind, shall spend, waste, or lessen his estate as to expose himself or his family to want or suffering, or expose the town to charge or expense for the support of himself or family. Vt. Rev. Stat. c. 65, § 9.

A person having the entire right to dispose of property may settle it or give it by will in trust for another, with the provision that the income shall not be alienated by the beneficiary by anticipation, or be taken by his creditors in advance of its payment to him, although there is no cessation or limitation over of the estate in such an event; 133 Mass. 170; 140 id. 369; 91 U. S. 716; 94 id. 523; 8 B. Mon. 56; 2 Rawle 33; 134 Pa. 114; 30 Vt. 338; 87 Va. 759; 111 Ill. 247; 4 Fed. Rep. 136; 84 Me. 325; 96 Tenn. 81; 20 Mo. App. 616. See also 1 Perry, Trusts 495.

In a very recent case in the New York court of appeals, it was held that a party could not by conveying his property in trust, reserving to himself the income thereof during his life, with remainder over, place his beneficial interest beyond the reach of creditors. Notwithstanding the life beneficiary was solvent and free from debt at the time he created the trust, the interest in the estate which he has reserved to himself is subject to a judgment upon a debt incurred subsequently to the creation of the trust; 156 N. Y. 316.

One cannot create a spendthrift trust of his own property for his own benefit; 43 Pa. 330. Nor can there be a valid spendthrift trust where the trustee is also the cestui que trust, with the absolute ownership of the subject of the trust; 43 Pa. 330; 177 id. 308; 133 Mass. 175.

A trust to place one's property beyond the reach of creditors, while retaining full enjoyment of the income, through the instrumentality of a trustee, cannot be created by a married woman or a woman in contemplation of marriage; 39 L. R. A. (Md.) 806. A married woman may, however, make a valid spendthrift trust in favor of her husband; 177 Pa. 208.

The rule has prevailed in the English courts that when the income of a trust estate is given to any person (other than a married woman) for life, the equitable estate for life is alienable by, and liable in equity to the debts of, the cestui que trust, and that this quality is so inseparable from the estate that no provision, however express, which does not operate as a ceaser or limitation over of the estate itself, can protect it from his debts or control; 18 Ves. 429; 6 Sim. 524; 1 Russ. & Myl. 395; 9 Hare 475.

Spendthrift trusts, there called alimentary funds, are upheld in Scotland; Gray, Restr. on Alienation 158. The English rule has been adopted in several courts of this country; 5 R. I. 305; 4 Ired. Eq. 131; 83 Ga. 703; 73 N. C. 119; 4 Rich. Eq. 46; 1 Dev. & Bat. Eq. 480.

In Arkansas; 8 Ark. 803; Indiana; 82 Ind. 83; and New Hampshire; 68 N. H. 155, the question has been raised, but not decided. Apart from statute, the rule in New Jersey is the same as the English rule; See 3 Stockt. 172; 12 C. E. Green 808; 41 N. J. Eq. 100. In Wisconsin, the question is in doubt. See 35 Wis. 687; 87 id. 449; 64 id. 210. In Connecticut, the status of such trusts is undecided; 21 Conn. 1; 86 id. 18.

By statute, in Kentucky, one cannot vest property or funds in trustees for the use of another without subjecting it to the debts of the cestui que trust; 14 S. W. Rep. 423; 12 Bush 344. In New York a statute excludes from proceedings in equity to reach beneficial interests, all cases of trusts for maintenance and support where the trust has proceeded from some person other than the debtor, but makes available to the creditor any surplus beyond what may be necessary for the maintenance and support of the beneficiary; 70 N. Y. 270; 42 Hun 636.

Where property is devised in trust for a testator's son and his family, the profits to be applied to the extent the trustee sees fit. Judgment creditors of the son cannot reach the property or its income; 59 Fed. Rep. 923.

An absolute discretion vested in trustees to make payments out of trust property confers no interest on the beneficiary that can be asserted by him or his assignee in bankruptcy; 91 U. S. 716, where the court proceeded to sustain the doctrine of trusts of this class in a forcible argument.

A spendthrift trust may be created for a term of years with the remainder to the cestui que trust in fee; 13 W. N. C. (Pa.) 282.

See Gray, Restr. on Alienation, where the cases are fully considered and an able protest made against the validity of such trusts.

SPERATE (Lat. spero, to hope). That of which there is hope.

In the accounts of an executor and the inventory of the personal assets, he should distinguish between those which are sperate and those which are desperate; he will be prima facie responsible for the former and discharged for the latter; 1 Chitty, Pr. 520; 2 Will. Exec. 644; Toller, Exec. 248. See DESPERATE.

SPES RECUPERANDI (Lat. the hope of recovery). A term applied to cases of capture of an enemy's property as a booty or prize, while it remains in a situation in which it is liable to be recaptured. As between the belligerent parties, the title to the property taken as a prize passes the moment there is no longer any hope of recovery; 2 Burr. 683. See INFRA PRÆSIDIA; POSTLIMINY; BOOTY; PRIZE.

SPHERE OF INFLUENCE. Territorial property in which a state has but a partial title. To protectorates and spheres of influence the dominant or protecting state has a title which is good as against all other states but not complete as against the protected community. The powers of internal sovereignty are still possessed by the protected community except in so far as they have surrendered them by treaty with the protecting state. The extent of power possessed by the protecting state and hence the nearness of its approach to a complete title, depends therefore upon the character of the protectorate, which in turn depends upon the character of the people over which the protectorate is exercised. The minimum of responsibility resting upon a protecting state in return for the title thus acquired is the maintenance of a reasonable degree of order and the administration of justice as regards citizens of other civilized states within the protectorate.

A sphere of influence is a very weak form of protectorate. It is frequently one stage in the evolution of a protectorate. Here also the extent of the rights of the dominant state is by no means a fixed quantity. There is always the claim of a negative right to keep other states from doing certain things within the sphere, but no positive right of internal control. The dominant state assumes no legal responsibility for the maintenance of order or administration of justice within the sphere. The main difference between this and a protectorate is, then, the degree of responsibility of the dominant state in return for its title. In the case of the protectorate this responsibility is legal as well as moral, while in the case of the sphere of influence it is wholly moral. Maxey, Intern. Law. 147, 148.

SPIGURNEL. The sealer of the royal writs.

SPINNING HOUSE. This was a prison at Cambridge used by the university authorities for the detention of light women convicted of associating for immoral purposes with undergraduates. This jurisdiction was taken away in 1894 by a statute which applied to Cambridge a second act which up to then had applied only to Oxford. The latter act brought such women as formerly were detained in the Spinning House under the class of idle and disorderly persons, punishable only under the Vagrancy Act. Byrne.

SPINSTER. An addition given, in legal writings, to a woman who never was married. Lovelace, Wills 269. So called because she was supposed to be occupied in spinning.

SPIRITS. See ARDENT SPIRITS.

SPIRITUAL CORPORATIONS. See ECCLESIASTICAL CORPORATIONS.

SPIRITUAL COURTS. Ecclesiastical courts (q. v.).

SPIRITUAL LORDS. The archbishops and bishops of the house of peers. 2 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 341.

SPIRITUALISM. The belief that the spirits of the dead in various ways communicate with and manifest their presence to men, usually through the agency of a person called a medium; also, the doctrines and practices of those so believing. Stand. Dict.

SPIRITUALITIES, GUARDIAN OF THE. See GUARDIAN OF THE SPIRITUALITIES.

SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS. A statute making it unlawful, after a local option election resulting in a vote against sale of "spirituous, vinous or malt liquors," to sell any such liquors, is not, in view of prior judicial construction of the words in prior statutes on the subject, violated by sale of malt liquor containing less than 2 per cent of alcohol, and non-intoxicating in the largest quantity in which it may be drunk. 134 Ky. 742, 122 S. W. 823. See LIQUOR LAWS.

SPLITTING A CAUSE OF ACTION. The bringing an action for only a part of the cause of action. This is not permitted either at law or in equity. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4167.

SPOILATION. In English Ecclesiastical Law. The name of a writ sued out in the spiritual court to recover for the fruits of the church or for the church itself. Fitzh. N. B. 85.

A waste of church property by an ecclesiastical person. 8 Bla. Com. 90.

In Torts. Destruction of a thing by the act of a stranger: as, the erasure or alteration of a writing by the act of a stranger is called spoliation. This has not the effect to destroy its character or legal effect. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 560. See IN ODIO SPOLIATORIS.

In Admiralty Law. By spoliation is also understood the total destruction of a thing: as, the spoliation of papers by the captured party is generally regarded as a proof of guilt; but in America it is open to explanation, except in certain cases where there is a vehement presumption of bad faith; 2 Wheat. 227, 241; 1 Dods. Admr. 480, 486. Bened. Adm. 310. See ALTERATION; FRENCH SPOILIATION CLAIMS.

SPONSALIA STIPULATIO SPONSALITIA (Lat.). A promise lawfully made between persons capable of marrying each other, that at some future time they will marry. See ESPOUSALS; ERAK. Inst. 1. 6. 3.

SPONSIO JUDICIALIS (Lat.). A judicial wager. This corresponded in the Roman law to our feigned issue.

SPONSIONS. In International Law. Agreements or engagements made by certain public officers, as generals or admirals, in time of war, either without authority or by exceeding the limits of authority under which they purport to be made.

Before these conventions can have any binding authority on the state, they must be confirmed by express or tacit ratification. The former is given in positive terms and in the usual forms; the latter is justly implied from the fact of acting under the agreement as if bound by it, and from any other circumstance from which an assent may be fairly presumed; Wheat. Int. Law, 3d Eng. ed. § 255; Grotius, de Jur. Bel. de Pac. l. 2, c. 15, § 16; id. l. 3, c. 22, § 1; Vattel, Law of Nat. b. 2, c. 14, § 209; Wolff, Inst. § 1156.

SPONSOR. In Civil Law. He who intervenes for another voluntarily and without being requested. The engagement which he enters into is only accessory to the principal. See Dig. 17. 1. 18; Nov. 4. 1; Code de Comm. art. 158, 159; Code Nap. 1236; Wolff, Inst. § 1556.

SPOUSE BREACH. Adultery. Cowel.

SPRAG. In Mining. "Sprag" means to put a stick in between the spokes, so that when the stick by the revolution of the wheel came in contact with the bed of the car it would chock the wheel. 148 Ky. 28, 145 S. W. 1131.

SPREADING FALSE NEWS. See FALSE NEWS.

SPRING. A fountain.

A natural source of water, of a definite and well-marked extent. 6 Ch. Div. 264 (C. A.). A natural chasm in which water has collected, and from which it either is lost by percolation, or rises in a defined channel. 41 L. T. Rep. n. s. 457. The water issuing by natural forces out of the earth at a particular place. It is not a mere place or hole in the ground, nor is it all the water that can be gathered or caused to flow at a particular place. A well is not necessarily a spring, nor is water which by the expenditure of labor can be gathered into a reservoir. 135 N. Y. 50.

The owner of the soil has the exclusive right to use a spring arising on his grounds. When another has an easement or right to draw water from such a spring, acquired by grant or prescription, if the spring fails the easement ceases, but if it returns the right revives.

The owner of land on which there is a natural spring has a right to use it for domestic and culinary purposes and for watering his cattle, and he may make an aqueduct to another part of his land and use all the water required to keep the aqueduct in order or to keep the water pure; 15 Conn. 386. He may also use it for irrigation, provided the volume be not materially decreased; Ang. Waterc. 34. See 1 Root 533; 9 Conn. 291; 2 Watts 327; 2 Hill S. C. 634; Coxn. N. J. 460; 2 D. & B. 50; 8 Mass. 106; 3 Pick. 269; 8 Me. 253.

The owner of a spring cannot lawfully turn the current or give it a new direction. He is bound to let it enter the inferior estate on the same level it has been accustomed to, and at the same place, for every man is entitled to a stream of water flowing through his land without diminution or alteration; 6 East 206; 2 Conn. 564. See 3 Rawle 84; 12 Wend. 330; 10 Conn. 213; 14 Vt. 239.

Where one conveyed a spring or well to be enjoyed without interruption, and afterwards conveyed contiguous property to a railway company whose works drained the water from the land before it reached the spring, on an action for breach of agreement, held, that the grantor had only conveyed the flow of the water after it had reached the spring, and therefore there was no breach; 41 L. T. N. S. 455 (C. A.). See Gould, Waters 286; 15 L. J. N. S. Ex. 315. Where the value of land was enhanced by a spring, it was held ratable for taxation at such improved value; 1 M. & S. 503. See Coul. & F. Waters.

The owner of the superior inheritance, or of the land on which there is a spring, has no right to deprive the owner of the estate below him; 5 Pick. 175; 3 Harr. & J. 231; 12 Vt. 178; 13 Conn. 303; 4 Ill. 492; nor can he detain the water unreasonably; 17 Johns. 306; 2 B. & C. 910. See 1 Dall. 211; 3 Rawle 256; 13 N. H. 360; IRRIGATION; SUBTERRANEAN WATER; SURFACE WATER; WATER-COURSE.

SPRING-BRANCH. A branch of a stream flowing from a spring. 12 Gratt. 196.

SPRING GUN. Setting spring-guns, man-traps, or other engines calculated to destroy human life or to inflict grievous bodily harm is a misdemeanor if done with the intent that grievous bodily harm shall be inflicted upon any person coming in contact therewith. 4 Steph. Com. 67.

SPRING TIDES. Tides in which the rise and fall is greatest, which occur directly after a new and full moon. English.

SPRINGING USE. A use limited to arise on a future event where no preceding use is limited, and which does not take effect in derogation of any other interest than that which results to the grantor or remains in him in the meantime. Gilbert, Uses, Sugden ed. 153, n.; 2 Crabb, R. P. 496.

A future use, either vested or contingent, limited to arise without any preceding limitation. Cornish, Uses 91.

It differs from a remainder in not requiring any other particular estate to sustain it than the use resulting to the one who creates it, intermediate between its creation and the subsequent taking effect of the springing use; Dy. 374; Pollexf. 63; 1 Ed. Ch. 34; 4 Drur. & W. 27; 1 Me. 271. It differs from an executory devise in that a devise is created by will, a use by deed; Fearn, Cont. Rem. 395, Butler's note; Wilson, Uses. It differs from a shifting use, though often confounded therewith. See, generally, 2 Wash. R. P., 5th ed. 281st.

SPIULZIE (spoliatio). In Scotch Law. The taking away movables without the consent of the owner or order of law. Stair, Inst. 96, § 16; Bell, Dict.

SPUR-RIAL. See RIAL.

SPY. One who enters the enemy's lines secretly or in disguise, or upon false pretences, for the purpose of obtaining information. The punishment, if captured, flagrante delicto, is death. But if a spy rejoins his own army and is afterwards captured, he cannot be treated as a spy.

The employment of spies in time of war is recognized as a military necessity. The Brussels Conference admitted no distinction between a merely mercenary spy and one who acts from purely patriotic motives. See Risley, Law of War 121.

SQUARE. Each subdivision of territory bounded on all sides by principal streets should be deemed a "square." 161 Ky. 543, 171 S. W. 396; 8 Bush (Ky.) 508.

SQUARE YARD. A "square yard," when applied to a surface, means, of course, superficial measure, but when applied to a solid, it might and generally would import solid measure or a yard every way, according to the subject of mensuration. 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 182.

SQUATTER. One who settles on the lands of others without any legal authority; this term is applied particularly to persons who settle on the public land. 3 Mart. La. N. S. 298. See PRE-EMPTION RIGHT.

STAB. To make a wound with a pointed instrument. A stab differs from a cut or a wound. Russ. & R. 358; Russ. Cr. 597; Bac. Abr. Maihem (B).

STABILLA. A writ called by that name, founded on a custom of Normandy, that where a man in power claimed lands in the possession of an inferior, he petitioned the prince that it might be put into his hands till the right was decided, whereupon he had this writ. Whart. Law Lex.

STABLE. See BARN.

STAGE COACH. An automobile used in the place of a "stage coach" for the carriage of the mails, freight or passengers is a "stage coach" within the meaning of a statute. 163 Ky. 795, 173 S. W. 144.

A "stage coach" is one that is not hired out, but which remains in the possession of the owner. 109 S. W. 319.

STAGNUM (Lat.). A pool. It is said to consist of land and water; and therefore by the name of stagnum the water and the land may be passed. Co. Litt. 5.

STAINS OF BLOOD. See BLOOD STAINS.

STAKE LANDS. Tide lands belonging to the state are held not to be stake lands. 7 Wash. 150.

STAKE RACE. See SWEEPSTAKES.

STAKEHOLDER. A third person chosen by two or more persons to keep in deposit property the right or possession of which is contested between them, and to be delivered to the one who shall establish his right to it. Thus, each of them is considered as depositing the whole thing. This distinguishes this contract from that which takes place when two or more tenants in common deposit a thing with a bailee. Domat, Lois Civ. liv. 1, t. 7, s. 4; 1 Vern. 44, n. 1.

A person having in his hands money or other property claimed by several others is considered in equity as a stakeholder. 1 Vern. 144.

A mere depositary for both parties of the money advanced by them respectively with a naked authority to deliver it over upon the proposed contingency. He is not regarded as a party to the illegal contract. 117 Mass. 542.

The duties of a stakeholder are to deliver the thing holden by him to the person entitled to it on demand. It is frequently questionable who is entitled to it. In case of an unlawful wager, although he may be justified in delivering the thing to the winner, by the express or implied consent of the loser; 8 Johns. 147; yet if before the event has happened he has been required by either party to give up the thing deposited with him by such party, he is bound so to deliver it; 8 Taunt. 377; 4 id. 493; or, if after the event has happened, the losing party give notice to the stakeholder not to pay the winner, a payment made to him afterwards will be made in his own wrong, and the party who deposited the money or thing may recover it from the stakeholder; 16 S. & R. 147; 7 Term 530; 8 id. 575; 2 Marsh. 542. See 5 Wend. 250; 1 Bail. 486, 503; WAGER; HORSE RACE.

A deposit of stakes by one of the parties in a match may be recovered back on demand from the stakeholder, as upon a void contract; 1 Q. B. D. 189; 5 App. Ca. 342, overruling 5 C. B. 818.

STALE DEMAND. A claim which has been for a long time undemanded; as, for example, where there has been a delay of twelve years unexplained. 3 Mas. 161.

STALLAGE (Sax. stal). The liberty or right of pitching or erecting stalls in fairs or markets, or the money paid for the same. Blount; Whart. Dict.; 6 Q. B. 31.

STALLARIUS (Lat.). In Saxon Law. The praefectus stabuli, now master of the horse (Sax. stalstabilum). Blount. Sometimes one who has a stall in a fair or market. Fl. lib. 4, c. 28, p. 18.

STAMP. An impression made by order of the government, on paper, which must be used in reducing certain contracts to writing, for the purpose of raising a revenue. See Stark. Ev.; 1 Phill. Ev. 444. A paper bearing an impression or device authorized by law and adopted for attachment to some subject of duty or excise.

The term in American law is used often in distinction from stamped paper, which latter meaning, as well as that of the device or impression itself, is included in the broader signification of the word.

Stamps or stamped paper are prepared under the direction of officers of the government, and sold at a price equal to the duty or excise to be collected. The stamps are affixed and cancelled; and where stamped paper is used, one use obviously prevents a second use. The Internal Revenue acts of the United States of 1862 and subsequent years required stamps to be affixed to a great variety of subjects, under severe penalties in the way of fines, and also under penalty of invalidating written instruments and rendering them incapable of being produced in evidence. The statutes under which these stamps were required had been repealed from time to time, and that method of raising revenue was discontinued except in the case of tobacco and possibly some other articles. The necessity of raising additional revenue to meet the expenditures required for the Spanish-American war of 1898 led to the passage of what was known as the War Revenue Act of June 13, 1898, under which stamps are now required on almost every kind of document. The stamp taxes imposed by this act will be found in schedule A of the act, stat. 55 Cong. 2d Sess. 458.

Instruments not duly stamped are not void or inadmissible in evidence, in the absence of a fraudulent intent; 89 Vt. 412; 53 Pa. 176; 26 Wis. 163; s. c. 7 Am. Rep. 51; 47 N. Y. 467; 7 Am. Rep. 468; see 62 Pa. 280; in the absence of affirmative proof, a fraudulent intent will not be presumed; cases supra. See PORTAGE.

If a foreign instrument is, by the laws of the country where it is made, void for want of a stamp, it cannot be enforced in England. But if those laws merely require that it must be stamped before it can be received in evidence there, it is admissible in England without a stamp; 5 Exch. 379. The revenue act of 1898 is too recent to have been the subject of finished litigation at the time this title goes to the press. One question raised in the courts, but not yet decided, is whether the stamp tax on express receipts are to be paid by the carrier or whether they may be added by him to his charges for freight or expressage.

Under the previous revenue acts imposing stamp taxes the question arose as to the exact legal effect of the requirement that an instrument should be stamped, and whether if an unstamped instrument was wholly invalid the law made it necessary to have certain contracts in writing which would otherwise be valid by parol, as for instance, the contract of insurance. The suggestion that the passage of these laws requiring a stamp might make it necessary that such contracts should be in writing was made in 2 Kan. 347; but this doctrine is said not to be well founded; 1 May, Ins., 3d ed. § 25; and in New York it was held that the validity of a parol contract for insurance was not affected by the stamp act, that, if in writing, it would require to be stamped, but it might be oral; 44 N. Y. 538. The power of congress to declare unstamped instruments wholly void was seriously doubted; 1 Bush 238; 45 Ill. 29; and the doubt went so far as to deny the constitutional right of the federal government to determine rules of evidence by which the state courts should be governed; May, Ins. § 83; 101 Mass. 243. Some of the cases hold that congress cannot prohibit the making of contracts permitted by state laws, and that to declare them void is not a proper penalty for the enforcement of tax laws; Cooley, Const. Lim., 6th ed. 592; 50 Mich. 505; 105 Mass. 49; 22 Ind. 276; 40 Ala. 365; 19 Wis. 369. See, also, 1 Joyce, Ins. § 33.

STAND. To abide by a thing; to submit to a decision; to comply with an agreement.

STANDARD. In War. An ensign or flag used in war.

In Measures. A weight or measure of certain dimensions, to which all other weights and measures must correspond: as, a standard bushel. Also, the quality of certain metals, to which all others of the same kind ought to be made to conform: as, standard gold, standard silver. See DOLLAR; EAGLE.

STANDARD POLICY. See POLICY.

STANDING ASIDE JURORS. In order to mitigate the effect of the statute 33 Edw. I. which forbade the challenging of jurors by the crown excepting for cause shown, a rule of practice gradually arose of permitting the prosecution to direct jurors to stand aside until the whole panel was exhausted, without showing cause. The validity of this practice has been repeatedly upheld in England; 26 How. St. Tr. 1231.

In the United States this statute became a part of the fundamental law after the revolution; Baldw. 78, 82; 8 Phila. 440; 22 Pa. 94; 7 Watts 585; and notwithstanding statutes of various states granting to the prosecution a number of peremptory challenges, the custom of standing aside has been preserved. This practice has been opposed where the statutes allowing peremptory challenges are in force, but where the number allowed is very small, it has heretofore been allowed to continue. See Thompson & Mer. Juries 147; 14 Cent. L. J. 402.

The practice applies in misdemeanors as well as felonies, although there is a peremptory right of challenge; 89 Leg. Int. 384.

STANDING BY. This term, as so often used in discussing cases of estoppel, does not mean actual presence or actual participation in the transaction, but it means silence where there is knowledge and a duty to make a disclosure. 99 Ind. 573; 6 Id. 389.

Sanctioning by silence and inaction. R. & L. Diet. In law implies knowledge, under such circumstances as rendered it the duty of the possessor to communicate it; and it is such knowledge, and not the mere fact of "standing by," that lays the foundation of responsibility. Abbott; 8 Blackf. 45.

STANDING MUTH. See MUTH; FENNE FORTÉ ET DURR.

STANDING ORDERS. General regulations of the procedure of the two houses of the parliamentary body, respecting the manner in which its business shall be conducted.

They are of equal force in every Parliament, except so far as they are altered or suspended from time to time. Byrne.

STANDING TREES. "Standing trees" are ordinarily, at least, to be regarded, as between the co-tenants, as part of the real estate, and severing and removing them without consent of other co-tenants is a destruction to that extent of the realty. After the severance they are the property of the co-tenants, and by a conversion of them the co-tenant converting them becomes liable to his co-tenants as in case of other personal property. 108 Ky. 552, 56 S. W. 969.

STANNARY COURTS (stannary,—from Lat. stannum, Cornish stean, tin,—a tin mine).

In English Law. Courts of record, in Devonshire and Cornwall, England, for the administration of justice among the tinners therein. They are of the same limited and exclusive nature as those of the counties palatine.

By 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, the plaintiff may choose between the stannary court and the county court of the district in which the cause of action arises.

STAPLE. In International Law. The right of staple, as exercised by a people upon foreign merchants, is defined to be that they may not allow them to set their merchandises and wares to sale but in a certain place.

This practice is not in use in the United States. 1 Chitty, Com. Law 103; Co. 4th Inst. 238; Bac. Abr. Execution (B1). See STATUTE STAPLE.

STAPLE INN. An inn of chancery. See INNS OF COURT.

STAR-CHAMBER. See COURT OF STAR-CHAMBER.

STAR PAGE. The line and word at which the pages of the first edition of a book began are frequently marked by a star in later editions, and always should be.

STARE DECISIS (Lat.). To abide by, or adhere to, decided cases. Stare decisis et non quæta movere. It is a general maxim that when a point has been settled by decision, it forms a precedent which is not afterwards to be departed from. The rule as stated is "to abide by former precedents, stare decisis, where the same points come again in litigation, as well to keep the scale of justice even and steady, and not liable to waver with every new judge's opinion, as also because, the law in that case being solemnly declared and determined, what before was uncertain, and perhaps indifferent, is now become a permanent rule, which it is not in the breast of any subsequent judge to alter or swerve from according to his private sentiments; he being sworn to determine, not according to his own private judgment, but according to the known laws and customs of the land,—not delegated to pronounce a new law, but to maintain and expound the old one—jus dicere et non jus dare." Broom, Leg. Max., 7th ed. 147. As it was said more briefly by Alderson, B., "My duty is plain. It is to expound and not to make the law to decide on it as I find it, not as I may wish it to be;" 7 Exch. 543, quoted by Colman, J., in 4 C. B. 560.

Stare decisis is a wholesome doctrine, and, while not of universal application, is especially applicable to decisions affirming the validity of securities authorized by statute. Such decisions should be regarded as conclusive even as to those not strictly parties so as to prevent wrong to innocent holders who purchased in reliance thereon. 207 U. S. 201.

The doctrine of stare decisis is not always to be relied upon; for the courts find it necessary to overrule cases which have been decided contrary to principle. It should not be pressed too far; 8 Gr. Bag 257. Many hundreds of such overruled cases may be found in the American and English reports. It is held that it should require very controlling considerations to induce any court to break down a former decision, and lay again the foundations of the law; 7 How. (Bliss.) 569.

The doctrine of stare decisis is a salutary one and is to be adhered to on proper occasions, in respect of decisions directly upon points in issue; but the supreme court should not extend any decision upon a constitutional question if it is convinced that error in principle might supervene; 157 U. S. 429; and there are cases in which a court of last resort has felt constrained by a sense of duty to disregard all precedents, even their own. This is particularly so in constitutional questions involving the validity of statutes affecting public interests, but where no right of property or contract inter partes is involved. In such a case, said Blackley, C. J., the maxim for a supreme court "supreme in the majesty of duty as well as in the majesty of power," is not stare decisis, but justiitia ruat cœlum; 87 Ga. 691, and it was said by Howard, J., in quoting this language: "Let this decision be right whether other decisions were right or not;" 144 Ind. 593 (involving the validity of statutes of apportionment of legislative representatives). And a court when asked to do so should consider how far its action would affect transactions entered into and acted upon, under the law as it exists; 11 Tex. 455. Where there have been a series of decisions by the supreme judicial tribunal of a state, the rule of stare decisis may usually be regarded as impregnable, except by legislative act; 29 Ind. 470. Especially is this the case where the law has become settled as a rule of property, and titles have become vested on the strength of it; 44 Mo. 206; and even an isolated decision will not be reversed when it has remained undisputed for a long time, and rights to land have been acquired under it; 31 Cal. 402; 22 Cal. 110. The court will not overrule cases upon which conveyancers may have relied, even though the court does not consider the case a sensible decision; [1891] 1 Ch. 258. It has been said that the doctrine of stare decisis has greater or less force according to the nature of the question decided, those questions where the decisions do not constitute a business rule, e. g. as where personal liberty is involved, will be met only by the general considerations which favor certainty and stability in the law; but where a decision relates to the validity of certain modes of transacting business, and a change of decision must necessarily invalidate everything done in the mode prescribed by the former case, as in the manner of executing deeds or wills, the maxim becomes imperative, and no court is at liberty to change it; 15 Wiso. 691. An erroneous decision subsequently overruled, though the law of the particular case, and binding on the parties, does not conclude other parties having rights depending on the same question; 63 Minn. 59. The United States courts will follow the decisions of those of the several states in interpreting state laws; but when the decisions of the state courts are unsettled and conflicting the rule does not apply; 1 Wall. 205; 5 Wall. 772; 37 Fed. Rep. 823; 35 Id. 857. When titles to real estate depend on any compact between states, the rule of decision will not be drawn from either of the states; 11 Pet. 1; but where any principle of law is laid down by a state court regarding a sale of real property; 6 Wall. 733; or concerning the title to land; 37 Fed. Rep. 767; 133 U. S. 809; 128 Id. 213; the violation of a charter by a state corporation; 7 How. 198; that a particular corporation is a corporation of that state; 45 Fed. Rep. 612; the payment of taxes; 7 Wall. 71; the United States courts will follow it in analogous cases; 7 How. 738. In matters relating to the construction of treaties, constitutional provisions, or laws of the United States, the authority of the federal courts is paramount, while e converso in the construction of state constitutions and state laws, the decisions of the state courts are final within their jurisdiction; 23 Miss. 498; Wells, Res. Adj. & Stare Decisis 533. The doctrine of stare decisis will not be applied by the circuit court of appeals to those decisions of the circuit courts from which no appeal has been taken; 29 U. S. App. 12. A decision of one of the circuit courts of the United States is not necessarily binding on the others; 47 Fed. Rep. 604; but see 46 Fed. Rep. 854; 53 id. 791; 40 id. 677. See RES JUDICATA. On a question of jurisprudence the circuit court of appeals is bound by a decision of the United States supreme court, but not the highest courts of the various states; 35 U. S. App. 67. See Cooley, Const. 2d ed. 137; Greenl. Overruled Cases; 1 Kent 477; Livingston, Syst. of Pen. Law 104; 35 Cent. L. J. 322; 32 id. 486. See Jenkins, Century vi., for a list of curious aphorisms on this subject; AUTHORITIES: PRECEDENTS: JUDGE-MADE LAW; JUDICIAL LEGISLATION; JUDICIAL POWER.

STARE IN JUDICIO (Lat.). To appear before a tribunal, either as plaintiff or defendant.

START. This term is not limited to setting out upon a journey or a race; it means, as well, the commencement of an enterprise or an undertaking. 54 Ia. 721.

STATE (Lat. stare, to place, establish). A body politic, or society of men, united together for the purpose of promoting their mutual safety and advantage, by the joint efforts of their combined strength. Cooley, Const. Lim. 1. A self-sufficient body of persons united together in one community for the defence of their rights and to do right and justice to foreigners. In this sense, the state means the whole people united into one body politic; and the state, and the people of the state, are equivalent expressions. 2 Dall. 425; 3 id. 93; 2 Wilson, Lect. 120; 1 Story, Const., 5th ed. §§ 208, 209. So, frequently, are state and nation; 7 Wall. 720. See Morse, Citizenship; Wheat, Int. L. 17; but it is said that "a state is distinguished from a nation or a people, since the former may be composed of different races of men all subject to the same supreme authority. . . . The same nation or people may be subject to, or compose, several distinct and separate states. . . . The terms nation and people are frequently used by writers on international law as synonymous terms for state." 1 Halleck, Int. L. 66.

Another writer commenting on the definition of Cicero which is substantially that first above given, says: "This definition is not complete without some additions and restrictions. A state must be an organization of people for political ends; it must permanently occupy a fixed territory; it must possess an organized government capable of making and enforcing law within the community; and, finally, to be a sovereign state it must not be subject to any external control. Thus a company of men united for commercial purposes cannot be a state in the sense held in international law; neither can a tribe of wandering people, nor a community, be so considered if their government is permanently incapable of enforcing its own laws or its obligations toward other states.

So long as a state possesses the requisite attributes mentioned in the preceding paragraphs, international law does not concern itself with the form of its government; it may be an absolute monarchy, a limited monarchy, or a republic; it may be a centralized state or a federal union; or it may change from one to another of these forms at will, without in the least affecting its position in the view of international law; Snow, Int. L. 10.

A state neither loses any of its rights nor is discharged from any of its duties, by a change in the form of its civil government. The body politic is still the same, though it may have a different organ of communication. So if a state should be divided in respect to territory, its rights and obligations are not impaired; and if they have not been apportioned by special agreement, those rights are to be enjoyed, and those obligations fulfilled, by all the parts in common; Snow, Cas. Int. L. 21. The same writer also thus states the distinctions between a state and a nation: "Though the terms are frequently used interchangeably, strictly speaking, a nation is composed of people of the same race, whereas a state may be composed of several nations. The Jews are considered to be a nation, while Austria-Hungary, as a state, is composed of three distinct races: Germanic, Slavic, and Magyar. This distinction has in recent years become of importance from the fact of the movements towards the unity of races, each under one state. Thus we have the Pan-Slavic movement, the Irredentist party in Italy, and various other minor cases." Snow, Int. L. 20. This distinction, however, cannot be said to be at present recognized to the extent here suggested.

The actual organization of governmental powers; thus, the actual government of the state is designated by the name of the state; hence the expression, the state has passed such a law or prohibited such an act.

The section of territory occupied by a state: as, the state of Pennsylvania.

A union of two or more states under a common sovereign is called a personal union where there is no incorporation, but the component parts are united with equality of rights, as in the case, by way of illustration, when Great Britain and Ireland and Hanover were under one prince but without any interdependence. On the other hand, a real union of different states is where there is a merging of the separate sovereignties in a new and general one, at least as to all international relations; as, in the case of the union of Hungary, Bohemia, and other states prior to 1849. An incorporate union is where there is one sovereign government, though there may be a separate subordinate administration; Halleck, Int. L. §§ 11, 12, 13.

One of the commonwealths which form the United States of America.

As to the relation between the state and the United States, see UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

The District of Columbia and the territorial districts of the United States are not states within the meaning of the constitution and of the Judiciary Act, so as to enable a citizen thereof to sue a citizen of one of the states in the federal courts; 2 Cra. 445; 1 Wheat. 91; 15 C. L. J. 303. But the District of Columbia is a "State of the Union," within the meaning of the treaty of 1853 between the United States and France, relieving Frenchmen from the disability of alienage in disposing of and inheriting property; 133 U. S. 258.

The several states composing the United States are sovereign and independent in all things not surrendered to the national government by the constitution, and are considered, on general principles, by each other as foreign states; yet their mutual relations are rather those of domestic independence than of foreign alienation; Miller, Const. 103; 7 Cra. 481; 3 Wheat. 324.

A state can be sued only by its own consent; 82 Va. 721; 134 U. S. 1. See 40 La. Ann. 856. But under the constitution of the United States the supreme court has original jurisdiction of suits by one state against another, and this jurisdiction has been frequently exercised, particularly in cases involving boundary disputes between the states.

A suit by a non-resident insurance company which seeks an injunction to restrain the state superintendent of insurance from revoking its license to do business in the state, is a suit against the state, and a federal court has no jurisdiction; 81 Fed.

Rep. 888. So it was held that an effort to enjoin state officers charged with the collection of taxes, and seeking to establish exemption from taxation under the state laws and the repayment of amounts previously collected, was, to all intents and purposes, a suit against the state, and in part for the recovery of money, and that the state court had no jurisdiction; 35 Fla. 625. Suits to enjoin state officers either from assessing or enforcing taxes, without authority or warrant under the state laws, is not a suit against the state within the prohibition of the eleventh amendment to the constitution of the United States; 58 Fed. Rep. 620; neither is a suit against the railroad commissioners of the state to restrain the enforcement of their regulations as unjust and unreasonable, at least if the state has no pecuniary interest in the railroad; 154 U. S. 362; 57 Fed. Rep. 436; nor a suit in equity against state land commissioners to restrain them from acts alleged to be in violation of the plaintiff's contract of purchase of the lands from the state; 140 U. S. 1; 43 Fed. Rep. 106, 338. An injunction may be granted against a state board of officers to restrain them from proceeding against a corporation engaged in interstate commerce, for failure to comply with state and statutory regulations, and this is held not to be against the state; 60 Fed. Rep. 186. Nor is a proceeding for contempt in the federal courts against a state officer who has seized property in the hands of a receiver in attempting to collect a tax alleged to be illegal and attacked by proceeding in the federal court, in any sense a suit against the state; 149 U. S. 184.

A state cannot be sued to recover the amount due to the holders of its bonds; 134 U. S. 1; nor will a suit be maintained against a state auditor to compel the levying of a special tax for the benefit of holders of its bonds, since that is in effect a suit against the state; id. 22. Actions held to be properly suits against the state and therefore not maintainable, are, against the state board of agriculture to recover money alleged to be wrongfully collected by it as a license tax; 111 N. C. 135; a suit by a private citizen to enjoin the erection of a public building at a place other than that prescribed by law; 24 Ore. 553; a suit to determine the rights of conflicting claimants to a fund granted by congress to the states for agricultural colleges; 56 Fed. Rep. 55.

The rights and immunities of a foreign state belong to her only within her own jurisdiction and territory, and, when she becomes a suitor in the courts of a foreign state, she is treated as a foreign private corporation; 20 W. Va. 326. See SOVEREIGN.

When a state brings a suit against citizens, she thereby voluntarily accepts all the conditions which affect ordinary suitors, except that no affirmative judgment, as for the payment of costs, can be rendered against her; and if the cause is removed to a federal court it will proceed in the same manner as a suit between individuals; 56 Fed. Rep. 329. So where the state has brought a suit in equity and the cause has been removed to a federal court, the defendant may there file a cross bill against the state; 60 Fed. Rep. 552; but if the cross bill seeks any affirmative relief against the state, it cannot be filed, under a constitutional provision that the state shall not be made a defendant in any court of law or equity; 100 Ala. 80; nor can a cross demand be maintained against a state; 46 La. Ann. 431; id. 55; 37 id. 623.

While a state cannot be compelled by suit to perform its contracts, any attempt on its part to violate property or rights acquired under its contracts may be judicially resisted; and any law impairing the obligation of contracts under which such property or rights are held is void; 134 U. S. 1.

As to whether states can be compelled to pay their debts, see 12 Am. L. Rev. 635; 15 id. 519.

In Society. That quality which belongs to a person in society; and which secures to and imposes upon him different rights and duties in consequence of the difference of that quality.

In Practice. To make known specifically; to explain particularly; as, to state an account or to show the different items in an account; to state the cause of action in a declaration.

STATE'S EVIDENCE. See KING'S EVIDENCE; PROVER.

STATE INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

STATE LANDS. The words "public lands" are habitually used in the United States to describe those lands belonging to the federal government or to a state which are open to acquisition as private property under general land laws. The term "state lands" is sometimes used in the same sense of lands owned by a state. (92 U. S. 761; 7 Wash. 156.) The words "public domain" frequently have the same meaning. (181 U. S. 481.) Equivalent words in common use in the general land legislation and decisions of the original states were "unappropriated lands," "vacant lands," and "waste lands." The expressions "public lands" and "state lands" are, however, often used in a broader sense, including lands belonging to the nation, state, or other sovereignty which are not subject to the operation of the general land laws. (8 Mont. 20.) As a rule there is no statutory definition of the words, and they are not always used in the same sense in statutes passed for different purposes. In each case that meaning should be given which comports with the intention. (8 Mont. 20.) 26 Am. & Eng. Ency. 2nd ed., 212, 213.

STATE OFFICER. Presidential electors are "State officers." 149 Ky. 110, 148 S. W. 21.

STATE PAPER OFFICE. See PAPER OFFICE; PAPER MILL.

STATE AND PUBLIC LANDS. See TOWN SITES.

STATE TAXES. The term "State taxes" referred to in a statute are only such as go into the State Treasury when collected, and is not intended there to embrace school taxes, which never reach the State Treasury. 154 Ky. 44, 156 S. W. 865.

STATED CASE. See CASE STATED; AGREED CASE.

STATEMENT. The act of stating, reciting, or presenting verbally or on paper. 91 Tenn. 168. See PARTICULAR STATEMENT.

STATEMENT OF AFFAIRS. In English bankruptcy practice, the giving by the debtor of a list of creditors, secured and unsecured with the value of the securities, a list of bills discounted, and a statement of his property. Bank. Act 1869, § 19.

Now, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1914, every debtor against whom a receiving order is made must furnish a like statement, verified by affidavit, to the Official Receiver. Making a material omission in a statement of affairs is a misdemeanor, punishable with imprisonment for two years. Byrne.

STATEMENT OF CLAIM. The specification of the plaintiff's cause of action. See DECLARATION. The term is now used in Pennsylvania under the Practice Act of 1897.

It is not a legitimate function of a statement of claim to reply to an anticipated affirmative defense. 84 Fed. Rep. 102.

This is to be distinguished from the statement of the nature of the claim which is required in every writ of summons by Ord. 2, r. 1. It is a written or printed statement by the plaintiff in an action in the High Court of England, showing the facts on which he relies to support his claim against the defendant, and the relief which he claims. It is delivered to the defendant or his solicitor. Byrne. See STATEMENT OF DEFENSE.

STATEMENT OF DEFENSE. In the practice of the High Court of England, the defendant delivers in reply to the statement of claim a pleading called a statement of defense. The statement of defense deals with the allegations contained in the statement of claim (or the indorsement on the writ if it be specially indorsed and leave to defend be given under Ord. 14), admitting or denying them, and, if necessary, stating fresh facts in explanation or avoidance of those alleged by the plaintiff. If the defendant wishes to set up a counter-claim he adds it to his defense, and the pleading is then called a statement of defense and counter-claim.

In commercial cause the notification termed "points of defense" corresponds to the statement of defense. Byrne.

STATING-PART OF A BILL. See BILL.

STATION. In Civil Law. A place where ships may ride in safety. Dig. 49. 12. 1. 13; 50. 15. 59.

A place where railroad trains regularly come to a stand, for the convenience of passengers, taking in fuel, discharging freight, or the like. Webst.

A railroad company may exclude from its stations all persons except those using or desirous of using the railway, and may impose upon the rest of the public any terms it may deem proper as the condition of admittance; [1897] A. C. 479; to the same effect, 18 C. B. 48.

Discrimination between competing omnibus lines at a railroad depot, by giving one of them a more favorable stand than is allowed to the other, where both are given access to the grounds, is insufficient to constitute any legal ground of complaint against the railroad company; 87 L. R. A. (Ind.) 376. See RAILROAD.

STATIONER'S COMPANY. The Stationers of the city of London, a gild incorporated in 1557, by whom prior to the passing of the Copyright Act, 1842, every English publication was required to be "entered" or registered in Stationers' Hall (q. v.). Stand. Diet.

STATIONERS' HALL. The hall of the Stationers' Company at which every person claiming copyright must register his title, and without such registration no action shall be commenced against persons infringing it.

The Copyright Act 1911, repealed all enactments referring to Stationers' Hall: it contains no reference to Stationers' Hall; and no registration there is now required for any purpose. Byrne.

STATIST. A statesman; a politician; one skilled in government.

STATU LIBERI (Lat.). In Louisiana. Slaves for a time, who had acquired the right of being free at a time to come, or on a condition which was not fulfilled, or in a certain event which had not happened, but who in the meantime remained in a state of slavery. La. Civ. Code, art. 37. See 3 La. 176; 6 id. 571; 4 Mart. La. 103; 8 id. 219. This is substantially the definition of the civil law. Hist. de la Jur. l. 40; Dig. 40. 7. 1; Code 7. 2. 13.

STATUS (Lat.). The condition of persons. The movement of progressive societies has been from status to contract; Maine, Anc. Law 170. It also means estate, because it signifies the condition or circumstances in which the owner stands with regard to his property.

STATUS QUO. The existing state of things at any given date.

STATUS QUO ANTE BELLUM. A phrase used in international law to indicate the condition of the territory of a belligerent and the ownership of the property of the subjects of such belligerent, as they existed prior to the breaking out of war, which, under the stipulations of some treaties of peace are restored to their former ownership. In other treaties, a belligerent who has possession of an enemy's territory or property at the end of the war retains it. See TREATY OF PEACE; UTI POSSIDETIS.

STATUTE. A law established by the act of the legislative power. An act of the legislature. The written will of the legislature, solemnly expressed according to the forms necessary to constitute it the law of the state.

This word is used to designate the written law in contradistinction to the unwritten law. See COMMON LAW.

Among the civilians, the term statute is generally applied to laws and regulations of every sort; every provision of law which ordains, permits, or prohibits anything is designated a statute, without considering from what source it arises. Sometimes the word is used in contradistinction to the imperial Roman law, which, by way of eminence, civilians call the common law. Wharton.

A negative statute is one expressed in negative terms, and so controls the common law that it has no force in opposition to the statute. Bac. Abr. Statute (G).

An affirmative statute is one which is enacted in affirmative terms.

Such a statute does not necessarily take away the common law; Co. 2d Inst. 200; if, for example, a statute without negative words declares that when certain requisites shall have been complied with, deeds shall have a certain effect as evidence, this does not prevent their being used in evidence, though the requisites have not been complied with, in the same manner they might have been before the statute was passed; 2 Caines 169; or a custom; 8 Cl. & F. 41. Nor does such an affirmative statute repeal a precedent statute if the two can both be given effect; Dwaris, Statute 474. The distinction between negative and affirmative statutes has been considered inaccurately; 13 Q. B. 33.

A declaratory statute is one which is passed in order to put an end to a doubt as to what is the common law or the meaning of another statute, and which declares what it is and ever has been.

Penal statutes are those which command or prohibit a thing under a certain penalty. Bac. Abr. A statute affixing a penalty to an act, though it does not in words prohibit it, thereby makes it illegal; 14 Johns. 273; 1 Binn. 110; 37 E. L. & E. 475; 14 N. H. 294; 4 Ia. 490; 7 Ind. 77. See, as to the construction of penal statutes, 2 Cr. L. Mag. Jan. 81; 49 Fed. Rep. 860; 120 U. S. 678; 134 id. 624; Bish. Stat. Cr. 226; PENAL STATUTES.

A perpetual statute is one for the continuance of which there is no limited time, although it be not expressly declared to be so.

If a statute which did not itself contain any limitation is to be governed by another which is temporary only, the former will also be temporary and dependent upon the existence of the latter. Bac. Abr. Statute (D).

Private statutes or acts are those of which the judges will not take notice without pleading; such as concern only a particular species or person. See 1 Bla. Com. 86. Special or private acts are regarded as "rather exceptions than rules, being those which only operated on particular persons and private concerns" (cited with approval in 104 U. S. 447, where it was held that where an act amends a general act it is a public act).

Private statutes may be rendered public by being so declared by the legislature; 1 Bla. Com. 85; 4 Co. 78. And see 1 Kent 459. In England private statutes are said not to bind strangers; though they should contain any saving of their rights. A general saving clause used to be inserted in all private bills; but it is settled that, even if such saving clause be omitted, the act will bind none but the parties. But this doctrine does not seem to be applicable to this country.

Public statutes are those of which the courts will take judicial notice without pleading or proof.

They are either general or local,—that is, have operation throughout the state at large, or within a particular locality. It is not easy to say what degree of limitation will render an act local. Thus, it has been held that a public act relating to one county only is not local within the meaning of a constitutional provision which forbids enactments of local bills embracing more than one subject; 5 N. Y. 285; 2 Sandf. 355.

A remedial statute is one made to supply such defects or abridge such superfluities in the common law as may have been discovered. 1 Bla. Com. 86.

These remedial statutes are themselves divided into enlarging statutes, by which the common law is made more comprehensive and extended than it was before, and into restraining statutes, by which it is narrowed down to that which is just and proper. The term remedial statute is also applied to those acts which give the party injured a remedy; and in some cases such statutes are penal; Esp. Pen. Act 1.

A temporary statute is one which is limited in its duration at the time of its enactment.

It continues in force until the time of its limitation has expired, unless sooner repealed. A statute which by reason of its nature has only a single and temporary operation—e. g. an appropriation bill—is also called a temporary statute.

There is also a distinction in England between general and special statutes. The former affect the whole community, or large and important sections, the interest of which may be identical with those of the whole body. Special statutes relate to private interests, and deal with the affairs of persons, places, classes, etc., which are not of a public character. Wilb. Stat. 218. See 104 U. S. 447.

Local statute is used by Lord Mansfield as opposed to personal statute, which relates to personal transitory contracts; whereas a local statute refers to things in a certain jurisdiction alone; e. g. the statute of frauds relates only to things in England; 1 W. Bla. 246.

As to mandatory and directory statutes, it is said that when the provision of a statute is the essence of the thing required to be done, it is mandatory; otherwise, when it relates to form and manner; and where an act is incident, or after jurisdiction acquired, it is directory merely; 58 N. H. 17. See, also, 2 Ky. L. Rep. 166.

Expository statutes. Acts passed for the purpose of affecting the construction to be placed upon prior acts. They are often expressed thus: "The true intent and meaning of an act passed . . . be and is hereby declared to be;" "the provisions of the act shall not hereafter extend"; or "are hereby declared and enacted not to apply," and the like. This is a common mode of legislation. "It is always competent to change an existing law by a declaratory statute; and where the statute is only to operate on future cases it is no objection to its validity that it assumes the law to have been in the past what it is now declared that it shall be in the future." Cooley, Const. Lim. 94; such acts are binding upon the courts, although the latter, without such a direction, would have understood the language to have meant something different. They have the same effect upon the construction of former acts, in the absence of intervening rights, as if they had been embodied in the former act at the time of its passage; Endlich, Interpr. Stat. 365. See Pomeroy & Sedgwick, Constr. Stat. Law 214; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. sec. 402.

A statute declaring the meaning of a prior act, etc., will not be construed to be an invasion of the judicial function, but will be treated as a direct enactment controlling the meaning of the prior act; 24 Fed. Rep. 667. But it has been held that the legislature cannot pass an act so as to compel the courts in the future to adopt a particular construction of an earlier statute; 173 Pa. 140, Mitchell, J., dissenting; but see 123 id. 637; 68 id. 45, where the doctrine seems to have been, confined to retrospective legislation.

See an article in 35 Am. L. Reg. & Rev. 23, by William M. Meigs.

It is a general rule that when the provision of a statute is general, everything which is necessary to make such provision effectual is supplied by the common law; Co. Litt. 235; Co. 2d Inst. 222; and when a power is given by statute, everything necessary for making it effectual is given by implication: quando lex aliquid concedit, concedere videtur et id sine quo res ipsa esse non potest; 13 Co. 130.

The provisions of a statute cannot be evaded by any shift or contrivance; 2 B. & C. 655. Whatever is prohibited by law to be done directly cannot legally be effected by an indirect and circuitous contrivance; 7 Cl. & F. 540.

The mode of enacting laws in the United States is regulated by the constitution of the Union and of the several states respectively. The advantage of having a law officer, or board of officers, to revise bills and amendments of bills during their progress through the legislature, has been somewhat discussed. See Reports of Eng. Stat. Law Com. 1856, 1857; Street, Council of Revision; 5 Rep. Am. Bar Assn.

Enacting legislation. As to formalities required it has been held that a statute which the legislative journals showed was never passed, was valid because signed by the presiding officers of the legislature; 23 S. E. Rep. (N. C.) 16, 120; and that it is not admissible to prove that an act signed by the governor was in fact passed by the legislature and sent to him within two days next preceding the final adjournment of the legislature in violation of the constitution; 40 N. E. Rep. (Ind.) 1050.

The signing by the speaker of the United States house of representatives, and by the president of the senate, in open session, of an enrolled bill, is an official attestation by the two houses that such bill has passed congress, and when the bill thus attested, receives the approval of the president, and is deposited in the department of state its authentication as a bill that has passed congress is complete and unimpeachable; 143 U. S. 649.

See JOURNALS, where this subject is treated.

Evidence that individual members were mistaken as to facts is inadmissible to effect legislative action; 36 Atl. Rep. (Conn.) 1019.

As to whether the president has the power to sign bills after the adjournment of congress, Attorney-General Wirt was of the opinion that he had not, and President Monroe acted on his opinion. President Lincoln signed the act of March 12, 1863, after the adjournment of congress. A house committee subsequently reported that in their opinion the act was not in force, but the house never acted upon their report. The court of claims holds that this act has been recognized by the supreme court, and was therefore valid; see 32 Amer. Law Rev. 211; 29 Ct. Cl. 549.

Attorney-General Garland advised President Cleveland that he was without authority to sign a bill after adjournment.

In 29 Ct. Cl. 523, it was held that the president had the power to sign bills after the adjournment of congress. In cases arising under state constitutions, it was held in 2 Cal. 165; 50 Miss. 802, that the power to sign a bill ceased with the adjournment, but under the language of the Illinois constitution, a signature after adjournment was held valid; 103 U. S. 423.

In 21 N. Y. 517, it was held, under a constitutional provision almost identical with that of the constitution of the United States, that a signature after adjournment was valid. And this was followed in 23 La. Ann. 545.

Much interesting discussion has arisen on the question whether a statute which appears to be contrary to the laws of God and nature, and to right reason, is void. Earlier dicta in the affirmative (see 6 Co. *118 a; 13 Mod. 687) are not now considered to be law; L. R. 6 C. P. 583. See Dwarris, Stat. 483. The question as applicable to this country is treated under CONSTITUTIONAL. It being historically true that the American people are a religious people, as shown by the religious objects expressed by the original grants and charters of the colonies, and the recognition of religion in the most solemn acts of their history, as well as in the constitutions of the states and the nation, the courts, in construing statutes, should not impute to any legislature a purpose of action against religion; 148 U. S. 457.

In the United States, a statute which contravenes a provision of the constitution of the state by whose legislature it was enacted, or of the constitution of the United States, is in so far void. See CONSTITUTIONAL. The presumption, however, is that every state statute the object and provision of which are among the acknowledged powers of legislation is valid and constitutional; and such presumption is not to be overcome unless the contrary is clearly demonstrated; 6 Cra. 87; 1 Cow. 584; 7 N. Y. 109. Where a part only of a statute is unconstitutional, the rest is not void, if it can stand by itself; 1 Gray 1; Rish, Writ. Law 34.

Where a statute contains some provisions that are constitutional and some that are not, effect may be given to the former by separating them from the latter, but this rule does not apply where the provisions of the statute are dependent upon each other and are indivisible, or where it does not plainly appear that Congress would have enacted the constitutional legislation without the unconstitutional provisions. 207 U. S. 463.

By the common law, statutes took effect by relation back to the first day of the session at which they were enacted; 4 Term 660. The injustice which this rule often worked led to the statute of 38 Geo. III. c. 13, which declared that, except when otherwise provided, statutes should take effect from the day of obtaining the royal assent, unless otherwise ordered therein. This rule, however, does not obviate the hardship of holding men responsible under a law before its promulgation. By the Code Napoléon, a law takes effect in each department of the empire as many days after its promulgation in that department as there are distances of twenty leagues between the seat of government and the place of promulgation. The general rule in America is, that an act takes effect from the time when the formalities of enactment are actually complete, unless it is ordered otherwise or there is some constitutional or statutory rule on the subject; Cooley, Const. Lim. 187; 7 Wheat. 164.

The constitutions of many states contain provisions that acts shall not take effect till a certain time after their passage, or after adjournment of the legislature, but such constitutions usually contain also a provision that the legislature may, in a case of emergency, provide that an act shall take effect immediately, and it has become a common practice so to provide even in ordinary acts. Where an act was passed May 16, which declared that it should take effect May 14, it went into effect on its passage; 80 Atl. Rep. (N. J. Sup.) 543.

The Tariff Act of 1897 took effect at the moment it was approved by the president, which was six minutes past 4 o'clock P. M., Washington time, on July 24, 1897, and goods imported and entered for consumption on that day, but prior to such approval, were dutiable under prior legislation; 87 Fed. Rep. 194. So held, also, by Colt, J., in U. S. C. C., 1st Cir. (Boston Herald, Oct. 13, 1898).

An act increasing taxes and denouncing penalties, falls within the first article of the constitution prohibiting ex post facto laws, and giving effect to statutes only from the time of their receiving the president's signature; 1 Hughes 856. "The law is an entirety. If, as to its penal features, it cannot be held to have gone into effect until 9 P. M. of the day of its enactment, neither can it be held to have gone into effect before that hour as to its other provisions." Id. See, also, 159 U. S. 78, as to the tariff act of 1894.

Local and special legislation. In all but a few states constitutional provisions are found forbidding the passage of local or private or special laws. While these provisions were not unknown at an earlier date, the principle was fully developed in the Illinois constitution of 1870, and has become more fixed as a part of American constitutional law since then. In some states, such prohibited legislation is specified as "local or special," and in some "special or private," and in some "private, local, or special." The act of congress of July 30, 1898, prohibited local and special legislation in the territories. See Binney, Restrict. upon Loc. and Spec. Legis. 180. The subject-matter of legislation to which this prohibition applies varies in different states. Mr. Binney has grouped them in a general way. See id. 132. Among the subject-matters most usually found are: changing names of persons; legitimation and adoption of children; divorce; granting charters; changing laws of descent; providing for the sale or conveyance of real estate of persons under disability; granting the right of eminent domain; regulating legal procedure; incorporating municipalities; creating offices; or regulating the fees of officers; laying out highways; providing for the management of public schools; taxation. In some states special laws are permitted only when a general law cannot be made applicable.

A general law is defined as "neither for one or more particular persons, nor to operate exclusively in any particular part or parts of the state"; Binney, Restr. etc. 22. Such an act is not necessarily universal and need not be one which operates on all persons or all things; a law which effects a class of persons or things may be a general law; 87 Cal. 373; 40 N. J. L. 1. A law is to be regarded as such when its provisions apply to all objects of legislation, distinguished alike by quality and attribute which necessitate the enactment as manifest relation. Such laws must embrace all and exclude none whose condition and wants render such legislation equally necessary or appropriate to them as a class; 49 N. J. L. 88. See GENERAL LAWS.

A special law is one which relates either to particular persons, places, or things, or to persons, places, or things which, though not particularized, are separated by any method of selection from the whole class to which the law might, but for such legislation, be applicable. Binney, Restr. etc. 26.

A local law is one whose operation is confined within territorial limits, other than those of the whole state or any properly constituted class or locality therein.

The features of local and special legislation overlap, but they are not confining. The matter to which a local law relates may be either general or special, but in either case the law itself is not in force outside of the locality for which it is passed.

The following are held special acts and invalid: An act for holding primary elections made applicable, only to counties casting a certain number of votes at the last election, which makes it applicable only to two counties; 43 Pac. Rep. (Cal.) 973; an act, though general in form, regulating the re-location of county seats which was in fact applicable to but a single county; 143 Ind. 306; an act for the extension of corporate limits of cities having a certain population which can be applicable only to one city; 65 N. W. Rep. (Ia.) 818; an act relating to the collection of taxes, cities of the first, second, and fourth class being excepted, and it not being confined to municipal matters; 171 Pa. 157.

The following are not within the constitutional prohibition: An act amending a city charter granted previously to the adoption of the constitution; 45 Pac. Rep. (Col.) 856; an act relating to a subject as to which there was already a local law; 96 Ga. 403; an act providing a per diem pay for jurors although it only applied to a single county in which there was already a special law, it being at the time of the passage of the act the existing rate in the remaining counties; 64 N. W. Rep. (Minn.) 813; an act making it a misdemeanor to work as a barber on Sunday, exempting from its operation New York and Saratoga; 13 Misc. 587; an act providing a different and better system of education for cities of ten thousand or more inhabitants than is enjoyed by the rest of the state; 13 Wash. 606.

A territorial act classifying counties according to the equalized assessed valuation of property and graduating salaries of county officers in reference to population is not a local special law under the act of congress; 162 U. S. 547.

The proviso of a general act that it shall not apply to suits pending at its passage does not render it special; 169 Pa. 359.

An act offering a reward for the first to obtain in each county an artesian well is void; 41 Pac. Rep. (Ari.) 299. At least two individuals, actual or potential, are necessary to constitute a class which may be the subject of an act on the subject concerning which special acts are forbidden; such a class cannot be created by statute, however general, which takes as a class characteristic, to designate the members of a class, peculiarities of a single individual; 42 W. Va. 587. An act forbidding a sale of stocks of bonds and provisions, cotton, etc., on margin without delivering the property is not a special act; 184 Mo. 512; but an act prohibiting book-making and pool-selling excepting on a race course is a special act; 136 Mo. 400; and so is an act permitting a limited divorce instead of an absolute divorce when asked by a person holding conscientious scruples against absolute divorce; 36 L. E. A. (N. J.) 221.

When there is a general act for the incorporation of companies with the right of amendment reserved to the state, any amendment thereto must affect all corporations incorporated under the act; 82 Fed. Rep. 1; and where it is limited to cities of a certain size whereby it can be applicable only to a certain city, it is special legislation and void; id.

Classification. Under modern constitutions which prohibit special legislation, it has been found necessary to permit of the classification of certain subjects of legislation, chiefly in relation to municipalities or what may be termed home rule.

Mr. Binney, in the work quoted, gives five rules as, in his opinion, supported by judicial decisions.

1. All classification must be based upon substantial distinctions which make one class really different from another.

2. The classification adopted in any law must be germane to the purpose of the law.

3. Classification must not be based upon existing circumstances only, or those of limited duration, except where the object of the law is itself a temporary one.

4. To whatever class a law may apply, it must apply equally to each member thereof, except only where its application is affected by the existence of prior unpealed local or special laws.

5. If the classification be valid, the number of members in a class is wholly immaterial.

While the classification of municipalities is permitted, it is held that not more than three classes can lawfully be made in cities in Pennsylvania; 122 Pa. 266; and that a classification, which is in effect legislation for certain cities to the exclusion of others which are really of the same class, is invalid; 96 Pa. 422.

A classification act may furnish a precedent for the legislature in future cases, but cannot control its action. The constitutionality of each law which establishes or adopts a classification must be judged of separately, and the mere fact that a classification has constitutionally been employed in one case does not bind the legislature to employ it again, even in a similar case; 25 Atl. Rep. (N. J.) 209.

Wheeler v. Philadelphia, 77 Pa. 338 (1875), is an early and leading case on classification. It holds that a statute which relates to persons or things as a class is a general law, while a statute which relates to particular persons or things of a class is special; that the necessity for classification is recognized in the constitution by the creation of courts on a basis of population and that classification is incident to legislation and necessary to the promotion of the public welfare; that the question is not whether it is authorized but whether it is expressly prohibited in the constitution. It further holds that, for the purpose of taxation, real estate may be classified; as into timber lands, mineral lands, farm lands, etc., and that the act of 1874, which classifies cities according to their population, is constitutional.

Where a federal statute has been taken from a state statute the settled construction of the latter before the enactment of the former must be considered as having been adopted by congress; 171 U. S.—not reported. So also of the Interstate Commerce Act, so far as it is based on English acts; 145 U. S. 263.

In a statute the words "it shall be lawful" are usually only permissive; they confer a faculty or power; but there may be something in the act imposing a duty to exercise such power, in which case the words become obligatory; 5 App. Cas. 222.

See 3 Binney for a list of British statutes in force in Pennsylvania. See Sanderson, Validity of Statutes in Pennsylvania; Endlich, Interp. of Statutes.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS. See FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

The statute of frauds "is a weapon of defence, not of offence," and "does not make any signed instrument a valid contract by reason of the signature, if it is not such according to the good faith and real intentions of the parties." Lord Selborne, C., in L. R. 8 Ch. 351.

STATUTE OF LABORERS. See LABORERS, STATUTES OF.

STATUTE LAW. Used as a general term, is synonymous with legislation, and refers to positive rules of conduct which are intended to be precisely worded and established by legislative bodies, or bodies or persons having legislative authority. Hicks, Mater. & Meth. Leg. Res. 51. Every word, phrase and sentence contained in a legislative enactment is supposed to have been chosen to express the exact intention of the law-maker. A statute, however, is rarely if ever complete in itself. It forms part of the whole mass of the law, both other statutes and case law (q. v.), and usually regulates part of a wider subject already governed by other laws with which it must not conflict. Id. See CASE LAW; COMMON LAW.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. See LIMITATIONS.

STATUTE MERCHANT. A security entered before the Mayor of London, or some chief warden of a city, in pursuance of 13 Ed. I. stat. 3, c. 1, whereby the lands of the debtor are conveyed to the creditor till out of the rents and profits of them his debt may be satisfied. 2 Bla. Com. 100.

STATUTE STAPLE. The statute of the staple, 27 Ed. III. stat. 2, confined the sale of all commodities to be exported to certain towns in England, called estaple or staple, where foreigners might resort. It authorized a security for money, commonly called statute staple, to be taken by traders for the benefit of commerce; the mayor of the place is entitled to take recognizance of a debt in proper form, which had the effect to convey the lands of the debtor to the creditor till out of the rents and profits of them he should be satisfied. 2 Bla. Com. 160; 3 Rolle, Abr. 446; Bac. Abr. Execution (B. 1); Co. 4th Inst. 238.

STATUTES AT LARGE. Statutes in full or at length as originally enacted, in distinction from abridgments, compilations, and revisions. In particular, the title of the publication containing, chiefly, the acts of congress—the United States, Statutes at Large. Anderson, L. Dict.

If there is any variance between an act of congress, as found in the printed volume of statutes, and the original, as enrolled and deposited with the secretary of state, the latter will prevail; 38 Pac. Rep. (Cal.) 973.

The United States Statutes at Large exhibit the legislation of the several Congresses from March 4, 1789, the day of the organization of the government and of the first meeting of the First Congress. Each volume after the eighth contains all matters in the nature of legislation ordained or enacted by the Congress or Congresses in session, or by the Administration in power, during the periods covered by the volumes respectively—general or public statutes, private acts, treaties with the Indian tribes and with foreign nations, postal, consular and other conventions, public proclamations by the President and by the heads of departments, Executive orders, resolutions by the Senate and House, etc. Anderson. See PAMPHLET LAWS.

STATUTI (Lat.). In Roman Law. Those advocates whose names were inscribed in the registers of matriculation, and formed a part of the college of advocates. The number of advocates of this class was limited. They were distinguished from the supernumeraries, from the time of Constantine to Justinian. See Calvinus, Lex.

STATUTORY OBLIGATION. An obligation arising under a statute. See OBLIGATION.

It may be either to pay money or to perform certain acts. The obligation does not usually attach until the happening of some event or the doing of some act by the party obliged. R. & L. Dict. See OBLIGATION.

STATUTORY STAPLE. An ancient writ that lay to take the body of a person and seize the lands and goods of one who had forfeited a bond called statute staple. Reg. Orig. 151.

STATUTUM DE MERCATORIBUS. The statute of Acton Burnell (q. v.).

STATUTUM DE NOVA CUSTUMIA. See CARTA MERCATORIA.

STATUTUM HIBERNIE DE COHEREDIBUS. The third public act in the statute book. It appears to be an instruction given by the king to his justices in Ireland, directing them how to proceed in a certain point where they entertained doubt. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. L. 259.

STATUTUM SESSIONUM. The Statute Sessions. A meeting in every hundred of constables and householders, by custom, for the ordering of servants, and debating of differences between masters and servants, rating of wages, etc., 5 Eliz. c. 4.

STAY AND TRADE. Within the meaning of an insurance policy, covering a ship during her stay and trade at a place these words were held to mean during her stay there for the purpose of trade; a stay for a purpose unconnected with trade is a deviation. 42 L. J. Ex. 60. See DEVIATION.

STAY LAWS. Acts of the legislature prescribing a stay in certain cases, or a stay of foreclosure of mortgages, or closing the courts for a limited period, or otherwise suspending legal remedies. See STAY OF EXECUTION.

STAY OF EXECUTION. In Practice. A term during which no execution can issue on a judgment.

It is either conventional, when the parties agree that no execution shall issue for a certain period, or it is granted by law, usually on condition of entering bail or security for the money.

An execution issued before the expiration of the stay is irregular and will be set aside; and the plaintiff in such case may be liable to an action for damages. What is said above refers to civil cases.

In criminal cases, when a woman is capitally convicted and she is proved to be enfeinte there shall be a stay of execution till after her delivery. See PREGNANCY; JURY OF WOMEN.

A statute which authorizes stay of execution for an unreasonable and indefinite period, on judgments rendered on pre-existing contracts, is void; 41 Pa. 441; 31 Mo. 205; a law permitting a year's stay upon judgments where security is given has been held invalid; 6 Heisk. 93; s. c. 19 Arn. Rep. 593. See Cooley, Const. Lim., 2d ed. 351, n.

STAYING PROCEEDINGS. The suspension of an action.

Proceedings are stayed absolutely or conditionally.

They are peremptorily stayed when the plaintiff is wholly incapacitated from suing; as, for example, when the plaintiff is not the holder, nor beneficially interested in a bill on which he has brought his action; 2 Cr. & M. 416; 3 Chitty, Pr. 638; or when the plaintiff admits in writing that he has no cause of action; 3 Chitty, Pr. 370, 630; or when an action is brought contrary to good faith; Tidd, Pr. 515, 529, 1134; 3 Chitty, Pr. 633.

Proceedings are sometimes stayed until some order of the court shall have been complied with; as, when the plaintiff resides in a foreign country or in another state, or is insolvent, and he has been ruled to give security for costs, the proceedings are stayed until such security shall be given; 3 Chitty, Pr. 633, 635; or until the payment of costs in a former action; 1 Chitty, Bail. 195.

STEALING. This term imports, ex vi termini, nearly the same as larceny; but in common parlance it does not always import a felony. 3 Wheel. Cr. Cas. 183.

In slander cases, it seems that the term stealing takes its complexion from the subject-matter to which it is applied, and will be considered as intended of a felonious stealing, if a felony could have been committed of such subject-matter; 13 Johns. 239; 3 Binn. 546. The word steal is held synonymous with theft. 9 Tex. App. 463. See 12 Tex. 450.

STEAMBOAT CHANNEL. Deepest part of the stream. 202 U. S. 49.

STEAMSHIP. A vessel, the principal motive power of which is steam and not sails. L. R. 7 Q. B. 569. See 32 Pa. 853. The owner of a steamboat is not an innkeeper so as to be liable for personal property stolen from a passenger. 118 Mass. 275. See SLEEPING-CAR; SHIP; VESSEL.

STEELBOW GOODS. Instruments of husbandry, cattle, corn, etc., delivered by a landlord to his tenant on condition that the like number of goods of like quality should be returned on expiration of the lease. Bell, Dict.; Stair, Inst. 285, § 81; Ersk. Inst. 2. 4. 2.

STELLIONATE. In Civil Law. A name given generally to all species of frauds committed in making contracts.

This word is said to be derived from the Latin stellio, a kind of lizard remarkable for its cunning and the change of its color, because those guilty of frauds used every art and cunning to conceal them. But more particularly it was the crime of a person who fraudulently assigned, sold, or engaged the thing which he had before assigned, sold, or engaged to another, unknown to the person with whom he was dealing. Dig. 47. 30. 3; Code 9. 34. 1; Merlin, Répert.; L. Civ. Code, art. 2099; 1 Brown, Civ. Law 426. As a punishment those persons who granted double conveyances were declared infamous and their lives and goods were at the mercy of the king. Ersk. Prin. 441.

STELLIONATUS (Lat. from stellio, a lizard). A general term used to denote all kinds of fraud and imposition which were not designated by any more special appellation. Burrill; Dig. 47. 20. The mortgaging or selling another's property as one's own, or the mortgaging one's property a second time without notice of the first mortgage, were acts of stellionatus, or stellionate (q. v.), as it is rendered in Scotch law. Id.

STENOGRAPHER. One who writes in short-hand, by using abbreviations or characters for words.

He does not come within the common-law definition of the word "clerk." 25 Neb. 662.

The depositions of witnesses taken in short-hand, and transcribed, will be suppressed, if not read to and signed by the witness, though the witness's subsequent attendance for the purpose could not be procured; 9 Fed. Rep. 754; but see contra, 79 Ill. 576, where it is held that the transcript of evidence taken in short-hand is admissible, where the stenographer testifies that he transcribed the testimony, and that the transcript is correct; that the witnesses were sworn and testified as therein stated. See also 43 Mich. 257. Where it is sought to impeach a witness's testimony by proving his testimony at a former trial, the stenographer is not the only witness who may be called, but any one who heard the testimony may be; 65 Me. 460; 35 S. C. 587.

A stenographic report of the testimony of an absent witness, at a former trial, may be admitted if complete and correct; 40 Fed. Rep. 361; or a copy of testimony compared with a stenographic report thereof, by a person who was present at the trial and remembers the testimony as given; 21 So. Rep. (Ala.) 328.

In Pennsylvania, where a stenographer is appointed under the provisions of an act of legislature authorizing the appointment of stenographers in the several courts of the commonwealth, the stenographer who actually takes the testimony must certify to the correctness of the transcript which he files, and the trial judge should order the transcript filed and certify to its correctness; 130 Pa. 161.

The charges of a stenographer are not taxable for costs in a suit in equity; 7 Fed. Rep. 42; but the agreement of the parties may make them taxable costs, though not so by statute; 1 Bingh. 345. See 10 Wash. L. Rep. 7; 61 Ill. 271; 44 Mich. 438.

Compensation for testimony taken before a referee is the subject of contract, as a stenographer is not then an officer of the court; 41 N. Y. S. 583; and the expense of a transcript of a stenographer's notes, for convenience, instead of use on the trial, is not taxable as costs; 8 U. S. App. 129.

An association of stenographers, whose leading object is to control the prices charged by its members, is an illegal combination, and its rules will not be enforced; 140 Ill. 69.

STEP-DAUGHTER. The daughter of one's wife by a former husband, or of one's husband by a former wife.

STEP-FATHER. The husband of one's mother by virtue of a marriage subsequent to that of which the person spoken of is the offspring.

STEP-MOTHER. The wife of one's father by virtue of a marriage subsequent to that of which the person spoken of is the offspring.

STEP-SON. The son of one's wife by a former husband, or of one's husband by a former wife.

STERE. A French measure of solidity, used in measuring wood. It is a cubic metre. See MEASURE.

STERILITY. Barrenness; incapacity to produce a child. It is curable and incurable; when of the latter kind at the time of the marriage, and arising from impotency, it is a good cause for dissolving a marriage. 1 Foderé, Méd. Lég. § 334. See IMPOTENCY.

STERLING. Current money of Great Britain, but anciently a small coin worth about one penny, and so called, as some suppose, because it was stamped with the figure of a small star, or, as others suppose, because it was first stamped in England in the reign of king John by merchants from Germany called Esterlings. Pounds sterling originally signified so many pounds in weight of these coins. Thus, we find in Matthew Paris, A. D. 1243, the expression Acceptit a rege pro stipendio triduum libras esterlingorum. The secondary or derived sense is a certain value in current money, whether in coins or other currency. Lowndes 14; Watts, Gloss. Sterling.

STET PROCESSUS (Lat.). In Practice. An order made, upon proper cause shown, that the process remain stationary. As, where a defendant having become insolvent would, by moving judgment in the case of nonsuit, compel a plaintiff to proceed, the court will, on an affidavit of the fact of insolvency, award a stet processus. See 7 Taunt. 180; 1 Chitty, Bail. 738; 10 Wentw. Pl. 43.

STEVEDORE. A person employed in loading and unloading vessels. Dunlap, Adm. Pract. 98. See LIENS.

STEWARD. Formerly an officer of disputes, namely, a keeper of the courts. Co. Litt. 61. See COURT OF MARSHALSEA.

Formerly was a term used to denote an officer of the English Crown, or of a feudal lord, who acted as keeper of a Court of justice; as, for example, the Lord High Steward; and there is still the Lord Steward of the Royal Household. At the present day, the only other important example of the office occurs in the case of manors, for every manor has a steward, appointed by the lord, who theoretically acts as judge of the Customary Court Baron and the Court Leet, and as registrar of the freeholders' Court Baron. Practically, however, his duties are rather ministerial than judicial, for his chief function is to receive surrenders and grant admittances to the copyhold lands of the manor, and keep the Court roll. Byrce.

Generally, a man appointed in the place or stead of another. It usually denotes a principal officer within his jurisdiction. Abbott.

STEWARD OF A MANOR. An officer who transacts all the legal and other business connected with the estate, and takes care of the court rolls. In royal manors he is appointed by patent. See 10 George IV. c. 40, § 14.

STEWARD OF ALL ENGLAND. In Old English Law. An officer who was invested with various powers; among others, to preside on the trial of peers.

STEWARD OF THE HOUSEHOLD. See MARSHALSEA.

STEW. Places formerly permitted in England to women of professed lewdness, who for hire would prostitute their bodies to all comers.

These places were so called because the dissolute persons who visited them prepared themselves by bathing,—the word stews being derived from the old French estuves, stove, or hot bath. Co. 3d Inst. 205.

STILL BEER. "Still beer," made of corn meal and molasses, is a primary mixture invented ordinarily for the production of a secondary product, like whisky. But still beer is fermented liquor, and may be used as a beverage, and in fact is sometimes so used by "moonshiners," while working around an illicit still. Thorpe, National and State Prohibition 157; 24 Ga. App. 239.

STILLICIDIUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. The rain-water that falls from the roof or eaves of a house by scattered drops. When it is gathered into a spout, it is is called fumen. See SERVITUS; Inst. 3. 2. 1; Dig. 8. 2. 2.

STINT. The proportionable part of a man's cattle which he may keep upon the common. The general rule is that the commoner shall not turn more cattle upon the common than are sufficient to manure and stock the land to which his right of common is annexed. There may be such a thing as common without stint or number; but this is seldom granted, and a grantee cannot grant it over. 3 Bla. Com. 289; 1 Ld. Raym. 407.

STIPEND. A provision made for the support of the clergy. Salary; settled pay. In a bequest of £100 for masses for the repose of the testator's soul, at a stipend of five shillings each, it was held to mean price and not to involve any attempt to create a perpetuity; 19 L. R. Q. B. 177.

STIPENDIARY ESTATES. Estates granted in return for services, generally of a military kind. 1 Steph. Comm. 174.

STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATES. Paid magistrates, appointed in London and some other municipal boroughs with the authority and jurisdiction of justices of the peace. 21 & 22 Vict. c. 73.

STIPULATED DAMAGE. See LITIGATED DAMAGE.

STIPULATIO (Lat.). In Roman Law. A contract made in the following manner: the person to whom the promise was to be made proposed a question to him from whom it was to proceed, fully expressing the nature and extent of the engagement; and, the question so proposed being answered in the affirmative, the obligation was complete. No consideration was required.

STIPULATIO AQUILIANA. In Civil Law. A particular application of the stipulatio, which was used to collect together into one verbal contract all the liabilities of every kind and quality of the debtor, with a view to their being released or discharged by an acceptilatio, that mode of discharge being applicable only to the verbal contract. Brown.

STIPULATION. A material article in an agreement.

The term appears to have derived its meaning from the use of stipulatio above given; though it is applied more correctly and more conformably to its original meaning to denote the insisting upon and requiring any particular engagement. 2 Pothier, Obl., Evans ed. 19.

In Practice. An agreement between counsel respecting business before a court. Anderson, L. Dict.

A case may be reversed on stipulation; 181 U. S. 428; 123 id. 619; 124 id. 869.

In Admiralty Practice. A recognition of certain persons (called in the old law fide jussores) in the nature of bail for the appearance of a defendant. 3 Bla. Com. 108.

These stipulations are of three sorts: namely, judicatum solvi, by which the party is absolutely bound to pay such sum as may be adjudged by the court; de iudicio sesti, by which he is bound to appear from time to time during the pendency of the suit, and to abide the sentence; de rato, or de rato, by which he engages to ratify the acts of his proctor: this stipulation is not usual in the admiralty courts of the United States.

The securities are taken in the following manner: namely, cautio fide jussoria, by sureties; pignoratitia, by deposit; juratoria, by oath: this security is given when the party is too poor to find sureties, at the discretion of the court; nuda promissoria, by bare promise: this security is unknown in the admiralty courts of the United States. Dunal Adm. Pr. 150.

STIPULATOR. In Roman law, the person who asked the question in the contract of stipulation, and to whom the promise was made. Hunter's Rom. L. 2nd ed., 460. See STIPULATIO; ASTIPULATOR;

PROMITTOR.

STIRPES (Lat.). Descents. The root-stem, or stock of a tree. Figuratively, it signifies in law that person from whom a family is descended, and also the kindred or family.

STOCK. In Mercantile Law. The capital of a merchant, tradesman, or other person, including his merchandise, money, and credits. The goods and wares he has for sale and traffic.

In Corporation Law. A right to partake, according to the amount of the party's subscription, of the surplus profits obtained from the use and disposal of the capital stock of the company. Ang. & A. Corp. § 537.

The capital stock of a corporation is that money or property which is put into a fund by those who, by subscription therefor, become members of the corporate body. 75 N. Y. 211. The phrase capital stock has been objected to, as the two words have separate meanings, capital being the sum subscribed and paid into the company, and stock being the thing which the subscriber receives for what he pays in; Dos Passos, St. Brokers 579. See 23 N. Y. 192. The interest which each person has in the corporation is termed share, which is the right to participate in the profits of the corporation, and, upon its dissolution, in the division of its assets. See 75 N. Y. 211. "Capital stock" has been held to mean the amount contributed by the shareholders, and not the property of the company; 23 N. J. L. 195.

Capital stock is the sum fixed by the corporate charter as the amount paid in or to be paid in by the stockholders for the prosecution of the business of the corporation and for the benefit of corporate creditors. Cook, St. & Stockh. § 9. It is to be clearly distinguished from the amount of property possessed by the corporation; id.

The property or means contributed by the stockholders as the fund or basis for the business or enterprise for which the corporation or association was formed. 21 Wall. 284. See definitions in 126 N. Y. 433; 30 Ark. 693; 10 Mo. App. 146. Capital stock is a different thing from shares of stock; the latter are evidences of ownership; 24 Atl. Rep. (Pa.) 111. Stock is commonly used to mean shares of stock, and it has been so held in a tax statute; 23 Atl. Rep. (Conn.) 9.

The capital stock of a corporation differs widely in legal import from the aggregate shares into which it is divided by its charter (85 U. S. 686; 126 N. Y. 437); while the former includes only the fund of money or other property derived by it from the sale or exchange of its shares of stock, the latter represents the totality of the corporate assets and property; 84 Fed. Rep. 396.

A share of stock is a right which its owner has in the management, profits, and ultimate assets of the corporation. Cook, St. & Stockh. § 12. So, also, 92 N. Y. 592; 3 Wall. 585. It is the right to participate in stockholders' meetings, and in the profits of the business, and to require that the corporate property shall not be diverted from the original purposes; 2 Woods 831.

The number of shares depends upon the statutory regulations, or in their absence the agreement of the parties forming the corporation; 45 Me. 524. Shares may be arranged in classes, one class being preferred to another in the distribution of profits; 78 N. Y. 159. Voting may be restricted to a certain class.

The ownership of shares is usually attested by a certificate issued under the corporate seal; and when a new transfer is effected, such certificate is surrendered and cancelled, and a new one is issued to the transferee. A certificate need not be under seal; 103 U. S. 409. But a person may be the owner of shares in a corporation without holding such certificate; 102 Mass. 281; see 84 Cal. 117; 40 Mo. 248; and, strictly speaking, a company need not issue any certificates or muniments of title, if not required to do so by law or its charter; 24 Me. 236. The presence of a party's name on the stock books of the company is evidence of his ownership of shares; 73 Pa. 59. The possession of a corporate certificate of stock, duly issued, is a continuing affirmation of ownership of the stock by the person named therein; 11 Wall. 869; which generally creates an estoppel against the company in favor of the holder; 57 N. Y. 616; though in England it is said to be merely a solemn affirmation that the specified amount of stock stands on the stock books in the name of the person specified in the certificate; L. R. 7 H. L. 496. Every stockholder is entitled to a certificate of his shares; 105 U. S. 217.

The stock of a national bank is said to be a species of chose in action, or an equitable interest which the shareholder possesses, and which he can enforce against the corporation. See 53 N. Y. 161, 237. "If a share in a bank is not a chose in action, it is in the nature of a chose in action, and is personal property;" per Shaw, C. J., in 12 Metc. 421. Shares are not, strictly speaking, chattels; they bear a greater resemblance to choses in action; or, in other words, they are merely evidence of property; Ang. & A. Corp. § 560. They are now universally considered to be personal property; Ang. & A. Corp. § 557; Moraw. Priv. Corp. 119, 200; though in some earlier cases it was held otherwise. See Cook, St. & Stockh. § 12, n. They are not a debt; Dos Passos, St. Brokers 590. Shares in a corporation are said to be incorporeal personal property; 16 La. 173, per Dillon, J. In Louisiana, stock is property and not a credit; 10 Fed. Rep. 330.

It is settled in England that shares in a joint-stock company are not goods, wares and merchandise within the statute of frauds; 11 A. & E. 205; it has been otherwise decided in Massachusetts; 20 Pick. 9, uniformly followed in this country; Cook, St. & Stockh. § 339.

Stock is issued for money, in payment for property or labor, or as a stock dividend. It is established in England that stock may be issued for property, and such was the common law; 106 Ill. 43. See 91 U. S. 60. The subject is usually regulated by statute in this country. Stock can be issued by way of a stock dividend, which "is lawful when an amount of money or property equal in value to the stock distributed as a dividend has been accumulated and is permanently added to the capital stock of the corporation." Cook, St. & Stockh. § 536.

It is generally held that stock cannot be issued at a discount, and made full paid; 139 U. S. 429; [1897] A. C. 299; 38 Ch. Div. 415; 2 De G. F. & J. 295; 11 Manitoba 629; but it has been held that an agreement with the company that the holders should never be called upon to pay any further assessment upon stock is valid as between the parties; 105 U. S. 148. See 86 N. Y. 384; L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 594.

Directors issued stock at a discount; its market price went above par. It was held that the issue was unlawful and that the directors were liable, but only for the difference between the price at which they issued it and its par value; [1894] A. C. 654.

Where stock is issued for property which is overvalued, the transaction may be set aside for fraud; 8 Dill. 45; 59 Md. 1; 14 Fed. Rep. 12. The corporation, after issuing its stock as full paid cannot complain; 105 U. S. 143; unless the entire transaction is such that equity will rescind it for actual fraud. See, as to overvaluing property, 7 Am. & E. Corp. Cas. 652; 92 Ala. 407.

It has been held that a railroad company in need of funds may settle with a contractor by issuing stock to him as full-paid at twenty cents on the dollar, and that creditors of the company could not afterwards collect the difference between that and par; 139 U. S. 96. This decision has been much criticised. The same court said subsequently, in 144 U. S. 104, that "the trust arising in favor of creditors by subscription to the stock of a corporation cannot be defeated by a stipulated payment of such a subscription nor by any device short of actual payment in good faith."

While any settlement might be good between the corporation and the stockholders it is unavailing against creditors. As against creditors, a corporation cannot give away its stock or distribute it among shareholders, without receiving a fair equivalent therefor; 189 U. S. 417.

A contract by which directors of a street-railway company, acting in the name of a third person, are to construct the road, and divide between them the stock and bonds not required therefor, is fraudulent, and bonds issued pursuant thereto are void; 62 Fed. Rep. 355.

A corporation has no power, in the absence of statutory authority, to increase or diminish its capital stock; 105 U. S. 148; 6 Pick. 23; 73 Ala. 325; 87 Fed. Rep. 508.

As to overissue of corporation shares, see 30 Cent. Law J. 52; OVERISSUE.

Transfer. A certificate of stock is transferable on the books of the company by the owner in person or by his attorney under written authority, which is commonly executed in blank and which may be filled up by the transferee; Ang. & A. Corp. § 564; Beach, Priv. Corp. 648; 34 N. Y. 30; 50 Pa. 67. A transfer in blank is deemed sufficient in some jurisdictions to pass the legal title to the stock subject to the claims of the company upon the registered stockholders; 2 Ames, B. & N. 764; 76 N. Y. 365; 10 Ala. 82; in other cases such a transfer has been held to give the holder merely an equitable interest; 3 How. 488; 5 Bias. 181. Prof. Ames is of opinion that the true view is that such a transfer does not pass the legal title, but that it passes the equitable interest, coupled with an irrevocable power of attorney to acquire the legal title; 2 Ames, B. & N. 764. This irrevocable power may, in some cases, by the doctrine of estoppel, be acquired by the delivery of the certificate from one who has no such power himself; 48 Cal. 99; 14 Nev. 362; 86 Pa. 80; 46 N. Y. 325. A seal is not necessary; 10 Mass. 476; though usually employed.

Shares of stock are non-negotiable instruments, but through the doctrine of estoppel, stock certificates, with a power to transfer them, can be dealt in with nearly the same immunity as bills and notes; Dos Passos, Stock Brokers 596; and the same writer is of opinion that the time has come for the court to receive evidence of the general usage of the business world, so as to raise stock certificates to the dignity of negotiable instruments; id. 597; but see 2 W. N. C. (Pa.) 823, where evidence of such a usage was rejected; see, also, 86 Pa. 98. Professor Ames says (2 Bills & Notes 784): "Whether the custom of merchants will ever lead the courts to give those instruments (certificates of stock) the quality of negotiability may be an open question; but that they have not done so is clear." See 28 N. Y. 600; 86 Pa. 83; 14 Am. L. Reg. N. s. 168, n. In 11 Wall. 369, the court said that certificates, "although neither in form or character negotiable paper, approximate it as nearly as practicable."

In case of the sale of the stock this power of attorney becomes irrevocable; 14 Md. 299; but if such a power of attorney is forged or is made by a person not competent to make it, the corporation is liable for allowing the transfer; 14 Md. 299. See 86 Pa. 80; 123 Mass. 110. A company may refuse to allow a transfer until satisfied of the party's right to make it; L. R. 9 Eq. 181; 52 Pa. 233; 5 S. C. 379.

A company is bound to require the surrender of the old certificate before allowing a transfer, and may refuse to act till it is surrendered; 31 Ohio St. 231; where a certificate cannot be found the company may refuse a new one or to make a transfer without proper indemnity, unless it be a clear case of loss; 56 Tex. 369.

In a joint stock corporation, each stockholder, whether by purchase or original subscription, has the right, unless restrained by the charter or articles of association, to sell and transfer his shares, and, by transferring them, to introduce others in his stead; 181 U. S. 246.

In a wrongful refusal to transfer the party may apply for a mandamus to make the transfer, or sue in equity for a decree of transfer, or for damages if a transfer is impossible, or bring an action at law for damages.

It is said that the rules for the protection of bona fide purchasers are based on estoppel, which extends not only against previous owners, but against the corporation itself. It is said that the doctrine is being extended and that it may in time render certificates of stock more negotiable than negotiable instruments themselves; Cook, St. & Stockh. § 416; but it is also held that, as a certificate of stock is not negotiable either in form or character, whoever takes it, does so subject to its equities and burdens like every non-negotiable paper; and though ignorant of such equities and burdens, his ignorance does not enable him to hold it discharged therefrom; 194 U. S. 401.

English courts will not follow the American rule as to the negotiability of certificates transferred in blank, and a purchaser is not protected till the transfer is made on the books of the company; L. R. 23 Ch. D. 830; even after deposit of the certificate with the company for transfer, and its acceptance by the company the owner may reclaim the stock; 64 L. T. Rep. 456.

Where the registered owner of shares delivered his certificate to a broker with a blank transfer signed by him, and the broker improperly deposited the certificate and blank transfer with a third party as security for his debt; and the third party filled up the blank transfer and had the stock transferred on the books of the company, which latter had no notice of any irregularity, it was held that such third party had acquired no title to the shares against the owner; 64 L. J. Ch. 473.

A business corporation cannot make it a condition of transferring stock that the holder shall first have offered it to the directors, and shall have paid all his indebtedness to the corporation; 118 Mo. 447.

The unregistered pledgee of stock has priority over a subsequent attaching creditor; 43 S. W. Rep. (Tex.) 896; the same rule obtains in New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, South Carolina, Kentucky, Louisiana, Minnesota, and most other states except Connecticut; and in the federal courts, see Cook, St. & Stockh. § 487; 5 Fed. Rep. 369; 15 id. 494; but see 5 Blatch. 69.

Stock certificates may be attached in a state other than the home state of the company; 79 Fed. Rep. 228.

Preferred stock entitles the holder to a priority in the dividends or earnings, over common stock. Guaranteed stock is the same thing; 8 R. I. 310.

A corporation may issue preferred stock, in the absence of any prohibition; 86 Fed. Rep. 930; [1897] 1 Ch. 361; 81 Mich. 76; 78 N. Y. 159; provision therefore is often contained in the by-laws. If there is no provision in the charter or the law, unanimous consent of stockholders is required; Lind. Comp. 396; 31 Mich. 76. After a company has been organized, and all or a part of the stock issued, preferred stock cannot be issued against the objection of minority holders of common stock; 4 De G. J. & S. 673; 78 N. Y. 159; Cook, St. & Stockh. § 268; its issue will be enjoined in such case; 82 L. J. Ch. 711. But see 2 De G. & S., where an injunction was refused at the suit of five dissenting stockholders, the court declining, however, to declare the issue legal. An objecting stockholder must seek relief promptly; 78 N. Y. 159; 18 Fed. Rep. 152. Legislative power to issue preferred stock may be granted subsequently to the organization of the corporation; 10 Bush 69; 35 Vt. 536. The terms or provision under which preferred stock is issued are matters of contract, to be gathered from the charter, by-laws, votes of stockholders, or directors, etc.; 17 Wall. 96; L. R. 20 Eq. 556; 194 N. Y. 197; 78 Va. 501.

There is no condition implied in a memcrandum of association of a company that all shareholders are to be on an equality and a company whose memorandum and original articles do not authorize the issue of preference shares, can alter its articles so as to do so; [1897] 1 Ch. 361.

The holder of preferred stock is not a creditor of the corporation; 23 Wall. 186; 78 Fed. Rep. 634; 77 Me. 445; 34 N. E. Rep. (Ohio) 496; 61 L. J. Rep. 631; creditors have a priority over preferred stockholders; 108 U. S. 389; 55 Vt. 110. Preferred stock cannot be given a lien on the property; 1 Ohio 331. But it seems to have been held that a mortgage to secure preferred stock is valid. See 78 Va. 501; 34 N. E. Rep. (Ohio) 496.

Preferred stockholders are entitled to dividends only from net earnings; 31 Mich. 76; 108 U. S. 389; Moraw. Pr. Corp. 457; an engagement to pay dividends when not earned, or out of capital, is void; L. R. 22 Ch. D. 349; 63 Pa. 136; though they may be paid out of gross earnings, if the statute so directs; 78 Va. 501.

But dividends may be paid though the company have a floating debt; 79 Me. 461; but see 55 Vt. 110. The directors may ordinarily exercise a reasonable discretion as to declaring dividends, even though there be net earnings applicable thereto; 119 U. S. 396; but if they act oppressively, equity will interfere; 79 Me. 411.

Undeclared dividends (arrearages of net earnings) pass with the transfer of preferred stock to the transferee; Cook, St. & Stockh. § 275; 24 Hun 360.

In the absence of anything to the contrary, preferred stock shares equally with common, upon a dissolution of the corporation; L. R. 5 Eq. 510; otherwise, if provided by the charter, a statute, or by the contract; L. R. 20 Eq. 59. See 33 N. J. Eq. 181, where a preference was given by statute.

Where the memorandum of association provided that preference shares should receive "out of the net profits of each year" a dividend of ten per cent., it was held that they were not entitled to cumulative dividends; [1896] 2 Ch. 203.

In the absence of anything to the contrary, dividends will be taken to be cumulative; 77 Pa. 331; 84 N. Y. 157; L. R. 3 Eq. 356; 1 De G. & J. 606.

As to a peculiar issue of deferred stock, see 39 Leg. Int. 99 (S. C. Pa.). The term is sometimes used in contra-distinction to preferred stock to indicate stock which receives a dividend only after the payment of a dividend on preferred stock.

"Special stock" is issued by corporations in Massachusetts. It is limited to two-fifths of the actual capital; it is subject to redemption at a fixed time; the holder is entitled to a half-yearly dividend, as upon a debt; the holders are not liable for the debts of the company, and the general stockholders are liable for all the debts until the special stock is redeemed. See Cook, St. & Stockh. §§ 13, 376.

Interest bearing stock has been recognized by the courts. The contract to pay interest is lawful only when interest is to be paid out of net earnings; 40 Pa. 237; 89 Mass. 572; and in this view is merely a species of preferred stock.

See DIVIDENDS; VOTING TRUST; OVER-ISSUE; STOCKHOLDER; CORPORATIONS; FOUNDERS' SHARES; PARTNERS; CAPITAL STOCK; CERTIFICATES OF STOCK; DEBENTURE STOCK; FOR THE ACCOUNT, SELLING.

Bond Dividend. A dividend paid by a corporation in the form of bonds. 6 Fletch. Corp. § 3679. See DIVIDEND.

Bonus Stock. Stock that is issued gratuitously, but as an inducement, rather than as a gift. The term is sometimes applied to shares of stock that are actually donated, but strictly speaking, it designates stock offered as an inducement to the purchasers either of bonds or loan money or other stock of a corporation. 4 Thomp. Corp. 2nd ed. § 3444. See Bonus Bonds.

Common Stock. The stock generally issued by private corporations entitling its owners to an equal pro rata division of profits, if there are any, and to a pro rata participation in the management of the corporation. 4 Thomp. Corp. 2nd ed., § 3426.

Convertible Stock. A type of preferred stock (q. v.) which is redeemable either in bonds, common stock, or in cash, at the option of the holder. 4 Thomp. Corp. 2nd ed., § 3433.

Deferred Stock. That upon which payment of dividends or interest is expressly postponed until the owners of some other class or classes of stocks have been paid. The opposite of preferred stock (q. v.). 4 Thomp. Corp. 2nd ed., § 3438.

Descents. A metaphorical expression which designates in the genealogy of a family the person from whom others are descended: those persons who have so descended are called branches. See 1 Roper, Leg. 103; 2 Belt. Suppl. Ves. 307; BRANCH; DESCENT; LINE; STIRPES.

Dividend Stock. Surplus shares of stock issued by a corporation as dividends, called stock dividends; legal if an amount of money or property equivalent in value to the full par value of the stock so issued has been accumulated and permanently added to the capital of the corporation; may be illegal if the issue is a mere inflation, with no corresponding values to answer to the stock distributed. 4 Thomp. Corp. 2nd ed., § 3437. See under this head, WATERED STOCK; see also DIVIDEND.

English Law. In reference to the investment of money, the term "stock" implies those sums of money contributed towards raising a fund whereby certain objects, as of trade and commerce, may be effected. It is also employed to denote the moneys advanced to government, which constitute a part of the national debt, whereupon a certain amount of interest is payable. Since the introduction of the system of borrowing upon interminable annuities, the meaning of the word "stock" has become gradually changed; and, instead of signifying the security upon which loans are advanced, it has for a long time signified the principal of the loans themselves. In this latter sense we speak of the sale, purchase, and transfer of stock; Moz. & W. See Cavanaugh, Money Securities.

Stock, in England, signifies a number of paid-up shares, so united that the owner may subdivide it and transfer it in large or small quantities, irrespective of the number and par value of the shares; Cook, St. & Stockh. § 12. Stock can only exist in the paid-up state; L. R. 7 H. L. 717.

Debenture stock "is merely borrowed capital consolidated into one mass for the sake of convenience. Instead of each lender having a separate bond or mortgage, he has a certificate entitling him to a certain sum, being part of one large loan." Lindl. Companies 195. It has no connection with stock as commonly used in this country. See Simonson, Deb. & Deb. St.

Farm Stock. See FENCES; RUNNING AT LARGE.

Fictitious Stock. A type of watered stock (q. v.). Stock that is issued as fully paid when in fact only a small part of the par value has been paid; the difference between the stock actually paid for and the sum total of the stock issued. Void under constitutional and statutory provisions. 4 Thomp. Corp. 2nd ed., § 3445.

Founders' Stock. Common in England. Such stock as is issued to promoters or founders of a corporation, commonly used as compensation to the promoters, or to others who have given their names and influence in assisting in putting the corporation on its feet. 4 Thomp. Corp. 2nd ed., § 3440.

Analogous to our promotion stock (q. v.).

Full-Paid Stock. Stock, of any class, that is fully paid for. 4 Thomp. Corp. 2nd ed., § 3431.

Guaranteed Stock. Stock of one corporation the dividends on which are guaranteed by another corporation.

Or it may be used simply as a synonymous term for preferred stock (q. v.). 4 Thomp. Corp. 2nd ed. § 3430.

Interest-Bearing Stock. Stock issued by a corporation under an agreement to pay a certain rate of interest thereon; closely related in meaning to preferred stock (q. v.), for which it might be said to be simply another name. 4 Thomp. Corp. 2nd ed. § 3429.

Issued and Outstanding Stock. That part of the capital stock of a corporation which has been bought and paid for, whether certificates have been issued or not, including both common and preferred stock, or any other class of stock that has been actually issued. 4 Thomp. Corp. 2nd ed. § 3434.

Overissued Stock. Such as is issued beyond the authorized amount, the certificates representing which are spurious and void, whether the overissue is a result of accident, mistake, or ignorance, or whether it is done with fraudulent intent. 4 Thomp. Corp. 2nd ed. § 3442.

Promotion Stock. Of a mining company, "such stock as is issued to those who may originally own the mining ground or valuable rights connected therewith, in consideration of their deeding the same to the mining company when the company is incorporated, or it may mean such stock as is issued to promoters or those in some way interested in the company, for incorporating the company, or for services rendered in launching or promoting the welfare of the company, such as advancing the fees for incorporating, attorney's fees, surveying, advertising, etc. 5 Fletch. Corp. § 3422; 32 Nev. 474.

Analogous to founders' stock (q. v.) of English corporations.

Scrip. A writing or certificate issued to shareholders of a corporation in lieu of a dividend, entitling them to money, stock, bonds, land, or other benefit at some future time, resorted to when a company has profits, but not in cash. 6 Fletch. Corp. § 3679. Called scrip dividend or scrip stock. 4 Thomp. Corp. 2nd ed. § 3439. See DIVIDEND.

Stock Dividend. See under this head, DIVIDEND STOCK; see also DIVIDEND.

Treasury Stock. That which is returned by the person to whom it is issued to the corporation as a gift to sell the same and put the proceeds in the corporate treasury as working capital. 5 Fletch. Corp. § 3421 n.; 156 Ill. App. 517.

Underwriting of Stock. Either a guaranty on the part of some responsible person to take stock that may not be subscribed by the public within a required time, or an agreement with the subscriber that under certain contingencies, or at the option of the subscriber, the underwriter will at some future time relieve him of a part or all the shares taken by him. 4 Thomp. Corp. 2nd ed. § 3441.

Unissued Stock. That part of the authorized capital stock of a corporation which has not been exchanged for a consideration, and in which no person has yet acquired property rights. It merely represents the right to admit new stockholders, and has no value in itself. It has no active stock rights, and is not an asset of a corporation. 4 Thomp. Corp. 2nd ed. § 3435.

Watered Stock. Stock that does not represent money or its equivalent actually received or secured to a corporation as capital. Issued in various ways, either gratuitously under an agreement that nothing at all shall be paid into the corporation therefor; or upon payment of, or an agreement to pay, less than its par value in money, or for cash at a discount; or in payment for property, labor or services, the value of which is less than the par value of the shares; or in the guise of a stock dividend (q. v.), supposed to represent surplus profits or an increase in the value of property, when there are not sufficient profits or a sufficient increase in values to justify it. 5 Fletch. Corp. § 3517.

STOCK ASSOCIATION. A "joint-stock association" or "company" is a union of persons owning a capital stock devoted to a common purpose, under an organization analogous to that of a corporation; or, it is a body upon which some of the privileges or powers of a corporation have been conferred. A "joint-stock corporation" is a fully incorporated body, owning and managing a stock capital. Anderson.

A "joint-stock company" is a partnership with shares of capital transferable without the express consent of all the partners; that is no delectus personarum exists. Id.; 1 Pars. Cont. 121. See JOINT STOCK COMPANY.

STOCK-BROKER. See BROKER.

STOCK CERTIFICATE. See STOCK.

STOCK DIVIDEND. See STOCK; DIVIDEND.

STOCK EXCHANGE. A building or room in which stock-brokers meet to transact their business of purchasing or selling stocks.

A voluntary association (usually unincorporated) of persons who, for convenience in the transaction of business with each other, have associated themselves to provide a common place for the transaction of their business. See Dos Passos, St. Brok. 14; Biddle, St. Brok. 40, 43; 2 Brewst. 571; 2 Daly 329. It is usually not a corporation, and in such case it is not a partnership. In the absence of a statute its real estate is held by all the members in the same way as partnership real estate. At common law, all the members had to be joined in a suit; Dicey, Parties, 2d Am. ed. 148, 266; 44 Conn. 259; though actions have been sustained against the exchange as a body; 2 Brewst. 571; 9 W. N. C. (Pa.) 441.

The members may make such reasonable regulations for the government of the body as they may think best; see 24 Barb. 570; such rules bind the members assenting to them; 4 Abb. Pr. N. s. 162; but their personal assent must appear; 18 N. Y. 112; it may be inferred from circumstances, as from their admissions and acting as members; L. R. 5 Eq. 63; 25 Mo. 593; and a member is bound by a by-law passed during his membership, whether he votes for it or not; 8 W. N. C. (Pa.) 461. It is said that the courts will prevent the interference with a member's rights in an unincorporated association where the latter is acting under a by-law which is unreasonable or contrary to public policy; Dos Passos, St. Brok. 30; 4 Abb. Pr. N. s. 162; 47 Wisc. 670; but see 60 Ill. 134.

Stock Exchange, seat in. Members of a stock exchange are entitled to what is known as a seat. Seats are held subject to the rules of the exchange. They are a species of incorporeal property—a personal, individual right to exercise a certain, calling in a certain place, but without the attributes of descendibility or assignability, which are characteristic of other species of property; Dos Passos, St. Brok. 87; Biddle, St. Brok. 50. There has been much controversy as to whether a seat can be reached by an execution. A late writer considers the following as settled: "1. In the disposition of a seat or the proceeds thereof, the members of the exchange will be preferred to outside creditors. 2. The seat is not the subject of seizure and sale on attachment and execution. 3. The proceeds of the seat, in the hands of the exchange, are capable of being reached, after members' claims have been satisfied, to the same extent and in the same manner as any other money or property of a debtor. 4. A person owning a seat in the exchange can be compelled, by proceedings subsequent to execution, or under the direction of a receiver, to sell his seat to a person acceptable to the exchange, and devote the proceeds to the satisfaction of his judgment debts." Dos Passos, St. Brok. 96. See 5 W. N. C. (Pa.) 86; 94 U. S. 525; 20 Alb. L. J. 414; 9 Reporter 303; 78 Cal. 351. In 142 U. S. 1, it was held that a seat in a stock exchange is property, and passes to assignees in bankruptcy subject to the rules of the stock board. See 105 U. S. 126; 89 N. Y. 328; 109 id. 593; 110 Ill. 146.

Stock exchange rules usually provide that seats are liable first to pay the members' debts to a fellow-member, or a firm of which the latter is a member; and also for arbitration committees to settle differences between members; 180 Pa. 289.

A regular register of all the transactions is kept by an officer of the association, and questions arising between the members are generally decided by an arbitration committee. The official record of sales is the best evidence of the price of any stock on any particular day. The stocks dealt in at the sessions of the board are those which are placed on the list by a regular vote of the association; and when it is proposed to add a stock to the list, a committee is appointed to examine into the matter, and the board is generally guided by the report of such committee.

See Brodhurst, Law & Pr. of Stock Exchange (London).

STOCK INSURANCE COMPANIES. See MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

STOCK-JOBBER. A dealer in stock; one who buys and sells stock on his own account on speculation.

According to English writers, the members of the stock exchange are called "jobbers" and "brokers." The jobber is the dealer, who buys and sells at the market prices, and acts as an intermediary between the broker who buys and the broker who sells. The broker, on behalf of his principal, deals with the jobber. Abbott. See BROKER.

STOCK NOTES. This term has no technical meaning and may as well apply to a note given on the sale of stock which the bank had purchased or taken in the payment of doubtful debts as to a note given on account of an original subscription to stock. 12 Ill. 402.

STOCK ORDER. The order in chancery to prevent drawing out a fund in court to the prejudice of an assignee or lienholder. See STOP ORDER.

STOCK YARDS. A stock yard is primarily an inclosure in which cattle are temporarily confined for the purpose of either sale or shipment. The immense business carried on in the great stock yards of the United States is of recent growth, and the law relating thereto is still in rather a crude and formative state. 26 Am. & Eng. Encyc. 2nd ed., 1074; 43 N. J. Eq. 71. Some of the earlier cases were based upon the assumption that there was a close resemblance between a stock yard and railroad or canal company in their character as common carriers, both in respect of the powers which each might exercise and the duties which they were bound to perform for the public. But later cases have denied the existence of any such resemblance and have considered the legal principles commonly applied to warehousemen, rather than those governing common carriers, as applicable to the business done by stock yards. Id.; 43 N. J. Eq. 71. It has been held that the fact that the business of a given stock yard has become so great as to influence the trade of a large section of country does not make it a public market or impress it with a public use, in the absence of a declaration by the legislature that it is of such public character. Id.; 143 Ill. 210.

Because of the immense proportions to which the business has attained in some of the larger cities of the United States and because of the very extensive area of country affected thereby, attempts have been made to bring stock yards within the purview of the acts regulating commerce between the states. But it has been held that the fact that a stock yard is located in two adjoining states and that cattle are herded on both sides of the state line and are driven to and fro across the line does not make the business of such stock yard interstate commerce. Id.; 171 U. S. 578; and that a live-stock exchange, the business of whose members is to receive consignments of cattle and other live stock from owners in various states and territories, is not engaged in interstate commerce merely because the cattle traded in come from several states into the state where the exchange does business. Id. p. 1075.

STOCKHOLDER. One who has property interests in the assets of a corporation and who is entitled to take part in its control and receive its dividends. 87 Fed. Rep. 816. The word includes all members having a direct financial interest in the business of the corporation with power to participate in the profits and in the conduct of its affairs, though they hold no shares; 52 Mo. App. 104. The government may be a stockholder, and when it assumes this relation, it divests itself to that extent of its sovereign character; the same is true of a state; Field, Corp. § 52; and of a municipal corporation, if it has legislative power; id. At common law the members of a corporation are not liable for the debts of a corporation; 10 Wall. 575; 24 Cal. 540; Thomp. Liab. of Stockh. § 4; nor liable on their subscriptions, it is said, until the full capital stock is subscribed; 6 Wash. 134. After shares are legally full paid, no further payments can be required; 63 Mass. 192; 24 Cal. 540; unless provided by statute, as is done to a certain extent in some states. The holders of full-paid stock in an insolvent national bank are liable to creditors for a further assessment to the extent of the par value of the stock.

The legislature cannot, after the purchase of stock, impose any additional liability unless it has reserved the power to alter the charter. Statutes have been passed in many states by which stockholders are liable under certain circumstances. The statutes are too various to be treated here. They may be liable in equity when they have assets of the corporation which they ought not to retain. So they may be liable when they have subscribed to the capital stock of the corporation which they have not paid in. The capital stock in such cases is usually said to be a trust fund for the benefit of creditors; 91 U. S. 56. The cases in which this doctrine has most frequently been applied have arisen out of suits brought to compel stockholders to pay the amounts unpaid upon their stock subscriptions.

The original holder of stock in a corporation is liable for unpaid instalments of stock without an express promise to pay, and a contract between him and the corporation or its agent limiting his liability is void as to creditors for the assignee in bankruptcy of the corporation. Representations made to the stockholder by an agent of the corporation as the non-assessability of stock beyond a certain per cent of its par value, constitute no defence to an action against the stockholder to enforce payment of the amount subscribed. The legal effect of the word "non-assessable" in the certificate is at most a stipulation against further assessments after the face value of the stock is paid; 91 U. S. 45. The transferee of stock, when the transfer was duly registered, is liable in the same way upon his implied promise; 91 U. S. 65. So where the holder of shares had procured a transfer to his name, he was held liable for unpaid instalments, though he held the stock only as collateral security for debts due him by the transferee of the stock; 90 U. S. 338. Where certificates of stock had on their face a condition that the residue of eighty per cent. unpaid to the stock was to be paid on the call of the directors, when ordered by a vote of a majority of the stockholders, it was held that the absence of a call was no defence to an action for the residue by an assignee of the corporation in bankruptcy; 3 Diss. 417. Agreements of members among themselves that stock shall be considered as "fully paid" are invalid; L. R. 15 Eq. 407. A corporation may, however, take in payment of its shares any property which it may lawfully purchase; Thomps. Liab. of Stockh. § 134; Moraw. Priv. Corp. 435; and stock issued therefor as full paid will be so considered; 7 Cent. L. J. 430 (C. C. U. S.).

A call by the proper authorities is ordinarily held to be necessary to fix the liability of a stockholder for unpaid installments; 43 N. J. L. 443; 31 Ill. 276; L. R. 1 Ch. App. 345; but it is held that a suit may be brought without a call; 67 N. Y. 300; and when a receiver has been appointed the call is made by a decree of the court; 105 U. S. 143.

Ever since the case of Sawyer v. Hoag, 17 Wall. 610, it has been the settled doctrine of this court that the capital stock of an insolvent corporation is a trust fund for the payment of its debts; that the law implies a promise by the original subscribers of stock, who did not pay for it in money or other property, to pay for the same when called upon by creditors; and that a contract between themselves and the corporation that the stock shall be treated as fully paid and non-assessable, or otherwise limiting their liability therefor, is void as against creditors." 139 U. S. 417. Cases to the same effect are 99 N. C. 501; 76 Ga. 360; 139 U. S. 118; 144 id. 104; 140 id. 618; 148 id. 603; but in 139 id. 96 it was said, quoting from Sawyer v. Hoag, that the capital stock of a corporation is a trust fund only sub modo. In 150 U. S. 371, the expression "trust fund" was qualified by a statement that it had not been intended "to convey the idea that there was any direct and express trust attached to the property." In 154 Ill. 44, it was called a quasi-trust fund, and Pomeroy [Eq. Jur. 1046] says that such assets do not in any true sense constitute a trust and are called so only through analogy or metaphor.

In an able article in 34 Am. L. Reg. 448 [1895], George Wharton Pepper strongly objects to the expression "trust fund" and considers that the trust theory is untenable. He quotes Mr. Justice Bradley in 102 U. S. 148, where he says that the conception is at war with notions which we derive from English law with regard to the nature of corporate bodies.

The same writer is of the opinion that the expression "trust fund" is one which is applied by American courts to the judicial recognition of the demand of the commercial world, which is in substance that the liability of a stockholder shall be unlimited up to the par value of his shares and he shall not be entitled to any legal principle which would entitle him to advantage against corporate creditors.

The trust fund doctrine as to the assets of an insolvent corporation appears to have been first announced by Judge Story in 3 Mas. 308. Judge Thompson considers it "the only doctrine worthy of respect"; 5 Thomp. Corp. § 5115. It was repudiated in 14 N. E. Rep. (Ind.) 810; 21 S. E. Rep. (N. C.) 951; 17 S. E. Rep. (Ala.) 525.

A holder of stock in trust is subject to assessment; 44 Conn. 582; L. R. 9 Eq. 175, 363 (but the cestui que trust is not; id.; even if he is a trustee of the corporation itself; 18 N. Y. 226; 46 Pa. 48); but it is otherwise as to the holder of national bank stock; R. S. § 5152; if his name appears on the books as trustee; 36 Fed. Rep. 868. It is held that a cestui que trust is bound to indemnify his trustee; L. R. 18 Eq. 16; but this cannot be generally true.

A pledgee who has transferred the stock to his own name is liable to assessment; 96 U. S. 328; but not, it is held, when he has placed it in the name of an irresponsible third party; 111 U. S. 470.

A pledgee of national bank stock is not liable for assessments, except by estoppel; 66 Fed. Rep. 1006; 58 id. 650.

Where stock stands in the name of an agent, either the principal or the agent may be assessed; Cook, St. & Stockh. § 240.

Where one has been induced by fraud to buy national bank stock, takes a transfer, and, upon discovering the fraud, takes steps, at once, to rescind the transaction, he is not liable to assessment except as to one who extended credit to the bank without notice of the fraud; 83 Fed. Rep. 449.

A corporate creditor cannot proceed directly against stockholders to recover unpaid subscriptions till he shall have obtained a judgment against the corporation and an execution thereon shall have been returned unsatisfied; 95 U. S. 628; 35 N. J. Eq. 501; 55 Wis. 508. The remedy may be in some states by garnishment under the judgment against the company; but more commonly it is by bill in equity and a receiver. It is held that the remedy of a creditor against a stockholder is in equity alone; 53 Ala. 191; 101 U. S. 216. In equity the court decrees a call and the receiver collects the amount. The court may decree payment in full, leaving the stockholders to seek contribution among themselves; Cook, St. & Stockh. § 211.

In an action to enforce the payment of an assessment on unpaid stock, on behalf of creditors, a stockholder cannot set off a claim against the corporation; 139 U. S. 417; L. R. 1 Ch. 528; 110 Ill. 316; otherwise, if the corporation itself sues; L. R. 19 Eq. 448. In New York there is a right of set-off at law against a corporation creditor, but not in equity; 43 Hun 362.

A subscriber cannot set up against an action for calls that the corporation was not lawfully organized, if he is a director and was one of the original incorporators; 18 N. Y. L. J. (Dec. 9, 1897); s. c. 22 N. Y. App. Div. 1.

The better opinion is said to be that the statute of limitation begins to run only when a call has been made and payment thereunder is due; Cook, St. & Stockh. § 195; or from the order of court making the assessment; 145 U. S. 507. It is held to run from the date of an assignment for creditors by the company; 7 Atl. Rep. (Pa.) 611; and in 50 N. W. Rep. (Ia.) 891, when the subscription is made; so also 41 Hun 545; though where a creditor sues it does not run till he secures judgment; 36 Hun 334.

Statutes in various states provide for a forfeiture of stock for non-payment of subscriptions, and a sale. This right does not exist without a statute; nor can it be created by a mere by-law; but it may be by the consent of the stockholder if expressed on the face of his certificate; Cook, St. & Stockh. § 122; the remedy by forfeiture, when given, is in addition to the ordinary common-law remedies; id. § 124.

See Thomp. Liab. of Stockh.; 81 Am. Rep. 88; 15 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 648.

In order to constitute one a shareholder, it is not necessary that a certificate should have been issued to him; 32 Ind. 393; 46 Mo. 248.

A married woman, under the common-law disabilities, cannot be a competent party to an original subscription for shares of a corporation, or to a transfer to her of such shares, so as to make her a shareholder; 38 Fed. Rep. 700.

Where a director is required to be the holder of a certain number of shares as a qualification, he is presumed, on winding up, to have been the holder of that number of shares; [1892] 2 Ch. 158.

A railroad corporation purchasing the stock of a competing corporation cannot obtain control of its affairs, divert the income of its business, refuse business which would enable it to pay its interest, and then institute proceedings in equity to enforce the interest-bearing obligations for the avowed purpose of obtaining control of its property to the injury of the minority stockholders. The controlling company will become, for all practical purposes, the corporation which it controls, and bears the same trust relations to the minority stockholders of the latter that usually exists between stockholders of a corporation and the corporation itself; Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. N. Y. & No. R. Co., 54 Alb. L. J. 311 (Ct. of App. N. Y.).

The holders of a majority of the stock of a corporation may legally control the company's business, prescribe its general policy, make themselves its agents, and take reasonable compensation for their services. But, in thus assuming the control, they also take upon themselves the correlative duty of diligence and good faith. They cannot lawfully manipulate the company's business in their own interests to the injury of other stockholders. They cannot by their votes in a stockholders' meeting lawfully authorize its officers to lease its property to themselves, or to another corporation formed for the purpose and exclusively owned by them, unless such lease is made in good faith and is supported by an adequate consideration; and, in a suit properly prosecuted to set aside such a contract, the burden of proof, showing fairness and adequacy, is upon the parties claiming thereunder. All doubts will be resolved in favor of the corporation for whom such stockholders assumed to act; 17 Fed. Rep. 48, and note by Dr. Francis Wharton.

It is said that a stockholder may deal with his company at arm's length as a stranger might; 184 Pa. 102. See PREFERENCE.

The rights of a stockholder are to attend stockholders' meetings, to participate in the profits of the business, and to require that the corporate property and funds shall not be diverted from their original purposes, and if the company becomes insolvent, to have its property applied to the payment of its debts. For the invasion of these rights by the officers of a company, a stockholder may sue at law or in equity, according to the nature of the case. All remedies for injury to the property or rights of such a corporate body must be prosecuted in the name of the company; all demands against the company must be prosecuted against it by name. But where the officers and managers of a company, by fraud and collusion with third persons, are sacrificing, or are about to betray or sacrifice, the interests of the corporation, a stockholder may, for such breaches of trust and conspiracy, call the guilty parties to an account in a court of equity; 2 Woods 823, per Bradley, J.

A shareholder may interpose and set the machinery of law in motion for the protection of corporate rights or the redress of corporate wrongs, when the corporate management, after proper demand, fails to act in the matter; 86 Fed. Rep. 627; but equity will not entertain a bill by stockholders to remedy wrongs committed by the officers of the corporation, where such stockholders have not applied to the corporate authorities to remedy such wrongs; 87 Tenn. 771; 31 W. Va. 788; 127 U. S. 489; 54 Fed. Rep. 995. A stockholder may maintain an action to restrain the corporation from acts in excess of its corporate authority; 75 Ia. 722; but he cannot maintain a bill to enjoin the wasting of corporate property unless the corporation itself refuses to bring the action, in which case it must be made a party defendant; 51 Fed. Rep. 216. A corporation is a necessary party to a suit by stockholders for the enforcement of its rights; 149 U. S. 473.

It has been held that if a corporation has power to reduce its capital stock, it may do so by purchasing a portion of its own shares; 48 Vt. 260; 17 N. Y. 507; contra, 58 N. H. 282; but it is held to be ultra vires for a corporation to dispose of any part of its property other than its surplus or net profits, in the purchase of shares of its own stock; 84 Fed. Rep. 303, per Bradford, J. A corporation cannot buy its own stock if the rights of creditors are thereby prejudiced; 104 Ill. 26; 8 Bradw. 554; but apart from the rights of creditors, it is held in some states that such a transaction is lawful; 14 S. E. Rep. (N. C.) 501; 30 Fed. Rep. 89; 84 Ill. 145; 104 Mass. 37. Accepting its own stock in payment of land sold by it is not necessarily invalid; 20 Atl. Rep. (N. J.) 854; where the company is perfectly solvent; 8 Bradw. 554. In England it is held that a corporation cannot pur-obase its own shares; 12 App. Cas. 409; and a stockholder may enjoin such purchase; L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 337.

The books of a corporation are said to be "the common property of all the stockholders;" 105 Pa. 111; and are subject to their inspection for proper purposes and at proper times; 51 Fed. Rep. 81; 40 N. J. Eq. 392; the right may be enforced by mandamus; 105 Pa. 111. Mandamus will be granted, at the discretion of the court, which "will be exercised with great discrimination and care;" 70 N. Y. 220; and will not be granted where the applicant seeks to "accomplish personal or speculative ends;" 70 N. Y. 220; or to "gratify idle curiosity;" 9 Mich. 328; or at the "caprice of the curious or suspicious;" 105 Pa. 111. The petition should aver a demand for inspection and a refusal by the corporation; 6 D. R. (Pa.) 266. The stockholder may take off a list of stockholders; id. The statutory right of a creditor or a member of a company to inspect the register of its mortgages carries with it the right to take copies; [1897] 1 Ch. 130. See RECORDS; PRODUCTION OF BOOKS.

A stockholder has no right, by the inherent powers of a court of equity, to bring suit to wind up the business of a corporation; 60 How. 280.

A suit in equity may be maintained by a creditor of a corporation against a stockholder only in the courts of the state in which the corporation is created, and the corporation is a necessary party defendant 86 Fed. Rep. 45.

STOCKS. In Criminal Law. A machine, commonly made of wood, with holes in it, in which to confine persons accused of or guilty of crime.

It was used either to confine unruly offenders by way of security, or convicted criminals for punishment. This barbarous punishment had been generally abandoned in the United States.

STOLE. A robe of honour. Jacob. See GROOM OF THE STOLE.

STOLE, GROOM OF THE. See GROOM OF THE STOLE.

STOLEN GOODS. See RECENT POSSESSION OF STOLEN GOODS; RECEIVER OF STOLEN GOODS.

STOP, LOOK, AND LISTEN. One crossing a railroad or street railway track in Pennsylvania is guilty of contributory negligence in law if he does not first stop, look, and listen. It is an absolute and unending rule of public policy. 172 Pa. 383. See GRADE CROSSING.

STOP ORDER. In Chancery practice, when a fund (in cash, stock or other securities) is in court in a cause or proceeding, any person claiming an interest in it may apply to the court for an order to prevent it from being paid out or otherwise dealt with, without notice to the applicant. The application is made by petition where a fund exceeding £1,000 has been paid into court under the Trustee Act, 1893, and in other cases is made by summons, which (if opposed) must be supported by an affidavit showing the applicant's interest in the fund. Stop orders differ from restraining orders and distringas notices in being applicable only to funds in court. Stop orders are also applicable to documents or securities deposited with an officer of the court. Byrne.

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU. A re-emption by the seller of the possession of goods not paid for, while on their way to the vendee and before he has acquired actual possession of them. 15 Me. 314.

Chancellor Kent has defined the right of stoppage in transitu to be that which the vendor has, when he sells goods on credit to another, of resuming the possession of the goods while they are in the possession of a carrier or middleman, in the transit to the consignee or vendee, and before they arrive into his actual possession, or the designation he has appointed for them, on his becoming bankrupt and insolvent;

3 Kent 702.

The right of stoppage in transitu is an equitable extension recognized by the courts of common law, of the seller's lien for the price of goods of which the buyer has acquired the property, but not the possession. This right is paramount to any lien created by usage or by agreement between the carrier and the consignee, for a general balance of account, but not to the lien of the carrier for freight; 131 Mass. 487.

For most purposes, the possession of the carrier is considered to be that of the buyer; but by virtue of this right, which is an extension of the right of lien, the vendor may reclaim the possession before they reach the vendee, in case of the insolvency of the latter; 4 Gray 330; 2 Caines 98; 6 M. & W. 341, which gives a history of the law.

The vendor, or a consignor to whom the vendee is liable for the price; 3 East 93; 6 id. 17; 13 Me. 103; 1 Binn. 106; or a general or special agent acting for him; 9 M. & W. 518; 5 Whart. 189; 13 Me. 93; 43 N. H. 589; 105 Mass. 275; see 4 Gray 337; 1 Hill N. Y. 302; 5 Mass. 157; 123 id. 12; may exercise the right.

The vendor can bring suit for the price of the goods after he has caused them to be stopped in transitu, and while they are yet in his possession, provided he be ready to deliver them upon payment of the price; 1 Camp. 109; but the right of the vendor after stoppage exceeds a mere lien; for he may resell the goods; 6 Mod. 152.

There need not be a manual seizure; it is sufficient if a claim adverse to the buyer be made during their passage; 2 B. & P. 457; 9 M. & W. 518; 13 Me. 93; 5 Denio 833.

The goods sold must be unpaid for, either wholly or partially; 15 Me. 314; 2 Exch. 702. As to the rule where a note has been given, see 2 M. & W. 375; 7 Mass. 453; 4 Cush. 33; 7 Pa. 301; where there has been a pre-existing debt, 4 Camp. 81; 16 Pick. 475; 3 Paige, Ch. 378; 1 Binn. 106; 1 B. & P. 563; where there are mutual credits, 7 Dowl. & R. 126; 16 Pick. 467; where the vendee gives a draft, 62 Hun 876. The vendee must be insolvent; 4 Ad. & E. 332; 20 Conn. 54; 6 Pick. 198; 14 Pa. 51. 102 N. C. 390; 63 Ala. 243; 84 Mich. 612. A seller cannot stop goods in transit simply because the buyer absconded before they reached him, where the buyer's insolvency is not shown; 15 So. Rep. (Ala.) 340.

The goods must be in transit; 3 Term 466; 15 B. Monr. 270; 16 Pick. 474; 20 N. H. 154. Where goods sold are shipped by rail and a transfer company, under a previous general order of the buyer, receives the goods at the depot to convey them to the buyer's place of business, the goods are still in transit and the seller may still exercise his right of stoppage; 48 Mo. App. 521. In order to preclude the right the goods must have come actually into the hands of the vendee or some person acting for him; 2 M. & W. 632; 1 Pet. 336; 3 Mas. 107; 23 Wend. 611; 54 Fed. Rep. 306; or constructively, as, by reaching the place of destination; 9 B. & C. 422; 3 B. & P. 820, 469; 7 Mass. 457; 20 N. H. 154; 2 Curt. C. C. 259; 8 Vt. 49; 102 N. C. 390; or by coming into an agent's possession; 4 Camp. 181; 7 Mass. 453; 4 Dana 7; 33 Pa. 254; see 22 Conn. 473; 17 N. Y. 249; 7 Cal. 213; 53 Mo. App. 159; or by being deposited for the vendee in a public store or warehouse; 5 Denio 631; 7 Pa. 301; 4 Camp. 251; 113 N. C. 36; or by delivery of part for the whole; 14 M. & W. 28; 14 B. Monr. 824.

The right can be defeated, where there is no special legislation on the subject, only by a transfer of the bill of lading; 37 U. S. App. 268; but the assignment, unindorsed, of a bill of lading will not defeat the right, if the goods are still in transit; 7 U. S. App. 544. The right expires when the goods have been delivered; id.

Where goods are in the hands of a carrier, they may be stopped, although the purchaser has handed to the shipping agent the bills of lading received by him from the vendor and received a bill of lading for them, and the purchaser is himself a passenger on the vessel on which they are shipped; L. R. 15 App. Cas. 891.

The delivery of goods at the buyer's store which was at the time in the possession of the sheriff under an attachment, is not a delivery to the consignee; 85 Tex. 254. See 160 Pa. 527.

Where there is no contract to the contrary, express or implied, the employment of a carrier by a vendor of goods on credit constitutes all middlemen into whose custody they pass for transportation and delivery, agents of the vendor; and until the complete delivery of the goods, they are deemed in transitu; 21 Ohio St. 281. The right cannot be superseded by an attachment at the suit of a general creditor, levied while the goods are in transitu; 50 Miss. 500. 590. If the vendor attach the goods while in transit, his right of stoppage will be destroyed; 15 Conn. 335. Where goods are to be delivered a part at a time, and various deliveries are so made, the right to stop the remaining portion is not lost; nor will the fact that the entire lot of goods was transferred on the books of the warehouse affect the right; 106 Mass. 76; 17 Wend. 504. The right of stoppage in transitu is looked upon with favor by the courts; 2 Eden 77; 21 Ohio St. 281.

The effect of the exercise of this right is to repossess the parties of the same rights which they had before the vendor resigned his possession of the goods sold; 1 Q. B. 389; 10 B. & C. 99; 14 Me. 314; 5 Ohio 98; 20 Conn. 53; 10 Tex. 2; 19 Am. Rep. 87.

See, generally, Benjamin; Story; Long, on Sales; Parson, on Contracts; Cross, Lien; Whittaker, Stoppage in Tr.; 5 Wait, Action & Def. 612; 82 Cent. L. J. 364.

STORE. A place where goods are kept on deposit, especially in large quantities—a warehouse; and, also, a place where goods are kept for sale in large or small quantities. 72 Miss. 184. See SHOP.

(v.) To keep merchandise for safe custody, to be delivered in the same condition as when received, where the safe-keeping is the principal object of deposit, and not the consumption or sale. Abbott; 3 N. Y. 122.

(n.) In England, is never applied to a place where goods are sold, only to a place where they are deposited. In the United States, denotes both of these places. Anderson; 13 Conn. *440. A shop for the sale of goods of any kind, by wholesale or retail. That is, we use "store" for store-house, a word properly meaning the quantity of a thing accumulated or deposited, for the place of deposit. But "shop" may refer to a place where a mechanic art is carried on. Id.; 19 N. H. 137. "Store" is of larger significance than "shop." The latter word frequently designates the place in which a mechanic pursues his trade. Id.; 53 Ala. 483. The common use of "store," when applied to a building, is to designate a place where traffic is carried on in goods, wares and merchandise, and not to designate a "store-house." Id.; 135 Mass. 259.

STORE-HOUSE. A building for the storage of goods, grain, food-stuffs, etc. A livery-stable has been held a store-house. 35 S. W. Rep. (Ky.) 1028.

STORE ORDERS. In some states the maintaining of general supply stores by companies or individual employers is forbidden. Thus, in New Jersey and Tennessee it is unlawful for any manufacturer, firm, or corporation, who owns or controls a store for the sale of general goods or merchandise in connection with their business, to attempt to control their employees in the purchase of goods at such stores, by withholding the payment of wages longer than the usual time. In Maryland, the statute applies to railways and mines only; in Pennsylvania only to mining and manufacturing corporations. In some other states (Ohio, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, and Washington), the company may have such stores, but it is made a penal offence to compel or coerce an employee to deal at such company stores or with any particular person or corporation.

In some states (Ohio, Virginia, and Indiana) the prohibition is only against selling goods to employees at a higher profit than to others, or than to cash customers, or at prices higher than their market value; and debts thus incurred are made not collectible, or (in Ohio) the employee may recover back double such excess in price.

But in Illinois and West Virginia, statutes forbidding certain corporations to maintain company stores have been held invalid; 38 W. Va. 179; 10 S. E. Rep. 285; 31 N. E. Rep. 395; but see 48 Pa. Rep. (Col.) 519, where it was held that the legislature might prohibit the issuance of store orders in payment of wages. See Stinson, Lab. Laws § 34: LIBERTY OF CONTRACT; POLICE POWER.

STORES. The supplies for the subsistence and accommodation of a ship's crew and passengers. Under the words stores, tackle, apparel, etc., will not pass. 2 Stark. 103.

STOUTHRIEFF. In Scotch Law. Formerly this word included in its signification every species of theft accompanied with violence to the person; but of late years it has become the coz signata for forcible and masterful depredation within or near the dwelling-house; while robbery has been more particularly applied to violent depredation on the highway, or accompanied by house-breaking. Alison, Prin. Scotch Law 227.

STOWAGE. In Maritime Law. The proper arrangement in a ship of the different articles of which a cargo consists, so that they may not injure each other by friction, or be damaged by the leakage of the ship.

The master of the ship is bound to attend to the stowage, unless by custom or agreement this business is to be performed by persons employed by the merchant; Abb. Shipp. 13th ed. 391; Pardessus, Dr. Com. n. 731.

Merchandise and other property must be stored under deck, unless a special agreement or established custom and usage authorizes their carriage on deck. See SEAWORTHY.

STOWAWAY. One who conceals himself on board of a vessel about to leave port, in order to obtain a free passage. 26 Am. & Eng. Encyc. 2nd ed., 1126; 48 Fed. Rep. 551.

Within rule 22 of the Commissioner General of Immigration, stowaway is one who steals his passage. 193 Fed. 228.

STRADDLE. See OPTION.

STRAND. The shore or bank of a sea or river. Cowel. That portion of the land lying between ordinary high and low water mark. 47 N. Y. Supp. 280.

STRANDING. In Maritime Law. The running of a ship or other vessel on shore; it is either accidental or voluntary.

Accidental stranding takes place where the ship is driven on shore by the winds and waves and remains stationary for some time.

Voluntary stranding takes place where the ship is run on shore either to preserve her from a worse fate or for some fraudulent purpose. Marsh. Ins. b. 1, c. 12, s. 1.

It is of great consequence to define accurately what shall be deemed a stranding; but this is no easy matter. In one case, a ship having run on some wooden piles, four feet under water, erected in Wisbech river, about nine yards from shore, which were placed there to keep up the banks of the river, and having remained on these piles until they were cut away, was considered by Lord Kenyon to have been stranded; Marsh. Ins. b. 7, s. 3. In another case, a ship arrived in the river Thames, and upon coming up to the pool, which was full of vessels, one brig ran foul of her bow and another vessel of her stern, in consequence of which she was driven aground, and continued in that situation an hour, during which period several other vessels ran foul of her. As to this, Lord Kenyon told the jury that, unskilled as he was in nautical affairs, he thought he could safely pronounce to be no stranding; 1 Camp. 181; 3 id. 481; 4 Maule & S. 508; 5 B. & Ald. 285; 4 B. & C. 738; 7 id. 234. See PERILS OF THE SEA.

When a vessel takes the ground in the ordinary course of navigation, from a natural deficiency of water, or from the ebb of the tide, it is not a stranding; 11 C. B. 878; 73 E. C. L. 875; 2 Summ. 197. But where a ship was fastened at the pier of a dock basin against the advice of the master, and when the tide ebbed, took the ground and fell over on her side, in consequence of which, when the tide rose, she filled with water, it was held to be a stranding; 4 M. & S. 77. See, also, 5 B. & A. 285; 73 E. C. L. 458; 1 E. & B. 456.

It may be said, in general terms, that in order to constitute a stranding, the ship must be in the course of prosecuting her voyage when the loss occurs; there must be a settling down on the obstructing object; and the vessel must take the ground by reason of extraordinary casualty, and not from one of the ordinary incidents of a voyage. Arn. Ins. §§ 297, 318. And see Phill. Ins.; 31 N. Y. 106; 88 Am. Dec. 242; 42 id. 188; 13 Ohio 66.

STRANGER. A person born out of the United States; but in this sense the term alien is more properly applied until he becomes naturalized.

A person who is not privy to an act or contract; example, he who is a stranger to the issue shall not take advantage of the verdict; Brooke, Abr. Record, pl. 3; Viner, Abr. 1. And see Com. Dig. Abatement (H 54). See 118 N. Y. 156.

When a man undertakes to do a thing, and a stranger interrupts him, this is no excuse; Com. Dig. Condition (L 14). When a party undertakes that a stranger shall do a certain thing, he becomes liable as soon as the stranger refuses to perform it; Bac. Abr. Conditions (Q 4).

STRATAGEM. A deception either by words or actions, in times of war, in order to obtain an advantage over an enemy.

Stratagems, though contrary to morality, have been justified unless they have been accompanied by perfidy, injurious to the rights of humanity, as in the example given by Vattel of an English frigate, which during a war between France and England appeared off Calais and made signals of distress in order to allure some vessel to come to its relief, and seized a shallop and its crew who had generously gone out to render it assistance. Vattel, Droit des Gens. liv. 3, c. 9, § 178.

STRATOCHACY. A military government; government by military chiefs of an army.

STRAW BAIL. See BAIL.

STRAW MEN. See MEN OF STRAW.

STRAW SHOES. See MEN OF STRAW.

STREAM. A current of water. A body of water having a continuous flow in one direction. 34 L. R. So. 174. The right to a water-course is not a right in the fluid itself, so much as a right in the current of the stream. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1612. The owner of the land on both sides of a navigable stream, above the ebb and flow of the tide, is the owner of the bed of the stream, and entitled to all the ice that forms within the extent of his lands; 14 Chi. L. News 88. See RIVER; WATER-COURSE; ICE; MIDDLE OF THE STREAM; THALWEG.

STREET. A public thoroughfare or highway in a city or village. It differs from a country highway; 21 Alb. L. J. 45; 4 S. & R. 106; 11 Barb. 399. It means the whole surface and so much of the depth as is or can be used, not unfairly, for the ordinary purposes of a street. L. R. 4 Q. B. D. 131. A street is not an easement, but a dedication to the public of the occupation of the surface for passing and repassing; L. R. 8 Ch. 306; 1 Q. B. D. 708. See HIGHWAY.

A street, besides its use as a highway for travel, may be used for the accommodation of drains, sewers, aqueducts, water, and gas-pipes, lines of telegraph, and for other purposes conducive to the general police, sanitary, and business interests of a city; 17 Barb. 485; 2 R. I. 15; 106 Ill. 337; 29 Hun 245; 79 Ind. 491. Its use belongs, from side to side and end to end, to the public; 78 Ind. 193. A street may be used by individuals for the lading and unloading of carriages, for the temporary deposit of movables or of materials and scaffoldings for building or repairing, provided such use shall not unreasonably abridge or incommode its primary use for travel; 6 East 427; 8 Camp. 230; Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 76, s. 49; 4 Ad. & E. 405; 4 Ia. 199; 1 Den. 524; 1 S. & R. 219; 107 N. Y. 860; 59 Ia. 65; 58 Me. 56; 36 L. R. A. 805. As to playing organs on a street, see [1897] 1 Q. B. 84. The mere fact that a person is engaged in what is known as play on a public street does not necessarily make him a trespasser; 10 U. S. App. 546. A sidewalk which is part of a street may be excavated for a cellar, pierced by an aperture for the admission of light, or overhung by an awning. But if the highway becomes more unsafe and a passenger is injured by reason thereof, the individual so using the street will be responsible for the damages; 18 N. Y. 79; 3 C. & P. 262; 23 Wend. 446; 6 Cush. 324. See 107 Mass. 234; 66 Ia. 219; 104 N. Y. 268. But an individual has no right to have an auction in a street; 13 S. & R. 408; or to keep a crowd of carriages standing therein; 8 Camp. 230; or to attract a disorderly crowd of people to witness a caricature in a shop-window; 6 C. & P. 636. Such an act constitutes a nuisance; Ang. High. c. 6. An encroachment upon a street, the dedication and acceptance of which is established, is nothing more or less than a nuisance, which cannot be aided by lapse of time; 84 Va. 337. In a suit by abutting owners to enjoin obstruction, no other parties defendant are necessary than the alleged trespasser; 54 Fed. Rep. 925.

The owners of lands adjoining a street are not entitled to compensation for damages occasioned by a change of grade or other lawful alteration of the street; 2 B. & A. 408; 1 Pick. 417; 4 N. Y. 195; 3 Atl. Rep. 766; 14 Mo. 20; 2 R. I. 154; 6 Wheat. 598; 20 How. 135; 75 Mo. 218; 7 Wis. 9; 100 Ind. 545; unless such damages result from a want of due skill and care or an abuse of authority; 5 B. & Ald. 637; 16 N. Y. 158. See EMINENT DOMAIN.

Under the statutes of several of the states, assessments are levied upon the owners of lots specially benefited by opening, widening, or improving streets, to defray the expense thereof; and such assessments have been adjudged to be a constitutional exercise of the taxing power; 4 N. Y. 419; 8 Wend. 86; 18 Pa. 26; 31 id. 147; 8 Watts 298; 28 Conn. 189; 5 Gill 383; 37 Mo. 209; 4 R. I. 280; Ang. High. c. 4. See DILL. MUN. CORP. As to what notice to an owner is necessary to create a lien on his property for street improvements, see 40 Pa. Rep. 1043.

See RAILROAD; HIGHWAY; POLES; WIRES; NUISANCE; OBSTRUCTING A STREET; OBSTRUCTING A STREET; PRINCIPAL STREET; USE BY THE PUBLIC.

STREET RAILWAY. See RAILROADS.

STREPITUS. Estrepeant. Spelman.

STRICKEN FROM THE DOCKET. "Stricken from the docket" is used as synonymous with "discontinued," "filed away," so that an order striking a cause from the docket amounts to a "dismissal" 164 Ky. 426, 175 S. W. 662.

STRICT CONSTRUCTION. See CONSTRUCTION; INTERPRETATION.

STRICT SETTLEMENT. A settlement of lands to the parent for life, and after his death to his first and other sons in tail, with an interposition of trustees to preserve the contingent remainders.

STRICTISSIMI JURIS (Lat. the most strict right or law). In general, when a person receives an advantage, as the grant of a license, he is bound to conform strictly to the exercise of the rights given him by it, and in case of a dispute it will be strictly construed. See 8 Stor. C. C. 159.

STRICTO JURE (Lat.). In strict law. 1 Kent's Com. 65.

STRICTUM JUS (Lat.). Mere law, in contradistinction to equity.

According to strict law; without equitable interpretation, or enlargement of application. See STRICTISSIMI JURIS.

STRIFE. Does not necessarily imply blows. It may be evidenced by passionate words, looks and gestures. 34 Conn. 279.

STRIKE. A combined effort by workmen to obtain higher wages or other concessions from their employers, by stopping work at a preconcerted time. Where this is peaceably effected without positive breach of contract, it is not unlawful, but it sometimes amounts to conspiracy. Most of the decisions bear upon questions arising more or less indirectly from the strike.

A conspiracy to obtain from a master mechanic money which he is under no legal obligation to pay, by inducing his workmen to leave him and by deterring others from entering his employment, or by threatening to do this, so that he is induced to pay the money demanded, is an illegal conspiracy; 106 Mass. 1. See 9 Neb. 390.

It is no answer to a suit against a common carrier for failure to deliver goods with reasonable promptness, that a strike among their employes prevented; 20 N. Y. 48; 18 Ill. 488. But otherwise if the employes are discharged and afterwards interfere unlawfully with the business of the road; 15 Alb. L. J. 39; Cooley, Torts 640, n. Where a railroad company receives freight for shipment, it is not liable for delay in its delivery which is caused by a strike of its employes, accompanied by violence and intimidation of such a character as cannot be overcome by the company or controlled by the civil authorities when called upon; 61 Ga. 792; 74 Tex. 8; 84 Ill. 30.

In L. R. 6 Eq. 555, the president and secretary of a trades-union, and a printer employed by them, were restrained by injunction from posting placards and publishing advertisements, urging workmen to keep away from plaintiff's factory, where a strike against the reduction of wages was in progress; but in L. R. 10 Ch. 142, this case was overruled.

An attempt has been made to derive some of the authority for the use of an injunction in such cases to an extent not before recognized in the settled principles of equity jurisprudence from the English Judicature Act of 1873 as a consequence of the union of law and equity procedure. In 20 Ch. Div. 591, it is said that "the courts have interpreted this act as giving them power to restrain one man from persuading another to break his contract with a third person, when the object of such persuasion is the malicious injury to the third person."

Where a trades-union ordered a strike and posted pickets to persuade workmen from entering the employ of the plaintiff, such conduct was held to come within the terms of the act prescribing a penalty against every person who, with a view to compel any other person to abstain from doing, or to do any act which such other person has a legal right to do or abstain from doing, wrongfully and without legal authority . . . watches or besets the house or other place where such other person resides, or works, or carries on business, or happens to be, or the approach to such house or place." [1896] 1 Ch. 811.

The circuit court of the United States had jurisdiction to restrain the unlawful acts of persons engaged in a strike where they interfere with the operations of interstate commerce or with the transmission of the mails, and may enforce its injunction by proceedings in contempt which are not open to review on habeas corpus in the supreme court or any other court; 158 U. S. 564.

A "boycott" by the members of trades-unions or assemblies is unlawful, and may be enjoined; but in such suits a federal court has no jurisdiction over defendants who are citizens of the same state with the complainant, nor can the association be used as a body or its members who are not parties to the record be enjoined; 72 Fed. Rep. 695.

There is no authority for issuing an injunction to prevent one individual from quitting the personal service of another; "equity will not compel the actual affirmative performance by an employee of merely personal services, any more than it will compel an employer to retain in his personal service one who, no matter for what cause, is not acceptable to him for service in that character." 63 Fed. Rep. 310 (Harlan, J.).

A display of force by strikers against laborers who wish to work, such as surrounding them in large numbers, applying opprobrious epithets to them, and urging them in a hostile manner not to go to work, though no force be actually used, is as much intimidation as violence itself. Such conduct will be restrained by injunction, and the actors will be liable in damages to the employer of the laborers. Where new men employed to take the place of strikers are on their way to work, their time cannot be lawfully taken up and their progress interfered with by the strikers on any pretence or under any claim of right to argue or persuade them to break their contracts. Where a bill has been filed against strikers for an injunction and for damages for injuries caused by their illegal conduct, the plaintiff has a right to proceed with the case after the strike is over, for the purpose of recovering damages, and it is improper for a judge to express from the bench an opinion that the case should have been dropped; 182 Pa. 236. See BOYCOTT; COMBINATION; CONSPIRACY; INJUNCTION; LABOR UNION; MALICE; RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

STRIKE INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

STRIKING A DOCKET. In English Practice. Entering the creditor's affidavit and bond in bankruptcy. 1 Deac. Bank. 106.

STRIKING A JURY. In English Practice. Where, for no other cause, a special jury is necessary, upon motion and rule granted thereon, the sheriff is to attend the prothonotary or proper officer with the book of freeholders, and to take indifferently forty-eight of the principal freeholders, when the attorneys on each side, being present, are to strike off twelve respectively, and the remaining twenty-four are returned. 3 Bla. Com. 357. Essentially the same practice prevails in New York, Pennsylvania, and other states; Tr. & H. Pr. § 636. See JURY; GRAHAM, Pr. 217. In some of the states a special or struck jury is granted as of course upon the application of either party; but more generally it must appear to the court that a fair trial cannot be otherwise had, or that the intricacy and importance of the case require it. One of the parties being a citizen of color, the judge cannot properly direct a special jury to be impanelled, one-half of whom are of African descent; 8 Baxt. 373; 100 U. S. 313. The statutory method of striking is held to be mandatory; 26 Wis. 433; 78 Pa. 303. See Abb. N. Y. Dig. tit. Trial §§ 196-203; Thomp. & Merr. Jur. § 14.

STRIKING OFF THE ROLL. Removing the name of a solicitor from the rolls of the court and thereby disentitling him to practise. See DISBAR.

STRIP. The act of spoiling or unlawfully taking away anything from the land, by the tenant for life or years, or by one holding an estate in the land less than the entire fee. Pub. St. Mass. [1882] 1296.

STRUCK. In Pleading. A word essential in an indictment for murder, when the death arises from any wounding, beating, or bruising. 1 Bulstr. 184; 5 Co. 122; Cro. Jac. 655; 6 Binn. 179.

STRUCK JURY. See STRIKING A JURY.

STRUCK OFF. A term applied to a case when the court, having no jurisdiction over, and not being able to give judgment, order to be taken off the record. This is done by an entry to that effect.

As to the meaning of the words as used at an auction sale, see KNOCKED DOWN.

STRUCTURE. That which is built or constructed;—an edifice or building of any kind. Poles connected by wires for the transmission of electricity; 19 Ore. 61; a mine or pit; 60 Cal. 271; a railroad track; 46 Conn. 213; see 42 Fed. Rep. 470 (contra, 35 Ohio St. 559); are structures. Swings or seats are not; 55 Cal. 159. See MECHANICS' LIEN.

STRUMPET. A harlot, or courtesan. Jacob, Law. Dict.

STUDENTS. Students living in a place merely for the purpose of attending college have not such residence as will entitle them to vote there. 71 Pa. 303; 40 N. E. Rep. (N. Y.) 769, Affg. 31 N. Y. Supp. 1043; contra, 10 Mass. 488. See McCr. Elect. § 34; CHANCELLOR'S COURTS IN THE TWO UNIVERSITIES; DOMICIL.

STUFF GOWN. The professional robe worn by barristers of the outer bar; viz. those who are not queen's counsel. Brown.

STULTIFY (Lat. stultus, stupid). To make one out mentally incapacitated for the performance of an act.

It has been laid down by old authorities; Littleton § 405; 4 Co. 123; Cro. Eliz. 398; that no man should be allowed to stultify himself, i. e. plead disability through mental unsoundness. This maxim was soon doubted as law; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 414; 2 Bla. Com. 292; and has been completely overturned; 2 Kent 451.

STUMPAGE. The sum agreed to be paid to an owner of land for trees standing upon his land, the purchaser being permitted to enter upon the land and to cut down and remove the trees; in other words it is the price paid for a license to cut. 67 Mo. 478.

STUPRUM (Lat.). In Roman Law. The criminal sexual intercourse which took place between a man and a single woman, maid, or widow, who before lived honestly. Inst. 4. 18. 4; Dig. 48. 5. 6; 60. 16. 101.

STURGEON. See ROYAL FISH.

SUABLE. Capable of being, or liable to be, sued. A suable cause of action is the matured cause of action. 82 N. Y. 218.

SUB-AGENT. A person appointed by an agent to perform some duty, or the whole of the business relating to his agency.

A sub-agent is generally invested with the same rights, and incurs the same liabilities in regard to his immediate employers, as if the latter were the real principal. To this general rule there are some exceptions; for example, where, by the general usage of trade or the agreement of the parties, sub-agents are ordinarily or necessarily employed to accomplish the ends of the agency, there, if the agency is avowed and the credit is exclusively given to the principal, the intermediate agent may be entirely exempted from all liability to the sub-agent. The agent, however, will be liable to the sub-agent unless such exclusive credit has been given, although the real principal or superior may also be liable; Story, Ag. § 380. When the agent employs a sub-agent to do the whole or any part of the business of the agency, without the knowledge or consent of his principal, either express or implied, the latter will only be entitled to recover from his immediate employer, and his sole responsibility is also to him. In this case the superior or real principal is not responsible to the sub-agent, because there is no privity between them; Story, Ag. §§ 13, 217, 337.

Where, by an express or implied agreement of the parties, or by the usages of trade, a sub-agent is to be employed, a privity exists between the principal and the sub-agent, and the latter may justly maintain his claim for compensation both against the principal and his immediate employer, unless exclusive credit is given to one of them; and in that case his remedy is limited to that party; 1 Livermore, Ag. 64; Mich. Ag. 690; 6 Taunt. 147. See AGENT.

SUB CONDITIONEM. Upon condition.

The proper words to express a condition in a conveyance, and to create an estate upon condition. Abbott.

SUB-CONTRACT. A contract by one who has contracted for the performance of labor or service with a third party for the whole or part performance of that labor or service. 9 M. & W. 710; 3 Gray 362; 17 Wend. 550. See INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR.

SUB-CONTRACTOR. One who has entered into a contract, express or implied, for the performance of an act with the person who has already contracted for its performance. Phill. Mech. Liens § 44; 101 N. C. 611. See 127 Ind. 257.

SUB DISJUNCTIONE. In the alternative. Fleta.

SUB JUDICE. Under or before a judge or court; under judicial consideration; undetermined. 12 East 409.

SUB-LEASE. A lease by a tenant to another person of a part of the premises held by him; an under-lease. See LEASE.

SUB MODO (Lat.). Under a qualification. A legacy may be given sub modo, that is, subject to a condition or qualification.

SUB NOMINE. In the name of.

SUB PEDE SIGILI (Lat.). Under the foot of the seal; under seal. This expression is used when it is required that a record should be certified under the seal of the court.

SUB POTESTATE (Lat.). Under, or subject to, the power of another; as, a wife is under the power of her husband; a child is subject to that of his father; a slave to that of his master.

SUB SALVO ET SECURO CONDUCTO. Under safe and secure conduct. 1 Strange 450.

SUB SIGILLO (Lat.). Under seal.

SUBSILENTIO (Lat.). Under silence; without any notice being taken. Sometimes passing a thing sub silentio is evidence of consent. See SILENCE.

SUB SPE RECONCILIATIONIS. Under hope of reconciliation. 2 Kent 127.

SUB SUO PERICULO. At his own risk.

SUB-TENANT. An under-tenant.

SUBALTERN. An officer who exercises his authority under the superintendence and control of a superior.

SUBDITUS. A vassal; a dependent; one under the power of another. Spelman.

SUBDIVIDE. To divide a part of a thing which has already been divided. For example, when a person dies leaving children, and grandchildren, the children of one of his own who is dead, his property is divided into as many shares as he had children, including the deceased, and the share of the deceased is subdivided into as many shares as he had children.

SUBINFEUDATION. The act of an inferior lord by which he carved out a part of an estate which he held of a superior, and granted it to an inferior tenant to be held of himself.

It was an indirect mode of transferring the fief, and resorted to as an artifice to elude the feudal restraint upon alienation. This was forbidden by the statute of Quia Emptores, 18 Ed. 1; 2 Bla. Com. 91; 3 Kent 406. See Cadw. Gr. Rents § 7; Chal. R. P. 18; QUIA EMPTORES; FEUDAL LAW; TENURE.

SUBJECT. An individual member of a nation, who is subject to the laws. This term is used in contradistinction to citizen, which is applied to the same individual when considering his political rights.

In monarchical governments, by subject is meant one who owes permanent allegiance to the monarch. See Greenl. Ev. § 286; Phill. Ev. 732; Morse, Citizenship; ALLEGIANCE; CITIZENSHIP; NATURALIZATION.

SUBJECT TO INSURANCE. A provision in a charter-party, that the freight should be payable, subject to insurance, does not make the insurance by the ship-owner a condition precedent to his right to recover the freight, but means that the insurance premium is to be deducted from the freight. 27 L. J. Ex. 392.

SUBJECT-MATTER. The cause; the object; the thing in dispute.

It is a fatal objection to the jurisdiction of the court when it has not cognizance of the subject-matter of the action; as, if a cause exclusively of admiralty jurisdiction were brought in a court of common law, or a criminal proceeding in a court having jurisdiction of civil cases only; 10 Co. 68, 76; 8 Mass. 87. In such case, neither a plea to the jurisdiction nor any other plea would be required to oust the court of jurisdiction. The cause would be dismissed by the court.

SUBJECTION (Lat. sub, under, jacio, to put, throw). The obligation of one or more persons to act at the discretion or according to the judgment and will of others. Private subjection is subjection to the authority of private persons. Public subjection is subjection to the authority of public persons.

SUBMARINE TELEGRAPHS. See TELEGRAPH.

SUBMISSION (Lat. submitio, —sub, under, mittere, to put, —a putting under). Used of persons or things. A putting one's person or property under the control of another. 10 Barb. 218. A yielding to authority. A citizen is bound to submit to the laws, a child to his parents, a guardian to his ward. A victor may enforce the submission of his enemy.

Every consent involves a submission, but it does not follow that a mere submission involves a consent. 9 C. & P. 722.

In Maritime Law. Submission on the part of the vanquished, and complete possession on the part of the victor, transfer property as between belligerents; 1 Gall. 532.

In Practice. An agreement, parol (oral or written) or sealed, by which parties agree to submit their differences to the decision of a referee or arbitrators. It is sometimes termed a reference; Kyd, Arb. 11; 3 M. & W. 816; 6 Watts 359; 16 Vt. 663; 4 N. Y. 157.

It is the authority given by the parties to the arbitrators, empowering them to inquire into and determine the matters in dispute.

It may be in pais, or by rule of court, or under the various statutes; 1 Dev. 82.

It may be oral, but this is inconvenient, because open to disputes; by written agreement not under seal (in Louisiana and California the submission must be in writing; 5 La. 193; 2 Cal. 62); by indenture, with mutual covenants to abide by the decision of the arbitrator; by deed-poll, or by bond, each party executing an obligation to the other conditioned to be void respectively upon the performance of the award; Cald. Arb. 10; 6 Watts 357. A parol submission followed by a valid award, though not in writing, may be binding and conclusive upon the parties, if the arbitrators act fairly, but before a party is so bound, the agreement to arbitrate must be duly established; 97 Ala. 52.

An offer to arbitrate not accepted by the other party cannot affect his right to sue; 67 Mo. App. 559; where a submission was provided for in a lease, and by failure of the parties to agree upon arbitrators, nothing had been done and suit was brought, the action could be defeated by an offer at the trial to proceed with the arbitration; 12 App. Div. N. Y. 421. A statutory provision for arbitration has been held not to be exclusive of the common-law right to arbitrate; 50 Neb. 858. See also, as to the effect of statutory provisions upon common-law arbitration, 119 N. Y. 473; 80 Ala. 118.

When to be made. A submission may be made at any time of causes not in court, and at common law, where a cause was depending, submission might be made by rule of court before the trial, or by order of nisi prius after it had commenced, which was afterwards made a rule of court; 2 B. & Ald. 395; 3 S. & R. 262; 4 Halst. 198.

Who may make. Any one capable of making a disposition of his property or release of his right, or capable of suing or being sued, may make a binding submission to arbitration; but one under civil or natural incapacity cannot be bound by his submission; Russ. Arb. 20; 2 P. Wms. 45; 9 Ves. 350; 8 Me. 315; 2 N. H. 484; 8 Vt. 472; 16 Mass. 396; 5 Conn. 367; 1 Barb. 584; 2 Rob. Va. 761; 6 Munf. 458; Paine 646; 6 How. 83.

In general, in cases of incapacity of the real owner of property, as well as in many cases of agency, the person who has the legal control of the property may make submission, including a husband for his wife; 5 Ves. 846; a parent or guardian for an infant; Freem. 62, 139; 11 Me. 326; 12 Conn. 376; 3 Caines 253 (but not a guardian ad litem; 9 Humphr. 129); a trustee for his cestui que trust; 3 Esp. 101; an attorney for his client; 1 Ld. Raym. 246; 12 Ala. 252; 9 Pa. 101; 2 Hill, N. Y. 271; 4 T. B. Monr. 375; 7 Cra. 430 (but see 6 Weekl. Rep. 10); an agent duly authorized for his principal; 8 B. & C. 16; 8 Vt. 472; 11 Mass. 449; 5 Green N. J. 38; 29 N. H. 405; 8 N. Y. 160; an executor or administrator at his own peril, but not thereby necessarily admitting assets; 20 Pick. 534; 6 Leigh 62; 5 T. B. Monr. 240; 5 Conn. 621; 1 Barb. 419; 3 Harr. N. J. 442; assignees under bankruptcy and insolvency laws, under the statutory restrictions, stat. 6 Geo. IV. c. 16, and state statutes; the right being limited in all cases to that which the person acting can control and legally dispose of; 6 Mass. 78; 6 Munf. 453; 4 T. B. Monr. 240; 21 Miss. 193; but not including a partner, for a partnership; 1 Cr. M. & R. 681; 1 Pet. 221; 19 Johns. 137; 2 N. H. 284; 5 Gill & J. 412; 12 S. & R. 243; Lind. Partn. 129, 272; 3 Kent 49; the administratrix of a public contractor may join in a submission to arbitration of a controversy arising out of the contract; 9 App. D. C. 360.

What may be included in a submission. Generally, any matter which the parties might adjust by agreement, or which may be the subject of an action or suit at law, except perhaps actions (qui tam) on penal statutes by common informers; for crimes cannot be made the subject of adjustment and composition by arbitration, this being against the most obvious policy of the law; 5 Wend. 111; 2 Rawle 841; 7 Conn. 345;

6 N. H. 177; 16 Miss. 298; 16 Vt. 450; 10 Gill & J. 199; 5 Munf. 10; 120 Mass. 408; 59 Me. 121; 70 Mo. 417; including a debt certain on a specialty, any question of law, the construction of a will or other instrument, any personal injury on which a suit will lie for damages, although it may be also indictable; 9 Ves. 367; 6 Me. 119, 288; 6 Pick. 148. All controversies of a civil nature, including disputes concerning real estate, may be the subject of a submission for arbitration; 35 Kan. 668.

An agreement to refer future disputes will not be enforced by a decree of specific performance, nor will an action lie for refusing to appoint an arbitrator in accordance with such an agreement; 2 B. & P. 135; 2 Stor. 800; 15 Ga. 473. It is considered against public policy to exclude from the tribunals of the state disputes the nature of which cannot be foreseen; 4 Bro. C. C. 312, 315. See 31 Pa. 306.

Effect of. A submission of a case in court works a discontinuance and a waiver of defects in the process; 18 Johns. 22; 10 Yerg. 439; 2 Humphr. 516; 5 Gray 492; 4 Hen. & M. 363; 5 Wisc. 421; 4 N. J. 647; 41 Me. 355; 30 Vt. 810; 2 Curt. C. 28; and the bail or sureties on a replevin bond are discharged; 1 Pick. 192; 4 Green N. J. 277; 1 Ired. 9; 8 Ark. 214; 2 B. & Ad. 774. But see 6 Taunt. 379; 10 Bingh. 118. But this rule has been modified in England by stat. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, § 11; 8 Exch. 337.

The submission which defines and limits, as well as confers and imposes, the duty of the arbitrator must be followed by him in his conduct and award; but a fair and liberal construction is allowed in its interpretation; 1 Wms. Saund. 65; 11 Ark. 477; 3 Pa. 144; 13 Johns. 187; 2 N. H. 126; 2 Pick. 534; 3 Halst. 185; 1 Pet. 222. If general, it submits both law and fact; 7 Ind. 49; if limited, the arbitrator cannot exceed his authority; 11 Cush. 87.

The statutes of many of the states of the United States provide for submissions by the parties before a justice of the peace, in which case the award will be enforced as if it had been made under rule of court; and statutes also regulate submissions made under rule of court.

Revocation of a submission may take place at any time previous to the award, though it be expressed in the agreement to be irrevocable. The remedy of the injured party is by an action for breach of the agreement; Morse, Arb. & Aw. 230; 8 Co. 81; 4 B. & C. 103; 12 Wend. 578; 12 Mass. 49; 20 Vt. 198; 26 Me. 251, 459; 3 Day 118; 28 Pa. 393; 4 Sneed 462; 6 Dana 307; 126 Ill. 73; 35 Fed. Rep. 22. See also 36 id. 408; 111 N. Y. 810; 82 Cal. 42; 59 Minn. 290. A submission by deed must be revoked by deed; 8 Co. 72, and cases above.

A submission under rule of court is generally irrevocable, by force of statutory provisions, both in England and the United States; 5 Burr. 497; 12 Mass. 47; 4 Me. 459; 1 Binn. 42; 6 N. H. 86; 4 Conn. 498; 5 Paige 575; 8 Halst. 116; 3 Ired. 333; 19 Ohio 245. Where there is a contract of agreement, upon sufficient consideration, and rights have accrued to either party so that the status quo cannot be restored, the submission is not revocable; 6 D. R. Pa. 131, where it was held that a submission under the Pennsylvania compulsory arbitration act could not be revoked although some proceedings were waived. A right of revocation must be exercised before the publication of the award; 49 Neb. 290; but where the arbitration agreement provides for a written award, it may be revoked after the arbitrators have communicated to strangers their views, but before they have signed an award; id. 280.

A submission at common law is generally revoked by the death of either party (unless it be stipulated otherwise), or of the arbitrator, or his refusal to act; 2 B. & Ald. 394; 40 N. H. 130; but see 15 Pick. 79; 3 Halst. 116; 2 Gill & J. 479; 8 Swan 90; 15 Ga. 473; by marriage of a feme sole, and the husband and wife may then be sued on her arbitration bond; 5 East 266.

It is not revoked by the bankruptcy of the party or by the death of the arbitrator after publication of the award; 4 B. & Ald. 250; 9 B. & C. 629; 21 Ga. 1. A submission in a pending action at law falls where the award falls for misconduct of the arbitrators; 74 Miss. 805.

As to arbitration as a condition precedent, see 11 Harv. L. Rev. 284; JURISDICTION; ARBITRATOR; ARBITRATION.

SUBMISSION BOND. The bond by which the parties agree to submit the matter in controversy to arbitration, and to abide by the award of the arbitrator. See SUBMISSION.

SUBMISSION OF A CONTROVERSY. See AGREED CASE.

SUBNOTATIONS (Lat.). In Civil Law. The answers of the prince to questions which had been put to him respecting some obscure or doubtful point of law. See RESCRIPT.

SUBORNATION OF PERJURY. In Criminal Law. The procuring another to commit legal perjury, who in consequence of the persuasion takes the oath to which he has been incited. Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 69, s. 10.

To complete the offence, the false oath must be actually taken, and no abortive attempt to solicit will complete the crime; 2 Show. 1; 5 Metc. Mass. 241; Clark, Cr. L. 330.

But the criminal solicitation to commit perjury, though unsuccessful, is a misdemeanor at common law; 2 East 17; 6 id. 464; 1 Hawk. Pl. C. 435; 2 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 1197; 26 U. C. Q. B. 297. In fact it has been said: "There appears to have been a period in our law when the unsuccessful solicitation was deemed to constitute, without more, the full subornation of perjury; for as such it and other indictable attempts corruptly to influence a witness are treated of in some of the old books." 2 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 1197. In order to constitute the crime the false swearing procured must be itself perjury; 40 La. Ann. 460. As to what constitutes perjury, see that title. An attempt at subornation of perjury may be shown in evidence at the trial of the cause to which the attempt relates against the guilty party. So also concealment of facts or documents such as a will, accounts, etc., which were in the power of the party to produce and which presumably he would produce; 186 Pa. 197; L. R. 5 Q. B. 314, approved in 130 Mass. 76. See also 108 Ill. 485; 56 Wis. 156; 82 Pa. 537.

For a form of an indictment for an attempt to suborn a person to commit perjury, see 2 Chitty, Cr. Law 480. There must be knowledge that the testimony is false on the part of both, he who solicits and he who is solicited; 2 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 1197 a; 10 Sawy. 135; 124 Ill. 17; 19 Fed. Rep. 912.

Provision is made for the punishment of this crime when committed against the administration of justice by the federal government; U. S. § 5392, 5393.

SUBPOENA (Lat. sub, under, pena, penalty). In Practice. A process to cause a witness to appear and give testimony, commanding him to lay aside all pretences and excuses, and appear before a court or magistrate therein named, at a time therein mentioned, to testify for the party named, under a penalty therein mentioned. This is called distinctively a subpoena ad testificandum.

On proof of service of a subpoena upon the witness, and that he is material, an attachment may be issued against him for a contempt, if he neglect to attend, as commanded.

In Chancery Practice. A mandatory writ or process directed to and requiring one or more persons to appear at a time to come and answer the matters charged against him or them. The writ of subpoena was originally a process in the courts of common law, to enforce the attendance of a witness to give evidence; but this writ was used in the court of chancery for the same purpose as a citation in the courts of civil and canon law, to compel the appearance of a defendant, and to oblige him to answer upon oath the allegations of the plaintiff.

It was invented by John Waltham, bishop of Salisbury, and chancellor to Rich. II., under the authority of the statutes of Westminster II. and 18 Edw. I. c. 34, which enabled him to devise new writs; Cruise, Dig. t. 11, c. 1, § 12. See Vin. Abr. Subpoena; 1 Swanst. 209; Spence, Eq. Jur.

SUBPOENA DUCES TECUM. In Practice. A writ or process of the same kind as the subpoena ad testificandum, including a clause requiring the witness to bring with him and produce to the court books, papers, etc., in his hands, tending to elucidate the matter in issue. 2 Bla. Com. 382.

This is the only method in most cases, of obtaining the production of a document in the hands of a person not a party to the action. The use of such processes seems to be, as suggested by Lord Ellenborough, C. J., "essential to the very existence and constitution of a court of common law"; 9 East 483, where he states that such writs cannot be traced earlier than the time of Charles II., but it is impossible to conceive that the courts should not have immemorially acted upon written as well as oral evidence, and if so, there must have been some method of requiring the production of the former other than the voluntary favor of those in whose custody it might be.

It can only be used to compel the production of books, papers, accounts, and the like which are comprehended under the term documentary evidence, and not to bring in court such things as stove patterns, for example; 3 Fed. Rep. 12; 48 id. 191.

The writ may issue to a party to the action where he is competent as a witness notwithstanding a statute providing for an order for production to enable an inspection by the adverse party; 8 How. Pr. 24; id. 223; contra, 7 id. 261; 23 N. J. Eq. 212.

The writ is compulsory and must be obeyed by the party to whom it is addressed; 4 Dowl. 273; 7 id. 693; 15 Fed. Rep. 712; and it is a question for the court whether there is any valid reason why the paper shall not be produced and upon what conditions; id.; 2 Jones & Sp. 23; 5 Sm. & M. 198. That the papers are private is not of itself ground for refusal; 9 Mo. App. 261; 14 Gray 240. He must bring them into court for its inspection, though he need not permit them to be given in evidence, if this would prejudice his rights; 10 Pick. 9.

"No witness, however, who is not a party to a suit, can be compelled to produce his title-deeds to any property, or any document the production of which might tend to criminate him, or expose him to any penalty or forfeiture; 2 Taunt. 115; 21 How. Pr. 50; but a witness is not entitled to refuse to produce a document in his possession only because its production may expose him to a civil action (3 Q. B. D. 818), or because he has a lien upon it." Steph. Dig. Ev. art. 118.

This is stated as the English rule, but in this country it is said that the weight of authority confines the excuse for not producing the document to the exposure to penalty or forfeiture or criminal prosecution; 10 Pick. 9.

A custodian of public documents will not be required to bring them into court under a subpoena ducere tecum where confidential copies can be had; 1 Yeates 430; 2 id. 260; or where their production would result in injury to the public; 2 S. & R. 23; 7 Dowl. 693. Papers which are confidential communications are protected as oral statements of the same character would be, as, for example, papers of a client in the hands of his attorney; 4 Vt. 612; 9 M. & W. 609. "Although a paper should be in the legal custody of one man, yet if a subpoena ducere tecum is served on another who has the means to produce it, he is bound to do so;" Lord Ellenborough in 1 Camp. 17.

Telegrams are not privileged, and the officers of a telegraph company must produce them under a subpoena duces tecum without respect to rules of the company to the contrary; 8 Dill. 566; 15 Fed. Rep. 712; 73 Mo. 88; or notwithstanding statutes forbidding the disclosure of such messages; 73 Mo. 68; 2 Para. Sel. Cas. 74. Corporations generally may be required to produce their books and papers which are essential to the rights of litigants; L. R. 9 C. P. 87; 15 Fed. Rep. 718. See an extended note on this subject in 15 Fed. Rep. 718. See DISCOVERY; PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS; CORPORATION.

SUBPOENA AD TESTIFICANDUM. See SUBPOENA.

SURREPTIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. Obtaining gifts of ecclesiastical, etc., from the king by concealing the truth. Bell, Dict.; Calv. Lex. Subripere.

SURREPTION. In French Law. The fraud committed to obtain a pardon, title, or grant, by alleging facts contrary to truth.

SUBROGATION. The substitution of another person in the place of the creditor, to whose rights he succeeds in relation to the debt. That change which puts another person in the place of the creditor, and which makes the right, the mortgage, or the security which the creditor has passed to the person who is subrogated to him,—that is to say, who enters into his right. Domat, Civ. Law, pt. i. l. iii. t. i. § vi.

It is the substitution of another person in place of the creditor, so that the person substituted will succeed to all the rights of the creditor, having reference to a debt due him. It is independent of any mere contractual relations between the parties to be affected by it, and is broad enough to cover every instance in which one party is required to pay a debt for which another is primarily answerable, and which in equity and conscience ought to be discharged by the latter; 117 Ind. 551.

It is a legal fiction by force of which an obligation extinguished by payment made by a third party is considered as continuing to subsist for the benefit of this third person, who makes but one and the same person with the creditor in the view of the law.

Subrogation gives to the substitute all the rights of the party for whom he is substituted; 4 Md. Ch. Dec. 253. Among the earlier civil-law writers, the term seems to have been used synonymously with substitution; or, rather, substitution included subrogation as well as its present limited signification. See Domat, Civ. Law, passim; Pothier, Obl. passim. The term substitution is now almost altogether confined to the law of devises and chancery practice. See SUBSTITUTION.

The word subrogation is originally found only in the civil law, and has been adopted, with the doctrine itself, thence into equity; but in the law as distinguished from equity it hardly appears as a term, except perhaps in those states where, as in Pennsylvania, equity is administered through the forms of law. The doctrine of marshalling assets is plainly derived from the Roman law of subrogation or substitution; and although the word is, or, rather, has been used sparingly in the common law, many of the doctrines of subrogation are familiar to the courts of common law.

It is one thing to decide that a surety is entitled, on payment, to have an assignment of the debt, and quite another to decide that he is entitled to be subrogated or substituted as to the equities and securities to the place of the creditor, as against the debtor and his co-sureties; Story, Eq. Jur. § 496; 2 McLean 451; 1 Dev. Ch. 137.

Convention subrogation results, as its name indicates, from the agreement of the parties, and can take effect only by agreement. This agreement is, of course, with the party to be subrogated, and may be either by the debtor or creditor. La. Civ. Code 1949.

"The doctrine of subrogation is derived from the civil law (48 Pa. 518). In this country, under the initial guidance of Chancellor Kent, its principles have been more widely developed than in England (44 Mo. 888). It is treated as the creature of equity, and is so administered as to secure real and essential justice without regard to form (id.), and is independent of any contractual relations between the parties to be effected by it (6 Neb. 219). It is broad enough to include every instance in which one party pays a debt for which another is primarily answerable, and which in equity and good conscience should have been discharged by the latter (83 Gratt. 527; 43 Conn. 244." See 117 Ind. 551). Sheld. Subr. § 1; Har. Subr. 1, 22.

Subrogation does not take place until the payment of the whole debt; 22 U. S. App. 54.

A principle which lies at the bottom of the doctrine is that the person seeking it must have paid the debt under grave necessity to save himself a loss. The right is never accorded to a volunteer; 124 U. S. 534; Sheld. Subr. § 240; 14 N. J. Eq. 284; 52 Pa. 522; Spears, Eq. 37; in which is a statement of the doctrine by Johnson, Ch., of which Miller, J., said in 124 U. S. 549: "This is perhaps as clear a statement of the doctrine on this subject as is to be found anywhere."

But under the Louisiana code the payment of a mortgage debt by an ordinary creditor subrogates him to the rights of the mortgagee; 49 La. Ann. 1046; so also of a grantee of the premises who has paid the mortgage in good faith relying on representations that there were no junior liens; 14 Utah 482; but a mortgagee, who, for his own convenience, with knowledge of the facts, accepts several mortgages in discharge of the original one, is not entitled to subrogation; 50 Neb. 601.

Where a bank lent money to a contractor to be used in carrying out his contract and some of it was used by him for paying laborers and material men, the bank was not entitled to subrogation to the claims of the latter; 71 Fed. Rep. 228. As to subrogation to rights of labor, etc., claims, see 42 S. W. Rep. (Tenn.) 53; RECEIVER.

Persons are not entitled to the right of subrogation where such alleged right arises from tortious conduct of their own. A person who invokes the doctrine of subrogation must come into court with clean hands; 148 U. S. 573.

Legal subrogation takes place to its full extent—

First, for the benefit of one who being himself a creditor pays the claim of another who has a preference over him by reason of his liens and securities. For in this case, it is said, it is to be presumed that he pays for the purpose of securing his own debt; and this distinguishes his case from that of a mere stranger. Domat, Civ. Law. And so, at common law, if a junior mortgagee pays off the prior mortgage, he is entitled to demand an assignment thereof; 56 Pa. 76; 88 Me. 577.

Second, for the benefit of the purchasers of an immovable, who uses the price which he paid in paying the creditors to whom the inheritance was mortgaged.

Third, for the benefit of him who, being held with others or for others for the payment of the debt, has an interest in discharging it.

Subrogation takes place for the benefit of co-promisors or co-guarantors, as between themselves, and for the benefit of sureties against their principals. But between co-guarantors and co-promisors subrogation benefits him who pays the debt only to the extent of enabling him to recover from each separately his portion of the debt. As against his co-sureties, the surety increasing the value of their joint security is entitled to subrogation only to the amount actually paid; 6 Ind. 837; 12 Gratt. 642. Any arrangement by one co-surety with the principal enures to the benefit of all the co-sureties; 26 Ala. N. S. 380, 728.

If one tenant pays a mortgage, tax lien, or other incumbrance upon the property, he may be subrogated to such lien to secure contribution from his co-tenants. A person who has lent money to a debtor for the purpose of discharging a debt may be subrogated by the debtor to the creditor's rights, and if the party who has agreed to advance the money for the purpose employs it himself in paying the debt and discharging the incumbrance on land given for its security, he is not to be regarded as a volunteer. After such an agreement with the debtor, he is not a stranger in relation to the debt, but he may in equity be entitled to the benefit of the security which he has satisfied with the expectation of receiving a new mortgage or lien upon the land for the money paid; 180 Pa. 522.

When a mortgage is taken upon land with the understanding that it shall be a first lien thereon, and that the money lent is to be applied by the mortgagee to the payment of a prior lien, and it is so applied, the mortgagee is subrogated to the rights of the prior incumbrancer when it is equitable to do so, although there was an antecedent second mortgage of which the subsequent mortgagee had no actual knowledge or notice; 3 Kan. App. 636.

Most of the cases of subrogation so called in the common law arise from transactions of principals and sureties. Courts of equity have held sureties entitled, upon payment of the debt due by their principal to the creditor, to have the full benefit of all the collateral securities, both of a legal and equitable nature, which the creditor has taken as an additional pledge for his debt; Story, Eq. Jur. § 499; Har. Subr. 221.

"A surety who completes a contract with the United States on the contractor's default is subrogated to the rights which the United States might assert against a fund created by the retention of 10 per cent. of the sums estimated from time to time as the value of the work done, in order to insure its completion; and this right relates back to the making of the contract, and is superior to any equitable lien asserted by a bank for moneys advanced to the contractor without the surety's knowledge before he began to complete the work." 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 142.

Where the creditor's right to subrogation depends on the existence in the surety of the rights to which subrogation is sought, after the surety has parted with the thing given him for his protection, the creditor can have no subrogation; 156 U. S. 400.

It is a settled rule that in all cases where a party only secondarily liable on an obligation is compelled to discharge it, he has a right in a court of equity to stand in the place of the creditor, and be subrogated to all his rights against the party previously liable; 4 Johns. Ch. 123; 4 Pick. 505; 8 Stor. 392; 1 Gill & J. 846; 10 Yerg. 310. This is clearly the case where the surety takes an assignment of the security; 2 Me. 341.

If a surety on a debt secured by mortgage pays the debt, he is entitled to the mortgage as security; 2 Sim. 155. In all cases, the payment must have been made by a party liable, and not by a mere volunteer; 3 Paige, Ch. 117; 2 Brock. 252; 4 Bush 471; 124 U. S. 534; see 87 Ky. 687; but it will be applied whenever the person claiming its benefits has paid a debt for which another was primarily answerable, and which he was compelled to pay in order to protect his own rights or save his own property; 39 W. Va. 460; 124 U. S. 534. The creditor must have had his claim fully satisfied; 1 Gill & J. 847; and the surety claiming subrogation must have paid it; 6 Watts 231; 3 Barb. Ch. 626; 11 Ired. 118; 13 Ill. 68; and is subrogated, where he has paid to redeem a security, only to the amount he has paid, whatever be the value of the security; 19 Miss. 633; 11 Gratt. 522. But giving a note is payment within this rule; 8 Tex. 66. One who advances money to the mortgage creditor of his debtor, in the payment of interest accumulations on the mortgage debt, becomes legally subrogated, pro tanto to the mortgage creditor's right; 44 La. Ann. 537. When a mortgagor fails to protect junior incumbrancers against a prior lien when it is his duty to do so, they may pay it and be subrogated to the rights of the holder thereto; 120 U. S. 287. The surety after paying the debt is entitled to enforce every security which the creditor has against the principal; 82 Va. 65.

To prevent a satisfaction when a surety pays the money to the creditor, to preserve the security for the benefit of the surety so paying, it must be assigned to a trustee, and in no other way can it be kept alive; 101 N. C. 589.

Judgment obtained against the principal and surety does not destroy the relation as between themselves; 2 Ga. 239; 11 Barb. 139. If a judgment is recovered against a debtor and surety separately for the same amount, the surety can enforce the judgment against his principal when assigned to him after he paid the amount of the judgment; 10 Johns. 524; 3 Rich. Eq. 139.

A surety in a judgment to obtain a stay of execution is not entitled to be substituted on paying the judgment, as against subsequent creditors; 5 W. & S. 352. Nor can the surety be subrogated, although he has paid a judgment, if he has sued his principal and failed to recover; 8 Watts 334.

If a judgment is recovered and the sureties pay, they are entitled to be subrogated; 1 W. & S. 155; 14 Ga. 674; 5 B. Monr. 393; 3 Sandf. Ch. 431; even where a mortgage had been given them, but which turned out to be invalid; 4 Hen. & M. 436. This seems to be contradicted in 3 Gratt. 343.

Entry of satisfaction on a judgment does not destroy subrogation, if the entry was not made at the instance of the surety; 20 Pa. 41.

Where the surety has become liable on the contract of his principal, when the principal fails to perform the contract, the surety may pay and be subrogated; 3 Gill & J. 243; 15 N. H. 119; thus, where the surety was held on a bond which he was obliged to pay; 1 Ired. Eq. 340; 22 Vt. 274; and this even where the bond was given to the United States to pay duties on goods belonging to a third person; 4 Rand. 438. And where the bond was given for the payment of the price of land, he was allowed to sell the land; 2 D. & B. 390; 2 B. Monr. 50.

But it is said the mere payment does not ipso facto subrogate him; 6 W. & S. 190.

If the surety be also a debtor, there will be no substitution, unless expressly made; 2 Pa. 296; and the person who claims a right of subrogation must have superior equities to those opposing him; 3 Pa. 200.

Sureties of a surety, and his assignee, are entitled to all the rights of the surety, and to be substituted to his place as to all remedies against the principal or his estate; 5 Barb. 398; 22 Vt. 274.

A surety cannot compel the creditor to exhaust his security before coming on the surety; 37 N. J. L. 370.

The debt of the acceptor of a bill is not extinguished by the payment of the bill by the indorser or drawer; for the same rights will remain against him, in their favor, which the holder had himself, unless he is a mere accommodation acceptor; Story, Bills § 422. See a limitation in 19 Barb. 562.

But if payment is made by an indorser who had not received due notice, it is at his own risk, and he can ordinarily have no recourse over to third persons; Chitty, Bills, c. 9; Har. Subr. 174.

An accommodation acceptor is not entitled on payment to a security given to an accommodation indorser; 1 Dev. Eq. 205.

An accommodation indorser who is obliged to pay the note is subrogated to the collateral securities; 12 La. Ann. 733. This subrogation in the civil law operates for the benefit of a holder by intervention (i. e. who pays for the honor of the drawer).

Payment of a note by an indorser actually bound, produces the legal effect of subrogating him to the rights of the last holder; 40 La. Ann. 351.

This species of subrogation (by indorsement) is to be distinguished from that which a surety on a note has when he is compelled to pay. Such surety is entitled to the benefit of all the securities which the holder has; 4 Ired. Eq. 22; 23 Pa. 68; 7 N. H. 236.

In the civil law, an agent who buys goods for his principal with his own money is so far subrogated to the principal's rights that if he fails the agent may sell his goods as if they were his own; Cour. de Cass. Nov. 14. 1810.

An insurer of real property is subrogated to the rights of the insured against third parties who are responsible for the loss at common law; 2 B. & C. 254; 18 Metc. 99; 73 N. Y. 899; 39 Me. 253; 25 Conn. 265. And it is well settled in Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, and Illinois, that the mortgagee cannot, after payment of his debt by the underwriter, enforce his claim against the mortgagor, but that the underwriter is subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee; 17 Pa. 253; 70 N. Y. 19; 52 Ill. 442; 2 Dutch. 541; 45 Me. 354. So in Canada; 1 Low. Can. 222. The contrary view, however, has been consistently maintained in Massachusetts; 7 Cush. 1; 10 Allen 283.

But an insurance company is not subrogated to the rights of a mortgagee who has paid the premiums himself, so as to demand an assignment of the mortgage before paying his claim when the buildings were burned; 2 Gray 216; 8 Hare 216.

The insurer upon paying to the assured the amount of the loss, total or partial, of the goods insured, becomes, without any formal assignment or any express stipulation to that effect in the policy, subrogated in a corresponding amount to the assured's right of action against the carrier or other person responsible for the loss, and in a court of admiralty may assert in his own name that right of the shipper; 129 U. S. 397. As between a common carrier of goods and an underwriter upon them, the liability to the owner for their loss is primarily upon the carrier, while the liability of the insurer is only secondary; 150 U. S. 99.

Ordinarily as between the insurer, claiming subrogation, and the insured, the amount of the recovery against the person whose tort caused the loss represents the entire loss suffered by the insured; 165 Pa. 428.

Under a statute directing, through its standard form of insurance policy, the subrogation of the insurer to the rights of the insured against the party primarily responsible for the loss, such subrogation is a legal right, which must prevail unless a stronger equity be shown against it; and, where the insured recovers a judgment against such party, the insurer is subrogated to his rights therein; 105 Pa. St. 423; 35 W. N. C. 519.

An insurance company which has paid a loss upon partnership goods is not prevented, by the subsequent death of one of the partners and the resulting dissolution of the firm, from maintaining a suit in admiralty in the partnership name to recover the amount of the loss from the carrier; 78 Fed. Rep. 155.

An insurer upon paying a loss to the assured can take nothing by subrogation but the rights of the assured, and if the assured has no right of action, none passes to the insurer; 139 U. S. 223; 150 id. 99.

The doctrine of subrogation does not apply to life insurance; 25 Conn. 263; 79 N. Y. 73. But see 3 Dill. 1; 43 Vt. 530.

An executor who is liable for the default of another is entitled to be subrogated to whatever compensation he has a right to; 93 Ky. 695.

An original stockholder compelled to pay calls on stock after its assignment, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the corporation against the delinquent assignee only upon clear proof of acceptance of the transfer by the latter; 35 Fed. Rep. 19.

In the civil law, whoever paid privileged debts, such, for example, as the funeral expenses, had by subrogation the prior claim: Eorum ratio prior est creditorum quorum pecunia ad creditoris privilegio pervenit. Dig. de reb. anc. jud. pos. l. 24, § 3.

So, if during the community of goods arising from the relation of husband and wife an annuity which was due from one of them only was redeemed by the money belonging to both, the other was subrogated pleno jure as to that part of the claim; Pothier, Obl. pt. 3, c. 1, art. 6, § 2.

In the civil law, the consignee of goods who pays freight is said to be subrogated to the rights of the carrier and forwarder; Cour. de Cass., 7th Dec. 1826. The common law does not recognize this right as a subrogation. But see LIEN.

In marshalling assets, where a mortgagee has a lien on two funds, if he satisfy himself out of one which is mortgaged to a junior mortgagee so as to extinguish the fund, the junior mortgagee is subrogated to the other fund; 4 Sandf. Ch. 510.

This right of subrogation is a personal right, but may be assigned; 3 Pa. 300; and the creditors of the surety may claim the benefit of the right; 8 Pa. 347; 22 Miss. 87. As to which of two parties liable for the debt shall be subrogated, see 23 Vt. 169.

Where one is subrogated to a mortgage, it is not necessary that it be assigned to him; 45 Vt. 525; though such assignment would only strengthen his position; 10 Minn. 376. The right of subrogation to a prior incumbrance is sometimes enforced by a court of equity by compelling the holder of it to assign it to the party entitled to subrogation; 51 N. Y. 333; 61 Pa. 16. One who is liable to contribute to the payment of a prior lien on property on which he holds security, who is obliged to pay the whole of such claim to protect his own interest, may be subrogated thereto for the purpose of compelling contribution from the other persons liable for a part thereof; 61 Vt. 516.

The creditor need not be made a party to a bill to obtain subrogation; 10 Yerg. 310. See LIEN; MARSHALLING ASSETS.

SUBSCRIBE. To write underneath; 45 Ind. 213; to affix a signature; 18 N. Y. S. 104; see 45 N. H. 481. It may sometimes be construed to mean to give consent to or to attest. 24 L. J. Q. B. 171.

The purpose of a law requiring the subscription to a will to be at the end of the paper is to prevent fraudulent additions before or after execution, and a statute of wills should be so construed as to accomplish this purpose. Anderson; 94 N. Y. 539. The subscribing witnesses to a deed being dead, the execution is to be established by proof of their handwriting. Id.; 108 U. S. 44. A summons issued by an attorney with his name printed at the end of the paper, is subscribed by him. Id.; 49 Barb. 62.

SUBSCRIBING WITNESS. One who subscribes his name to a writing in order to be able at a future time to prove its due execution. An attesting witness.

In order to make a good subscribing witness, it is requisite he should sign his name to the instrument himself, at the time of its execution, and at the request or with the assent of the party; 6 Hill 303; 11 M. & W. 168; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 969 a; 5 Watts 399.

SUBSCRIPTIO. That kind of imperial constitution which was granted in answer to the prayer of a petitioner who was present. Calvinus.

A writing under, or under-writing; a writing of the name under or at the bottom of an instrument by way of attestation or ratification; subscription. The subscriptio testium, (subscription of witnesses), was one of the formalities in the execution of wills, being required by the imperial constitutions in addition to the seals of the witnesses. Bur-kill; Inst. 2. 10. 3.

SUBSCRIPTION (Lat. sub, under, scribe, to write). The placing a signature at the bottom of a written or printed engagement; or it is the attestation of a witness by so writing his name; but it has been held that the attestation of an illiterate witness by making his mark is a sufficient subscription. 3 Ves. Sen. 454; 3 P. Wms. 353.

The act by which a person makes an agreement over his signature in writing, to furnish a sum of money for a particular purpose; as, a subscription to a charitable institution, a subscription for a book, for a newspaper, and the like.

One who subscribes, agreeably to the statute and by-laws of a chartered company, acquires a right to his shares, which is a sufficient consideration to make the subscription obligatory on him; but otherwise where the organization was not yet effected; 87 Pa. 332; 90 id. 169. A subscription for the payment of certain sums of money to a contemplated corporation, to be formed for a purpose for which the subscribers were to derive benefits, may be enforced by the corporation when formed; and no formal acceptance of the subscription or notice of such acceptance is necessary to make it binding; 140 Ill. 248. The question, how far voluntary subscriptions for charitable objects are binding, is not thoroughly settled.

A subscription of a certain sum towards paying of a church debt made long after the debt was contracted and the church built, is without consideration and cannot be enforced; 17 C. C. R. (Pa.) 614. A mere subscription for a charitable object cannot be enforced; 112 N. Y. 517; 117 id. 601; 11 Mass. 113; 121 id. 528; 93 Ill. 475; 57 La. 807. A gratuitous subscription to promote the object for which a corporation is established, cannot be enforced unless the promisee has, in reliance on the promise sued on, done something or incurred or assumed some liability or obligation; it is not sufficient that others were led to subscribe by the subscription sought to be enforced; 121 Mass. 528; 117 N. Y. 601; 57 La. 307. The consideration which supports the promise of a subscriber to an enterprise is expenditure by the promisee on the faith of the subscription and not advantage to be gained by the promisor; 41 Ill. App. 259; 57 La. 807; 69 id. 134. See 41 Ohio St. 327. Until liability has been incurred or acts have been done on the strength of the subscription, it may be withdrawn, and it is revoked by the insanity or death of the subscriber; 96 Ill. 177; 93 id. 475; 77 Pa. 328.

It has been held that the subscription, to be binding, should be a promise to some particular person or committee; and there should be an agreement on the part of such person or committee to do something on their part; as, to provide materials or erect a building; 11 Mass. 114; 24 Vt. 189; 9 Barb. 202; 9 Gratt. 633; 4 Me. 383; 1 N. Y. 581.

If advances were fairly authorized, and have been made on the strength of the subscriptions, it will be deemed sufficient to make them obligatory; 12 Mass. 190; 14 id. 172; 1 Metc. Mass. 570; 5 Pick. 228; 19 id. 73; 4 Ill. 193; 2 Humph. 335; 2 Vt. 48; 5 Ohio 53; they form a consideration for each other; 37 Pa. 210.

The subscriptions to a common object are not usually mutual or really concurrent, and can only be held binding on grounds of public policy. See 4 N. H. 533; 6 id. 164; 7 id. 435; 5 Pick. 506; 2 Vt. 48; 9 id. 289; 5 Ohio 58.

Payment by a subscriber of a part of his subscription which was not legally enforceable does not make the residue of the subscription valid; 112 N. Y. 517.

See ATTESTATION AND SUBSCRIPTION; CLOSE THEREOF.

SUBSCRIPTION LIST. A list of subscribers to some agreement with each other or a third person.

The subscription list of a newspaper is an incident to the newspaper, and passes with the sale of the printing materials; 2 Watts 111.

SUBSELLIA. Lower seats or benches occupied by the judges and by inferior magistrates when they sat in judgment, as distinguished from the tribunal of the praetor. Calvin.

SUBSEQUENT ACTION. A second action commenced after the issue of a writ, but before judgment obtained in a first action, is held to be a subsequent action. 51 L. J. Q. B. 279.

SUBSEQUENT CONDITION. See CONDITION.

SUBSEQUENTLY. See SINCE.

SUBSIDY. In English Law. An aid, tax, or tribute granted by parliament to the king for the urgent occasions of the kingdom, to be levied on every subject of ability, according to the value of his lands or goods. Jacob, Law Dict.

In International Law. The assistance given in money by one nation to another to enable it the better to carry on a war, when such nation does not join directly in the war. Vattel, liv. 3, § 82. See NEUTRALITY.

Aid given by the government to some commercial enterprise, as to a steamship line. See SUGAR BOUNTY.

SUBSOIL. The word includes, prima facie, all that is below the actual surface, down to the centre of the earth. 17 L. J. C. P. 162. It is a wider term than mines, quarries, or minerals; 3 L. R. Ir. 339.

SUBSTANCE (Lat. sub, under, stare, to stand). That which is essential: it is used in opposition to form.

It is a general rule that on any issue it is sufficient to prove the substance of the issue. For example, in a case where the defendant pleaded payment of the principal sum and all interest due, and it appeared in evidence that a gross sum was paid, not amounting to the full interest, but accepted by the plaintiff as full payment, the proof was held to be sufficient; 2 Stra. 699; 1 Phil. Ev. 161.

See MATTER OF FORM; MATTER OF SUBSTANCE.

SUBSTANTIAL DAMAGES. Damages, assessed by the verdict of a jury, which are worth having, as opposed to nominal damages (q. v.).

SUBSTANTIVE. Dependent upon itself. 29 Me. 89. See SUBSTANTIVE LAW.

SUBSTANTIVE LAW. One of the two kinds of rules constituting law, namely, those rules which give recognition to rights and duties, which rules are the very foundation and substance of the law. These are static, immobile and lifeless until set in motion by genetic remedial rules embodied in adjective law (q. v.). Hicks, Mater. & Meth. Leg. Res. 35.

In Statute Law; All statutes of a general nature, i. e., all except those regulating administrative and court procedure. Id. 52.

In Case Law; The greater part of case law is substantive law, i. e., all except those decisions interpreting administrative regulations, codes of procedure and court rules. Id. 77.

SUBSTITUTE. One placed under another to transact business for him. In letters of attorney, power is generally given to the attorney to nominate and appoint a substitute.

Without such power, the authority given to one person cannot, in general, be delegated to another, because it is a personal trust and confidence, and is not, therefore, transmissible. The authority is given to him to exercise his judgment and discretion, and it cannot be said that the trust and confidence reposed in him shall be exercised at the discretion of another; 3 Ves. 645. But an authority may be delegated to another when the attorney has express power to do so; T. Jones 110. See STORY, Ag. § 13.

SUBSTITUTED EXECUTOR. One appointed to act in the place of another executor, upon the happening of a certain event.

SUBSTITUTED SERVICE. Service of process upon another than the person upon whom it should be made, where the latter is impossible. Hunt, Eq. pt. i. ch. 2, § 1; Lush. Pr. 867. But an order must be obtained from the court to allow of substituted service, the application for which must be supported by affidavit; Moz. & W.

It is usually applied to cases where property is within the jurisdiction (q. v.) of the court and process of some sort or notice of the proceeding is required to be given out of the jurisdiction; and so in divorce proceedings where service on the respondent outside of the jurisdiction is necessary or permitted by the rules.

SUBSTITUTES. In Scotch Law. Where an estate is settled on a long series of heirs, substituted one after another, in tailzie, the person first called in the tailzie is the institute; the rest, the heirs of tailzie, or the substitutes. Erskine, Inst. 8. 8. See TAILZIE.

SUBSTITUTIO HEREDIS. See HERES.

SUBSTITUTION (Lat. substitutio). In Civil Law. The putting of one person in the place of another, so that he may, in default of ability in the former, or after him, have the benefit of a devise or legacy. Direct substitution is merely the institution of a second legatee in case the first should be either incapable or unwilling to accept the legacy. Fideli commissary substitution is that which takes place when the person substituted is not to receive the legacy after the first legatee, and, consequently, must receive the thing bequeathed from the hands of the latter. Merlin, Répert. See SUBROGATION.

SUBSURFACE STREAMS. See WATERS.

SUBTERRANEAN WATER-COURSES. See WATERS.

SUBTERRANEAN WATERS. Subterranean streams, as distinguished from subterranean percolations, are governed by the same rules, and give rise to the same rights and obligations, as flowing surface streams; 25 Pa. 528; 2 H. & N. 186. But see 12 M. & W. 374. The owner of the land under which a stream flows can, therefore, maintain an action for the diversion of it, if such diversion took place under the same circumstances as would have enabled him to recover, if the stream had been wholly above ground; 25 Pa. 528; 45 id. 518; 5 H. & N. 382; 1 Sawy. 270. But in order to bring subterranean streams within the rules governing surface streams, their existence and their course must be, to some extent, known or notorious; 30 Conn. 533; 45 Pa. 518; and it must be proved that there was a well defined and discerned stream, and not merely a percolation; 161 Pa. 283. Where there is nothing to show that the waters of a spring are supplied by any defined flowing stream, the presumption will be that they have their source in the ordinary percolations of water through the soil; 42 Cal. 303. As these percolations spread themselves in every direction through the earth, it is impossible to avoid disturbing them without relinquishing the necessary enjoyment of the land; the law does not therefore forbid their disturbance; 79 Pa. 81.

The question has arisen how far one has the right to gather in his well or reservoir water which otherwise would have percolated through the soil of his property. It is suggested by Judge Cooley as a satisfactory principle, that it may lawfully be done for the actual use of the proprietor inasmuch as the waters belong to no one until they are collected and they may be appropriated by the one who collects and puts them to use; but one will not be permitted to dig a hole to injure his neighbor; 14 Alb. L. J. 63. The writer just cited considers it impracticable to apply to subterranean waters percolating through the soil the same rules which are used to regulate the rights of the proprietor in a running stream. "Such a rule," he adds, "would raise questions of unreasonable use and cause difficulties both of evidence and application that would make the rights of such waters more troublesome than valuable." Id. This precise question was considered in an English case, Acton v. Blundell, 12 M. & W. 324, by Tindal, C. J., who drew a distinction between such cases and those which concerned surface streams, and held the defendant liable in damages for drawing off a supply of water from a well used to run a mill, by a coal-pit three quarters of a mile from the well. This case was afterward referred to as making for the first time a distinction between underground and surface waters; 7 Exch. 282, 300; it is recognized as settling the rule in England, and is followed in many of the American courts; 7 H. L. Cas. 349; 2 El. & El. 445; 12 Q. B. 753; 4 Const. 195; 12 Ohio St. 310; 62 Me. 175; 38 Vt. 473; 25 Conn. 593. See Ang. Waters § 114, where the cases are collected.

But it is held that subterranean waters, flowing in known, definite channels, are subject to the same rule as surface waters; 161 Pa. 283; 17 L. R. Ir. 459; otherwise they may be drained; 7 H. L. Cas. 349; 50 Barb. 316; 62 Me. 175 (though done with malice; 72 N. Y. 89; [1895] A. C. 557; but see 50 N. H. 499); but not, it is held, if the supply of water in surface streams on the land of adjoining owners is thereby diminished; L. R. 6 Ch. 483. See 141 N. Y. 521; 8 Wash. 144; 65 N. W. Rep. (N. D.) 911. As between two corporations pumping water from their respective premises for sale, one cannot complain of the diversion of percolating water by the other; 58 N. Y. S. 10.

See Ang. Waters § 109; Gould, Waters 280; Bainbr. Mines 85; LAND. As to a prescriptive claim to direct such waters, see 20 Conn. 533; 32 Vt. 724.

SUBTRACTION (Lat. sub, away, trahere, to draw). The act of withholding or detaining anything unlawfully.

The principal descriptions of this offence are: (1) Subtraction of suit, and service, consisting of a withdrawal of fealty, suit of court, rent, or customary services, from the lord or landlord; 2 B. & C. 827. (2) Of titles. (3) Of conjugal rights. (4) Of legacies, which is the withholding of legacies by an executor. (5) Of church rates, a familiar class of cases in England, consisting in the refusal to pay the amount of rate at which any individual parishioner has been assessed for the necessary repairs of the parish church. Brown, Dict.

SUBTRACTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS. See RESTITUTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS.

SUBVENTION. A subsidy; a grant, usually from the government. See SUBSIDY.

SUCCESSFUL AND SATISFACTORY MANNER. "Successful and satisfactory manner," in the performance of work, means in a good, efficient and workmanlike manner. 144 Ky. 483, 139 S. W. 750.

SUCCESSION. In Louisiana. The right and transmission of the rights and obligations of the deceased to his heirs. The estate, rights, and charges which a person leaves after his death, whether the property exceed the charges or the charges exceed the property, or whether he has left only charges without property. The succession not only includes the rights and obligations of the deceased as they exist at the time of his death, but all that has accrued thereto since the opening of the succession, as also of the new charges to which it becomes subject. That right by which the heir can take possession of the estate of the deceased, such as it may be.

Irregular succession is that which is established by law in favor of certain persons or of the state in default of heirs either legal or instituted by testament.

Legal succession is that which is established in favor of the nearest relations of the deceased.

Testamentary succession is that which results from the constitution of the heir, contained in a testament executed in the form prescribed by law. See HEIR; DESCENT; Pothier, des Successions; Toullier, l. 8, tit. 1.

In Common Law. The mode by which one set of persons, members of a corporation aggregate, acquire the rights of another set which preceded them. This term in strictness is to be applied only to such corporations; 2 Bla. Com. 430.

In Scotch Law. "Heritable rights descend by succession to the heir properly so called; movable rights to the executor, who are sometimes said to be heirs in movables. Succession is either by special destination, which descends to those named by the proprietor himself, or legal, which devolves upon the persons whom the laws mark out for successors, from the presumption that the proprietor would have named them had he made a destination. The first is in all cases preferred to the other, as presumption must yield to truth." Ersk. Prin. III. § 1.

See INTESTATE SUCCESSION; PERPETUAL SUCCESSION; UNIVERSAL SUCCESSION.

SUCCESSION TO THE CROWN. See HEREDITARY RIGHT TO THE CROWN.

SUCCESSION DUTY. A duty payable, in England, under the Succession Duties Act of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 51, amended by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 21, upon succession to property. An excise or duty upon the right of a person to receive property by devise or inheritance from another under the regulations of the state. 45 S. W. Rep. (Mo.) 245. It is of the nature of the collateral inheritance tax of Pennsylvania, and like the English legacy duty, which is levied on a sliding scale, according as the successor is more or less nearly related to the decedent. See Brown, Dict. See LEGACY DUTY; TAX; DEATH DUTIES.

SUCCESSION, SINGULAR. See UNIVERSAL SUCCESSION.

SUCCESSOR. One who follows or comes into the place of another.

This term is applied more particularly to a sole corporation, or to any corporation. The word heir is more correctly applicable to a common person who takes an estate by descent. 12 Pick. 322; Co. Litt. 8 b.

A person who has been appointed or elected to some office after another person.

Where electrolyte plates belonged to two firms and "their heirs and successors," and they passed to one of the firms, and thence to one of its members, who sold them to a third firm, the latter was held not a "successor." 164 Mass. 457.

SUCCINCT. Brief, compressed, terse; hence, compressed in narrow shape; concise. 2 Ind. App. 549.

SUCESION LEGITIMA. The words sucesion legitima in the will of a Porto Rican held to mean "issue," and not "lawful heirs." 201 U. S. 31.

SUCKEN, SUCHEN. In Scotch Law. The whole of the lands restricted to a mill,—that is, whose tenants are bound to grind there. The possessors of these lands are called suckeners. Bell, Dict.

SUDDER. In Hindu Law. The chief seat of government distinguished from mofussil, or interior of the country. Whart.

SUE. To commence or to continue legal proceedings for the recovery of a right. See 11 Fed. Rep. 251; ACTION; SUIT. The words "to sue and be sued" as used in § 7 of the Organic Act of Porto Rico, when construed in connection with the grant of governmental powers therein contained, amount only to a recognition of a liability to be sued in case of consent duly given. 227 U. S. 270.

SUE OUT. To secure by petition or by request. English. To obtain judicially; to issue. Applied only to process; particularly such as is granted specially. To sue out a writ is to obtain and issue it; to issue it on leave obtained for the purpose. Burrill.

SUED OUT. A summons is not sued out till it passes from the clerk to a proper officer with a bona fide intention to have it served. 14 So. Rep. (Ala.) 333.

SUERTE. In Spanish Law. A small lot of ground. 5 Tex. 83.

SUFFER. To approve; to consent to; to permit and not to hinder. 19 Conn. 503; 17 Blatchf. 330. See PERMIT.

Synonymous with permit; as, in a statute against "suffering" an animal to go at large. To suffer an act to be done, by a person who can prevent it, is to permit or consent to it, to approve it, not to hinder it. It implies willingness. Anderson; 19 Conn. 505-6. Includes knowledge of what is to be done, and intention that what is done is what is to be done. Id.; 17 Blatchf. 331. As used in the Bankrupt Act of 1867, differs from the word "procure." To suffer implies a passive condition. It is like "to allow," "to permit," and does not import a demonstrative, active course, like the word procure. It is an apt word to apply to the case of pressure and powerful motives brought to bear upon a party. Under the influence of this pressure, and the operation of these motives, he suffers a thing to be done; that is, allows or permits it. Id.; 2 Biss. 423.

The use of the words "suffered greatly" in instructions in a personal injury case were held to be error. 137 Ky. 696, 126 S. W. 362.

"Suffering games of cards to be played" means the allowing or permitting games of cards to be played, with the knowledge that money or property was or is to be won or lost thereon. 141 Ky. 585, 133 S. W. 219.

SUFFERANCE. Consent given one from a failure to object; negative permission; toleration; allowance.

See ESTATE BY SUFFERANCE.

Passive consent. Sufferance should be distinguished from assent, consent, leave, and permission, which may import affirmative action, expressed volition, while sufferance is negative. Thus a tenant by sufferance is one who came lawfully into possession of lands, but whose right has expired, and who is now occupying merely by the permission implied from the owner's not having given notice to quit. Abbott. See SUFFERANCE, TENANCY AT.

SUFFERANCE, TENANCY BY. A tenancy by sufferance arises when a person comes into possession of land by lawful title and occupies it afterwards without any title at all. 11 Am. & Eng. Encyc. 2nd ed., 381; 2 Bla. Com. 150; 25 Cal. 31 et al. By the common law, a tenant by sufferance was not liable for rent as such although liable for the fair value of the premises in an action for use and occupation. Id.; 115 Mass. 367. The landlord was entitled to resume possession or the tenant to quit the premises at any time. Id.; ibid.

In general, a tenancy at sufferance is said to exist where a person comes into possession of lands lawfully, and after his estate is ended holds over wrongfully. Id., vol. 18, p. 177; Co. Litt. 57 b. Want of consent to the continued occupancy of the tenant is the distinguishing characteristic between a tenancy at sufferance and a tenancy at will. Id.; 16 Mass. 443. To render one a tenant at sufferance it is necessary that he be actually in possession of the land. There can be no such thing as a tenant at sufferance out of possession. Id.; 80 Ala. 416. The tenancy arises only out of the laches of the owner, and therefore a person whose original possession was lawful cannot, after his right to possession has terminated, claim the rights of a tenant at sufferance if the owner has not been guilty of laches. Id.; 28 Cal. 551. To create a tenancy at sufferance it is not necessary that any privity of contract or of estate exist between the parties. Id. 27 Mich. 26. The holding of a tenant at sufferance was the most shadowy estate recognized at common law, and practically the only distinction between such a tenant's holding and the possession of a trespasser was that the landlord could, by his acquiescence, at any time base upon the tenancy at sufferance the relation of landlord and tenant, which he could not establish at law against a mere trespasser, and that the tenant could not be subjected to an action in trespass before entry or demand for possession. Id.; 14 Ct. Cl. 493.

SUFFERANCE WHARF. A place appointed by order under the hands of the English Commissioners of Customs and Excise for the lading and unloading of goods liable to customs duties. Byrne.

SUFFICIENTLY. In a statute requiring the carrier to sufficiently water and feed live stock in transit the word is not too indefinite to carry a penalty. 24 S. W. Rep. (Tex.) 887.

SUFFRAGAN (L. Lat. suffraganeus). A titular bishop ordained to assist the bishop of the diocese in his spiritual functions, or to take his place. The number was limited to two to each bishop by 26 Hen. VIII. c. 14. So called because by his suffrage ecclesiastical causes were to be judged. T. L.

SUFFRAGE. Vote; the act of voting. Participation in the suffrage is not of right, but is granted by the state on a consideration of what is most for the interest of the state; Cooley, Const., 2d ed. 752; 1 MacArthur, 169; 11 Blatch. 200. The grant of suffrage makes it a legal right until it is recalled, and it is protected by the law as property is. The states establish rules of suffrage except as shown below. Suffrage is never a necessary accompaniment of state citizenship, and the great majority of citizens are always excluded from it. On the other hand, suffrage is sometimes given to those who are not citizens; as has been done by no less than twelve of the states, in admitting persons to vote, who, being aliens, have merely declared their intentions to become citizens.

By the constitution of the United States the qualifications for electors of members of the house of representatives are to be the same as those for the most numerous branch of the state legislature. The fifteenth amendment provides that "the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States, or by any state, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." The fourteenth amendment was intended mainly to effect the same object by a voluntary action on the part of the state, but was practically superseded by the fifteenth amendment.

It has been said that the constitution of the United States confers the right to vote upon no one. That right comes to the citizens of the United States when they possess it at all, under state laws. But the fifteenth amendment confers upon them a new exemption; from discrimination in elections on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; 23 U. S. 214, 542. See Cooley, Const., 2d ed. 14; Hare, Am. Const. L. 624; ELECTION; VOTER; CIVIL RIGHTS; CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES; Nineteenth Amendment.

SUGAR BOUNTY. The appropriation of money by the act of March 2, 1895, to be paid to certain manufacturers and producers of sugar is within the power of congress. 168 U. S. 427.

SUGGESTIO FALSI (Lat.). A statement of a falsehood. This amounts to a fraud whenever the party making it was bound to disclose the truth.

The following is an example of a case where chancery will interfere and set aside a contract as fraudulent, on account of the suggestio falsi; a purchaser applied to the seller to purchase a lot of wild land, and represented to him it was worth nothing, except for a sheep pasture, when he knew there was a valuable mine on the lot, of which the seller was ignorant. The sale was set aside; 2 Paige, Ch. 890. See CONCEALMENT; MISREPRESENTATION; REPRESENTATION; SUPPRESSIO VERI.

SUGGESTION. In Practice. Information. It is applied to those cases where, during the pendency of a suit, some matter of fact occurs which puts a stop to the suit in its existing form, such as death or insolvency of a party; the counsel of the other party announces the fact in court or enters it upon the record; the fact is usually admitted, if true, and the court issues the proper order thereupon. See 2 Sell. Pr. 191.

In wills, when suggestions are made to a testator for the purpose of procuring a devise of his property in a particular way, and such suggestions are false, they generally amount to a fraud; Bac, Abr. Wills (G 3).

SUGGESTIVE INTERROGATION. A phrase which has been used by some writers to signify the same thing as leading question. 2 Bentham, Ev. b. 3, c. 8. It is used in the French law.

SUI GENERIS. Of its own kind or class.

SUI HEREDES. In Civil Law. One's own heirs; proper heirs. Inst. 2, 19, 2.

SUI JURIS (Lat. of his own right). Possessing all the rights to which a free-man is entitled; not being under the power of another, as a slave, a minor, and the like.

To make a valid contract, a person must, in general, be sui juris. Every one of full age is presumed to be sui juris. Story, Ag. 10.

SUICIDE (Lat. suus, himself, cadere, to kill). Self-destruction.

This was once regarded by the common law as exclusively a felonious act; of late, however, it has been often treated as the result of insanity, to be followed by all the legal consequences of that disease, so far as it is practicable. That suicide may be committed by a person in the full enjoyment of his reason, there can be no doubt; nor can there be any doubt that it is often the result of unquestionable insanity. Between the two kinds of suicide here indicated, the medical jurist is obliged to discriminate, and in performing this duty the facts on the subject should be carefully considered.

The instinct of self-preservation is not so strong as to prevent men entirely from being tired of life and seeking their own destruction. They may have exhausted all their sources of enjoyment, their plans of business or of honor may have been frustrated, poverty or dishonor may be staring them in the face, the difficulties before them may seem utterly insurmountable, and, for some reason like these, they calmly and deliberately resolve to avoid the evil by ending their lives. The act may be unwise and presumptuous, but there is in it no element of disease. On the other hand, it is well known that suicidal desires are a very common trait of insanity,—that a large proportion of the insane attempt or meditate self-destruction. It may be prompted by a particular delusion, or by a sense of irresistible necessity. It may be manifested in the shape of a well-considered, persistent intention to seize upon the first opportunity to terminate life, or of a blind, automatic impulse acting without much regard to means or circumstances. As the disease gives way and reason is restored, this propensity disappears, and the love of life returns.

Besides these two forms of the suicidal propensity, there are other phases which cannot be referred with any degree of certainty to either of them. Persons, for instance, in the enjoyment of everything calculated to make life happy, and exhibiting no sign of mental disease, deliberately end their days. Another class, on approaching a precipice or a body of water, are seized with a desire, which may be irresistible, to take the fatal plunge. Many are the cases of children who, after some mild reproof, or slight contradiction, or trivial disappointment, have gone at once to some retired place and taken their lives. Now, we are as little prepared to refer all such cases to mental disease as we are to free voluntary choice. Every case, therefore, must be judged by the circumstances accompanying it, always allowing the benefit of the doubt to be given to the side of humanity and justice.

By the common law, suicide was treated as a crime, and the person forfeited all chattels real or personal, and various other property; 4 Bla. Com. 190. This result can be avoided by establishing the insanity of the party; and in England, of late years, courts have favored this course whenever the legal effect of suicide would operate as a punishment. On the other hand, where the rights and interests of other parties are involved, the question of insanity is more closely scrutinized; and ample proof is required of the party on whom the burden of proof lies.

To be guilty of this offence, the deceased must have had the will and intention of committing it, or else he committed no crime; but he also has been so considered who occasions his own death whilst maliciously attempting to kill another; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 27, s. 4. As he is beyond the reach of human laws, he cannot be punished. The English law, indeed, attempted to inflict a punishment by a barbarous burial of his body, and by forfeiting to the king the property which he owned which would belong to his relations; Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 9; 4 Bla. Com. 189; but forfeiture in this species of felony, as in other kinds, has been wholly abolished by the Felony Act of 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23; 4 Steph. Com. 62; one who kills another at his request incurs the same guilt as if not requested; 8 C. & P. 418; so of killing one in a duel; 8 East 581; 31 Ga. 411; in Massachusetts, an attempt to commit suicide is not punishable, but one who, in attempting it, kills another, commits an indictable homicide; 123 Mass. 422; one who counsels a suicide which is committed in his presence is guilty as principal; 8 C. & P. 418; 70 Mo. 412; 13 Mass. 359; Russ. & R. 525.

Evidence of an intention to commit suicide is material in a murder case, where deceased was found dead under circumstances not inconsistent with the theory of suicide; 157 Mass. 180.

See FELO DE SE; SELF-DESTRUCTION; INSURANCE; PERSUADE.

In regard to wills made just before committing suicide, the prevalent doctrine on this point, both in the United States and in England, is that the act of self-destruction may not necessarily imply insanity, and that if the will is a rational act, rationally done, the sanity of the testator is established; 7 Pick. 94; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 109; 2 Harring. 693; 2 Eccl. 415; 46 La. Ann. 773.

It has been held that when the owner of a deposit receipt gives it to another, the gift to take effect at the death of the donor, under such circumstances that the jury find it to have been done in contemplation of suicide, it is not a good donatio mortis causa; [1896] 2 I. R. 204.

In regard to life insurance, it is the law of England, at present, that in every case of intentional suicide, whatever may have been the mental condition, the policy becomes void; 3 Mann. & G. 437; 33 L. J. n. s. Ch. 53. In 1 F. & F. 22, the court told the jury the question was, did the assured know he was throwing himself out of the window. If he did, no recovery could be had under the policy. Otherwise, if he did not. Such appears to be the rule in Ohio, Maryland, and Massachusetts; 4 Ins. L. J. 159; 42 Md. 414; 103 Mass. 227; and, it is said, in Germany, Holland, and France; 6 Ins. L. J. 719; May, Ins. § 313. But, although it has been a much vexed question, the American cases generally construe the phrases "die by his own hand," "commit suicide," or "die by suicide," as including only criminal acts of self-destruction, and not acts not done under the control of the will; Biddle, Ins. 831; 54 Me. 224; 4 Seld. 290; 15 Wall. 580; 7 Heik. 567; Law of Suicide in Life Ins., by William Shradley, 1860. But the supreme court has decided that a condition in the policy that it shall be void if the insured should die by suicide, "sane or insane," avoids the policy, notwithstanding he was of unsound mind and wholly unconscious of the act; 93 U. S. 294; 64 Vt. 78; and the same has been held with reference to a provision in a policy against suicide, "felonious or otherwise, sane or insane;" 34 Wis. 369; 75 Ia. 346; by his "own act or intention, whether sane or insane;" 70 Mo. 27; or "die by his own hand, sane or insane;" 65 Mich. 199; or "shall die by his own hand or act, sane or insane;" 65 N. Y. 233; but death by the suicide of the insured, although insane, is not "death by his own hand," whereby the policy is to be void in that event; 38 U. S. App. 37; and the provision in a policy that if the insured shall "die by his own hand while insane," the insurer shall pay the amount of the premiums and interest, applies only in case the self-destruction is intentional; but where the insured killed himself while incapable of knowing the effect of his act, the whole amount of the policy can be recovered; 87 Ky. 541; or if death is accidental; 29 Fed. Rep. 198; and the same is held with respect to the death of the "insured by his own hand, sane or insane;" 7 Chi. L. N. 421.

The words "felonious or otherwise," used in a policy, are held equivalent to "sane or insane;" 25 Fed. Rep. 315; but not the words, "die by his own hand or act, voluntary or otherwise;" 1 McArth. 632; or the words, "under any circumstances die by his own hand;" 40 Ohio St. 217.

A by-law of an insurance company making a certificate void if a member, "sane or insane," should take his life, is valid as to a prior certificate which provided that any violation of "the requirements of the laws now in force or hereafter to be enacted," should render the certificate null and void; 71 Ala. 438.

The full amount of the policy is recoverable under a statute which provides that suicide shall be no defence to an action on an insurance policy, unless it was contemplated at the time of obtaining the policy that the suicide, whether sane or insane, shall only be entitled to recover the amount of the premiums paid; 50 Fed. Rep. 511. Where a statute provides that "all companies, after having received three annual premiums, are estopped from defending on any other ground than fraud," . . . the defendant may set up the defence of suicide; 134 Pa. 45.

Where the insured, while insane and unable to realize the consequences of his act, and without intending thereby to take his life, cuts his throat, his death comes within the terms in the policy providing that death shall be by "external, violent, and accidental means;" 74 Mich. 592.

Where one secured a policy of life insurance, and, being financially embarrassed, killed himself in order to secure money for the payment of his debts, the policy was held void, although it was silent as to suicide; 169 U. S. 139; but if a policy is made payable to the wife of the insured, she may recover on it although her husband committed suicide; 39 Atl. Rep. (Pa.) 52. Where suicide was the defence to an action on an insurance policy, it was not error to charge that "the law does not presume murder; it must be proved;" and, if the evidence is equal as between murder and suicide, the jury must find for the defendant; 84 Fed. Rep. 411; and in an action on such a policy where the evidence is conflicting and quite evenly balanced as to whether death was caused by the intentional or accidental act of the deceased, it will be presumed that death resulted from accident; 47 Fed. Rep. 272. It has been said that the question is not precisely whether a party is insane or not, but whether he understood the physical nature and consequences of his act, and had sufficient will to make the act voluntary; 10 Am. L. Reg. n. s. 101, 679. See 150 U. S. 468; Wharton, Mental Unsoundness; Phill. Ins.

The burden of showing a suicide rests with the company; 46 Ill. App. 307; 71 Hun 146; 46 La. Ann. 1189. In making the proof necessary to establish the liability of an insurer, the plaintiff is entitled to the presumption that a sane man would not commit suicide, as well as of other rules of law established for the guidance of courts and juries in the investigation and determination of facts; 150 U. S. 468; and while proofs of loss, stating suicide as the cause of death, are admissible, they are not conclusive; 24 L. R. A. 589; and, where the defence is fraud, suicide may be shown to be the agency by which the fraud was accomplished, although by the policy suicide was no defence; 123 N. Y. 85.

SUIT (L. Lat. secta; from Lat. sequi, to follow. French, suite). In Practice. An action.

It is more general than "action," which is almost exclusively applied to law, and denotes any legal proceeding of a civil kind brought by one person against another. 84 Me. 72; 83 Ia. 471.

Suit is a generic term, of comprehensive signification, and applies to any proceeding in a court of justice in which the plaintiff pursues, in such court, the remedy which the law affords him for the redress of an injury or the recovery of a right. 10 Ill. App. 333.

The word suit in the twenty-fifth section of the Judiciary Act of 1789 applies to any proceeding in a court of justice in which the plaintiff pursues in such court the remedy which the law affords him. An application for a prohibition is, therefore, a suit; 2 Pet. 440. According to the Code of Practice of Louisiana, art. 96, a suit is a real, personal, or mixed demand made before a competent judge, by which the parties pray to obtain their rights and a decision of their disputes. In that acceptance, the words suit, process, and cause are in that state almost synonymous. See SECTA; Steph. Pl. 427; 3 Bla. Com. 395; 1 Chitty, Pl. 399; Wood, Civ. Law, b. 4, p. 315; 4 Mass. 263; 18 Johns. 14; 4 Watts 154; 3 Story, Const. § 1719. In its most extended sense, the word suit includes not only a civil action, but also a criminal prosecution, as, indictment, information, and a conviction by a magistrate; Hamm. N. P. 270. Suit is applied to proceedings in chancery as well as in law; 1 Sm. Ch. Dec. 26; and is, therefore, more general than action, which is almost exclusively applied to matters of law; 10 Paige, Ch. 516.

The witnesses or followers of the plaintiff. 3 Bla. Com. 295. See SECTA.

Suit of court, an attendance which a tenant owes to his lord's court. Cowel.

Suit covenant, where one has covenanted to do suit and service in his lord's court.

Suit custom, where service is owed time out of mind.

Suithold, a tenure in consideration of certain services to the superior lord.

The following one in chace; as, fresh suit.

A petition to a king, or a great person, or a court.

SUIT IN CONCURSO. See CONCURSO.

SUIT SILVER. A small sum of money paid in lieu of attendance at the court barons. Cowel.

SUITE (French). Those persons who by his authority follow or attend an ambassador or other public minister.

In general, the suite of a minister are protected from arrest, and the inviolability of his person is communicated to those who form his suite; Vattel, lib. 4, c. 9, § 120. See 1 Dall. 177; Baldw. 240; AMBASSADOR.

SUITOR. One who is a party to a suit or action in court. One who is a party to an action. In its ancient sense, suitor meant one who was bound to attend the county court; also one who formed part of the secta.

SUITORS' FUND IN CHANCERY. In England. A fund consisting of moneys which, having been paid into the court of chancery, are placed out for the benefit and better security of the suitors, including interest from the same. By stat. 32 & 33 Vict. c. 91, sec. 4, the principal of this fund, amounting to over £3,000,000, was transferred to the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt. Moz. & W.

SUM. The sense in which it is most commonly used is "money"; a quantity of money or currency; any amount indefinitely, a sum of money, a small sum, or a large sum. 96 U. S. 368.

Sum of the Locals. See THROUGH ROUTE.

SUMMARY ACTIONS. In Scotch Law. Those which are brought into court not by summons, but by petition, corresponding to summary proceedings in English courts. Bell; Brown.

SUMMARY CONVICTION. A phrase applied to proceedings which result in the sentence of an accused person without jury trial. At common law it was applied only in cases of contempt. Such proceedings are now frequently provided for by statute, either for trial by a court without a jury, or a final disposition of criminal cases by the committing magistrate. Such statutes are, in derogation of the right of trial by jury, secured by the state and federal constitutions and therefore must provide a right of appeal to a court having a jury. They usually apply only to lesser offences and to hardened offenders.

Summary proceedings as enumerated by Blackstone comprehend: 1. All trials of offences and frauds contrary to the laws of the excise and other branches of revenue which are to be determined by the commissioners of the respective departments and justices of the peace in the country; such convictions are absolutely necessary for due collection of the public money. 2. Convictions before justices of the peace in order to inflict divers petty, pecuniary mulcts and corporal penalties for such disorderly offences as common swearing, drunkenness, vagrancy, idleness, etc. 3. Attachments for contempt and the subsequent proceedings thereon. 4. Bla. Com. 280. See SUMMARY PROCEEDING; CONVICTION.

SUMMARY JURISDICTION. The jurisdiction of a court to give a judgment or make an order itself forthwith. See CONTEMPT.

SUMMARY PROCEEDING. A form of trial in which the ancient established course of legal proceedings is disregarded, especially in the matter of trial by jury, and, in the case of the heavier crimes, presentment by a grand jury. See 8 Gray 329.

In no case can the party be tried summarily unless when such proceedings are authorized by legislative authority, except perhaps in cases of contempts; for the common law is a stranger to such a mode of trial; 4 Bla. Com. 280. See 2 Kent 73; 2 Conn. 819; 37 Me. 172; 4 Hill 145; 8 Gray 329; 4 Dev. 15; 10 Yerg. 59. See Gill & Doug. Sum. Jur.

The term summary proceedings is applied to proceedings under statute for enabling landlords promptly to dispossess tenants who hold over after default in payment of rent, or after expiration of the term. See PROCEEDING.

SUMMING UP. In Practice. The act of making a speech before a court and jury, after all the evidence has been heard, in favor of one of the parties in the case, is called summing up. When the judge delivers his charge to the jury, he usually sums up the evidence in the case. See CHANGE; OPENING AND CLOSING.

SUMMON. In Practice. To notify the defendant that an action has been instituted against him, and he is required to answer to it at a time and place named. This is done by a proper officer either giving the defendant a copy of the summons, or leaving it at his house, or by reading the summons to him.

SUMMONES. In Old Practice. A writ by which a party was summoned to appear in court.

SUMMONES AD AUXILIANDUM. (You summon to aid.) A writ to summon a party in aid. Burrill; Roscoe's Real Act. 280.

SUMMONES AD WARRANTIANDUM. (You summoned to warranty.) A writ which issued to summon a party who had been vouched to warranty. Burrill; Roscoe's Real Act. 268.

SUMMONERS. Petty officers who cite men to appear in any court.

SUMMONS. In Practice. The name of a writ commanding the sheriff, or other authorized officer, to notify a party to appear in court to answer a complaint made against him and in the said writ specified, on a day therein mentioned. 8 Bla. Com. 279.

SUMMONS AND ORDER. In English Practice. In this phrase the summons is the application to a common-law judge at chambers in reference to a pending action, and upon it the judge or master makes the order. Moz. & W.

SUMMONS AND SEVERANCE. See SEVERANCE.

SUMMUS JUS (Lat.). Extreme right, strict right. See MAXIMS, Summus jus, etc.

SUMPTUARY LAWS. Laws relating to the expenses of the people, and made to restrain excess in apparel, food, furniture, etc.

They originated in the view that luxury is, in some of its degrees, opposed to public policy, and that the state is bound to interfere against it. Montesquieu, Esprit des Loix, b. 7, c. 2, 4, and Tacitus, Ann. b. 2, ch. 33, b. 3, ch. 52.

In England, in 1336, it was enacted, 10 Edw. III. c. 3, that inasmuch as many mischiefs had happened to the people of the realm by excessive and costly meats, by which, among other things, many who aspired in this respect beyond their means were impoverished and unable to aid themselves or their liege lord in time of need, all men were forbidden to have served more than two courses at a meal, each of but two sorts of victual, except on the principal feasts of the year, and then only three courses were allowed. 4 Com. 170. Subsequent statutes, 1363, 1463, 1482, regulated the dress, and to some extent the diet, of the people, with careful regard to their rank. The substance of these statutes will be found in Knight's History of Eng. p. 272. They were repealed by 1 Jac. I. c. 23. An act of 30 Car. II. c. 3, which ordered the dead to be buried in woollen shrouds; was not repealed until 53 Geo. III. c. 108.

In modern times legislation is not resorted to in respect to this object; but the subject is frequently discussed in connection with the laws for the prevention or punishment of intemperance. See POLICE POWERS.

SUNDAY. The first day of the week. In some of the New England states it begins at sunset on Saturday, and ends at the same time the next day. But in other parts of the United States it generally commences at twelve o'clock on the night between Saturday and Sunday, and ends in twenty-four hours thereafter; 6 Gill & J. 208. See 4 Strobb. 493 (a very learned case); 37 Mo. 466; 39 Me. 193; 3 Cush. 137. The Sabbath, the Lord's day, and Sunday, all mean the same thing; 6 Gill & J. 268; 89 Ga. 341.

The stat. 5 & 6 Edw. V. c. 3, enacted that

Sunday should be strictly observed as a holy day, provided that in case of necessity it should be lawful to labor, ride, fish, or work at any kind of work. The Book of Sports (1618) declared that, after divine service, the people should not be disturbed from any lawful recreation. The stat. 29 Car. II. c. 7, provided that no tradesman, artificer, workman, laborer, or other person whatsoever, should exercise any worldly business, etc., upon the Lord's day, works of necessity and charity alone excepted. It also forbade the execution of legal process on that day. This has been followed substantially in America, with a tendency to greater strictness. This includes all business, public or private, done in the ordinary calling of the person; 5 B. & C. 406; ordinary calling means that which the ordinary duties of the calling bring into continued action; 7 B. & C. 596; 55 Ga. 245. Many statutes except those who observe the seventh day; others do not; and such legislation is constitutional; 52 Pa. 126; 69 N. Y. 557; 122 Mass. 40; the fact that an individual believes the seventh day is the Sabbath, but does not observe it as such, does not bring him within the exception; 26 Neb. 464. Jews are bound to observe the civil regulations for keeping Sunday; 52 Pa. 125. In New York writs against Jews cannot be made returnable on Saturday; 39 N. Y. 254. Cases of necessity are determined by the moral fitness of the work; 34 Pa. 400. Charity includes everything which proceeds from a sense of moral duty, or a feeling of kindness and humanity, and is intended wholly for the comfort and relief of another, and not for one's own pleasure and benefit; 113 Mass. 197. Necessity may arise out of particular occupations; 23 How. 219; 14 Wall. 494; 25 Tex. App. 597; but not when it is a work of mere convenience or profit; 97 Mass. 404; 30 Ind. 476. Shaving a man is not a work of necessity; 54 Mo. App. 310; 23 Wkly. Law Bul. 450; 140 Pa. 89; 143 Mass. 28. See infra. Reaping a field of oats on Sunday in order to prevent the loss thereof is a work of necessity; 42 Ill. App. 594. Running street railways on Sunday is illegal; 54 Pa. 401; contra, 72 N. Y. 196; 14 Repr. 384 (Ky. Ct. of App.); and see 55 Ga. 126. When statutes forbid travelling on Sunday, there can be no recovery for injuries from defective streets; 117 Mass. 64; 51 Me. 423; 47 Vt. 33; but see 39 Wisc. 21; unless the party was travelling from motives of necessity or charity; 121 Mass. 301; 84 Me. 433; as riding to a funeral or for health; 30 Atl. Rep. (Me.) 1048; or walking for exercise; 65 Me. 34. But in actions for torts against individuals by common carriers, it is no defence that the injury occurred upon Sunday; 26 Pa. 342; 48 Ia. 652; 116 Ind. 566; contra, 124 Mass. 387. Most of the cases are otherwise: Big. L. C. Torts 711; see 125 U. S. 555, and the law in Massachusetts was altered in 1877.

Except as to judicial acts, which are void when done on Sunday; 1 W. Bl. 520; 140 U. S. 118; 41 Kan. 336; see DIES NON; the common law makes no distinction between Sunday and any other day. The English cases decided after the act of Charles II., supra, merely avoided contracts made in pursuance of one's ordinary calling; see 1 Cr. & J. 180; 31 Barb. 41; 4 M. & W. 270; but in most of the states contracts made on Sunday are invalid; see 35 Me. 143; 19 Vt. 358; 6 Watts 231; 3 Wisc. 343; and if not executed, cannot be enforced; 87 Ga. 482; 84 Me. 11; 97 Ala. 700; 93 Mich. 117. In New York any business but judicial may be done on Sunday; 44 Barb. 618. Generally speaking executory contracts made on Sunday will not be enforced, while executed contracts will not be disturbed; 78 Pa. 473; 103 Mass. 339; 57 Ga. 179; 47 N. J. Eq. 201; but see 2 Ohio St. 889; 13 Kans. 529, as to executory contracts. Delivery on Sunday passes title against the vendor; 26 Cal. 514; 18 Ind. 203; but see 12 Mich. 378; a church subscription on Sunday is valid in Pennsylvania; 12 Repr. 665; and Michigan; 21 Alb. L. J. 293. See 62 Ind. 805. A contract of sale made on Sunday is not saved from being a Sunday contract by the fact that the purchase-money was not paid until Monday; 56 Conn. 838. A contract dated on Sunday may be shown to be erroneously dated; 97 Mass. 166; and it may be shown that a contract bearing a secular date was actually dated on Sunday; 48 Me. 198; but not against a bona fide holder without notice; 48 Ia. 228. When a contract takes effect on delivery, the date is not material; 6 Bush 185; 48 Ia. 297; and a note executed on Sunday but delivered on another day is valid; 24 Vt. 189; 35 Me. 143; a contract made on Sunday may be ratified; 7 Gray 184; 24 Vt. 317; 79 Ia. 101; see 87 Ga. 482; but see 11 Ala. 885; but only by an express agreement and not by mere acquiescence; 79 Fed. Rep. 828; a will executed on Sunday is valid; 9 Allen 118; 1 Am. L. Rev. 750 (N. H.); 124 Ind. 86. A contract for an advertisement in a Sunday paper is invalid; 24 N. Y. 353; contra, 53 Mo. 474. A verdict in a homicide case submitted to the jury on Saturday may be received and the jury discharged on Sunday; 163 U. S. 662. Laws requiring all persons to refrain from their ordinary callings on Sunday have been held not to encroach on the religious liberty of the people; Cooley, Const. Lim., 2d ed. 584, 725; they may be sustained as police regulations; 8 Pa. 313; 33 Mich. 279; 40 Ala. 725.

Under an act making it unlawful to open a shop on Sunday, for the sale of goods, etc., a barber cannot be convicted; 38 Pac. Rep. (Wash.) 1001.

A statute forbidding barbers to carry on their trade on Sunday is constitutional, under the police power; 149 N. Y. 195; s. c. 31 L. R. A. 689; notwithstanding the act allows barbers in the cities of New York and Saratoga to work till one o'clock; but in Illinois (43 N. E. Rep. 1108), it is held that an act forbidding barbers to work at their trade on Sunday is a taking of property without due process of law; and that it is not a proper exercise of the police power. See, also, 44 Pac. Rep. (Cal.) 843.

Any act forbidding railroad trains to run on Sunday does not constitute a regulation of, and an obstruction to, interstate commerce, and is valid; 88 Va. 95; 163 U. S. 299; 24 W. Va. 783; 90 Ga. 396; but an act forbidding all manner of servile labor on Sundays, etc., is held to be void, so far as it affects interstate traffic; 65 How. Pr. 72. The running of trains is within the prohibition of a statute which punishes any person who labors in his calling on Sunday, or employs his servants in so doing, except in works of necessity or charity; 24 W. Va. 783; but it has been held that running an excursion train on Sunday is a work of necessity; 30 S. W. Rep. (Ky.) 878; so is delivery of milk to customers; 49 Pac. Rep. (Kan.) 87.

Acts have been passed forbidding baseball playing on Sunday. The cases differ as to their constitutionality. See 56 Alb. L. J. 202; 57 id. 258.

No one is bound to do work in performance of his contract on Sunday, unless the work by its very nature or by express agreement is to be done on that day and can be then done without a breach of law; 18 Conn. 161; 6 Johns. 326; 10 Ohio 426; 7 Blackf. 479.

Sundays are computed in the time allowed for the performance of an act; 10 M. & W. 831; but if the last day happen to be a Sunday, it is to be excluded, and the act must, in general, be performed on Monday; 3 Pa. R. 201; 8 Chitty, Pr. 110; 133 U. S. 209; 147 id. 47. Notes and bills, when they fall due on Sunday, are payable on Saturday, unless a statute provides otherwise. The indorsement of a note creates a new contract, and is an act within the statute prohibiting secular business on Sunday; 84 Me. 111. See, as to the origin of keeping Sunday as a holiday, Story, Pr. Notes § 220; Story, Bills § 223. See, generally, 17 Am. L. Reg. n. s. 285; 3 Rep. Am. Bar Association (1880); 2 Am. L. Rev. 226; 21 Alb. L. J. 424 (Sabbath-breaking); 28 Am. L. Reg. 137, 209, 273; 32 Am. Rep. 557; 30 id. 417; 17 id. 123 (legality of labor on Sunday); 8 id. 371, n.; 54 Pa. 401; 8 Cr. L. Mag. 682 (Sabbath-breaking; works of necessity). The Massachusetts law on this subject depends more on its peculiar legislation and customs than any general principles of justice or law; 23 How. 209.

As to execution of legal process on Sunday. See DIES NON.

See HOLIDAY; POLICE POWER.

SUNKEN WRECK. Where part of the frame of a ship was sunk beneath the surface of the sea and partially imbedded in the ground, as was also a quantity of iron ore that formed a part of the cargo of the ship, it was held to be a sunken wreck within the meaning of the collision clause of a policy of insurance; [1893] Prob. 248.

SUPER ALTUM MARE (Lat.). Upon the high sea. See HIGH SEA.

SUPER-JURARE. A term anciently used, when a criminal, who tried to excuse himself by his own oath or that of one or two witnesses, was convicted by the oaths of many more witnesses. Moz. & W.

SUPER PRÆROGATIVA REGIS. A writ which formerly lay against the king's tenant's widow for marrying without the royal license. Fitzh. N. B. 174.

SUPER STATUTO. A writ that lay against the king's tenant, holding in chief, who aliened the king's land without his license.

SUPER STATUTO FACTO POUR SENESCHAL ET MARSHAL DE ROY. A writ which lay against a steward or marshal for holding plea in his court, or for trespass or contracts not made or arising within the king's household. Whart.

SUPER STATUTO VERSUS SERVANTES ET LABORATOIRES. A writ which lay against him who kept any servants who had left the service of another contrary to law.

SUPER VISUM CORPORIS (Lat.). Upon view of the body. When an inquest is held over a body found dead, it must be super visum corporis. See CORONER; INQUEST.

SUPERCARGO. In Maritime Law. A person specially employed by the owner of a cargo to take charge of and sell to the best advantage merchandise which has been shipped, and to purchase returning cargoes and to receive freight, as he may be authorized.

Supercargoes have complete control over the cargo and everything which immediately concerns it, unless their authority is either expressly or impliedly restrained; 12 East 381. Under certain circumstances they are responsible for the cargo; 4 Mass. 115; see 1 Gill & J. 1; but the supercargo has no power to interfere with the government of the ship; 3 Pardessus, n. 646.

SUPERFICIARIUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. He who has built upon the soil of another, which he has hired for a number of years or forever, yielding a yearly rent. This is not very different from the owner of a lot on ground-rent in Pennsylvania. Dig. 43. 18. 1.

SUPERFICIES (Lat.). In Civil Law. Whatever has been erected on the soil.

SUPERFLUOUS LANDS. Lands acquired by a railroad company under its statutory powers and not required for the purpose of the undertaking. See 10 Jur. Rev. 281.

Slips of land above and below a tunnel; 51 L. J. Q. B. 173; land under arches which carry a railway; 48 L. J. Ch. 258; mines under a surface required or which may be required for the undertaking; 46 L. J. Q. B. 509; are not superfluous lands; but the whole of the land beyond the boundary wall of a railway is superfluous, even though that wall be also a retaining wall thicker at the base than at the surface, and though part of such land would be within a line drawn on the surface vertically above the line of the footings of the wall; 53 L. J. Ch. 198.

SUPERFETATION. The conception of a second embryo during the gestation of the first, or the conception of a child by a woman already pregnant with another, during the time of such pregnancy.

This doctrine, though doubted, seems to be established by numerous cases; 1 Beck. Med. Jur. 193; Cassan, Superfetation; New York Medical Repository; 1 Briand, Méd. Lég. prem. partie, c. 3, art. 4; 1 Fodéré, Méd. Lég. § 290; Buffon, Hist. Nat. de l'Homme, Puberté.

SUPERINDUCTIO (Lat.). In the Civil Law. A species of obliteration. Dig. 28. 4. 1. 1.

SUPERINSTITUTION. The institution of one upon another, as where two persons are admitted and are instituted to the same benefice, under adverse titles. Cowel.

SUPERINTENDENT. One who has the power of direction and control over the acts or labor of others. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

SUPERINTENDENT REGISTRAR. An officer who superintends the registration of births, deaths, and marriages in England and Wales. Whart.

The clerk to the guardians may be the superintendent registrar (Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1836, s. 7); but he has no absolute right to be appointed, although he in fact always holds the office. Byrne.

SUPERIOR. One who has a right to command; one who holds a superior rank; as, a soldier is bound to obey his superior.

In estates, some are superior to others: an estate entitled to a servitude or easement over another estate is called the superior or dominant, and the other the inferior or servient estate. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1612.

SUPERIOR CIVIL COURTS OF ENGLAND. See COURTS OF ENGLAND.

SUPERIOR COURT. A term applied collectively to the three courts of common law, at Westminster: namely, the king's bench, the common pleas, the exchequer; and so in Ireland.

It denotes a court of intermediate jurisdiction between the courts of inferior or limited jurisdiction and the courts of last resort.

In American Law. A court of intermediate jurisdiction between the inferior courts and those of last resort. See the several states.

SUPERIOR AND VASSAL. In Scotch Law. A feudal relation corresponding with the English lord and tenant.

SUPERNUMERARI (Lat.). In Roman Law. Those advocates who were not statuti, which title see.

The statuti were inscribed in the matriculation books, and formed a part of the college of advocates in each jurisdiction. The supernumeraries were not attached to any bar in particular, and could reside where they pleased; they took the place of advocates by title as vacancies occurred in that body.

SUPERONERATIO (L. Lat. superonerare). Surcharging a common: i. e. putting in beasts of a number or kind other than the right of common allows. It can only be of a common appendant or appurtenant. Bracton 229. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 23, § 4, gives two remedies, novel disseisin and writ of admeasurement, by which latter remedy no damages are recovered till the second offence. Now, distraining, trespass, and case are used as remedies. 8 Bbarsw. Bla. Com. 238.

SUPERONERATIONE PASTURA. A writ that formerly lay against him who was impleaded in the county court for the surcharge of a common for his cattle and the cause was removed into one of the superior courts.

SUPERSEDEAS (Lat. that you set aside). In Practice. The name of a writ containing a command to stay the proceedings at law.

An auxiliary process designed to supersede the enforcement of the judgment of the court below, brought up by writ of error for review. 103 U. S. 249. Originally it was a writ directed to an officer, commanding him to desist from enforcing the execution of another writ which he was about to execute, or which might come in his hands. In modern times the term is often used synonymously with a "stay of proceedings," and is employed to designate the effect of an act or proceeding which of itself suspends the enforcement of a judgment; 99 Cal. 306.

It is granted on good cause shown that the party ought not to proceed; Fitzh. N. B. 238. There are some writs which, though they do not bear this name, have the effect to supersede the proceedings: namely, a writ of error when bail is entered operates as a superseas; and a writ of certiorari to remove the proceeding of an inferior into a superior court has, in general, the same effect; 8 Mod. 373; 6 Binn. 461. But under special circumstances, this certiorari has not the effect to stay the proceeding, particularly where summary proceedings, as to obtain possession under the landlord and tenant law, are given by statute; 6 Binn. 460. See Bacon, Abr.; Comyns, Dig. Yelv. G. n.

SUPERSTITIOUS USE. In English Law. When lands, tenements, rents, goods, or chattels are given, secured, or appointed for and toward the maintenance of a priest or chaplain to say mass; for the maintenance of a priest or other man to pray for the soul of any dead man in such a church or elsewhere; to have and maintain perpetual obits, lamps, torches, etc., to be used at certain times to help to save the souls of men out of purgatory; in such cases the king, by force of several statutes, is authorized to direct and appoint all such uses to such purposes as are truly charitable; Bac. Abr. Charitable Uses and Mortmain (D); Duke, Char. Uses 105; 6 Ves. 567; 4 Co. 104.

The doctrine has no recognition in this country; 18 W. N. C. (Pa.) 276; 108 N. Y. 30; and a bequest to support a Catholic priest, and perhaps certain other uses in England, would not be considered as superstitious uses; 1 Pa. 49; 8 id. 327; 17 S. & R. 378; 1 Wash. C. C. 224. Yet many of the superstitious uses of the English law would fail to be considered as charities, and would undoubtedly come under the prohibition against perpetuities. See CHARITIES; CHARITABLE USES; 1 Jar. Wills, ch. ix. In England there are three classes of persons who have been held obnoxious to the law against superstitious uses: 1. Roman Catholics. 2. Protestant dissenters. 3. Jews. Their various disabilities have been almost wholly removed, and Catholics and Jews have been put on the same footing as Protestant dissenters in reference to their schools and places of religious worship; Lew. Tr., 9th ed. 110. See MASSES.

SUPERVISOR. An overseer; a surveyor.

An officer whose duty it is to take care of the highways.

The chief officer of a town or organized township in the states of Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Iowa. He has various duties assigned him by the statutes as a town officer, and likewise represents his town in the general assembly, or county board of supervisors. See BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

SUPERVISORS OF ELECTION. Persons appointed and commissioned by the United States circuit judge to supervise the registration of voters and the holding of elections for representatives in congress under Rev. Stat. §§ 2011-2031. The law for the appointment of supervisors was repealed by the act of Feb. 8, 1894, 28 Stat. L. 85. As to what was the registration of voters under this act, see REGISTRATION. While this legislation was in force it was held that in case of a question as to what political organization should be recognized by the court in appointing supervisors, the body which was recognized by the last state convention of the party should be considered as its representative organization; subject, however, to modification by change of circumstances; 9 Fed. Rep. 14.

The legislation of congress in vesting the appointment of supervisors in the courts was constitutional, and in the exercise of its supervisory power over elections for senators and representatives, new duties may be imposed by congress on the officers of election and new penalties for breach of duty; 100 U. S. 371, 399. See ELECTION.

SUPPLEMENTAL. That which is added to a thing to complete it.

SUPPLEMENTAL AFFIDAVIT, in practice. An affidavit made in addition to a previous affidavit, for the purpose of supplying some deficiency in it.

SUPPLEMENTAL ANSWER. One filed in chancery for the purpose of correcting, adding to, and explaining an answer already filed. Sm. Ch. Pr. 334. In New York and states having similar practice it is an additional answer to the complaint. It may be to allege a release after issue joined; 3 Misc. Rep. 54; or to set up facts excusing non-payment where the defence of payment was relied on, until the time of trial; 53 N. W. Rep. (Minn.) 708.

In chancery practice, also in civil actions under the codes of reformed procedure, matters of fact which have arisen since the answer was served, and which, therefore, are not proper to be introduced by an amended answer, may be brought to the knowledge of the court by an answer made in aid of the original answer, and therefore called supplemental. It answers the same end as the plea puis darrein continuance in actions according to common-law practice. Abbott.

SUPPLEMENTAL BILL. In Equity Practice. A bill brought as an addition to an original bill to supply some defect in its original frame or structure which cannot be supplied by amendment. See 1 Paige, Ch. 207; 15 Miss. 456; 22 Barb. 161; 14 Ala. N. s. 147. It may be brought by a plaintiff or defendant; 2 Ball & B. 140; 1 Sto. 218; and as well after, as before, a decree; 3 Md. Ch. Dec. 306; 1 Macn. & G. 405; Story, Eq. Pl. § 338; 41 Fed. Rep. 725; but must be within a reasonable time; 2 Halst. Ch. 463.

If there has been a change of interest in a pending equity suit, the proper method to introduce another party or to substitute one party for another, is by a supplemental bill or by an original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill; 24 U. S. App. 113.

A supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review cannot be entertained where no new facts pertinent to the litigation are discussed except such as were known to the complainants at the date of the original decree; 27 U. S. App. 204.

It may be filed when a necessary party has been omitted; 6 Madd. 369; 4 Johns. Ch. 605; 85 Tenn. 171; to introduce a party who has acquired rights subsequent to the filing of the original bill; 8 Ia. 472; when, after the parties are at issue and witnesses have been examined, some point not already made seems to be necessary, or some additional discovery is found requisite; 1 Paige 200; when new events referring to and supporting the rights and interests already mentioned have occurred subsequent to the filing of the bill; Story, Eq. Pl. 336; 5 Beav. 253; for the statement only of facts and circumstances material and beneficial to the merits, and not merely matters of evidence; 3 Sto. 269; when, after a decision has been made on the original bill, it becomes necessary to bring other matter before the court to get the full effect of it; Story, Eq. Pl. § 338; when a material fact, which existed before the filing of the bill, has been omitted, and it can no longer be introduced by way of amendment; 3 Md. Ch. Dec. 303; Mitf. Ch. Pl. 53, 61, 325; but only by special leave of court, when it seeks to change the original structure of the bill and introduce a new and different case; 4 Sim. 76, 628; 4 Paige, Ch. 259. Where, after a final decree, a person who has succeeded to the interest of the complainant in such manner as to entitle him to the full benefit of the decree, finds it necessary to invoke further action to obtain such benefit, he may file a supplemental bill in the original suit; 41 Fed. Rep. 725; but when an executor is substituted as a party in place of his decedent, he need not file a supplemental pleading; 83 Fed. Rep. 86. After a decree disposing of the issues, the filing of a new bill by other parties, involving other issues, although connected with the subject-matter of the original litigation, is to be considered a new litigation, although styled a "supplemental bill" and permitted to be filed in the original cause, and the complainant in the original cause is entitled to notice, and will not be bound without it; 162 U. S. 329. And a supplemental bill filed upon leave granted and notice, which makes an essentially different case from that contemplated in the order granting leave to file it, will be ordered to be taken from the files; 32 Atl. Rep. (N. J.) 261.

The bill must be in respect to the same title, in the same person as the original bill; Story, Eq. Pl. 339; and no relief can be had under it upon a cause of action, which did not exist when the original bill was filed; 57 Ill. App. 339; 19 So. Rep. (Fla.) 625. If the original bill shows no title to relief, a supplemental bill cannot be filed based on facts afterwards occurring; but if the original bill is well founded, a supplemental bill may be filed showing a further title to relief; 74 Fed. Rep. 67; 66 id. 385. After a decree has been directed for complainant, a stranger will not be permitted to file a supplemental bill based on his purchase of the cause of action, until a decree is actually entered in the original cause; 72 id. 325. A bill by a surviving partner, to settle the partnership affairs, is separate, and distinct from a bill to subject real estate of the deceased partner to firm debts, and the statute of limitations cannot be avoided by styling the second suit a supplemental bill; 158 U. S. 128. When a patent was assigned to a stranger pending a suit for infringement, the assignee cannot obtain the benefit of the suit brought by the assignor, by a supplemental bill, but he may do it by an original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill; 58 Fed. Rep. 404. In a suit to remove a cloud from a title, a decree establishing such title in the complainant, which carries a right to possession, a supplemental bill may be filed to enforce that right; 150 U. S. 401.

It must state the original bill, and the proceedings thereon; and, when it is occasioned by an event which has occurred subsequently to the original bill, it must state that event and the consequent alteration with regard to the parties. In general, the supplemental bill must pray that all defendants appear and answer the charges it contains; Story, Eq. Pl. § 343. In the English supreme court of judicature, amendments of the pleadings may now be allowed at any stage of the proceedings in an action.

SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS. Proceedings supplementary to an execution, directed to the discovery of the debtor's property and its application to the debt for which the execution is issued. They are purely statutory, and the statute limits the power of the courts to existing rights and things in existence at the time of their institution; 18 N. Y. L. J. 1517. The

New York statute entitles the judgment creditor to an order of examination "upon proof . . . that the judgment debtor has property which he unjustly refuses to apply towards the satisfaction of the judgment, etc." And where it appears from the examination "that the judgment debtor has, in his possession or under his control, money or other personal property belonging to him," the judge may order such money to be paid over and such other personal property to be delivered up; such proceedings are directed against property which, at the time of the order for his examination, the judgment debtor has in his possession or under his control, or which is actually due to him. No property subsequently acquired, no future earnings of any kind, and no earnings for personal services rendered within sixty days preceding such order, if necessary for the use of his family, can be reached; id.; 2 Abb. N. C. 857; 16 How. Pr. 549. They do not affect money coming to the debtor, unless it is actually due when the order is obtained; id.; 11 Abb. N. s. 384; 1 Hilt. 505; 3 N. Y. St. 287; or earnings due after the service of the order; 3 Abb. N. S. 264; or the salary of a public officer, while in the hands of a disbursing officer in common with other money; 57 How. Pr. 215, 217; 3 N. Y. St. 237. Proof as to the possession or control by the judgment debtor must be clear; 22 How. Pr. 3; and doubts whether the money was earned before or after the order should be resolved in favor of the debtor; 16 How. Pr. 549. If the debtor have a family dependent upon him, he may, if necessary, have sixty days' back earnings exempt; Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 2463; and this is held to be a humane provision which should be construed liberally in favor of the debtor; 19 Hun 894. But this does not include money received by a saloon-keeper in his business; 21 App. Div. N. Y. 190.

The return of an execution unsatisfied is sufficient to authorize a resort to supplementary proceedings; 51 Pac. Rep. (Wash.) 352; 42 Misc. Rep. 87.

The appointment of a receiver in such proceedings dissolves a partnership of which the judgment debtor is a member; 34 Atl. Rep. (N. J.) 959.

Where the judgment is against a married woman she may be examined as to her separate estate; [1892] 2 Q. B. 626.

The enforcement of orders in such proceedings is by treating the defendant as in contempt, and a debtor is liable thereto for collecting rent; 13 App. Div. N. Y. 312; or drawing out a savings bank deposit held in trust for another; 18 N. Y. L. J. 1520.

An act (1879) which enables the plaintiff to examine the defendant on oath as to his property, fraudulently concealed, is unconstitutional, because no one is obliged to give evidence which may incriminate himself; 97 Pa. 147.

SUPPLETORY OATH. In Ecclesiastical Law. An oath given by the judge to the plaintiff or defendant upon half proof, as by one witness, already made. The oath added to the half proof enables the judge to decide. It is discretionary with the judge; Stra. 80; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 370*.

SUPPLICATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. A petition for pardon of a first offence; also, a petition for reversal of judgment; also, equivalent to dupplicatio, which is our rejoinder. Calvinus, Lex.

SUPPLICAVIT (Lat.). In English Law. The name of a writ issuing out of the king's bench or chancery for taking sureties of the peace: it is commonly directed to the justices of the peace, when they are averse to acting in the affair in their judicial capacity. 4 Bla. Com. 238.

SOPPLICIUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A corporal punishment ordained by law; the punishment of death: so called because it was customary to accompany the guilty man to the place of execution and there offer supplications for him.

SUPPLIES. In English Law. Extraordinary grants to the king by parliament to supply the exigencies of the state. Jacob.

Means of provision or relief; stores.

See NECESSARY SUPPLIES.

SUPPLY CLAIMS. See MORTGAGE; RECEIVERS.

SUPPORT. The right of support is an easement which one man, either by contract or prescription, enjoys, to rest the joists or timbers of his house upon the wall of an adjoining building owned by another person. 3 Kent 435. See Washb. Easem.

A right to the support of one's land so as to prevent its falling into an excavation made by the owner of adjacent lands.

This support is of two kinds, lateral and subjacent. Lateral support is the right of land to be supported by the land which lies next to it. Subjacent support is the right of land to be supported by the land which lies under it. See LATERAL SUPPORT; MINES AND MINING.

Support is also generally used to mean articles for the sustenance of the family, as food, etc. 19 Kan. 389. See FAMILY.

SUPPRESS. To put a stop to when actually existing. The word does not extend to preventing by suppressing what may lead to a thing. 84 L. J. M. C. 9.

To prevent; never, therefore, to license or sanction. Anderson; 68 Ill. 448.

SUPPRESSIO VERI (Lat.). Concealment of truth.

In general, a suppression of the truth when a party is bound to disclose it vitiates a contract. In the contract of insurance, a knowledge of the facts is required to enable the underwriter to calculate the chances and form a due estimate of the risk; and, in this contract perhaps more than any other, the parties are required to represent everything with fairness; 1 W. Bla. 594.

Suppressio veri, as well as suggestio falsi, is a ground to rescind an agreement, or at least not to carry it into execution; 1 Ball & B. 241; 3 Munf. 232; 1 Pet. 383; 2 Paige, Ch. 390; 1 Story, Eq. Jur., 13th ed. § 204. See CONCEALMENT; MISREPRESENTATION; REPRESENTATION; SUGGESTIO FALSI.

SUPPRESSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where evidence in an equity case on letters patent is taken out of order, the court will usually entertain a motion to suppress it, though where no harm can result, it is sometimes allowed to stand till the hearing. If no such motion be made, the testimony will stand; Rob. Pat. § 1128; when the evidence is filed that which is inadmissible will sometimes be stricken out on motion; id.; but more commonly it stands over for final hearing. Where, in equity, in a patent case, a witness not named in the answer, testified to prior use, it will be considered at the hearing unless a motion be made to suppress it, even though it was taken under objection; 6 Fish. 452.

SUPRA (Lat.). Above; over.

SUPRA PROTEST. Under protest. See ACCEPTANCE; ACCEPTOR; BILLS OF EXCHANGE; PROTEST; PAYMENT UNDER.

SUPREMACY. Sovereign dominion, authority, and pre-eminence; the highest state. In the United States the supremacy resides in the people, and is exercised by their constitutional representatives, the president and congress. See SOVEREIGNTY.

SUPREMACY, ACT OF. See ACT OF SUPREMACY.

SUPREME. That which is superior to all other things.

SUPREME COURT. A court of superior jurisdiction in many of the states of the United States.

The name is properly applied to the court of last resort, and is so used in most of the states. In nearly all the states there is a supreme court, but in one or two there is a court of appellate jurisdiction from the supreme court.

See the articles on the respective states; UNITED STATES COURTS.

SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS. An appellate tribunal, and the court of last resort, in the state of Connecticut. See CONNECTICUT.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE. See JUDICATURE ACTS.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES. See UNITED STATES COURTS.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT. An appellate tribunal, and the court of last resort, in the states of Maine, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire. See those titles.

SUPREME LAW OF THE LAND. The Constitution of the United States and the laws enacted in pursuance thereof, together with any treaties made under the authority of the United States, constitute the supreme law of the land. 219 U. S. 282. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES OF.

SUPREME POWER. The highest authority in the state. Ruth. Nat. L. b. 2, c. 4, p. 67.

SURCHARGE. To put more cattle upon a common than the herbage will sustain or than the party hath a right to do. 8 Bla. Com. 237. In case of common without stint it could only happen when insufficient herbage was left for the lord's own cattle; 1 Rolle, Abr. 399. The remedy was by distraining the beasts beyond the proper number; an action of trespass which must have been brought by the lord of the manor; an action on the case, or a writ of admeasurement of pasture. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 238, n.

In Equity Practice. To prove the omission of an item from an account which is before the court as complete, which should be inserted to the credit of the party surcharging; Story, Eq. Jur. § 525; 2 Ves. 565; 11 Wheat. 237. It is opposed to falsify, which see. Leave to surcharge and falsify is granted in preference to opening an account, in case of an account stated by the parties or reported by an auditor, where the party obtaining the liberty would be concluded by the account were it not granted. See ACCOUNT; AUDITOR.

SURETY. A person who binds himself for the payment of a sum of money, or for the performance of something else, for another. See SURETYSHIP.

SURETY COMPANY. An association of persons, usually incorporated, which makes a business of acting as surety for persons occupying positions of trust, for a compensation which varies with the amount of the bond or security required. Such companies are sometimes also called "guaranty companies." Anderson. See INSURANCE; TRUST COMPANIES.

SURETY OF THE PEACE. See PEACE.

SURETYSHIP. An undertaking to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, by which the surety becomes bound as the principal or original debtor is bound.

It is an accessory promise by which a person binds himself for another already bound, and agrees with the creditor to satisfy the obligation, if the debtor does not. 43 La. Ann. 738. It differs from guaranty in this, that suretyship is a primary obligation to see that the debt is paid, while guaranty is a collateral undertaking, essentially in the alternative, to pay the debt if the debtor does not pay it; 24 Pick. 252. And accordingly a surety may be sued as a promisor to pay the debt, while a guarantor must be sued specially on his contract; 8 Pick. 423. The subjects are, however, nearly related, and many of the principles are common to both. See GUARANTY. There must be a principal debtor liable, otherwise the promise becomes an original contract; and, the promise being collateral, the surety must be bound to no greater extent than the principal. Suretyship is one of the contracts included in the statute of frauds; 29 Car. II. c. 3.

The contract must be supported by a consideration, like every other promise. Without that, it is void, apart from the statute of frauds, and whether in writing or not; 4 Taunt. 117; 17 Pa. 469; 43 Ill. App. 584; 36 Kans. 205.

Kent, C. J., divides secondary undertakings into three classes: 1. Cases in which the guaranty or promise is collateral to the principal contract, but is made at the same time and becomes an essential ground of the credit given to the principal or direct debtor. Here there is not, and need not be, any other consideration than that moving between the creditor and original debtor. 2. Cases in which the collateral undertaking is subsequent to the creation of the debt, and was not the inducement to it, though the subsisting liability is the ground of the promise without any distinct and unconnected inducement. Here there must be some further consideration shown, having an immediate respect to such liability; for the consideration for the original debt will not attach to this subsequent promise. 3. When the promise to pay the debt of another arises out of some new and original consideration of benefit or harm moving between the newly contracting parties. The two first classes of cases are within the statute of frauds; the last is not; 8 Johns. 29. This classification has been reviewed and affirmed in numerous cases; 21 N. Y. 415; 15 Pick. 159.

The rule that the statute does not apply to class third has, however, been doubted; and it appears to be admitted that the principle is there inaccurately stated. The true test is the nature of the promise, not of the consideration; 50 Pa. 39; 94 E. C. L. R. 835. But see infra.

A simpler division is into two classes. Where the principal obligation exists before the collateral undertaking is made. Where there is no principal obligation prior in time to the collateral undertaking. In the last class the principal obligation may be contemporaneous with or after the collateral undertaking. The first class includes Kent's second and third, the second includes Kent's first, to which must be added cases where the guaranty referring to a present or future principal obligation does not share the consideration thereof, but proceeds on a distinct consideration. Moreover, there are other original undertakings out of the statute of frauds and valid though by parol, besides his third class. These are where the credit is given exclusively to the promisor though the goods or consideration pass to another. Under this division, undertakings of the first class are original: 1. When the principal obligation is thereby abrogated. 2. When without such abrogation the promisor for his own advantage apparent on the bargain undertakes for some new consideration moving to him from the promisee. 3. Where the promise is in consideration of some loss or disadvantage to the promisee. 4. Where the promise is made to the principal debtor on a consideration moving from the debtor to the promisor; Theob. Sur. 37, 49. The cases under these heads will be considered separately.

First, where the principal obligation is pre-existent, there must be a new consideration to support the promise; and where this consideration is the discharge of the principal debtor, the promise is original and not collateral, as the first requisite of a collateral promise is the existence of a principal obligation. This has been held in numerous cases. The discharge may be by agreement, by novation or substitution, by discharge on final process, or by forbearance under certain circumstances; 4 B. & P. 124; 21 N. Y. 412; 8 Gray 233.

But the converse of this proposition, that where the principal obligation remains, the promise is collateral, cannot be sustained, though there have been repeated dicta to that effect; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 198; 12 Johns. 291; denied in 21 N. Y. 415; 7 Ala. n. s. 54; 33 Vt. 132.

The main question arising in cases under this head is whether the debtor is discharged; and this is to a great extent a question for the jury. But if in fact the principal debt is discharged by agreement and the new promise is made upon this consideration, then the promise is original, and not collateral; 1 Allen 405.

But where there is an existing debt, for which a third party is liable to the promisee, and the promisor undertakes to be responsible for it, still the contract need not be in writing if its terms are such that it effects an extinguishment of the original liability; 160 Mass. 225.

A discharge of the debtor from custody, or surrender of property taken on an execution, is a good discharge of the debt; 11 M. & W. 857; 9 Vt. 137; 4 Dev. 261; 21 N. Y. 415; 34 Barb. 97.

Where the transaction amounts to a sale of the principal debt in consideration of the new promise, the debtor is discharged, and the promise is original; 3 B. & C. 853. So where a purchaser of goods transfers them to another, who promises the vendor to pay for them, this is a substitution and an original promise; 5 Taunt. 450; 9 Cow. 266; 11 Ired. 298; 21 Me. 545.

A mere forbearance to press the principal debt is not such a discharge of the debtor as will make the promise original; 1 Sm. L. C. 387; 21 N. Y. 412; 13 B. Monr. 356; but where the forbearance is so protracted as to discharge the debtor, it may be questioned whether the promise does not become original; 33 Vt. 132.

Second, the promise will be original if made in consideration of some new benefit moving from the promisee to the promisor; 3 Dutch. 371; 4 Cow. 432; Bull. N. P. 281.

Third, the promise is original where the consideration is some loss to the promisee or principal creditor; but it is held in many such cases that the loss must also work some benefit to the promisor; 6 Ad. & E. 564; 3 Strobb. Eq. 177; 20 N. Y. 268. As to merely relieving from giving an execution to the sheriff, see 14 Me. 140.

There have been decisions which hold that the mere relinquishment of a lien by the plaintiff takes the case out of the statute; 7 Johns. 464; 1 McCord 575. It would seem that a surrender of a lien merely is not sufficient consideration; 3 Metc. 396; but it must appear that the surrender is in some way beneficial to the promisor, as when he has an interest in the property released; 77 N. Y. 81; 45 Ind. 180; 5 Cush. 488.

The rule is well settled that when the leading object of a promisor is to induce a promisee to forego some lien, interest, or advantage, and thereby to confer on the promisor a privilege or benefit which he would not otherwise possess or enjoy, an agreement made under such circumstances and upon such a consideration is a new, original, and binding contract, although the effect of it may be to assume the debt and discharge the liability of another; 6 Maule & S. 204; 1 Gray 391. The advantage relinquished by the promisee must directly enure to the benefit of the promisor, so as in effect to make it purchase by the promisor; 5 Cush. 488; 12 Johns. 291. It is stated in many cases (under classes third and fourth, above) that the promise is original where the consideration moves to the promisor. The true test, however, must be found not in the consideration, but in the nature of the promise. Wherever the new promisor undertakes for his own default; where his promise is virtually to pay his own debt in a peculiar way, or if, by paying the debt, he is really discharging a liability of his own, his promise is original. The only case in which consideration can affect the terms of the promise is where the consideration of the promise is the extinguishment of the original liability; 17 Mass. 229; 18 Tex. 440; 23 How. 98.

Fourth, the promise is original if made on a consideration moving from the debtor to the promisor; 10 Johns. 412; 9 Cal. 92; 80 Ala. n. s. 509; 5 Me. 81; 1 Gray 391; 23 How. U. S. 28; 33 Neb. 260.

For the rule in a class of cases quite analogous, see 9 Ill. 40; 3 Conn. 272.

Where the guaranty relates to a contemporaneous or future obligation, the promise is original, and not suretyship, (a) if credit is given exclusively to the promisor, (b) if the promise is merely to indemnify.

In the first of these cases the question to whom credit was given must be ultimately for the jury in each case. If there is any primary liability, and the creditor resorts to the principal debtor first, the promise is collateral. Thus, if the promisor says, "Deliver goods to A, and I will pay you," there is no primary obligation on the part of A, and the promise is original; 3 Metc. 396. But if he says, "I will see you paid," or, "I promise you that he will pay," the promise would be collateral; 1 H. Bla. 120; 7 Fed. Rep. 477; 3 Col. 176; 13 Gray 613; 148 Pa. 220 (where it was left to the jury to decide whether it was an original undertaking).

A promise to indemnify merely against contingent loss from another's default is original; 15 Johns. 425. A doubt is expressed by Browne, Stat. of Frauds § 158, whether the fact that mere indemnity is intended, makes the promise original, because in many cases—those where the indemnity is against the default of a third person—there is an implied liability of that person, and the promise is collateral thereto. Now, there are three classes of cases. First, it is clear that where the indemnity is against the promisor's default or debt he is already liable without his promise; and to use this as a defence and make the promise collateral thereto would be using the law as a cover to a fraud; 1 Conn. 519; 46 Me. 41; 6 Bingh. 506; 10 Johns. 42; 17 Pick. 538. Second, so where the only debt against which indemnity is promised is the promisee's, this, being not the debt of another, but of the promisee, is clearly not within the statute, but the promise is original. And even if the execution of such a promise would discharge incidentally some other liability, this fact does not make the promise collateral; 19 M. & W. 561; 1 Gray 391; 25 Wend. 243; 10 Gill & J. 404; 31 Vt. 142. Third, but where there is a liability implied in another person, and the promise refers to his liability or default, and if executed will discharge such liability or default, the promise would seem on reason to be collateral and binding like a suretyship for future advances—that is, when accepted; 9 Ired. 10; 1 Ala. 1; 1 Gill & J. 424; 10 Ad. & E. 453; 4 Barb. 131. But in many cases the rule is broadly stated that a promise to indemnify merely is original; 8 B. & C. 728 (overruled, 10 Ad. & E. 453); 1 Gray 391; 10 Johns. 242 (overruled, 4 Barb. 131); 1 Ga. 294; 10 N. H. 175; 1 Conn. 519; 5 Me. 504. In other cases the distinction is made to rest on the fact that the engagement is made to the debtor; 9 Gray 76; 11 Ad. & E. 438; and in other cases, on the futurity of the risk or liability; 12 Mass. 297.

The last ground is untenable; future guarantees binding when accepted or acted upon, and those against torts are expressly to the contrary. The first ground is too broad, as shown above; and the second seems to ignore the clear primary liability of the principal debtor.

It is said that "a mere promise of indemnity which is not collateral to any liability on the part of another, either express or implied, is not within the statute, and such a case illustrates the rule that when there is no principal, the promise need not be in writing. On the other hand, when the promise to indemnify is in fact a promise to pay the debt of another, then clearly such promise is within the statute, and the fact that it is in form a promise to indemnify will make no difference." Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 69. See 4 B. & S. 414.

When the principal obligation is void, voidable, not enforceable, or unascertained, the promise is original, there being in this case no principal obligation to sustain the promise as collateral; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 158. It may be questionable, however, whether the promise will in such case be original unless the promisor knows the principal liability to be void or voidable; Burge, Surety § 6; but this question may be settled by the principle that where credit is given to the principal, notwithstanding his obligation is void or voidable, the promise of the surety is collateral; 4 Bingh. 470; 7 N. H. 368; but if no such credit is given or implied, the promise is collateral. See 15 N. Y. 576; 33 Ala. n. s. 106; 6 Gray 90. Such would be the guaranty of an infant's promise; 7 N. H. 368; and this is accordingly so held; 20 Pick. 467 (but see 11 Allen 385, contra, as to the promise of a father to pay the debt of a minor son); 4 Me. 521; though a distinction has been made in the case of a married woman; 4 Bingh. 470; 84 Pa. 135; 43 Ind. 103; but the promise is collateral where the married woman has separate property which she can charge with the payment of her debts, and the credit is given exclusively to her; 6 Ga. 14.

Where the liability is unascertained at the time of the promise, the promise is original; as the liabilities must concur at the time of the undertaking to make a guaranty; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 190; 1 Salk. 27; contra, Ambl. 330. Under this head would come a promise to pay damages for a tort, there being no principal liability until judgment; 1 Wils. 305; or where the liability rests upon a future award; 2 Allen 417; and liability upon indefinite executory contracts in general. It is, however, said that the liability may be prospective at the time the promise is made. See Huffcut's Ans. Contr. 72.

The promise is clearly original where the promisor undertakes for his own debt. The rule is, unless the promisor himself or his property is ultimately to be made liable in default of the principal debtor, the statute does not apply; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 177. Thus, an engagement by one who owes the principal debtor to retain the principal debt, so that it may be attached by trustee or garnishee process, is not a collateral promise; 9 Pick. 306; 63 Barb. 321; 50 Ia. 310.

So an agreement by a purchaser to pay part of the purchase-money to a creditor of the vendor is an agreement to pay his own debt; 55 Miss. 385; 2 Lea 543; 49 Ia. 574; 58 Ill. 232; or to pay a debt due a promisee by a third person out of moneys owing by a promisor to such third person; 32 Ohio 415; 9 Cow. 266; 59 Ill. 233; or for the application of a fund due a promisor by a third party; 86 Pa. 147; 18 How. 31. Such an agreement is a trust, or an original promise.

Under the statute of frauds. At common law, a contract of guaranty or suretyship could be made by parol; but by the statute of frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, "no action shall be brought whereby to charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person, . . . unless the agreement upon which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum or note thereof, shall be in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or by some person thereunto lawfully authorized;" so that under the statute all contracts of guaranty and suretyship must be in writing and signed. The words debt and default in the statute refer to contracts; 2 East 325; and debt includes only pre-existing liability; 12 Mass. 297; miscarriage refers to torts; 2 B. & Ald. 613. Torts are accordingly within the statute, and may be guaranteed against; 2 B. & Ald. 613; 2 Day 457; though this has been doubted in regard to future torts; 1 Wils. 305. Perhaps a guaranty against future torts might be open to objections on the ground of public policy. But the unchallenged contracts of modern indemnity companies would seem to show that such an objection would not prevail.

A guaranty of indemnity to a surety is within the statute of frauds; 45 Ill. App. 155.

The doctrine that a future contingent liability on the part of the principal is not within the statute; 1 Salk. 27; 12 Mass. 297; is not tenable; and it is clear, both by analogy and on authority, that such a liability may support a guaranty, although such cases must be confined within very narrow limits, and the mere fact of the contingency is a very strong presumption that the promise is original; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 196; 6 Vt. 668; 88 Ill. 561.

Where the promise is made to the debtor, it is not within the statute; Reed, Stat. Fr. 76; 7 Halst. 188; 2 Den. 162. "We are of opinion that the statute applies only to promises made to the person to whom another is answerable;" 11 Ad. & E. 446; 1 Gray 391. The word another in the statute must be understood as referring to a third person, and not to a debt due from either of the contracting parties; 6 Cush. 552. False and deceitful representations of the credit or solvency of third persons are not within the statute; Browne, Stat. Fr. § 181; 4 Camp. 1.

The English rule required the consideration to be expressed; 5 East 10. It could not be proved by parol; 4 B. & Ald. 595. But by 19 & 20 Vict. no such promise shall be deemed invalid by reason only that the consideration does not appear in writing or by necessary inference from a written instrument; 7 C. B. n. s. 361. The rule varies in different states, and in some states is settled by statute. See Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 82. In some states there are statutes similar to the English statutes. In other states the consideration is required by statutes to be expressed. Of states where statutes are silent, some have accepted and some rejected the English construction of statutes of frauds in Wain v. Walters, 5 East 10, supra.

The courts lay hold of any language which implies a consideration; 21 N. Y. 31. So where the guaranty and the matter guaranteed are one simultaneous transaction, both will be construed in connection, and the consideration expressed in the latter applied to the support of the former, if these are words of reference in the guaranty; 36 N. H. 73.

Formation of the obligation. In construing the language of the contract to decide whether it constitutes an original promise or a guaranty, it is difficult to lay down a general rule: the circumstances of particular cases vary widely. See GUARANTY; [1894] 1 Q. B. 288. One test is if the promisor is totally unconnected with the transaction except by means of his promise to pay the loss, the contract is a guarantee; if he is to derive some benefit from it, his contract is an indemnity." Id. The word guaranty or surety may or may not indicate correctly the contract, and the circumstances of the case may make an indorser liable as a guarantor or surety, without any words to indicate the obligation; 24 Wend. 456.

In general, if a promissory note is signed or indorsed when made by a stranger to the note he becomes a joint promisor and liable on the note; 44 Me. 483; 9 Cush. 104; 14 Tex. 275; 20 Mo. 571; and this will be true if indorsed after delivery to the payee in pursuance of an agreement made before the delivery; 7 Gray 284; but parol evidence may be introduced to show that he is a surety or guarantor; 23 Ga. 388; 89 Ill. 550. If the third party indorses after delivery to the payee without any previous agreement, he is merely a second indorser; 11 Pa. 466; 82 N. C. 818; and he is liable as a maker to an innocent holder; 20 Mo. 591. But it was held otherwise where the signature was on the face of the note; 19 N. H. 572; and the same is held where he signs at inception of the note, in pursuance of a custom, leaving a blank for the payee's signature above his name; 12 La. Ann. 517. In Connecticut, such an indorser is held to guaranty that the note shall be collectible when due; 46 Conn. 410. The time of signing may be shown by parol evidence; 9 Ohio 139.

A payee or subsequent party who executes a guarantee upon a bill or note is not liable as indorser; 8 Stew. 319; 19 Me. 359; 2 Const. 225; contra, 31 Ga. 210; 20 Vt. 499.

It has been held that a third person indorsing a blank at the making of the note may show his intention by parol; 11 Mass. 486; but not if he describes himself as guarantor, or if the law fixes a precise liability to indorsements in blank; 2 Hill, N. Y. 60. But this has been doubted; 33 E. L. & E. 282. In New York the cases seem to take the broad ground that an indorser in blank, under all circumstances, is an indorser merely, and cannot be made a guarantor or surety; 1 N. Y. 324. See 95 U. S. 90.

The consideration to support a parol promise to pay the debt of another must be such as would be good relating to the payment of that particular debt or of any other of equal amount; 33 Md. 873. It need not be necessarily a consideration distinct from that of the principal contract. An executed or past consideration to the principal is not sufficient; 121 Mass. 116; 51 Miss. 482.

The giving of new credit where a debt already exists has been held a sufficient consideration to support a guaranty of the old and new debt; 15 Pick. 139; 15 Ga. 321; but the weight of authority would seem to require that there should be some further consideration; Reed, Stat. Fr. 70; 1 Pet. 476; 3 Johns. 211; 7 Harr. & J. 457. A consideration that will take a case out of the statute of frauds must be such a consideration as will make the collateral debt, agreed to be paid, the debt of the promisor. It must be an original undertaking; 45 Ill. App. 155.

Forbearance to sue the debtor is a good consideration, if definite in time; 92 Ind. 337; 45 Wis. 466; 1 Keb. 114; or even if of considerable; Cro. Jac. 683; or reasonable time; 8 Bulstr. 206; 4 Wash. 148. But there must be an actual forbearance, and the creditor must have had a power of enforcement; 4 East 465. But the fact that it is doubtful whether such a power exists, does not injure the consideration; 5 B. & Ad. 123. Forbearance has been held sufficient consideration even where there was no well-grounded claim; 18 L. J. C. P. 222; 34 Pa. 60; contra, 3 Pick. 88. A short forbearance, or the deferment of a remedy, as postponement of a trial, or postponement of arrest, may be a good consideration; and perhaps an agreement to defer indefinitely may support a guaranty; 4 Johns. 257; 8 Conn. 81. A mere agreement not to push an execution is too vague to be a consideration; 4 McCord 409; and a postponement of a remedy must be made by agreement as well as in fact; 8 Cush. 85; 6 Conn. 81; 11 C. B. 172.

The contract of suretyship may be entered into absolutely and without conditions, or its formation may be made to depend on certain conditions precedent. But there are some conditions implied in every contract of this kind, however absolute on its face. In the case of bonds, as in other contracts of suretyship, it is essential that there should be a principal, and a bond executed by the surety is not valid until executed by the principal also. One case, 10 Co. 100 b, sometimes cited to the contrary, is not clear to the point. The argument that the surety is bound by his recital under seal fails, especially in all statute bonds, where one important requisite of the statute, that the bond should be executed by the principal, fails; 2 Pick. 24; 4 Beav. 383.

Where the surety's undertaking is conditional on others joining, and this condition is known to the creditor, he is not ordinarily liable until they do so; 4 B. & Ad. 440; 53 Ind. 821; 4 Biss. 288; 85 Miss. 518; 134 Ill. 200; contra, if the obligee is ignorant of the condition; 2 Metc. Ky. 606; 16 Wall. 1; 61 Me. 505. So the surety is not bound if the signatures of his co-sureties are forged, although he has not made his signature expressly conditional on theirs; 2 Am. L. Reg. 349; but see 8 id. n. s. 665. Where a bond to a sheriff: 1 La. 41; and an administration bond; 119 Ind. 503; were signed in expectation by the party signing that other sureties would sign, and the bond was delivered without such other signatures, the surety was held liable. If a condition upon which a surety signs known to the creditor and be not complied with, the surety is not liable; 30 Ga. 98.

The acceptance of the contract by the promisee by words or by acts under it is often made a condition precedent to the attaching of the liability of the surety. The general rule is that where a future guaranty is given, absolute and definite in amount, no notice of acceptance is necessary; but if it is contingent and indefinite in amount, notice must be given; 4 Me. 521; 8 Conn. 488; 16 Johns. 67; but the promisee has a reasonable time to give such notice; 6 Gray 211.

A distinction is to be made between a guaranty and an offer to guaranty. No notice of acceptance is requisite when a guaranty is absolute; 3 N. Y. 212; 2 Mich. 511; but an offer to guaranty must have notice of acceptance; and till accepted it is revocable; 12 C. B. n. s. 784; 6 Dow. H. L. C. 239; 32 Pa. 10; and where acceptance is required, it may be as well implied by acts as by words; as, by receiving the written guaranty from the promisor; 8 Gray 211; or by actual knowledge of the amount of sales under a guaranty of the purchase-money; 28 Vt. 160.

The rule requiring notice is said to be based upon "the nature and definition of a contract, which requires the assent of a party to whom a proposal is made, to be signified to the party making it, in order to constitute a binding promise. . . . The rule proceeds upon the ground that the case in which it applies is an offer or proposal on the part of the guarantor, which does not become binding as an obligation until accepted by the party to whom it is made; that, until then, it is inchoate and incomplete and may be withdrawn by the proposer." 104 U. S. 159. When the guaranty is contemporaneous with the principal contract, notice is unnecessary; 121 Ind. 465; 26 S. W. Rep. Tex. 941; so, where there has been a precedent request; 27 N. E. Rep. Ind. 318; contra, 9 Pa. 320. See 84 Am. L. Reg. & Rev. 257. Notice must be given of an offer to guarantee advances to be made by another to a third party, in order to bind the guarantor; 1 M. & S. 557. Knowledge that a guaranty is being acted upon is sufficient in the case of guaranties of existing debts, or of contemporaneous debts; 101 U. S. 159. But in case of guaranties of the repayment of future advances, the cases are in conflict as to whether notice is necessary. That notice is necessary, see 104 U. S. 159; that it is generally unnecessary, see 3 N. Y. 203; 46 Mich. 70; that it is necessary where the amount of the proposed advance is uncertain, but unnecessary where it is certain, see 112 Ind. 293. See generally, Huffcutt's Ans. Contr. 27. One who, as surety, executes a bond with another, conditioned for the payment of the moneys advanced the other, is not entitled to notice of the acceptance of the bond by the obligee; 84 Fed. Rep. 104.

Where a contract of guaranty is signed by the guarantor without any previous request of the other party, and in his absence and for no other consideration between them, except future advances to be made to the principal debtor, there must be an acceptance of the guaranty by the other party in order to complete the contract; 115 U. S. 527; 84 Fed. Rep. 605; 110 Pa. 255, 866.

Construction and extent of obligation. The liability of a surety cannot exceed, in any event, that of the principal, though it may be less. The same rule does not apply to the remedies, which may be greater against the surety. But, whatever may be the liability imposed upon the surety, it is clear that it cannot be extended by implication beyond the terms of the contract.

His obligation is strictissimi juris, and cannot be extended beyond the precise terms of the contract; 10 Johns. 180; 3 Pa. 27; 9 Utah 300. Sureties are never held responsible beyond the clear and absolute terms and meaning of their undertakings, and presumptions and equities are never allowed to enlarge, or in any degree to change, their legal obligations; 21 How. 66. And this rule has been repeatedly reaffirmed; 11 N. Y. 598; 29 Pa. 400; 2 Wall. 325. "It is quite true, that in one sense, the contract of a surety is strictissimi juris, and it is not to be extended beyond the express terms in which it is expressed. The rule, however, is not a rule of construction of a contract, but a rule of application of the contract after the construction of it has been ascertained. Where the question is as to the meaning of the language of the contract, there is no difference between the contract of the surety and that of anybody else; 47 N. Y. Supp. 48.

The remedies against the surety may be more extensive than those against the principal, and there may be defences open to the principal, but not to the surety,—as, infancy or coverture of the principal,—which must be regarded as a part of the risks of the surety; 80 Vt. 122.

The liability of the surety extends to and includes all securities given to him by the principal debtor, the converse of the rule stated below in the case of collateral security given to the creditor; 26 Vt. 306. Thus a creditor is entitled in equity to the benefit of all securities given by the principal debtor for the indemnity of his surety; 18 Mo. 136. If the surety receives money from the principal to discharge the debt, he holds it as trustee of the creditor; 6 Ohio 80.

A payment made by the principal before the claim is barred by the statute of limitations, keeps the debt alive as to the surety; otherwise, if made after the statute has run; 114 U. S. 528.

In the common case of bonds given for the faithful discharge of the duties of an office, it is of course the rule that the bond covers only the particular term of office for which it is given, and it is not necessary that this should be expressly stated; nor will the time be extended by a condition to be bound "during all the time A (the principal) continues," if after the expiration of the time A holds over merely as an acting officer, without a valid appointment; 8 Sandf. 403. The circumstances of particular cases may extend the strict rule stated above, as in the case of officers annually appointed. Here, although the bond recites the appointment, if it is conditioned upon his faithful accounting for money received before his appointment, the surety may be held; 9 B. & C. 35; 9 Mass. 267. But the intention to extend the time, either by including past or future liabilities, must clearly appear; 4 B. & P. 175. See 101 Cal. 433; 76 Md. 136. Generally the recital cannot be enlarged and extended by the condition; Theob. Surety 66. And where the recital sets forth an employment for twelve months, this time is not controlled by a condition, "from time to time annually, and at all times thereafter during the continuance of this employment," although the employment is actually continued beyond the year; 2 B. & Ald. 481; 7 Gray 1.

So the obligation may cease by a change in the character of the office or employment; 3 Wils. 530; but an alteration in the character of the obligee, by taking in new partners, does not necessarily terminate the obligation; 10 B. & C. 122. But where an essential change takes place, as the death of the obligee, the obligation, is terminated, although the business is carried on by the executors; 1 Term 18. Where one becomes surety for two or either of them, the obligation is terminated by the death of one of the principals; 1 Bingham 453; but this is where the obligation is essentially personal; and where a bond for costs was given by two as "defendants," the surety was not discharged by the death of one; 5 B. & Ald. 261. So a surety for a lessee is not liable for rent after the term, although the lessee holds over; 1 Pick. 833.

If the law provides that a public officer shall hold over until a successor is appointed, the sureties on the official bond are liable during such holding over; 37 Miss. 518; 3 Metc. Mass. 533; contra, in the case of officers of corporations; 7 Gray 1; but the liability of such surety extends only for such reasonable time as would enable the successor to be appointed; 40 La. Ann. 241. And this provision is not controlled by an alteration of the law extending the term but leaving the provision intact; 15 Gratt. 1. But when the term of an office created by statute or charter is not limited, but merely directory for an annual election, it seems the surety will be liable, though after the year, until his successor is qualified; 8 Del. Ch. 225.

In bonds, the penalty is the extreme amount of liability of the surety; but various circumstances may reduce the liability below this; 3 Cow. 151; 6 Term 308. If the engagement of the surety is general, the surety is understood to be obligated to the same extent as his principal, and his liability extends to all the accessories of the principal obligation; 14 La. Ann. 188.

A surety on a cashier's bond is not liable for money collected by the cashier as an attorney-at-law, and not accounted for to the bank; 4 Pick. 314. So also where one was surety, and the bond was conditioned on the accounting by the principal for money received by him in virtue of his office as parish overseer, the surety was held not liable for money borrowed by the principal for parochial purposes; 7 B. & C. 491. But a surety on a collector's bond is liable for his principal's neglect to collect, as well as failure to pay over; 6 C. & P. 106.

As the surety is only liable to the obligations fairly intended at the execution of the bond, he cannot be held for a breach of new duties attached to his principal's office; 4 Pick. 314; or if any material change is made in the duties; 3 Pick. 223. A surety on an official bond is said to be liable generally for the faithful performance of duties imposed upon the officer, whether by laws enacted before or after the execution of the bond, where such duties are properly within the scope of the office; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 548.

If one guarantees payment for services, and the promisee partly performs the services, but fails of completing them from no fault of his own, the guarantor is liable to the amount of the part-performance; 13 Gray 445.

A bond for faithful performance of duties renders the sureties responsible for ordinary skill and diligence, as well as for integrity; 13 Pick. 803.

A continuing guaranty up to a certain amount covers a constant liability of that amount; but if the guaranty is not continuing, the liability ceases after the execution of the contract to the amount limited; 3 B. & Ald. 593.

A guaranty may be continuing or may be exhausted by one act. It is said that there is no general rule for determining the question; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 158. The general principle may be thus stated: When by the terms of the undertaking, by the recitals in the instrument, or by a reference to the custom and course of dealing between the parties, it appears that the guaranty looked to a future course of dealing for an indefinite time, or a succession of credits to be given, it is to be deemed a continuing guaranty, and the amount expressed is to limit the amount for which the guarantor is to be responsible, and not the amount to which the dealing or whole credit given is to extend; 7 Pet. 118; 3 B. & Ald. 503. Thus, a guaranty for any goods to one hundred pounds is continuous; 12 East 227; or for "any debts not exceeding," etc.; 2 Camp. 413; or, "I will undertake to be answerable for any tallow not exceeding," etc., but "without the word any it might perhaps have been confined to one dealing;" 3 Camp. 230. The words, "I do hereby agree to guaranty the payment of goods according to the custom of their trading with you, in the sum of £200," are held to constitute a continuing guaranty; 6 Bingham 244; so of the words, "I agree to be responsible for the price of goods purchased at any time, to the amount of," etc.; 1 Metc. Mass. 24. The words "answerable for the amount of five sacks of flour" are clearly not continuous; 6 Bingham 276. The court will look at the surrounding circumstances, in order to determine; L. R. 4 C. P. 595.

The contracts of guaranty and suretyship are not negotiable or assignable, and in general can be taken advantage of only by those who were included as obligees at the formation of the contract; 3 McLean 279. See GUARANTY. Accordingly, the contract is terminated by the death of one of several obligees; 4 Taunt. 673; or by material change, as incorporation; 3 B. & P. 34. But where a bond is given to trustees in that capacity, their successors can take advantage of it; 12 East 399. The fact that a stranger has acted on a guaranty does not entitle him to the benefits of the contract; 20 Vt. 499; and this has been held in the case of one of two guaranties who acted on the guaranty; 3 Tex. 193. A guaranty is not negotiable, whether made by a payee or subsequent party to a bill or note; 8 Watts 361.

It is held that a guaranty addressed to no one in particular may be acted on by any one; 22 Vt. 160; but the true rule would seem to be that in such cases a party who had acted on the contract might show, as in other contracts, that he was a party to it within the intention at the making; the mere fact that no obligee is mentioned does not open it to everybody.

In an action against sureties for violation of a bond by the principals, it is not necessary to allege any violation on the part of the sureties; 31 Pac. Rep. (Cal.) 158.

The rule of construction applied to ordinary sureties is not applicable to the bonds of fidelity and casualty companies; any doubtful language should be construed most strongly against the surety and in favor of the indemnity which the insured had reasonable ground to expect; 22 U. S. App. 489.

Enforcement of the obligation. As the surety cannot be bound to any greater extent than the principal, it follows that the creditor cannot pursue the surety until he has acquired a full right of action against the principal debtor. A surety for the performance of any future or executory contract cannot be called upon until there is an actual breach by the principal. A surety on a promissory note cannot be sued until the note has matured, as there is no debt until that time. All conditions precedent to a right of action against the principal must be complied with. Where money is payable on demand, there must have been a demand and refusal. But it is not necessary that the creditor should have exhausted all the means of obtaining his debt. In some cases it may be requisite to notify the surety of the default of the debtor, or to sue the debtor; but this depends upon the particular conditions and circumstances of each case, and cannot be considered a condition precedent in all cases. Even where the creditor has a fund or other security to resort to, he is not obliged to exhaust this before resorting to the surety; he may elect either remedy, and pursue the surety first. But if the surety pay the debt, he is entitled to claim that the creditor should proceed against such fund or other security for his benefit; 4 Jones, Eq. 212; 38 Ala. N. S. 261. And if the creditor having received such collateral security, avail himself of it, he is bound to preserve the original debt; for in equity the surety will be entitled to subrogation; 38 Pa. 98. A judgment against the principal may be assigned to the surety upon payment of the debt; 1 Metc. 469; 4 Jones, Eq. 263; 77 Hun 580. But an assignment of the debt must be for the whole; the surety cannot pay a part and claim an assignment pro tanto; 89 N. H. 150.

In general, it is not requisite that notice of the default of the principal should be given to the surety, especially when the engagement is absolute and for a definite amount; 14 East 514. The guarantor on a note is not entitled to notice as an indorser; 33 Ia. 298; 74 Pa. 851, 445; 56 Mo. 272. Laches in giving notice to the surety upon a draft of the default of the principal can only be set up as a defence in an action against the surety, in cases where he has suffered damage thereby, and then only to the extent of that damage; 8 N. Y. 203; it is no defence to an action against a surety on a bond that the plaintiff knew of the default of the principal, and delayed for a long time to notify the surety or to prosecute the bond; 1 Zab. 100. Mere passive delay in prosecuting a remedy against a principal does not release a surety; 37 Minn. 431; 30 S. C. 177; 99 N. C. 531; not even if prolonged until the statute of limitations has run; 69 Fed. Rep. 798. Sureties on a supersedeas bond are not entitled to have a suit thereon stayed till attached lands of the principal are sold and the security exhausted; 57 Fed. Rep. 909.

A judgment against a principal is at least prima facie evidence against the surety, though he was not notified of the action; 66 Fed. Rep. 265.

Discharge of obligation. The obligation may be discharged by acts of the principal, or by acts of the creditor. Payment, or tender of payment, by the one, and any act which would deprive the creditor of remedies which in case of default would ensure to the benefit of the surety, are instances of discharge. In the first place, a payment by the debtor would of course operate to discharge the liability. The only questions which can arise upon this point are, whether the payment is applicable to the payment in question, and as to the amount. Upon the first of these, this contract is governed by the general rule that the debtor can apply his payment to any debt he chooses. The surety has no power to modify or direct the application, but is bound by the election of the principal; 2 Bingh. N. C. 7. If no such election is made by the debtor, the creditor may apply the payment to whichever debt he sees fit; 7 Wheat. 20; 1 Pick. 836. This power, however, only applies to voluntary payments, and not to payments made by process of law; 10 Pick. 129. A surety on a promissory note is discharged by its payment, and the note cannot be again put in circulation; 12 Cush. 163; so also, extension of time by the holder of a note at the request of one maker without the knowledge of the other who signed as a surety, releases the latter though the holder did not know of the relation between the two makers at the time the note was given; 28 U. S. App. 280.

Where one of two sureties to a contract assented to a change which altered his liability to his prejudice, it was held that the other surety was released but the former was bound for the whole liability; 17 U. S. App. 442, 463. Whatever will discharge the surety in equity will be a defence at law; 7 Johns. 337; 2 Pick. 228.

A release of the principal debtor operates as a discharge of the surety; [1893] A. C. 813; though the converse is not true; 17 Tex. 126; [1893] App. Cas. 313; 63 Ill. 272; unless the obligation is such that the liability is joint only, and cannot be severed. But if the creditor, when releasing the principal, reserves his remedies against the surety, the latter is not discharged; L. R. 7 C. P. 9; 4 Ch. App. Cas. 204; and "a creditor who is fully indemnified is not discharged by the release of the principal." Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 147. The release of one of several sureties is said to release the others only so far as the one released would have been liable for contribution to the co-sureties; 47 Ala. 390; but see 33 Ind. 488. Other cases hold such a release to be a discharge of the co-sureties; 40 Ind. 225; 2 Ala. 694. When the discharge of one surety varies the contract; 3 Head 618; or increases the risk of the co-sureties, they are released also.

Fraud or alteration avoids a contract of suretyship. Fraud may be by the creditor's misrepresentation or concealment of facts. Unless, however, the contract between the debtor and creditor is unusual, the surety must ask for information; 12 Cl. & F. 109; 15 W. Va. 21. The creditor has been held bound to inform a surety of debtor's previous default; 33 Pa. 856; L. R. 7 Q. B. 666; contra, 21 W. R. 439; 91 Ill. 518; though not of his mere indebtedness; 17 C. B. N. S. 482. But to accept a surety relying on the belief that there are no unusual circumstances increasing his risk, knowing that there are such, and neglecting to communicate them, is fraud; 86 Me. 179; 81 N. Y. 518. The fraud must be practised on the surety; 9 Ala. 42. The forgery of the signature of a surety on a constable's bond will release another surety, signing the same upon the representation that such signature is genuine; 37 Ill. App. 400.

Any material alteration in the contract without the assent of the surety, or change in the circumstances, will discharge the surety; even though trivial, or to the advantage of the surety; 164 U. S. 238; 3 B. & C. 605. Such are the cases where the sureties on a bond for faithful performance are released by a change in the employment or office of the principal; 6 C. B. N. S. 530. But it seems that an alteration by the legislature in an official's duties will not discharge surety as long as they are appropriate to his office; 86 N. Y. 459. If the principal and obligee change the terms of the obligation without the consent of the surety, the latter is discharged; 4 Wash. C. C. 26. A change in the amounts of payments to be made under the principal contract releases the surety who had no knowledge of the change and did not consent; 61 Fed. Rep. 77.

If the creditor, without the assent of the surety, gives time to the principal, the surety is discharged; 3 Y. & C. 187; 2 B. & P. 61; 6 Bingh. 156. So where he agrees with the principal to give time to the surety; L. R. 7 Ch. App. 142. But not if without consideration; 46 Ill. App. 418; 144 U. S. 97; nor does the reducing the rate of interest on a debt and allowing it to run along after maturity on payment of interest, without any binding contract for an extension for a definite time; 148 Ill. 654. And not where a creditor reserves his rights against the surety; 16 M. & W. 128; 4 H. L. C. 997. The rule applies where a state is a creditor; 75 N. C. 615.

The contract must be effectual, binding the creditor as well as the debtor; and it is not enough that the creditor merely forbears to press the debtor; 5 Gray 457; 15 Ind. 45. See, also, 17 Johns. 176; 9 Tex. 615; 9 Cl. & F. 45; 87 S. C. 463; 98 N. C. 111; 84 Va. 772; 71 Tex. 241; 140 U. S. 220. Mere forbearance or delay of a creditor in enforcing his rights against the principal does not release the surety, who may, if he chooses, pay the debt, and becoming subrogated to the creditor's rights, control the claim to his own satisfaction; 45 La. Ann. 814.

The receipt of interest on a promissory note, after the note is overdue, is not sufficient to discharge the surety; 6 Gray 319; nor is taking another bond, as collateral security to the original, having a longer time to run; 41 N. Y. 474.

As a requisite to the binding nature of the agreement, it is necessary that there should be some consideration; 2 Dutch. 191; 30 Miss. 424; a part payment by the principal is held not to be such a consideration; 81 id. 664. Prepayment of interest is a good consideration; 30 id. 482; but not an agreement to pay usurious interest, where the whole sum paid can be recovered back; 10 Md. 227; though it would seem to be otherwise if the contract is executed, and the statutes of usury only provide for a recovery of the excess; 2 Patt. & H. 504.

It has been questioned how far the receipt of interest in advance shows an agreement to extend the time; it may undoubtedly be a good consideration for such an agreement, but does not of itself constitute it. At the most it may be said to be prima facie evidence of the agreement; 30 Vt. 711; 1 Y. & C. 620.

The surety is not discharged if he has given his assent to the extension of the time; 6 Bosw. 600; 16 Pa. 112. Such assent by one surety does not bind his co-surety; 10 N. H. 818; and subsequent assent given by the surety without new consideration, after he has been discharged by a valid agreement for delay, will not bind him; 12 N. H. 820. He need not show notice to the creditor of his dissent; 12 Ga. 271.

Where one surety consents to a change in the original contract and the other does not, the former is bound and the latter is not; 61 Fed. Rep. 77.

The burden of showing a surety's consent to an alteration in the contract is on the plaintiff, when set up by him; 61 Fed. Rep. 77.

Where an execution against a principal is not levied, or a levy is postponed without the consent of the surety, he is discharged from his liability as surety, unless he has property of the principal in his hands at the time; if he has property in his hands liable for the principal's debts, the creditors of the principal may insist on an application of the property to the payment of their debts; 9 B. Monr. 235. A creditor must not only fail, but negligently fail, to enforce a lien, in order to exonerate sureties; 87 Ia. 58. Marriage of the principal and creditor discharges the surety, destroying the right of action; 30 Ark. 667.

If the creditor releases any security which he holds against the debtor, the surety will be discharged; 8 S. & R. 452; 25 Fed. Rep. 578; 80 Ill. 122; 84 Ind. 594; but if the security only covers a part of the debt, it would seem that the surety will be released only pro tanto; 9 W. & S. 38; 127 Mass. 386; so of an execution levied and afterwards relinquished; the surety is discharged to the extent to which he has been injured; 50 Ala. 340; 23 Cal. 94; but the surety is not discharged unless he is injured by the release of the levy; 2 G. & J. 243; 83 Pa. 157. Nor will it matter if the security is received after the contract is made; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 426; contra, 1 Drewry 333. A creditor who has the personal contract of his debtor, with a surety, and has also or takes afterwards property from the principal as a pledge or security for his debt, is to hold the property fairly and impartially for the benefit of the surety as well as himself, and if he parts with it without the knowledge or against the will of the surety he shall lose his claim against the surety to the amount of the property so surrendered, in equity; 43 Me. 331; 8 Pick. 121; 4 Johns. Ch. 129; 5 N. H. 353; or at law; 8 S. & R. 457. The fact that other security, as good as, or better than, that surrendered, was substituted for it, will not preclude the surety from availing himself of the discharge; 15 N. H. 119; 80 Ill. 122.

A creditor who has given up a lien on the debtor's property must prove that the surety was not injured thereby; 23 Fed. Rep. 578. If the relinquishment of the lien materially alters the contract, the surety is wholly discharged; 1 Q. B. Div. 669; when the creditor has, by way of compromise, given up a lien of doubtful validity, and applied the money received, as far as it would go, in payment of the principal debt, the creditor must show that an attempt to realize on the property against which the lien existed would have been successful; 67 Ia. 44. But a creditor is not under any obligation to take active steps to obtain a lien by execution. Generally, where a creditor has, by negligence, lost security held by him for the debt or undertaking, the surety is discharged. In some cases he has been held to diligence in realizing on such security; in other cases his inaction has been held not to discharge the surety; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 440.

But a surety is not discharged by the fact that the creditor has released or compounded with his co-surety; much less if his co-surety has been released by process of law. The only effect of such a release or composition is that the surety is then not liable for the proportion which would properly fall on his co-surety; 6 Ves. 605. This at least is the doctrine in equity; although it may be questioned whether it would apply at law where the obligation is joint; 4 Ad. & E. 675.

But if the obligation is joint and several, a surety is not released from his proportion by such discharge of his co-surety; 81 Pa. 460.

The death of a surety on a bond conditioned for the repayment of advances to the principal does not terminate the liability, and his estate is liable for advances made after his death; 34 Fed. Rep. 111.

Rights of surety against principal. Until default, the surety has, in general, no rights against the principal, except the passive right to be discharged from the obligation on the conditions stated before. But after default on the part of the principal, and before the surety is called upon to pay, the latter has a remedy against the further continuance of the obligation, and he cannot in all cases compel the creditor to proceed against the debtor; but the English courts of equity allow him to bring a bill against the debtor, requiring the latter to exonerate him; 2 Bro. C. C. 578. So a surety for a debt which the creditor neglects or refuses to enforce by proper proceedings for that purpose, may, by bill in equity, bring both debtor and creditor before the court, and have a decree to compel the debtor to make payment and discharge the surety; 3 E. D. Smith 432; and in courts having full equity powers there can be no doubt of the right of a surety, after a debt has become due, to file a bill to compel the principal debtor to pay, whether the surety has himself been sued or not; 2 Md. Ch. Dec. 442; 4 Johns. Ch. 123; 107 Ill. 241; 41 N. J. Eq. 519. Where there is an accrued debt and the surety's liability is admitted, he has a right to compel the principal to relieve him, by paying off his debt. In sustaining such an action he need not prove that the creditor has refused to sue the principal debtor; 81 L. R. Ir. 181.

The surety, after payment of the debt, may recover the amount so paid of the principal, the process varying according to the practice of different courts; 2 Term 104; 4 Me. 200; 1 Pick. 121; 13 Ill. 68. A promise to pay the surety is implied, where there is no express promise; 70 Ala. 326; and assumpsit will lie; 6 M. & W. 153. But before a surety can recover of his principal because of his suretyship, he must have first paid the debt of his principal or some part of it; 41 Neb. 516. But he may pay the debt before it is due, without the request of the principal, and, after it is due, sue the principal; 47 Ind. 85; 125 id. 432.

And such payment refers back to the original undertaking, and overrides all intermediate equities, as of the assignee of a claim against the surety assigned by the principal before payment; 28 Vt. 391.

The payment must not be voluntary, or made in such a manner as to constitute a purchase; for the surety, by purchasing the claim, would take the title of the creditor, and must claim under that. By an involuntary payment is intended only a payment of a claim against which the surety cannot defend. It is not necessary that a suit should be brought. But a surety who pays money on a claim which is absolutely barred has no remedy against the principal; 3 Rand. 490.

A surety, having in his hands funds or securities of the principal, may apply them to the discharge of the debt; 10 Rich. Eq. 557; but where the fund is held by one surety he must share the benefit of it with his co-surety; 3 Jones, Eq. 170; 28 Vt. 65. But a surety who has security for his liability may sue the principal on his implied promise, unless it was agreed that he should look to the security only; 4 Pick. 444. A surety need not account to his co-surety for the simple indebtedness by himself to the principal; 77 N. Y. 280.

Payment of a note by a surety by giving a new note is sufficient payment, even if the new note has not been paid when the suit is commenced; 14 Pick. 280; 3 N. H. 886; contra, where judgment had been rendered against the surety; 3 Md. 47; or by conveyance of land; 9 Cush. 218.

If the surety pays too much by mistake, he can recover only the correct amount of the principal; 1 Dane, Abr. 197. If a surety discharges his obligation for a less sum than its full amount, he can only claim against the principal the actual sum paid; 4 Tex. Civ. App. 636; with interest; 83 Mo. 600; and costs; 12 W. Va. 611.

Extraordinary expenses of the surety, which might have been avoided by payment of the money, or remote and unexpected consequences, are never considered as coming within the contract; 17 Mass. 160; 5 Rawle 100. Costs incurred and paid by the surety in litigating in good faith the claim of the creditor can be recovered of the principal; 30 Vt. 467; 5 Barb. 398; 12 W. Va. 611; but not so if the litigation is in bad faith; 24 Barb. 546; 28 W. Va. 412; or where the surety, being indemnified for his liability, incurred expenses in defending a suit contrary to the expressed wishes of the principal, and after being notified by him that there was no defence to such action; 22 Conn. 299. A surety cannot recover indirect or consequential damages from the principal; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 218; or damages for the sacrifice of his property; 1 Hayw. 130; or for his failure in business due to his incurring the liability in question; 17 Mass. 169.

Joint sureties who pay the debt of the principal may sue jointly for reimbursement; 3 Metc. Mass. 169; 63 Vt. 609; and if each surety has paid a moiety of the debt, they have several rights of action against the principal; 20 N. H. 418.

Bail. "When bail is given, the principal is regarded as delivered to the custody of his sureties. Their dominion is a continuance of the original imprisonment. Whenever they choose to do so, they may seize him and deliver him up in their discharge, and if that cannot be done at once they may imprison him until it can be done. They may exercise their rights in person or by an agent. They may pursue him into another state, arrest him on the Sabbath, and, if necessary, may break and enter his house for that purpose." 16 Wall. 371; 85 Fed. Rep. 959.

Rights of surety against creditor. It is not quite clear whether a surety can enforce any remedies on the part of the creditor before actual payment by the surety; and, of course, as connected with this, what is the effect of a request by the surety to the creditor to proceed against the debtor, and neglect or refusal to comply by the creditor. The objection to discharging the surety on account of such neglect is the fact that the surety may pay the debt and at once become subrogated to all the rights of the creditor; 6 Md. 210. But where there are courts in the exercise of full equity powers, the surety may insure a prompt prosecution either by discharging the obligation and becoming by substitution entitled to all the remedies possessed by the creditor, or he may coerce the creditor to proceed (by an application to a court of equity); 2 Johns. Ch. 554; 3 Sto. 398; though in the latter case he would probably be required to indemnify the creditor against the consequences of risk, delay, and expense; 2 Md. Ch. Dec. 442. The same indemnity would in general be required where a request is made; but it has been held that a simple request to sue the principal debtor, without a tender of expenses, or a stipulation to pay them, or an offer to take the obligation and bring suit, is sufficient to discharge the surety, unless the creditor at the time of the notice expressly puts his refusal to sue on the ground of the trouble and expense, and offers to proceed if that objection be removed; 18 Pa. 460. A creditor is not bound to make use of active diligence against a principal debtor on the mere request of a surety; 18 Ill. 876. There must be an express declaration by the surety that he would otherwise hold himself discharged; 29 Ohio St. 663; 90 Pa. 868.

There is a line of cases which hold that if the surety, after the principal debt is due, calls upon the creditor to bring suit against the principal who is then solvent, and the creditor fails to do so, and the principal becomes insolvent, the surety is discharged; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 289; 17 Johns. 388; 8 S. & R. 110; 2 Col. 614. So where the creditor has sufficient mortgage security, and, after request to sue and refusal, the property depreciates in value; 25 N. Y. 553. The request to sue must be clear and distinct; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 240; and must be made after the debt matures; 44 Pa. 105. That such request must be in writing, see 76 Mo. 70. The great majority of cases hold that the surety cannot be discharged by a request to the creditor to sue, etc.; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 242; 79 Ill. 62; 25 Neb. 448; 2 McLean 451.

In an able opinion in 4 Del. Ch. 258, Bates, Ch., reviews the cases and sustains this view. He points out that the contrary decision in 17 Johns. 386 was made by the casting vote of a lay senator, against the opinion of Kent, C. J., and that, while followed in New York, it has not been favorably regarded even there.

The surety who pays the debt of the principal in full is entitled to have every advantage which the creditor has in pursuing the debtor, and for this purpose may have assignment of the debt, or be subrogated either in law or equity; 89 N. H. 150. Whether the remedy will be by subrogation, or whether the suit must be in the name of the creditor, will depend upon the rules of practice in the different states; 88 Pa. 98. The right of subrogation does not depend upon any contract or request by the principal debtor, but rests upon principles of equity; 1 N. Y. 595; 4 Ga. 348; and, though originating in courts of equity, is now fully recognized as a legal right; 11 Barb. 159. In equity, payment of a debt by a surety does not extinguish it, but operates as an assignment to the surety, with all the creditor's rights; 100 Mo. 250. A surety may apply to the court by motion to compel the assignment of a judgment against him and his principal on his offer to pay the judgment; 77 Hun 580.

A surety of a defaulting government contractor who completes the work may sue to recover a balance due his principal in his own name. 27 Ct. Cls. 185.

Rights of surety against co-surety. The co-sureties are bound to contribute equally to the debt they become liable to pay when their undertaking is joint, or joint and several, not separate and successive; 3 Pet. 470; but the creditor may recover the whole amount of one surety; 1 Dana 855. To support the right of contribution, it is not necessary that the sureties should be bound by the same instrument; 30 Minn. 508; 14 Ves. 160. But where two sureties are bound by separate and distinct agreements for distinct amounts, although for equal portions of the same debt, there is no right of contribution between them; 3 Pet. 470. The right of contribution rests only on the principle of equity, which courts of law will enforce, that where two persons are subject to a common burden it shall be borne equally between them; 66 N. Y. 223; in such cases the law raises an implied promise from the mutual relation of the parties; 8 Allen 566. If contribution would, as between co-sureties, be inequitable, it will not be awarded; 24 Miss. 581. The right of a surety to seek contribution arises on making payment which discharges the sureties from action; 71 Miss. 428. Where a surety pays the debt of his principal, he cannot enforce contribution from one who signed simply as his surety; 62 Conn. 459.

It is not necessary that the co-sureties should know of the agreements of each other, as the principle of contribution rests only on the equality of the burden, and not on any privity; 2 B. & P. 270; 28 Pa. 294; 81 Ala. 440; but a volunteer is not entitled to contribution; there must be a contract of suretyship; 56 Pa. 80. See 22 Am. L. Reg. 529 (a full article).

A surety may compel contribution for the costs and expenses of defending a suit, if the defence were made under such circumstances as to be regarded as prudent; 23 Vt. 581; see 83 N. C. 188; 7 Ill. App. 192; 87 Tenn. 228 (see 68 Tex. 423); whether the attorney employed was successful or not; 45 Mich. 584. And where the suit is defended at the instance or request of the co-surety, costs would be a subject of contribution, both on equitable grounds and on the implied promise; 1 Mood. & M. 406.

A claim for contribution extends to all securities given to one surety; 30 Barb. 408. If one of several sureties takes collaterals from the principal, they will enure to the benefit of all; 8 Dutch. 508. Where one of several sureties is secured by mortgage, he is not bound to enforce his mortgage before he pays the debt or has reason to apprehend that he must pay it, unless the mortgagor is wasting the estate; and if the mortgagor be squandering the mortgaged property, and the surety secured by the mortgage fails to enforce his rights, he is chargeable between himself and his co-sureties with the fair vendible value of the mortgaged property at a coercive sale; 11 B. Monr. 399. The surety in a suit for contribution can recover only the amount which he has actually paid. Any reduction which he has obtained must be regarded as for the benefit of all the co-sureties; 12 Gratt. 642. And see 11 B. Monr. 297. But he is not obliged to account for a debt due by him to the principal; 10 W. N. C. (Pa.) 235.

The right of contribution may be controlled by particular circumstances; thus, where one becomes surety at the request of another, he cannot be called on to contribute by the person at whose request he entered into the security; 87 N. H. 567.

One of several co-sureties cannot obtain contribution against the others until he has actually paid more than his own share, but he is entitled to a declaration of his right to contribution, and to a prospective order that on paying his own share he shall be indemnified against further liability; [1893] 2 Ch. 514.

The relation between co-sureties may be shown by parol evidence; 12 N. Y. 463; 43 Ind. 126; 82 Ga. 73.

A surety who is fully indemnified by his principal cannot recover contribution from his co-surety for money paid by him, but must indemnify himself out of the means placed in his hands; 21 Ala. n. s. 779, n. A co-surety has the same responsibility for keeping alive securities in favor of his co-surety, from whom he claims contribution, as a creditor has on behalf of sureties; 8 J. & Sp. 424. Ordinarily any indemnity, by way of a lien on property, obtained by one surety, after he became such, enures to the benefit of all, and if he lose it by his neglect, it bars contribution. See Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 271.

The remedy for contribution may be either in equity or at law. The result reached either in law or in equity is the same, with one important exception: In the case of the insolvency of one of the sureties. In such cases the law takes no notice of the insolvency, but awards the paying surety his due proportion as if all were solvent. But equity does not regard the insolvent surety, but awards contribution as if he had never existed; 68 Tex. 433; 7 Dana 807; 6 B. & C. 689. One surety cannot by injunction arrest the proceedings at law of his co-surety against him for contribution unless he tenders the principal and interest due such co-surety, who has paid the principal, or alleges that he is ready and willing to bring the same into court to be paid to him as a condition of the court's interference; 4 Gill 235. Where surety has been compelled to pay the debt of his principal, and one of his co-sureties is out of the jurisdiction of the court, and others are within it, the surety who has paid is at liberty to proceed in a suit in equity for contribution against those co-sureties only who are within the jurisdiction, by stating the fact in his bill, and the defendants will be required to make contribution without regard to the share of the absent co-surety; 59 Vt. 865; 6 Ired. Eq. 115. See, generally, 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. *100. A bill in equity will lie, by one surety against a co-surety, before the principal debt is paid, to compel him to contribute. A surety who consents to the creditor's giving time to the principal loses his right of contribution as against one who does not consent; 8 Yerg. 158. In equity, in proceeding for contribution, it must be shown that the principal was insolvent; 2 Dana 296; but not at law; 34 Ala. 529; 50 Ind. 158; contra, 7 Dana 807; 99 N. C. 559.

The statute of limitations does not run as against a surety claiming contribution until his own liability is ascertained; [1893] 2 Ch. 514. It runs against partial payments on the debt, from the time he pays the creditor more than his proportion of the debt; 77 Wis. 485.

Conflict of laws. The contract of suretyship, like other contracts, is governed by the lex loci contractus; but the locus is not necessarily the same as that of the principal contract. Thus, the contract made by the indorser of a note is, not to pay the note where it is payable, but that if not paid there he will pay it at the place where the indorsement is made; 12 Johns. 142; 13 Mass. 20. The lex loci applies as well to the interest as to the principal amount. A question has been made in the case of bonds for faithful performance given by public officers; and in these it has been held that the place of performance is to be regarded as the place of making the contract, and sureties are bound as if they made the contract at the seat of the government to which the bonds are given. And under this rule the obligation of all on the bond is governed by the same law, although the principal and sureties may sign in different states; 6 Pet. 172. A letter of guaranty written in the United States and addressed to a person in England must be construed according to the laws of England; 1 How. 181. See BOND; GUARANTY; OFFER; PROMISSORY NOTES.

SURFACE WATERS. Waters of a casual and vagrant character, which ooze through the soil or diffuse or squander themselves over the surface, following no definite course; 34 Minn. 489. They are waters which, though customarily and naturally flowing in a known direction and course, have nevertheless no banks or channel in the soil; and include waters which are diffused over the surface of the ground and are derived from rains and melting snows, occasional outbursts of water which in time of freshet or melting of snows descended from the mountains and inundate the country, and the moisture of wet, spongy, springy, or boggy ground. See 44 Ohio St. 282; 62 Wis. 114; 108 Mass. 221; 86 N. Y. 147.

Where water, whether coming from springs or rains or melting snows, has flowed over lands of the complainant, in a well-defined channel, for a period of time so long that the memory of men runneth not to the contrary, to and upon lands of an adjoining proprietor, the court will, by its mandatory injunction, require such adjoining proprietor to remove any obstruction placed upon his lands to prevent such water from flowing to and over his lands; 48 N. J. Eq. 409. The natural flowage of water from an upper estate to a lower one is a servitude which the owner of the latter must bear, though the flowage be not in a natural water course with well defined banks; 95 Mich. 585. See 97 Mich. 282.

Overflow from a river in time of high water is surface water; 9 Ind. App. 56; but the superabundant waters of a river at times of ordinary floods, spreading beyond its banks, but forming one body and flowing within their accustomed boundaries in such floods, are not surface waters which a riparian owner may turn off as he will; 62 Fed. Rep. 129. In agricultural land the natural flow of water from lands of a higher upon those of a lower level cannot be made the subject of an action of damages; but a different rule applies in towns and cities; 8 W. & S. 40; 5 Super. Ct. Pa. 502.

See WATERS.

SURGEON. One who applies the principles of the healing art to external diseases or injuries, or to internal injuries or malformations, requiring manual or instrumental intervention. One who practices surgery.

This definition is imperfect, it being impossible to define the term surgeon or surgery. The term surgery, or chirurgery, comes from two Greek words signifying the hand and work, meaning a manual procedure by means of instruments, or otherwise, in the healing of injuries and the cure of disease. The practice of medicine, in contradistinction to the practice of surgery, denotes the treatment of disease by the administration of drugs or other sanative substances. There cannot be a complete separation between the practice of medicine and surgery as they are developed by modern science, and understood by the most learned in the profession of medicine: the principles of both are the same throughout, and no one is qualified to practise either who does not completely understand the fundamental principles of both.

The general principles of law defining the civil responsibilities of physicians and surgeons are the same as those that apply to and govern the conduct of lawyers, shipbuilders, and other classes of men whose employment requires them to transact business demanding special skill and knowledge; 27 N. H. 468; Whart. & Stille, Med. Jur. 750. The surgeon does not warrant or insure as to the result, ordinarily; 7 C. & P. 81. The surgeon or physician may bind himself by an express contract to cure; 27 N. H. 468; 2 Ld. Raym. 909.

Every person who enters into a learned profession undertakes to bring to the exercise of it a reasonable, fair, and competent degree of skill; 8 C. & P. 475. This degree of skill is what is usually termed ordinary and reasonable; Story, Bailm. 433. In addition to the application of ordinary skill in the treatment of disease and in injuries, the physician and surgeon undertake to give to their cases ordinary care and diligence, and the exercise of their best judgment; McClel. Malp. 18, 82; 5 B. & Ald. 820; 15 Greenl. 97. See PHYSICIAN.

SURGERY. The practice of medicine is a pursuit very generally known and understood, and so, also, that of "surgery." The former includes the application and use of medicines and drugs for the purpose of curing, mitigating, or alleviating bodily diseases, while the functions of the latter are limited to manual operations, usually performed by surgical instruments or appliances. 108 Ky. 779, 57 S. W. 504. See MEDICINE, PRACTICE OF.

SURMISE. In Ecclesiastical Law. An allegation in a libel. Phill. Ecc. Law 1445. Formerly where a defendant pleaded a local custom it was necessary for him to surmise, that is to suggest, that such custom should be certified to the court by the mouth of the reporter. Without such a surmise the issue was to be tried by the country as other issues of fact. 1 Burr. 261.

SURNAME. A name which is added to the Christian name. In modern times these have become family names. They are called surnames, because originally they were written over the name in judicial writings and contracts. See NAME.

SURPLUS. That which is left from a fund which has been appropriated for a particular purpose; the remainder of a thing; the overplus; the residue. See 18 Ves. 466. It has an appropriate application to personal property or money, but, when used in a will, may include real estate; 86 N. Y. 210; 181 ad. 287. See SAVINGS BANKS; RESERVE.

The excess in value of the assets in the State (where the corporation employs part of its "capital stock" in business elsewhere) over the capital stock employed in the State. 256 U. S. 231.

SURPLUS EARNINGS. See EARNINGS.

SURPLUSAGE. In Accounts. A greater disbursement than the charges amount to. A balance over. 1 Lew. 219.

In Pleading. Allegations of matter wholly foreign and impertinent to the cause. All matter beyond the circumstances necessary to constitute the action is surplusage; 5 East 275; 2 Johns. Cas. 52; 16 Tex. 536. Generally, matter of surplusage will be rejected and will not be allowed to vitiate the pleading; Co. Litt. 303 b; 3 Saund. 306, n. 14; 7 Johns. 462; 1 Root 456; 21 N. H. 535; as new and needless matter stated in an innuendo; 7 Johns. 273; even if repugnant to what precedes; 10 East 142; but if it shows that the plaintiff has no cause of action, demurrer will lie; 2 East 451; 2 W. Bla. 842; 3 Cra. 193. Where the whole of an allegation is immaterial to the plaintiff's right of action, it may be struck out as surplusage; 1 Mas. 57. Matter laid under a videlicet, inconsistent with what precedes, may be rejected as surplusage; 4 Johns. 450; and when the unnecessary matter is so connected with what is material that it cannot be separated, the whole matter may be included in the traverse; Dy. 865; 2 Saund. 206 a, n. 21; and the whole must be proved as laid; 1 Ohio 483; Steph. Plead. 423.

SURPRISE. In Equity Practice. The act by which a party who is entering into a contract is taken unawares, by which sudden confusion or perplexity is created, which renders it proper that a court of equity should relieve the party so surprised. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 120, n.

The situation in which a party is placed without any default of his own, which will be injurious to his interests. 8 Mart. La. N. S. 407.

Mr. Jeremy, Eq. Jur. 366, 383, note, seems to think that the word surprise is a technical expression, and nearly synonymous with fraud. It is sometimes used in this sense when it is deemed presumptive of, or approaching to, fraud. 1 Fonbl. Eq. 123; 3 Ch. Cas. 56, 74, 103, 114.

In Law. The general rule is that when a party or his counsel is taken by surprise, in a material point or circumstance which could not have been anticipated, and when want of skill, care, or attention cannot be justly imputed, and injustice has been done, a new trial should be granted; Hill, New Tri. 521. Surprise may be good ground for a new trial in criminal as in civil cases; 10 E. L. & E. 105; but in neither case is surprise arising after verdict sufficient to warrant an application to the discretion of the court; 2 Parker 673. Nor will a new trial be granted where the ground of the surprise is evidence which was clearly within the issues presented by the pleadings; 1 Tex. Civ. App. 843; or unless one made application for a postponement of the trial in order that he might repair the injury done him by the unexpected testimony; 57 Ark. 60. See NEW TRIAL; PLEADING.

SURREBUTTER. In Pleading. The plaintiff's answer to the defendant's rebutter. It is governed by the same rules as the replication. See 6 Com. Dig. 183; 7 id. 389.

SURREJOINDER. In Pleading. The plaintiff's answer to the defendant's rejoinder. It is governed in every respect by the same rules as the replication. Steph. Pl. 77; 7 Com. Dig. 389. See PLEADING.

SURRENDER. A yielding up of an estate for life or years to him who has an immediate estate in reversion or remainder, by which the lesser estate is merged in the greater by mutual agreement. Co. Litt. 337 b. See 90 Cal. 607.

The deed by which the surrender is made. A surrender is of a nature directly opposite to a release; for, as the latter operates by the greater estate descending upon the less, the former is the falling of a less estate into a greater, by deed. A surrender immediately divests the estate of the surrenderor, and vests it in the surrenderee, even without the assent of the latter; Shepp. Touchst. 800.

The technical and proper words of this conveyance are, surrender and yield up; but any form of words by which the intention of the parties are sufficiently manifested will operate as a surrender; 1 Term 441; Com. Dig. Surrender (A).

The surrender may be express or implied. The latter is when an estate incompatible with the existing estate is accepted, or the lessee takes a new lease of the same lands; 16 Johns. 28; 1 B. & Ald. 50. See 94 U. S. 369; 53 Ia. 847; LANDLORD AND TENANT. To yield; render up. 48 Minn. 13.

SURRENDER OF CRIMINALS. The act by which the public authorities deliver a person accused of a crime, and who is found in their jurisdiction, to the authorities within whose jurisdiction it is alleged the crime has been committed. In England the crown has the option of either surrendering or refusing to surrender a British subject accused of an extradition offence in a foreign country; [1896] 1 Q. B. 230. See EXTRADITION; FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE.

SURRENDER OF A PREFERENCE. The surrender by a preferred creditor, to the assignee in bankruptcy, of all that he has received under such preference, as a necessary step, under the bankrupt law, to obtaining a dividend of the estate. 1 Dill. 544.

SURRENDER TO USES OF WILL. Formerly a copyhold interest would not pass by will unless it had been surrendered to the use of the will. By 55 Geo. III. this is no longer necessary; 1 Steph. Com. 639.

SURRENDEREE. One to whom a surrender has been made.

SURRENDEROR. One who makes a surrender; as, when the tenant gives up the estate and cancels his lease before the expiration of the term. One who yields up a freehold estate for the purpose of conveying it.

SURROGATE (Lat. surrogatus, from subrogare, or surrogare, to substitute). In English Law. A deputy or substitute of the chancellor, bishop, ecclesiastical or admiralty judge, appointed by him. He can grant licenses, hold courts, and adjudicate cases, to the same extent and with the same authority as his principal, provided his grant of powers has been coextensive with those possessed by his principal. The office has arisen by usage, but is sanctioned by canon 128, and recognized by statute.

In American Law. A term used in some states to denote the judge to whom jurisdiction of the probate of wills, the grant of administration and of guardianship is confided. In some states he is called surrogate, in others, judge of probate, register, judge of the orphans' court, etc. He is ordinarily a county officer, with a local jurisdiction limited to his county.

SURROGATE'S COURT. In the United States, a state tribunal, with similar jurisdiction to the court of ordinary, court of probate, etc., relating to matters of probate, etc. See 2 Kent 406; New York.

SURVEY. The act by which the quantity of a piece of land is ascertained; the paper containing a statement of the courses, distances, and quantity of land is also called a survey.

A survey made by authority of law, and duly returned into the land office, is a matter of record, and of equal dignity with the patent; 3 A. K. Marsh. 226. See 3 Me. 193; 14 Mass. 149; 1 Harr. & J. 201; 39 Fed. Rep. 66; 1 Dev. & B. 76; and is not open to any collateral attack in the courts; 153 U. S. 253. Where a survey was made in good faith and has been unchallenged for over fifteen years, whatever doubts may exist as to its correctness must be resolved in favor of the title as patented; 133 U. S. 193.

In construing maps of official surveys, courts give effect to the meaning expressed by their outlines, as well as by their language; 114 Mo. 13.

By survey is also understood an examination; and in this sense it is constantly employed in insurance and in admiralty law.

SURVEY OF A VESSEL. A public document looked to both by underwriters and owners as affording the means of ascertaining at the time and place the state and condition of the ship and other property at hazard.

SURVEYOR OF THE PORT. A revenue officer appointed for each of the principal points of entry, whose duties chiefly concern the importations at his station and the determination of their amount and valuation. U. S. R. S. § 2637.

SURVIVOR. The longest liver of two or more persons.

There is no presumption as to survivorship in England; 8 H. L. C. 133; see [1892] P. 142; or Scotland; Ersk. III. 8. 1; a child, who, when last heard of six years before, had consumption, is presumed to have died before his father; 95 Ia. 611. See DEATH.

In cases of partnership, the surviving partner is entitled to have all the effects of the partnership, and is bound to pay all the debts owing by the firm; Gow, Partn. 157. He is, however, bound to account for the surplus to the representatives of his deceased partners, agreeably to their respective rights. See PARTNERSHIP.

A surviving trustee is generally vested with all the powers of all the trustees, and the surviving administrator is authorized to act for the estate as if he had been sole administrator.

The right of survivorship among joint-tenants has been abolished, except as to estates held in trust in many states. For the statutes and the present condition of the law in the United States, see Demb. Land Tit. 27. See ESTATES OF JOINT-TENANCY. In Connecticut it never existed; 1 Swift, Dig. 102; Washb. R. P.; nor has it ever been recognized in Ohio, Kansas, Nebraska, or Idaho; Demb. Land Tit. 198. As to survivorship among legatees, see 1 Turn & R. 413; 3 Russ. 217.

"Survivors" is a flexible term, not necessarily meaning the testator's surviving children only; but, when molded by the context and spirit of the will, may consistently with the literal import comprehend all his surviving descendants who were intended to be beneficiaries. 7 Bush (Ky.) 113.

When a bequest is made to the "survivors" of one of several children dying without issue, the testator should be understood to mean, by "survivors" his other children unless they also had died without issue, because his presumed object was that all who should have issue should be entitled to an equal interest, and that nothing but death without issue should disturb that equality. 97 Ky. 655, 31 S. W. 485.

The words "children surviving" as used in a will, mean the children surviving at the death of the testator. 10 Ky. Opin. 588.

SUS' PER COLL'. In English Law. In the English practice, a calendar is made out of attainted criminals, and the judge signs the calendar with their separate judgments in the margin. In the case of a capital felony it is written opposite the prisoner's name, "let him be hanged by the neck," which, when the proceedings were in Latin, was "suspendatur per collum," or, in the abbreviated form, "sus' per coll." 4 Bla. Com. 408.

SUSPENDER. In Scotch Law. He in whose favor a suspension is made. In general, a suspender is required to give caution to pay the debt in the event it shall be found due. Where the suspender cannot, from his circumstances, procure unquestionable security, the lords admit juratory caution; but the reasons of suspension are in that case to be considered with particular accuracy at passing the bill. Ersk. Inst. 4. 8. 6.

SUSPENSE. When a rent, profit d prendre, and the like, are, in consequence of the unity of possession of the rent, etc., of the land out of which they issue, not in esse for a time, they are said to be in suspense, tunc dormiunt; but they may be revived or awakened. Co. Litt. 313 a.

SUSPENSION. A temporary stop of a right, of a law, and the like.

In times of war the right of habeas corpus may be suspended by lawful authority.

There may be a suspension of an officer's duties or powers when he is charged with crimes; Wood, Inst. 510. As to an attorney or solicitor, see DISBAR. The Stock Exchange and many corporations provide for the suspension as well as expulsion of members under certain circumstances; 47 Wisc. 670; 2 Brews. 571. See Dos Passos, St. Brok.; EXPULSION; AMOTION; STOCK EXCHANGE.

Suspension of a right in an estate is a partial extinguishment, or an extinguishment for a time. It differs from an extinguishment in this: a suspended right may be revived; one extinguished is absolutely dead; Bac. Abr. Extinguishment (A).

The suspension of a statute for a limited time operates so as to prevent its operation for the time; but it has not the effect of a repeal; 8 Dall. 885. For plea in suspension, see PLEA; ABATEMENT. Pleas in suspension are not specifically abolished in England by the Judicature Acts, though Ord. xix. rule 13, directs that no plea or defence shall be pleaded in abatement. Moz. & W.

In Ecclesiastical Law. An ecclesiastical censure, by which a spiritual person is either interdicted the exercise of his ecclesiastical function or hindered from receiving the profits of his benefice. It may be partial or total; for a limited time, or forever, when it is called deprivation or amotion. Ayliffe, Parerg. 501.

SUSPENSION OF ARMS. An agreement between belligerents, made for a short time or for a particular place, to cease hostilities between them. See ARMISTICE; TRUCE.

SUSPENSION, PLEAS IN. See PLEAS; SUSPENSION.

SUSPENSION OF A RIGHT. The act by which a party is deprived of the exercise of his right for a time.

When a right is suspended by operation of law, the right is revived the moment the bar is removed; but when the right is suspended by the act of the party, it is gone forever. See 1 Rolle, Abr. Extinguishment (L. M).

SUSPENSIVE CONDITION. One which prevents a contract from going into operation until it has been fulfilled.

SUSPENSORY CONDITIONS. Conditions precedent in a contract which merely suspend the operation of a promise till they are fulfilled. They differ from those conditions precedent the non-fulfilment of which works a breach of the contract. Tiff. Sales 153. See 171 U. S. 812.

SUSPICION. The act of suspecting, or the state of being suspected; imagination, generally of something ill; distrust, mistrust, doubt. 68 Ga. 343.

"Suspicion" is frequently applied to an act, thing, or occurrence which, from its nature or from some circumstance attending it, may well put a man of ordinary caution upon his guard against deception. Anderson.

"Suspicion" is also applied to cases in which a party fails or omits to produce evidence within his exclusive possession, and which, being introduced, would have changed the result, presumably against his interest.

The words are likewise applied to the case of a person who is believed to have committed a crime, or whose actions fairly indicate an intention to commit crime. Id.

SUTLER. A man whose employment is to sell provisions and liquor to a camp.

By the articles of war no sutler is permitted to sell any kind of liquor or victuals, or to keep his house or shop open for the entertainment of soldiers, after nine at night, or before the beating of the reveille, or upon Sundays during divine service or sermon, on penalty of being dismissed all future sutling; all sutlers are subject to orders according to the rules and discipline of war.

SUUS HÆRES. See HÆRES.

SUZERAIN (Norman Fr. suz, under, and re or rey, king). A lord who possesses a fief whence other fiefs issue. A tenant in capite or immediately under the king. Note 77 of Butler & Hargrave's notes, Co. Litt. 1. 3.

In International Law. The word has no clear or precise signification. It has been extended to the Mussulman world, and to the control of European Powers through their colonies over imperfectly civilized people; 12 L. Quart. Rev. 223; [1896] P. 122.

SWAIN-GEMOTE. See COURT OF SWAINMOTE.

SWEAR. To take an oath administered by some officer duly empowered.

One may swear who is not duly sworn; and in such case the oath is not administered, but self-imposed, and the swearer incurs no legal liability thereabout; 33 Fed. Rep. 168. See JURY; OATH.

To use such profane language as is forbidden by law. This is generally punished by statutory provisions in the several states. See 7 Lea 410; 85 N. C. 528. See BLASPHEMY.

The term "sworn to" implies that the subscriber shall have declared upon oath the truth of the statement to which his name is subscribed. 158 Ky. 416, 165 S. W. 422.

A certificate reciting that it has been "acknowledged" is not sufficient to show that same was "sworn to" as required by law. 158 Ky. 415, 165 S. W. 422.

SWEATING. In an act entitled "an Act to prevent sweating of prisoners arrested for crime, etc.," the word "sweating" is defined as the questioning of a person in custody charged with crime, in an attempt to obtain information from him concerning his connection with crime or knowledge thereof, after he has been arrested and in custody as stated, by plying him with questions, or by threats, or other wrongful means, extorting from him information to be used against him as testimony upon his trial for such alleged crime. 156 Ky. 754, 162 S. W. 94.

SWEEPSTAKES. The sum of the stakes for which the subscribers agree to pay for each horse nominated. 61 Fed. Rep. 889. A free handicap sweepstake is not a stake race; id. See HORSE-RACE.

SWINDLER. A cheat; one guilty of defrauding divers persons. 1 Term 748.

Swindling is usually applied to a transaction where the guilty party procures the delivery to him, under a pretended contract, of the personal property of another, with the felonious design of appropriating it to his own use; 2 Russ. Cr. 180; 2 Mass. 406; as where a purchaser tendered a twenty-dollar gold-piece in payment for goods, supposing it was a silver dollar and the seller knowing his mistake returned him change for a dollar, the offence was held to be swindling; 25 S. E. Rep. (Ga.)

318.

The terms cheat and swindler are not actionable unless spoken of the plaintiff in relation to his business; Ogd. Lib. & Sl. 61; 6 Cush. 185; 10 How. Pr. 128. The words "you are living by imposture," spoken of a person with the intention of imputing that he is a swindler, are not actionable per se; 8 C. B. 142. See LXXL.

SWITCH. See RUNNING SWITCH.

SWORN BROTHERS. In Old English Law. Persons who, by mutual oaths, covenanted to share in each other's fortunes.

SWORN CLERKS IN CHANCERY. Officers who had charge of records, and performed other duties in connection with the court of chancery. Abolished in 1842.

SYB AND SOM. A Saxon form of greeting, meaning peace and safety. T. L.

SYLLABUS. An abstract; a head note. The brief statement of the point or points decided, prefixed to the printed report of a case. The head note of a reported case is a thing upon which much skill and thought is required to express in clear, concise language the principle of law to be deduced, or the decision to which it is prefixed, or the facts and circumstances which bring the case in hand within the same principle or rule of law or of practice. 17 C. B. 459. See COPY-RIGHT; INFRINGEMENT; PARAGRAPH.

SYLVA CÆVUA. In Ecclesiastical Law. Wood of any kind which was kept on purpose to be cut, and which being cut grew again from the stem or root. 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. L. 90.

SYMBOLIC DELIVERY. The delivery of some thing as a representation or sign of the delivery of some other.

Where an actual delivery of goods cannot be made, a symbolic delivery of some particular thing, as standing for the whole, will vest the property equally with an actual delivery; 1 Pet. 445; 8 How. 399; 6 Md. 10; 19 N. H. 419; 39 Me. 496; 11 Cush. 282; 3 Cal. 140. See 1 Sm. L. C. 33.

SYNALLAGMATIC CONTRACT. In Civil Law. A contract by which each of the contracting parties binds himself to the other: such are the contracts of sale, hiring, etc. Pothier, Obl. 9.

SYNDIC. In French Law. The assignee of a bankrupt. So in Louisiana.

One who is chosen to conduct the affairs and attend to the concerns of a body corporate or community. In this sense the word corresponds to director or manager. Rodman Notes to Code de Com. p. 351; La. Civ. Code. art. 429; Dalloz, Dict. Syndic.

SYNDICATE. A university committee. A combination of persons or firms united for the purpose of enterprises too large for individuals to undertake; or a group of financiers who buy up the shares of a company in order to sell them at a profit by creating a scarcity. Moz. & W.

An association of individuals, formed for the purpose of conducting and carrying out some particular business transaction, ordinarily of a financial character, in which the members are mutually interested. 84 Md. 456. It is said to be, as respects the persons composing it, a partnership. Id. But this is rather too broadly expressed. See 40 L. R. A. 218; PROMOTERS.

SYNDICOS (Gr. syn, with, dikē, cause). One chosen by a college, municipality, etc., to defend its cause. Calv. Lex. See SYNDIC.

SYNGRAPH (Gr. syn, with, γράφω, to write). A deed, bond, or other instrument of writing, under the hand and seal of all the parties. It was so called because the parties wrote together.

Formerly such writings were attested by the subscription and crosses of the wit-neesee; afterwards, to prevent frauds and concealments, they made deeds of mutual covenant in a script and rescript, or in a part and counterpart, and in the middle between the two copies they wrote the word syngraphus in large letters, which, being cut through the parchment and one being delivered to each party, on being afterwards put together proved their authenticity.

Deeds thus made were denominated syn- graphs by the canonists, and by the common-lawyers chirographs. 2 Bla. Com. 298.

SYNOD. An ecclesiastical assembly, which may be general, national, provincial, or diocesan. See JUDICATORIES.

SYNODAL. Relating to a synod. A collection of ordinances of diocesan synods. A contribution of money to a bishop at Easter by the clergy. English.

SYNODALES TESTES. See SIDESMEN.

SYSTEMATIZED DELUSION. A delusion in which there is habitual correlation to the subject's surroundings, but in which the reasoning and deductions are false, a condition of the chronically insane. Opposed to unsystematized delusion, in which there is no such correlation. Stand. Dict.

T. Every person convicted of felony short of murder, and admitted to benefit of clergy, was at one time marked with this letter upon the brawn of the thumb. Abolished by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. Whart. Dict.

TABELLA (Lat.). In Civil Law. A small table on which votes were often written. Cicero, in Rull. 2. 2. Three tables were given to the judges, one with the letter A for Absolutio, one with C for Condemnatio, and one with N. L. for Non Liquet, not proven. Calvinus, Lex.

TABELLIO. In Roman Law. An officer among the Romans, who reduced to writing, and into proper form, agreements, contracts, wills, and other instruments, and witnessed their execution.

The term tabellio is derived from the Latin tabula, seu tabella, which, in this sense, signified those tables or plates covered with wax which were then used instead of paper. 8 Toullier, n. 53.

Tabelliones differed from notaries in many respects: they had judicial jurisdiction in some cases, and from their judgments there were no appeals. Notaries were then the clerks or aids of the tabelliones; they received the agreements of the parties, which they reduced to short notes; and these contracts were not binding until they were written in extenso, which was done by the tabelliones. Jacob, Law Dict. Tabellion.

TABLE-RENTS. Rents paid to bishops and other ecclesiastics, appropriated to their table or housekeeping. Jacob.

TABLEAU OF DISTRIBUTION. In Louisiana. A list of creditors of an insolvent estate, stating what each is entitled to. 4 Mart. La. N. S. 535.

TABLES. A synopsis in which many particulars are brought together in a general view. See LIFE TABLES. As to the law of the Twelve Tables, see CODE.

TABULA IN NAUFRAGIO (Lat. a plank in a wreck). In English Law. A figurative term used to denote the power of a third mortgagee, who, having obtained his mortgage without any knowledge of a second mortgage, may acquire the first incumbrance, and squeeze out and have satisfaction before the second. 2 Ves. Ch. 573; Beach, Eq. Jur. 388; TACKING.

TABULÆ. In Civil Law. Contracts and written instruments of all kinds, especially wills. So called because originally written on tablets and with wax. Calvinus.

TAC. A kind of customary payment by a tenant. Blount, Ten. 155.

TAC FREE. Free from payments, etc.: e. g. "tac free de omnibus propriis porcis suis infra metas de C." i. e. paying nothing for his hogs running within that limit. Jacob.

TACIT (from Lat. taceo, to be silent). That which, although not expressed, is understood from the nature of the thing or from the provision of the law; implied.

TACIT LAW. A law which derives its authority from the common consent of the people without any legislative enactment. 1 Bouvier, Inst. 120.

TACIT RELOCATION. In Scotch Law. The tacit or implied renewal of a lease when the landlord instead of warning a tenant has allowed him to continue without making a new agreement. Bell, Dict. Relocation.

TACIT TACK. See TACIT RELOCATION.

TACITURNITY. In Scotland this signifies laches in not prosecuting a legal claim, or in acquiescing in an adverse one. Moz. & W.

TACK. In Scotch Law. A contract of location by which the use of land or any other immovable subject is set to the lessee or tacksman for a certain yearly rent, either in money, the fruits of the ground, or services. Ersk. Inst. 2. 6. 8. This word is nearly synonymous with lease.

TACKING. In English Law. The union of securities given at different times, so as to prevent any intermediate purchaser's claiming title to redeem or otherwise discharge one lien which is prior, without redeeming or discharging other liens also which are subsequent, to his own title. Jeremy, Eq. Jur. 188-191; 1 Story, Eq. Jur., 13th ed. § 412.

It is an established doctrine in the English chancery that a bona fide purchaser without any notice of a defect in his title at the time of the purchase may lawfully buy any statute, mortgage, or incumbrance, and if he can defend by those at law his adversary shall have no help in equity to set those incumbrances aside, for equity will not disarm such a purchaser. And as mortgagees are considered in equity as purchasers pro tanto, the same doctrine has extended to them, and a mortgagee who has advanced his money without notice of any prior incumbrance may, by getting an assignment of a statute, judgment, or recognizance, protect himself from any incumbrance subsequent to such statute, judgment, or recognizance, though prior to his mortgage; that is, he will be allowed to tack or unite his mortgage to such old security, and will by that means be entitled to recover all moneys for which such security was given, together with the money due on his mortgage, before the prior mortgagees are entitled to recover anything; 3 Cruise, Dig. t. 15, c. 5, s. 27; 1 Vern. 188. The source and origin of the English doctrine is the case of Marsh v. Lee, 2 Ventr. 387; 1 Ch. Cas. 162; 1 Wh. & T. L. C. Eq. 611, notes. This case and the doctrine founded upon it has been the subject of severe criticism; Langd. Eq. Pl. 191. Lord Ch. J. Holt is said to have been one of the first to benefit by the right of tacking; see Holt v. Mill, 2 Vern. 279.

Tacking was abolished by sec. 7 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, stat. 37 & 38 Vict. c. 78, but that section is repealed by sec. 129 of the Land Title and Transfer Act of 38 & 39 Vict. c. 87; Moz. & W. See 1 Pingr. Mortg. § 477.

In England a mortgagee who holds several distinct mortgages under the same mortgagor, redeemable, not by express contract, but only by virtue of the equity of redemption, may, within certain limits and against certain persons, consolidate them, that is, treat them as one, and decline to be redeemed as to any, unless he is redeemed as to all; 6 App. Cas. 698. See Brett's L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 216. It is there termed consolidation of mortgages, and the principle is laid down that the courts lean against any extension of the doctrine; 6 App. Cas. 698, which is cited as the leading case, and as practically overruling L. R. 4 Eq. 637, which was overruled in 14 Ch. D. 699.

The high-water mark of the doctrine is said to be at the present day represented by Vint v. Padget, where it was held that if mortgages of different lands to secure different debts are made to, or come into the hands of, the same person, the mortgagee cannot redeem either without redeeming both, or he may enforce the payment of the amount of both debts out of the land covered by either; and this is true though he bought the mortgages with notice of an outstanding second mortgage; 2 De G. & J. 811. This case is said to have been cited but not approved in [1896] App. Cas. 187, affirming [1895] 1 Ch. 51, which affirmed [1894] 2 Ch. 328, where it was held that when the owner of different properties mortgages them to different persons, and the mortgages afterward become united under one title, the holder of the mortgages has a right to refuse to be redeemed as to one without payment of all, not only as against the mortgagor, but also as against a person in whom the equities of redemption of all the properties have been vested by one deed, whether from the mortgagor or mesne assignee, although the assignment is made before the mortgages become united in title.

This doctrine is inconsistent with the laws of the several states, which require the recording of mortgages; and does not exist to any extent in the United States; 1 Caines, Cas. 112; 2 Pick. 517; 12 Conn. 195; 14 Ohio 318; 11 S. & R. 208; Walk. Mich. 175; 87 Vt. 375; 1 Johns. Ch. 399; Bisph. Eq. § 159. A rule apparently analogous may, however, be found in those cases where a mortgage is given to secure future advances, and where the mortgagee is allowed to recover sums subsequently advanced, as against a same mortgage; Bisph. Eq. § 159, where the cases are collected; but the future advances to be protected must be without notice of the intervening incumbrance; id.; 7 Cra. 45; 5 Johns. Ch. 329; unless the advances are made under a binding agreement; 7 Conn. 387; 24 Pa. 872; 21 N. J. Eq. 87; and the recording of the latter is a sufficient notice; 17 Ohio 371; 7 Cra. 45.

To tack different adverse possessions to make up the period of bar, the persons holding such possessions must be connected by priority of title or claim; 36 W. Va. 445; and where several persons enter upon land in succession, the several possessions cannot be tacked together so as to make a continuity of possession under the law of adverse title, unless there is priority of estate, or the several titles are connected; 24 Or. 239.

TAIL. See ESTATE TAIL.

TAILAGE. See TALLAGE.

TAILLE. In Old French Law. An imposition levied by the king or any other lord, on his subject. Burrill; Brande. The royal taille was a tax imposed at once in rem and in personam; that is, each contributor was rendered personally liable to pay a sum proportionate to the estimated value of his immovable property. It was a property tax affecting the roturier exclusively. Id.; Steph. Lect. 358.

TAILSIE. A term chiefly used in the case of a land estate, which is settled on a long series of heirs substituted one after another; whereas heirs pointed out in contracts of marriage, or in bonds containing clauses of substitution, are more commonly called heirs of provision. Ersk. Prin. III. 8. 8.

In Scotch Law. A tailed fee is that which the owner, by exercising his inherent right of disposing of his property, settles upon others than those to whom it would have descended by law.

TAINT. A conviction of felony, or the person so convicted. Cowel. See ATTAIN.

TAKE. A technical expression which signifies to be entitled to: as, a devisee will take under the will.

To seize: as, to take and carry away, either lawfully or unlawfully.

In an indictment for larceny, a charge that defendant did feloniously take implies a trespass; 47 Minn. 449. Under a statute making it an offence to take up and use a horse without the consent of the owner, the taking a horse bridled, saddled, and hitched to a tree will not constitute the offence. 7 Tex. Cr. Rep. 115.

The word may be synonymous with arrest; 9 Gray 267; but take and steal were held not to be synonymous; 13 Conn. 229. It has been held equivalent to require. 29 Ala. 542. A devisee takes under a will only when the possession and control of the deviser has ceased. 41 N. J. L. 70. In its usual signification the word taken implies a transfer of dominion, possession, or control. Id.

To choose: e. g. ad capiendas assisas, to choose a jury.

To obtain: e. g. to take a verdict in court, to get a verdict.

Taken Back. Under a contract for commission on sales, where it was provided that no commission was to be paid on machinery sold and "taken back," machinery that had not been paid for, and upon which a lien had to be enforced for the purchase price was "taken back." 89 S. W. 266.

TAKE UP. An indorser or acceptor is said to take up, or retire, a bill when he discharges the liability upon it. In such a case, the indorser would hold the instrument with all his remedies intact; while the acceptor would extinguish all the remedies on it. One who accepts a lease is also said to take it up.

TAKING. The act of laying hold upon an article, with or without removing the same. See LARCENY; ROBBERY.

It implies a transfer of possession, dominion, or control. A thing is not taken unless such a change of status is effected. In trespass, trover, or replevin the taking is not accomplished until the goods are within the power or control of the defendant. See CONVERSION; TRESPASS; TROVER; REPLEVIN.

See EMINENT DOMAIN; ROBBERY.

TALE. In English Law. The ancient name of the declaration or count. 3 Bla. Com. 293.

TALES (Lat. talis, such, like). A number of jurors added to a deficient panel sufficient to supply the deficiency. 36 Pac. Rep. (Cal.) 221. See 3 Hun 479.

A list of such jurymen as were of the tales, kept in the king's bench office in England.

TALES DE CIRCUMSTANTIBUS (Lat. a like number of the bystanders). A sufficient number of jurors selected from the bystanders to supply a deficiency in the panel.

The order of the judge for taking such bystanders as jurors.

Whenever from any cause the panel of jurors is insufficient, the judge may issue the above order, and the officer immediately executes it; see 2 Hill S. C. 381; Cox v. N. J. 283; 1 Blackf. 65. See JURY.

TALITER PROCESSUM EST. "So it has proceeded;" words formerly used in pleading, by which a defendant, in justifying his conduct by the process of an inferior court, alleged the proceedings in such inferior court. Steph. Pl., 5th ed. p. 369; Moz. & W.

TALLAGE, or TALLIAGE (Fr. taille, to cut). In English Law. A term used to denote subsidies, taxes, customs, and, indeed, any imposition whatever by the government for the purpose of raising a revenue. Bacon, Abr. Swapping, etc. (B); Fort. De Laud. 26; Madd. Exch. c. 17; Co. 9d Inst. 581.

TALLIAGIUM (perhaps from Fr. taille, cut off). A term including all taxes. Co. 9d Inst. 583; Stat. de tal. non concedendo, temp. Edw. I.; Stow, Annals 448; 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 811*. Chaucer has tallagiers for "tax-gatherers."

TALLY (Fr. tailleur; It. tagliare, i. e. scindere, to cut off). A stick cut into two parts on each whereof is marked, with notches or otherwise, what is due between debtor and creditor. Hence the tallier of the exchequer is now called the teller. Lex. Constit. 205; Cowel. One party must have one part, and the other the other, and they must match. Tallies in the exchequer were abolished by 23 Geo. III. c. 82, and were ordered to be destroyed in 1834. They were thereupon used in such quantities to heat the stoves in the house of lords that it is supposed they were the cause of the fire which destroyed both houses of parliament.

There was the same usage in France. Dict. de l'Acad. Franc.; Pothier, Obl. pt. 4, c. 1, art. 2, § 8; 2 Reeves, c. 11, p. 258.

TALMUD. The body of the Jewish civil and canonical law not comprised in the Pentateuch. The Talmud consists of two parts, the Mishna, or text, and the Gemara, or commentary. Sometimes, however, the name Talmud is restricted, especially by Jewish writers, to the Gemara. There are two Talmuds, the Palestinian, commonly, but incorrectly, called the Talmud of Jerusalem, and the Babylonian Talmud. They contain the same Mishna, but different Gemaras. The Babylonian Talmud is about three times as large as the other, and is more highly esteemed by the Jews. Webster.

TALZIE. See TAILZIE.

TAME. Domesticated; reclaimed from a natural state of wildness. See ANIMAL.

TANGIBLE PROPERTY. That which may be felt or touched; it must necessarily be corporeal, but it may be real or personal.

TANISTRY (a thanis). In Irish Law. A species of tenure founded on immemorial usage, by which lands, etc., descended, seniori et dignissimo viro sanguinis et cognominis, i. e. to the oldest and worthiest man of the blood and name. Jacob, Law Diet.

TANK. A "tank" of any kind is an artificial receptacle for liquids; a large basin or cistern. The word tank as used in a statute unquestionably had reference to the class of large metal tanks holding many hundreds, or many thousands, of barrels of oil which producers of oil have adopted for storing their product. 82 S. W. 1020.

TANTEO. In Spanish Law. Pemption. Burrill; White's New Recop. 2. 2. 3.

TANTO. In Mexican Law. The right enjoyed by an usufructuary of the property, of buying property at the same price at which the owner offers it to any other person, or is willing to take from another. Civil Code, Mex. art. 902.

TARDE VENIT (Lat.). In Practice. The name of a return made by the sheriff to a writ; when it came into his hands too late to be executed before the return day.

The sheriff is required to show that he has yielded obedience to the writ, or give a good excuse for his omission; and he may say, quod breve adeo tarde venit quod exequi non potuit. It is usual to return the writ with an indorsement of tarde venit. Com. Dig. Return (D 1).

TARIFF. Customs, duties, toll, or tribute payable upon merchandise to the general government is called tariff; the rate of customs, etc., also bears this name, and the list of articles liable to duties is also called the tariff. As to the meaning of terms, see 79 Fed. Rep. 818. See also COURT OF APPEALERS OF THE UNITED STATES; RECIPROCIITY; TAX.

As to the present act and when it went into effect, see STATUTE.

TAVERN. A place of entertainment; a house kept up for the accommodation of strangers. Webster. Originally, a house for the retailing of liquors to be drunk on the spot. Webster. A house licensed to sell liquors in small quantities. 11 Ore. 238.

In almost all the states the word has come to mean the same as inn, with no particular reference to the sale of liquors. See 2 Kent 597*, note a; 84 Ala. 451. Tavern has been held to include "hotel"; 46 Mo. 598; contra, 7 Ga. 296.

For the liability of tavern-keepers, see Story, Bailm. § 7. See Wandell, Inns 91; INN.

TAX. A pecuniary burden imposed for the support of the government. 17 Wall. 823. The enforced proportional contribution of persons and property, levied by the authority of the state for the support of government, and for all public needs. 58 Me. 591; Cooley, Tax. 1. Burdens or charges imposed by the legislative power of a state upon persons or property, to raise money for public purposes. 20 Cal. 318. A sum or rate imposed by governmental authority for a public object or purpose. 150 Pa. 118; 107 Mo. 464. A tax is a demand of sovereignty; a toll is a demand of proprietorship; 15 Wall. 278. Taxes are not "debts"; 20 Cal. 318; 28 Atl. Rep. (Pa.) 799; 84 S. C. 341; nor do they embrace local assessments; 93 Ky. 89; 60 Conn. 112; 3 Wash. 667; nor are fees required by a statute for filing articles of incorporation a tax; 49 Ohio St. 504.

Taxes differ from subsidies, in being certain and orderly, and from forced contributions, etc., in that they are levied by authority of law, and by some rule of proportion which is intended to insure uniformity of contribution, and a just apportionment of the burdens of government; Cooley, Tax. 2. See 51 Pa. 9. No matter how equitable a tax may be, it is void unless legally assessed; 8 Cush. 567; and, on the other hand, the injustice of a particular tax cannot defeat it when it is demanded under general rules prescribed by the legislature for the general good; Cooley, Tax. 3.

Taxes are classified as direct, which includes "those which are assessed upon the property, person, business, income, etc., of those who pay them; and indirect, or those which are levied on commodities before they reach the consumer, and are paid by those upon whom they ultimately fall, not as taxes, but as part of the market price of the commodity." Cooley, Tax. 61. The latter includes duties upon imports and stamp duties levied upon manufactures; ibid. The term "direct taxes" in the federal constitution is used in a peculiar sense, and such taxes are perhaps limited to capitation and land taxes; 8 Dall. 171; 7 Wall. 483; 8 id. 588.

Direct taxes within the meaning of the constitution are only capitation taxes and taxes on real estate; 102 U. S. 586.

It was suggested by Oliver Ellsworth and Roger Sherman in a letter to the governor of Connecticut, and afterwards by Madison, that a state might collect and pay its quota of any federal direct tax and so prevent a federal collection. The same view appears as a dictum in the opinion of the supreme court of the United States by Fuller, C. J., in the Income Tax Case. See 84 Am. L. Reg. n. s. 733.

By a majority of one, after a re-argument, it was held that the income tax law of 1894 was a direct tax and unconstitutional. The first decision left the constitutional question in doubt, the court being equally divided; 157 U. S. 429. On re-argument before a full court the decision was by a majority of one only. The points settled by the opinion of the court were, substantially, these: Direct taxes must be apportioned among the several states in accordance with numbers. Taxes on real estate are direct taxes, and taxes on the rent or income of real estate are the same. Taxes on personal property or on the income of personal property are likewise direct taxes. The act of 1894, so far as it falls on the income of real estate and of personal property, is a direct tax on the property and therefore void, because not apportioned according to representation; 158 U. S. 601.

States may tax circulating notes of national banks and United States legal tender notes and other notes used as currency; gold, silver, or other coin are subject to taxation as money; U. S. R. S. § 238. See 4 Wheat. 316; 9 id. 789; 2 Black. 690; 2 Wall. 200; 6 id. 594; 7 id. 16; the provisions of this act do not change existing laws.

Where an act directs a corporation to retain a percentage of interest due on its indebtedness and to pay it to the state, it is a tax on the bondholder; 134 U. S. 232; an act which directs employers of aliens to retain a certain sum from their daily wages and pay it to the state is a tax on the alien and void; 82 Fed. Rep. 257.

The state may undoubtedly require the payment of taxes in kind, that is, in products, or in gold or silver bullion, etc.; Cooley, Tax. 12. See 20 Cal. 318; 7 Wall. 71.

Legacy and inheritance taxes are constitutional, and are not arbitrary; they are not prohibited by the equal protection of the laws given by the federal constitution; they are taxes not on property, but on the succession, which is not a natural right but a privilege, and may be conferred subject to conditions; 170 U. S. 283. But an act taxing only estates over $20,000 was held unequal and therefore void; 53 Ohio St. 814. See an article by Luther E. Hewitt in 34 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 179.

The power to tax is vested entirely in the legislative department. No matter how oppressive taxation may be, the judiciary cannot interfere on that account; 8 Wall. 538; 18 id. 206; 47 Miss. 367. See 83 Ala. 606. It can only check excess of authority. The right to lay taxes cannot be delegated by the legislature to any other department of the government; 52 Mo. 183; 47 Cal. 456; 4 Bush 484; except that municipal corporations may be authorized to levy local taxes; Cooley, Tax. 62; 49 Mo. 559, 574; 73 Pa. 448.

The constitutional guaranty which declares that no person shall be deprived of property, etc., except by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land does not necessarily apply to the collection of taxes; 28 Ga. 566; Cooley, Tax. 37; Miller, Const. 105; taxes have been said to be recoverable, not only without a jury, but without a judge; 6 T. B. Monr. 641. Though differing from procedure in courts of justice, the general system of procedure for the levy and collection of taxes established in this country is due process of law; 104 U. S. 78; 96 id. 97.

Taxes become a lien on property only by statute; 55 N. J. L. 58; 18 Fed. Rep. 344; 19 Wall. 659. There are many taxes which may be levied without notice to the taxpayer; 111 U. S. 701.

A sovereign power has the unlimited power to tax all persons or property within its jurisdiction; 20 Wall. 46; 66 N. C. 361. But its power is limited to such as is within its jurisdiction; 153 U. S. 628; but when a person is resident within a state, his personal property may be taxed wherever it is; 16 Pick. 572; 8 Ore. 13; personal property may be separated from its owner and he may be taxed on its account, at the place where it is, although not the place of his own domicile; 141 U. S. 18; and the stock of a foreign corporation may be taxed to the resident owner. 82 N. C. 420; a franchise tax on a foreign corporation covering all contracts made in a state, does not apply to a contract of a corporation signed by its local agent and by the other party within the state and stipulating that the contract is not valid unless countersigned by its manager in the state and approved at its home office in another state, even if it is to be performed within the state; 169 U. S. 81. See 2 App. Div. N. Y. 500. The mere right of a foreign creditor to receive from his debtor within the state the payment of his demand cannot be subjected to taxation within the state; 15 Wall. 300. See supra. Shares in a corporation are the shares of the stockholder wherever he may have his domicile, and can only be taxed by the jurisdiction to which his person is subject; 16 Pick. 572; 49 Pa. 526; subject to the qualification that a foreign corporation must always accept the privilege of doing business in a state on such terms as the state may see fit to exact; Cooley, Tax. 10. Under a statute providing for taxation of all personal property within the state owned by non-residents, a tax cannot be imposed on choses in action, owned by a non-resident and left with an attorney in the state for collection, nor on municipal bonds so owned and temporarily on deposit in a bank in the state for safekeeping; 59 Ind. 472. Where the legal title to choses in action is in a trustee, they are subject to taxation at his domicile; 17 S. E. Rep. (Ga.) 61.

Tangible personal property situate within a state may be taxed there without regard to the residence of the owner; 48 N. Y. 390; 53 Pa. 140; and the real estate of a non-resident may be taxed where it is situated; 4 Wall. 210; 18 Mass. 208.

It is the general rule to assess personality to the owner where he has his domicile; 17 Nev. 383; and sometimes, wherever it may be located in the state, either to the owner, his agent, or person having charge of it, whether the owner is a resident or not; 66 Pa. 446; 85 N. Y. 359; and this rule is sometimes applicable to choses in action; 69 Mo. 454; vessels are usually assessed at the port where registered; 58 N. Y. 243; 17 How. 713; ferryboats, where owned; 57 Ala. 63; property in a partnership, usually where the business is carried on; 24 Vt. 9; and where one carries on a business at a place other than his domicile, it is held to be proper to assess the property to one in charge of the business; 83 Ill. 170. Personality in the hands of a trustee is assessed to him at his domicile; 10 Ohio St. 431; but sometimes to the beneficiary, if a resident of the state; 124 Mass. 193; and if the fund is in charge of a court, in the jurisdiction in which it is controlled; 39 N. J. 653. The personality of a decedent is sometimes assessed to the estate at the place of situs, if the decedent was a non-resident, or at his last domicile, if a resident; 24 La. 436; and sometimes to the personal representative at his domicile; 89 N. J. 650; and continues to be so assessed until distributed; 53 Mich. 554. The personality of persons under guardianship is sometimes assessed where the ward has his domicile; 38 Pa. 157; or to the guardian; 80 Ky. 71; and this would probably be the rule if the guardian, living in the state, had possession of the property, and the ward were a non-resident; 38 Pa. 157. The place for the assessment of the personality of a corporation is its principal office, unless otherwise directed by statute; 60 Me. 196. It is customary for the states to tax so much of the property of foreign corporations as lies within the state limits.

Shares in a corporation are properly assessed as the owner's personal estate in the jurisdiction to which his person is subject, whether the corporation be foreign or domestic; 49 Pa. 526; 16 Pick. 572; but the state may give stock, held by individuals, any situs for the purpose of taxation; 59 Md. 185; and it may provide that the shares of stockholders shall be assessed at the place of corporate business and the tax paid by the corporation for its members; 57 Md. 81. A tax laid in California upon corporate stock, owned exclusively by a non-resident, and with all its property in another state, was held void; 22 Fed. Rep. 602.

A tax imposed by a state upon tangible property within its limits, the owner of which is a non-resident, is not a personal charge against the owner, but must be enforced against the property; 11 N. Y. 668;

5 Met. 73; and such personality cannot be taxed unless it has an actual situs within the state so as to be under the protection of its laws; 50 Ga. 387. See ROLLING STOCK.

The rule or fiction of law that personal property, more especially choses in action, has no situs away from the domicile of the owner at which it is deemed to be present, originated, according to Savigny, in Rome, and acquired the designation of mobilia personam sequuntur; but its applicability to property was never held to extend beyond Roman territory. Subsequently it became a device of international comity which, it is declared in 12 Vt. 152, was subsequently "adopted from considerations of general convenience and policy and for the benefit of commerce." It was never invented with a view to its being used as a rule to govern and define the application and scope of taxation, nor was it intended to have any other meaning than that, for the purpose of the sale and distribution of property, any act, agreement, or authority which is sufficient in law where the owner resides, shall pass the property in the place where the property is, more especially to facilitate the distribution of decedents' estates by enabling owners to dispose of their property without embarrassment from their ignorance of the laws of the country where it is; David A. Wells in 52 Pop. Sci. Monthly 358.

Two states cannot tax at the same time the same property, nor can a state tax property and interests lying outside of its jurisdiction; 7 Wall. 262.

As to foreign-held bonds, "the power of taxation of a state is limited to persons, property, and business within her jurisdiction; all taxation must relate to one of these subjects." 15 Wall. 300.

"Bonds issued by a railroad company are property in the hands of the holders, and when held by non-residents of the state in which the company was incorporated, they are property beyond the jurisdiction of the state." 15 Wall. 300.

As to the situs of choses in action, see 11 Harv. Law Rev. 95.

It has been held in Indiana that life insurance policies are not taxable as personal property, such tax being against public policy; 55 Alb. L. J. 294. Patent rights are not taxable; 29 L. R. A. (Ky.) 786; so in New York court of appeal in a case yet unreported (Oct. 15, 1898); and in Pennsylvania; 151 Pa. 265; and Tennessee.

A poll or capitation tax is so called because it is a tax on the poll or person merely, without regard to property or other circumstances; 18 Fed. Rep. 135; 61 N. C. 21. It is used in some states, as Pennsylvania, to establish a qualification for voting. It was abolished in Massachusetts and in Delaware (by the constitution of 1898) and a registration fee adopted in its stead. See REGISTRATION. It is a direct tax within the meaning of the federal constitution; 7 Wall. 433; 8 id. 533; and cannot be laid by the United States except in proportion to population; 102 U. S. 587. The domicile of the taxable is the place of the imposition of the poll tax; 23 N. J. L. 517. One person cannot have two domiciles for the purpose of taxation; 4 Mass. 534; nor can one be abandoned until another is acquired; 132 id. 89. See DOMICIL.

A state may bind itself by a contract, based upon a consideration, to refrain from exercising the right of taxation in a particular class; 15 Wall. 460; 16 id. 244; 6 Conn. 223; s. c. 16 Am. Dec. 48, n.

The agencies selected by the federal government for the exercise of its functions cannot be taxed by the states; for instance, a bank chartered by congress as the fiscal agent of the government; 4 Wheat. 816; the loans of the United States; 2 Wall. 220; 7 id. 16, 28; see 134 U. S. 594; the bonds or obligations of the United States for the payment of money; 134 U. S. 594; 133 id. 680; on United States revenue stamps; 101 Mass. 329; the salary of a federal officer; 16 Pet. 435; the property of the United States; 158 U. S. 496. But government agencies are only exempt from state taxation so far as it interferes with their efficiency in performing the functions by which they serve the government; 135 U. S. 530. On the other hand, the federal government cannot tax the corresponding agencies of the states; 12 Wall. 418; 105 Mass. 49; including the salary of a state officer; 11 Wall. 118; and a state municipal corporation; 17 Wall. 332; but railroad corporations are not included in this exemption; 9 Wall. 579. For a letter from Taney, C. J., to Secretary Chase protesting against a tax on the salaries of judges, see 157 U. S. 701. The states have no power to tax the operations of the Union Pacific R. R. Company, which was chartered by congress, but may tax its property; 18 Wall. 5; nor have they power to tax franchises conferred by congress, without its permission; 127 U. S. 1.

A state tax on telegraphic messages sent out of the state is unconstitutional as a regulation of interstate commerce, and so taxes on government messages are void, as burdens upon the agencies of the federal government; 4 Morr. Transcr. 447; see 127 U. S. 640; a state tax on freights transported from state to state is a regulation of commerce, and therefore void; 15 Wall. 233. A statute taxing a telegraph company upon its property within the state, at such a proportion of the whole value of its capital stock as the length of its lines within the state bears to the length of all its lines everywhere, deducting the value of its real estate and machinery subject to local taxation within the state, is constitutional; 163 U. S. 1.

A state has power to tax all property having a situs within its limits, whether employed in interstate commerce or not; 145 U. S. 1; 141 U. S. 18.

A state tax upon the gross receipts of a railroad company is not repugnant to the federal constitution, although they are made up in part from articles transported from state to state; there is a distinction between a tax upon freights carried between states and a tax upon the fruits of such transportation after they have become mingled with the other property of the carrier; 15 Wall. 284; nor is such a tax a tax upon exports or imports or upon interstate transportation; id.

The federal constitution provides that no state shall, without consent of congress, (1) lay any imposts or duties on exports or imports, except what may be necessary for executing its inspection laws. See 8 Wall. 123; (2) lay any duties of tonnage. Under this clause a tax on vessels at a certain sum per ton is forbidden; 20 Wall. 577. The states cannot tax the commerce which is regulated by congress; 4 Wheat. 316; but a tax may be laid upon merchandise in the original packages that has been the subject of commerce and has been sold by the importer; 5 Wall. 475; 8 id. 110. See TONNAGE; COMMERCE; ORIGINAL PACKAGE.

The constitution of the United States does not profess in all cases to protect property from unjust and oppressive taxation by the states. That is left to the state constitutions and state laws; 143 U. S. 192.

No tax is valid which is not laid for a public purpose; Miller, Const. 104, n.; 20 Wall. 655; 58 Me. 590; 2 Dill. 353; such are (according to Cooley, Tax. 81); to preserve the public order; to make compensation to public officers, etc.; to erect, etc., public buildings; to pay the expenses of legislation, and of administering the laws, etc.; also, to provide secular instruction; Cooley, Tax., 2d ed. 119-124; 104 U. S. 81; but not in a school founded by a charitable bequest, though a majority of the trustees were to be chosen (but from certain religious societies) by the inhabitants of the town; 103 Mass. 94. A town may tax itself for the erection of a state educational institution within its limits; 12 Allen 500. The support of public charities is a public purpose, and money raised by taxation may be applied to private charitable institutions. Taxation for the purpose of giving or loaning money to private business enterprises is illegal; 111 Mass. 454; 60 Ma. 134. In some cases, governments have applied public funds to pay equitable claims (upon which no legal right exists), such as for the destruction of private property in war, or for loss incurred in a contract for the construction of a public work; Cooley, Tax. 91. Taxes may be levied for the construction and repair of canals, railroads, highways, roads, etc.; Cooley, Tax. 94; and the construction of a free bridge in a city; 58 Pa. 390; and for the payment of the public debt, if lawfully incurred; and for protection against fire; 104 U. S. 81. Taxation to provide municipal gas and water works is lawful; 43 Ga. 67; 27 Vt. 70; and for the preservation of the public health; 31 Pa. 175; Cooley, Tax. 101. Municipalities may pay money by way of bounties to those who volunteer as soldiers in time of actual or threatened hostility; 50 Pa. 150; 52 Me. 590; but not to provide amusements for the people, or to celebrate the declaration of independence, etc.; 1 Allen 103; 2 Den. 110; though the purchase and support of public parks is lawful; Cooley, Tax. 61, 129, 615.

The power of taxation is limited to public purposes; 69 Pa. 352; 92 Cal. 824. A railroad is a public purpose; 16 Wall. 667. See 168 U. S. 651. A statute providing for a special tax on corporations to establish free scholarships in a state university is unconstitutional; 45 S. W. Rep. (Mo.) 245, where the cases as to what is a public purpose are collected. So of loans to aid in rebuilding parts of a city destroyed by fire; 111 Mass. 454; 23 S. C. 57; a city water plant; 38 S. W. Rep. (Ky.) 830; loans by cities in aid of private manufacturing enterprises; 60 Me. 134; 20 Wall. 635; aid of private educational enterprises; 24 Wis. 350; 103 Mass. 94; though no tuition fee is charged; 8 Sup. Ct. Pa. 1; a bounty for growing forest trees; 107 Mo. 464. Public purpose in this connection "has no relation to the urgency of the public mind, or to the extent of the public benefit to follow." 20 Mich. 452.

It is an essential rule of taxation that the purpose for which a tax is levied "should be one which in an especial manner pertains to the district within which it is proposed that the contribution shall be collected. . . . A state purpose must be accomplished by a state taxation, a county purpose by a county taxation, etc." Cooley, Tax. 104.

Apportionment, which is a necessary element of taxation, is a matter of legislation; Cooley, Tax. 175. Judge Cooley classifies the taxes as specific, ad valorem, and those apportioned by special benefit. He suggests as general principles, that while the districts are discretionary, the basis of apportionment must be applied throughout the district and cannot embrace persons or property outside of it. There may be a diversity in methods of collection; the tax does not fail because the rule of apportionment cannot in all cases be enforced, and exemptions, though permissible, must not be in the nature of special and invidious discriminations against individuals.

While perfect equality is unattainable, only statutes based upon false and unjust principles or producing gross inequality will justify the interposition of the courts; 5 Allen 426. See 57 Pa. 433; 73 id. 370; 3 Bland, Ch. 186; 85 Ky. 418. The 14th amendment of the constitution of the United States was not intended to compel the states to adopt an iron rule of equality or prevent classification; it is enough that there is no discrimination in favor of one as against another of the same class; 128 U. S. 657. The scope of the 14th amendment is treated in 113 U. S. 27 and 118 id. 56. It is carried into effect by R. S. §§ 1877, 1979.

A tax is uniform when it operates with the same effect in all places where the subject of it is found, and is not wanting in such uniformity because the thing is not equally distributed in all parts of the United States; 112 U. S. 580. Accordingly a different rule of taxation may be prescribed for railroad companies from that for individuals; 92 U. S. 575.

"The whole argument of a right under the federal constitution to challenge a tax law on the ground of inequality in the burdens resulting from the operation of the law is put at rest by the decision in Bell's Gap R. R. Co. v. Pa. (134 U. S. 232)," 167 U. S. 461.

There may be a tax upon occupations even if it duplicates taxes; Cooley, Tax. 386. They are usually by way of license, as distinguished from a tax upon the business authorized by the license to be carried on; 50 Ga. 590.

Such taxes have been laid on bankers, auctioneers, lawyers; 12 Mo. 268; 23 Gratt. 464; clergymen; 29 Pa. 226; peddlers, etc. See 5 Wall. 462 as to federal license taxes.

Tax on a bicycle under a municipal ordinance of Chicago was held to be void as a license, because it was not an occupation tax under the charter. As a tax, it was not imposed according to assessed valuation, not being uniform in its operation, but was objectionable as double taxation because all pleasure vehicles were already taxed; 66 Alta L. J. 129.

There is a wide difference between a tax or assessment prescribed by a legislative body, and one imposed by a municipal corporation, and a still wider difference where the assessment is the act of mere functionaries with authority derived from municipal ordinances; 170 U. S. 45.

It is generally agreed that the authority to require property specially benefited to bear the expense of local improvements is a branch of the taxing power. Whether it shall be paid out of the general treasury, or assessed upon abutting property or other property especially benefited, and, if in the latter mode, whether the assessment shall be upon all property found to be benefited, or only upon abutters, according to frontage or area, are considered to be questions of legislative expediency; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 752, quoted in 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 525.

The distinction between taxes and municipal assessments frequently arises in cases involving the construction of agreements by tenants to pay taxes. In such a case it was held in Illinois that an assessment for sidewalk and street improvements was not a tax within such agreement; 167 Ill. 215; but it was held that the term tax may be so used in legal instruments as to render it a debatable question whether it includes local assessments or not; 13 App. Div. N. Y. 140.

A legislature can authorize a city or town to tax its inhabitants only for public purposes; 150 Mass. 592; 113 U. S. 1; 37 Wis. 400; 114 Ill. 659.

Municipal assessments made for local improvements, though resting for their foundation upon the taxing power, are distinguishable in many ways from taxes levied for general state or municipal purposes. A local assessment upon the property benefited by a local improvement may be authorized by the legislature, but such an assessment must be based upon benefits received by the property owner over and above those received by the community at large. The legislature may make provision for ascertaining what property will be specially benefited and how the benefits shall be apportioned. The assessments may be made upon all the property specially benefited according to the exceptional benefit which each parcel of property actually and separately receives. Where the property is urban and plotted into blocks with lots of equal depth, the frontage rule of assessment is generally, but not always, a competent one for the legislature to provide. This rule is, in the long run, a just one, especially as to sidewalks, sewers, grading, and paving. See 80 Mich. 24; but see contra, 82 Pa. 360. The legislature may, under some circumstances, authorize the assessment of the lots benefited, in proportion to their area (but see 35 Mich. 155). Whether it is competent for the legislature to declare that the whole of an improvement of a public nature shall be assessed upon the abutting property, and other property in the vicinity, is in doubt. The earlier cases so held; but since many state constitutions have made provision for equality of taxation, several courts have held that the cost of a local improvement can be assessed upon particular property only to the extent that it is especially and particularly benefited, and that as to the excess, it must be borne by the public. See 82 Pa. 380; 69 id. 353; 18 N. J. Eq. 519.

As to exemptions from taxation: In the absence of any constitutional provision, the right to make exemptions is included in the right to apportion taxes; 73 Pa. 449; 24 Ind. 391; and when made on grounds of public policy they may be recalled; 13 Wall. 373; 47 Cal. 222; and all exemptions are strictly construed; 18 Wall. 225; 127 Pa. 435; being in derogation of the sovereign and common right; 132 U. S. 174, 190; they are not favored by the courts; 76 N. Y. 64; property exempted from taxation must be of a public nature and for a public purpose. Where the general use is of a public nature the right to exemption is not impaired by the fact that part of the property is used for producing revenue, as in the case of a public library, and statutory exemption is not impaired by the fact that part of a library building is a theatre or hall occasionally let to outside parties; 23 Misc. Rep. 1.

An exemption of "institutes of purely public charity" was held to include private institutions of purely public charity not administered for private gain; 86 Pa. 306; essential features of a public use are that it is not confined to privileged individuals but open to the indefinite public; 86 Pa. 306. The residence of a clergyman is not exempt as a "building for religious worship," because it contains one room set apart as a religious chapel; 12 R. I. 19. See 34 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 169.

Immunity from taxation is not in itself transferable. It must be considered as a personal privilege not extending beyond the immediate grantee, unless otherwise expressly declared; 130 U. S. 687.

It has been held that the legislature of a state may grant to a corporation a perpetual exemption from taxation; 13 Vt. 525; 11 Conn. 251; 24 Miss. 386; but privileges which may exempt a corporation from the burdens common to individuals do not necessarily flow from their charter, but must be expressed in it or they do not exist; Marshall, C. J., in 4 Pet. 514. As to exemption from taxation by charter grant, see 35 Cert. Law J. 172.

Equity will restrain the collection of taxes illegally imposed, but there must be some equitable ground for relief besides the illegality of the tax; 139 U. S. 658. Such ground may be liability to irreparable injury or to vexatious litigation; 118 id. 525. Where there is a statutory remedy, it is exclusive; but if the statute leaves open to judicial inquiry all jurisdictional questions, the decision of an administrative board does not preclude a resort to judicial remedies; 168 id. 239. If a remedy is provided, as by a board of equalization, redress there must first be sought; 86 Fed. Rep. 200.

Federal courts may issue a mandamus against counties or municipal corporations, to compel the levy of a tax to pay their judgments; 86 Fed. Rep. 264.

Rolling stock continuously used in a state acquires a situs therein for taxation, and even though it is used exclusively in interstate commerce, it may be subjected in the state to an equal property tax; 29 Fed. Rep. 658; 18 Wall. 5. It is within the legislative power to establish a situs for personal property elsewhere than at the place in which it is found, and rolling stock used continuously in two states may have a situs in each, but can be taxed in each only upon a fair proportion of the value; 29 Fed. Rep. 658. The continuous use in one state necessary for taxation is not prevented by frequent change of cars from one road to another and the fact that the identical cars are not continuously used in one state; id. For the purpose of taxation the situs of rolling stock is where it is habitually used; 39 Am. & Eng. Ry. Cas. (Ariz.) 543. It has also been held that its situs for the purpose of taxation is the place where the manager or agent would be taxed in contemplation of law; 89 Ia. 56. In Maryland rolling stock is taxable only at the home office of the company; 50 Md. 274.

The valuation of rolling stock may be apportioned by the court for taxation among the counties through which the road runs, with an assignment to each county of a share proportionate to the length of the road therein; 84 N. C. 504. Rolling stock held under a car trust company is taxable where the car trust association has its place of business; 24 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 626.

In Bankruptcy Law. Section 64 of the bankruptcy law is very broad and covers all taxes, including yearly license fees imposed by the State on corporations organized under its laws for the privilege of doing business, whether such business is carried on in that or in other States. 203 U. S. 483.

The word "taxes" must, in the absence of any clear indication to the contrary, be understood to refer exclusively to the ordinary public taxes. 94 Ky. 444, 22 S. W. 757.

Taxes are a "liability created by statute." 145 Ky. 485, 140 S. W. 647.

"Taxes" are not demands against which a set-off is admissible; their assessment does not constitute a technical judgment, nor are they contracts between party and party, either express or implied; but they are the positive acts of the government through its various agents, binding upon the inhabitants, and to the making and enforcing of which their personal consent, individually, is not required.

If the rule were otherwise the machinery of government would be liable to interruption. The nature of a municipal tax, the purpose of it, forbids the assertion of a demand as a set-off, unless expressly authorized by statute. This rule is necessary to the continuance of the government. 93 Ky. 234, 19 S. W. 598.

See BONIFICATION OF TAX; FRANCHISE TAX; INHERITANCE TAX; PROPERTY TAX.

TAX DEED. An instrument whereby the officer of the law undertakes to convey the title of the rightful proprietor to the purchaser at a tax sale, or sale of the land for non-payment of taxes.

This deed, according to the principles of the common law, is simply a link in the chain of the grantee's title. It does not ipso facto transfer the title of the owner, as in grants from the government or deeds between man and man. The operative character of it depends upon the regularity of the anterior proceedings. The deed is not the title itself, nor even evidence of it. Its recitals bind no one. It creates no estoppel upon the former owner. No presumption arises upon the mere production of the deed that the facts upon which it is based had any existence. When it is shown, however, that the ministerial officers of the law have performed every duty which the law imposed upon them, every condition essential in its character, then the deed becomes conclusive evidence of the title in the grantee, according to its extent and purport. See Blackw. Tax Titles 490.

The legislature may make a tax deed prima facie evidence of title in the purchaser, but cannot make it conclusive evidence of his title to the land; 148 U. S. 173.

TAX, IMPOSED. Word "imposed," in Act of April 12, 1902, includes all of the steps necessary to the collection of a tax, making it tantamount to "accrued." A tax is not "imposed" by the simple declaration of a law that property shall be subject to it, but "imposed" only when the tax becomes due and payable. 254 U. S. 391, citing 104 U. S. 689, and 218 U. S. 205.

TAX LAW, CORPORATION. See CORPORATION TAX LAW.

TAX LEVY. The total sum to be raised by a tax. Also, the bill, enactment, or measure of legislation by which an annual or general tax is imposed. Abbott.

TAX LIEN. A statutory lien in favor of the state or municipality, upon the lands of a person charged with taxes, binding the same either for the taxes assessed upon the specific tract of land, or for all the taxes due from the individual, and which may be foreclosed for non-payment, by judgment of a court or sale of the land.

All other liens or incumbrances are inferior to it and all property is taken subject to it. English.

TAX SALE. A sale of lands for the non-payment of taxes assessed thereon.

The power of sale does not attach until every prerequisite of the law has been complied with; 9 Miss. 627. The regularity of the anterior proceedings is the basis upon which it rests.

There are important details connected with the auction itself and the duties of the officer intrusted with the conducting thereof. The sale must be a public, and not a private, one. The sale must take place at the precise time and place fixed by the law or notice.

A tax sale is vitiated by a failure to give the notice required by law of the place where the sale will occur; 69 Tex. 103.

The sale must be made to the highest bidder. This is the rule in Pennsylvania; but in most of the states the highest bidder is he who will pay the taxes, interest, and costs due upon the tract offered for sale for the least quantity of it. The sale must be for cash and must be according to the parcels and descriptions contained in the list and the other proceedings.

When a tract of land is assessed against tenants in common, and one of them pays the tax on his share, the interest of the other may be sold to satisfy the residue of the assessment.

Where several parcels of land belonging to the same person are separately assessed, each parcel is liable for its own specific tax and no more.

A tax sale is void if any portion of the tax for which it was made was illegal; 96 Mich. 144; 83 Fla. 356. See 127 U. S. 826.

TAX TITLE. The title by which one holds land which he purchased at a tax sale. That species of title which is inaugurated by a successful bid for land at a collector's sale of the same for the non-payment of taxes, completed by the failure of those entitled to redeem within the specified time, and evidenced by the deed executed to the tax purchaser, or his assignee, by the proper officer. Black's L. Dict.

It is not a derivative title. If valid, it is a breaking up of all other titles, and is antagonistic to all other claims to the land; 85 Ia. 247; but in Pennsylvania tax sales do not always cut out existing liens.

The owner of land can acquire a tax title by purchasing it at a tax sale; 75 Ia. 260.

To make out a valid tax title there must be a substantial compliance with the provisions of the law authorizing the sale; 148 U. S. 172.

TAXABLE. Applied to persons or property, signifies subject to taxation; liable to some common exaction levied by government to provide a revenue.

Applied to costs in a cause, it means legally chargeable; warranted by law; allowable by officers appointed to adjust costs. Abbott.

TAXABLE ACCOUNT. A "taxable account" is an existing and enforceable demand and not evidenced in writing signed by the person to be charged, arising out of a contract expressed or implied. 143 Ky. 314, 136 S. W. 1032.

TAXABLE INCOME. As the result of transactions disclosed in 257 U. S. 156 and 257 U. S. 176, certain corporate assets not exceeding accumulated surplus were segregated and passed to individual stockholders. The value of the segregated thing so received was held to constitute taxable income. 265 U. S. 252.

TAXABLE PERSON. A trustee is a taxable person under the Act of Oct. 3, 1917, which requires that "trustees, executors and all persons, corporations, or associations, acting in any fiduciary capacity, shall make and render a return of the income of the person, trust, or estate for whom or which they act, and be subject to all the provisions of this title which apply to individuals." 255 U. S. 516.

TAXABLE PROPERTY. See LIST OF TAXABLE PROPERTY.

TAXATION. The process of taxing or imposing a tax. Webster, Dict.

In Practice. Adjustment. Fixing the amount: e. g. taxation of costs. 3 Chitty, Gen. Pr. 603.

TAXATION OF COSTS. In Practice. Fixing the amount of costs to which a party is entitled.

It is a rule that the jury must assess the damages and costs separately, so that it may appear to the court that the costs were not considered in the damages; and when the jury give costs in an amount insufficient to answer the costs of the suit, the plaintiff may pray that the officer may tax the costs, and such taxation is inserted in the judgment. This is said to be done ex assensu of the plaintiff, because at his prayer. Bac. Abr. Costs (K). The costs are taxed in the first instance by the prothonotary or clerk of the court. See 2 Wend. 244; 1 Pick. 211. A bill of costs, having been once submitted to such an officer for taxation, cannot be withdrawn from him and referred to another; 2 Wend. 252. See COSTS.

TAXES. See STATE TAXES.

TAXING OFFICER. An officer in each house of parliament, whose duty it is to tax the costs incurred by the promoters or opponents of private bills. May, Parl. Pr. 843.

TAXPAYER. One who is assessed and pays a tax; or a person chargeable with a tax; one from whom the government demands a pecuniary contribution towards its support. 164 Ky. 511, 175 S. W. 996.

The word "taxpayers" used in a statute is construed to mean voters who pay taxes, and does not include those whose wives only, pay taxes. 49 S. W. 337.

TAXT-WARD. An annual payment formerly made to a superior in Scotland, instead of the duties due him under the tenure of ward-holding. Whart.

TEACHER. See SCHOOLS.

TEAM. Within the meaning of an exemption law, one or more horses, with their harness and the vehicle to which they are customarily attached for use. Anderson; 32 Barb. 291. The animals which a householder or the head of a family uses in the business of providing for his family. Id.; 31 N. Y. 553. In a statute allowing damages for injury from the condition of a highway, was held to include a horse driven with other horses unharnessed. Id.; 57 N. H. 29, 30. Referring to turning out on meeting in a highway, may mean a vehicle, with animals drawing it, and used for loads instead of persons. Id.; 41 Conn. 577. In another statute, held to mean two or more horses, oxen or other beasts, harnessed together to the same vehicle for driving. Id.; 60 Iowa 482. See THEME.

TEAM WORK. Work done by a team as a substantial part of a man's business. 49 Vt. 376. It has been held to extend to other than agricultural work, as hauling coals; 9 Q. B. D. 636, overruling 8 Q. B. D. 1. A covenant to provide team work does not oblige a lessee to find the instruments necessary for its performance; id.

TEAMSTER. One who drives horses in a wagon for the purpose of carrying goods for hire. 16 Nev. 416; 34 Cal. 806. He is liable as a common carrier. Story, Bailm. § 496. A teamster is a laborer; 25 N. E. Rep. (Ind.) 272. See CARRIER.

TECHNICAL. That which properly belongs to an art.

In the construction of contracts it is a general rule that technical words are to be taken according to their approved and known use in the trade in which the contract is entered into or to which it relates, unless they have manifestly been understood in another sense by the parties; 2 B. & P. 164. See CONSTRUCTION.

TEDDING. Spreading. Tedding grass is spreading it out after it is cut in the swath. 10 East 5.

TEDING PENNY, TETHING-PENNY, or TITHING-PENNY. A small duty or payment to the sheriff, from each tithing, towards the charge of keeping courts, etc., from which some of the religious were exempted by royal charter. Wharton.

TEEP. A promissory note given by a native banker or money lender to zemindars to enable them to furnish government with security for the payment of their rents. Whart.

TEIND COURT. In Scotch Law. A court which has jurisdiction of matters relating to teinds (q. v.).

TEINDS. In Scotch Law. Tithes.

TELEGRAPH. An apparatus, or a process for communicating rapidly between distant points, especially by means of preconcerted visible signals representing words or ideas, or by means of words and signs transmitted by electro-magnetism. Webster, Dict. The term, as generally used, applies distinctively to the electro-magnetic telegraph.

In the United States all telegraph lines are operated by companies, either under the authority of general laws, or by express charter; Scott & J. Telegr. § 3. The telegraph is an instrument of commerce; 127 U. S. 411; 122 id. 347; and telegraphic communication between states is interstate commerce; 127 U. S. 840. Telegraph companies are quasi-public agencies, and their rights, duties, and obligations are matters arising under the general law. Questions arising in connection with them are not controlled in the federal courts by state decisions; 156 id. 210; 148 id. 92. An indictment of a telegraph operator in Connecticut who transmitted a message to New Jersey directing a bet on a horse-race, was upheld under a statute prohibiting betting on horse races, and the statute was held not to be in violation of the commerce clause in the constitution; 40 Atl. Rep. (Conn.) 179. Exclusive franchises may be granted, but will not be implied; 11 Pet. 420; 11 Leigh 42. By a federal statute, companies are authorized to construct their lines upon any public road or highway, and across navigable streams, but so as not to interfere with their public use or navigation; 46 Me. 483. The telegraph is a public use authorizing the exercise of the right of eminent domain; 43 N. J. L. 381. Under the general police power, municipal corporations may regulate the manner in which the lines are to be constructed in cities, so as not to interfere with the comfort and safety of the inhabitants; Scott & J. Telegr. § 54. But the power of the municipality is to regulate, not to prohibit; 42 U. S. App. 686; and in the absence of evidence that a proposed method of laying the wires by a company will impede or endanger the use of the streets by the public, a court of equity will enjoin the town from interfering with the wires; 19 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 825. Unless under the sanction of legislative enactment the erection of telegraph poles or the laying of tubes in any highway is a nuisance as common law; 9 Cox, C. C. 174; 30 Beav. 287. See POLES; WIRES.

It has been generally held that the obligations of telegraph companies are not the same as those of common carriers of goods; 41 N. Y. 544; 45 Barb. 274; 18 Md. 841; 15 Mich. 525; see Laws. Carr. 3; but this language has been thought to be too broad, and it has been said that these companies are common carriers of messages, subject to all the rules which are in their nature applicable to all classes of common carriers; Shearm. & R. Negl. § 554. The better opinion would seem to be that since these companies perform a quasi-public employment, under obligations analogous to those of common carriers, the rules governing the latter should be applied to them, but modified to meet the changed conditions of the case; 1 Daly 547; 35 Pa. 298; 13 Allen 226; 68 Ga. 433. They were held to be common carriers in 17 C. B. 3; 13 Cal. 423; 8 U. S. App. 30. They resemble common carriers in that they are instruments of commerce and exercise a public employment, and must serve all customers alike, but they are not common carriers in that their duties are different and are performed in different ways, and they are not subject to the same liabilities; 134 U. S. 14, citing 21 Wall. 284; 105 U. S. 400. They are not bailees. They cannot contract with their employers against their own negligence, although they can make reasonable rules limiting the measure of their responsibility. What is reasonable must be determined with reference to public policy; 21 Wall. 284.

Due and reasonable care is required of telegraph companies in the performance of their duties; 13 Allen 226; 78 Pa. 238; 49 N. Y. 132; 15 Mich. 525; and the necessity for such care is made the greater by the delicacy of the instrument and the skill required to manage it; 15 Mich. 525; 60 Ill. 421.

Telegraph companies may limit their liability by notice to the sender of the message; 35 Ind. 429; 74 Ill. 188; 30 How. Pr. 413; 113 Mass. 299; 17 C. B. 3. A company may make reasonable rules relative to its business, and thereby limit its liability. A rule that the company will not be responsible for the correct transmission of despatches, beyond the amount received therefor, unless repeated at an additional expense, is reasonable; 11 Neb. 67; 154 U. S. 1; 17 C. B. 3; 17 U. C. Q. B. 470; 15 Mich. 525; whether the sender read the contract or not; 78 Pa. 238; 137 Mass. 463; but such regulations were held void in 60 Ill. 421; 74 id. 188; 79 Me. 498; 37 Ohio St. 301; 39 Kan. 679, 685; which cases are cited but not approved in 154 U. S. 1; but no regulations or device will avail to avoid liability in case of negligence or fraud; 34 Wis. 471; 37 Mo. 472; nor from injury which the repetition would not have prevented; 70 Ill. App. 275; nor is the company relieved from liability for delay in delivery not referable to any mistake in the tenor of the telegram; 50 Pac. Rep. (Nev.) 439; nor where the company failed to put the message on its transit; 18 Md. 841; and failure to transmit and deliver a message correctly is prima facie evidence of negligence; 58 Ark. 434. Such regulations have been held not to apply to the receiver of the message; 35 Pa. 298; 169 Ill. 610; but the cases on this point are very conflicting; they may be found collected in 61 Am. St. Rep. 214.

The current of authority favors the rule that the usual conditions in the blanks of telegraph companies exempt them only from the consequences of errors arising from causes beyond their control, whether the message be repeated or unrepeated; 78 Pa. 238; 27 Ia. 433; 1 Col. 230; 5 S. C. 358; 95 U. S. 835; 2 Am. L. Rev. 615. See 107 N. C. 449. Notice of regulations must be brought home to the sender of the despatch, if they are to be regarded as incorporated in his contract; 1 Daly 547. His signature to the printed conditions is sufficient evidence of knowledge, and he will not be heard to say that he did not read them; 113 Mass. 299; 15 Mich. 525; see 85 Tenn. 539; 87 N. C. 57; they are part of the contract; 154 U. S. 1.

Telegraph companies are not allowed to show any preference in the transmission of despatches, except as regulated by statute; 23 Ind. 877; 56 Barb. 46. They may refuse to send obscene messages, but they cannot judge of the good or bad faith of the sender in the use of language not in itself immoral; 57 Ind. 495. They may refuse to communicate a message which is to furnish the means of carrying on an illegal business; and this, regardless of the motive by which they are actuated in refusing to communicate the message; 84 Ky. 664; they need not supply reports to bucket shops; id.; nor supply market or stock reports; Crowe, Electr. § 291.

In England, it is held that the receiver of a message, not being party to the contract for despatching it, can claim no rights under it; L. R. 4 Q. B. 706; 3 C. P. Div. 1, 82; Poll. Torts 522; so in Canada; 23 U. C. C. P. 150; but in the United States the right of action in such cases has been conceded; 1 Am. L. Reg. 685; Crowe, Electr. § 492; and this right has been based upon the "unfeasance" of the company upon which the receiver acted to his injury; 85 Pa. 298; 52 Ind. 1. There is no liability in tort to the sender where there is an express contract; Crowe, Electr. § 458; except perhaps in cases where the stipulations on the telegraph blanks are considered rather as regulations of the business than as contracts; id. If the sender of the message is the agent of the addressee, either disclosed or undisclosed, the latter may maintain an action against the company; 110 Ill. 403; whether the company had knowledge of the fact or not; Crowe, Electr. § 454.

Telegraph companies are bound to receive and transmit messages from other companies, but are not held responsible for their defaults; 45 N. Y. 744. But a recent text writer is of opinion that they are not, at common law, bound to receive messages for points not on their own lines; Crowe, Electr. § 445. In many states statutes provide otherwise; see id. § 385; but if a company accepts a message for transmission over a connecting line, it is liable to the same extent as over its own lines; 2 Tex. Civ. App. 429; 1 Daly 554; but it is held that its only obligation in such case is to deliver the message correctly to the connecting line; 16 U. C. Q. B. 530; 18 id. 60.

They may not unjustly discriminate in their rates, although they may make different rates to different customers if the conditions of the business require it; 62 N. W. Rep. 506.

A railroad company cannot grant a telegraph company the exclusive right to establish telegraph lines along its way, such contracts being void as in restraint of trade; 11 Fed. Rep. 1.

Employees of telegraph companies cannot refuse to answer questions as to messages transmitted by them; and they must, if called upon, produce such messages; 20 L. T. N. S. 421; 15 Fed. Rep. 712; 3 Dill. 567; 72 Mo. 83; 70 Cal. 683; an operator may be required to testify to the contents of a telegram addressed and delivered to a defendant on trial under indictment; 58 Me. 267; 7 W. Va. 544; 3 Dill. 567. And even when a statute forbids the divulging of the contents of a telegram, it has been held not to apply when the testimony of an operator is required in a court of justice; 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. 274. See Allen, Tel. Cas. 496, n. The power of the court to compel the local manager of a company to search for and produce private telegrams has been enforced in Missouri by subpoena duces tecum, notwithstanding a statute similar to that referred to above; 72 Mo. 83; 58 Me. 267; 15 Fed. Rep. 712; 70 Cal. 683; 55 Ia. 168. The doctrine of these decisions has been severely criticised, but they have not been overruled; Cooley, Const. Lim., 6th ed. 371, note; 18 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 85. See 5 So. L. Rev. 473.

The Home Secretary of England has the power to order telegrams to be detained and opened for reasons of state or public justice; which power is exercised by express warrant under his signature, by statute.

In estimating the measure of damages for the failure to transmit a message properly, the general rules upon the subject of damages ex contractu are applied; Gray, Com. by Tel. 80; 98 Mass. 232; 18 U. C. Q. B. 60; 15 Gratt. 122. Where a telegraph company is sued for negligence in transmitting a message, the measure of damages, unless special damages are alleged and proved, is the sum paid for transmission; 71 Wis. 46. Speculative damages are not recoverable for error in transmitting a message; 39 Kan. 580. Unless the despatch shows on its face the importance of the matter to which it relates, or information on this point is communicated to the company's agents, only nominal damages can be recovered for the default of the company; 9 Bradw. 283; 29 Md. 232; 21 Minn. 155; 45 N. Y. 744; 16 Nev. 222. If the sender of a cipher message does not inform the company of the nature of the transaction to which it relates, or what might happen if it were not correctly transmitted, he can recover only the sum paid for sending it, in case of a mistake in its transmission or delivery; 154 U. S. 1; 131 Ill. 575; 34 Wis. 471; 16 Nev. 222; 32 Fl. 527; either nominal damages or the cost of sending it, at most; 178 Pa. 377. Abbreviations in a telegram may render it unintelligible; but if they represent well-known trade abbreviations which the operator may be presumed to understand, the company will be put on information and become liable for negligence in its transmission; 33 Ill. 400; 68 Ga. 299; if the abbreviations are understood by the company, it is not a cipher despatch, and the company is liable for negligent alteration in transmission; 87 Tenn. 554; 75 Tex. 535. Orders to agents to buy and sell stocks, though briefly expressed, have been held to impart information sufficiently as to their importance; 55 Pa. 262; 60 Ill. 421; 44 N. Y. 263; contra, 29 Md. 232. And the company is liable for the losses sustained, the fluctuations in the market being the measure of damages; supra. See, also, 41 Ia. 458; 27 La. Ann. 49. If the default of the company arises from the dishonesty of some third person, the company will not be held liable for such remote damages; 30 Ohio St. 555; 60 N. Y. 198. As to mental suffering as an element of damages, see MENTAL SUFFERING.

It is for the jury to decide whether the failure of a telegraph company to transmit a message whereby a physician was prevented from early attendance, was the proximate cause of an injury resulting from a surgical operation, there being evidence to show that the operation might have been avoided had the surgeon reached the patient earlier; 83 Fed. Rep. 992.

A company is bound to use reasonable efforts to ascertain where the persons are to whom a message is sent and to deliver the same; 9 Bradw. 283.

The leading principle as to delivery is that the message is to be delivered to the person primarily and not to the place, and if the person cannot be found at the specified place it may be negligence for the company to leave the telegram at the place without making further efforts to find the person; Crowe, Electr. § 412; 82 Tex. 561; 59 Fed. Rep. 181. And the message should not be left at the office till called for; 62 Ind. 371. Delivery at a hotel is sufficient. If the addressee is absent from his residence or place of business the company must use reasonable efforts to find him; 9 Ill. App. 383.

It has been held that the delivery of a message to a telegraph company for transmission raises an inference that it was received by the addressee; 7 Allen 536.

Where a telegraph message, sent from a place outside of the state, is to be delivered in a state, the contract between the sender and the telegraph company is to be performed there, and will be construed in accordance with the laws of the state of delivery; 70 Ill. App. 275.

Where a telegraph operator accepts a telegram for transmission, the fact that there is no office at the place to which it is to be sent does not relieve the company from its liability for failure to transmit and deliver; 69 Miss. 653. If a telegram is addressed to X, "in care of Y," the company may deliver it to Y, without being guilty of any negligence even if it fails to reach X; 77 Tex. 215; 30 S. W. Rep. 70.

A telegraph company has the right to choose its own agencies for the delivery of its messages, and may refuse to deliver telegrams by telephone and to receive telephone messages to be telegraphed; 40 N. E. Rep. (Ill.) 731. But where the company permits its employees to receive, by telephone, messages for transmission, it consents to send a message so received; 49 S. W. Rep. (Tex.) 138.

A telegraph company was not negligent in not delivering a warning message before the person to whom it was addressed was killed by his pursuers, where it could have delivered the message only by sending out messengers to watch for his arrival; 81 Fed. Rep. 676.

A contract may be made and proved in court by telegraphic despatches; 20 Mo. 254; 41 N. Y. 344; 103 Mass. 327; L. R. 6 Ex. 7; and the same rules apply in determining whether a contract has been made by telegrams as in cases of a contract made by letter; 36 N. Y. 307; 31 U. C. Q. B. 18; 4 Dill. 431; 20 Q. B. D. 840. Real estate may be leased or sold by telegram if the despatch was duly signed; 4 Bush 351. Contracts by telegraph satisfy the statute of frauds in England; Chit. Contr., 13th ed. 15. Messages are instruments of evidence, and are governed by the same rules as other writings; Scott & J. Telegr. § 840; the original message is said to be the best evidence; if this cannot be produced, then a copy should be produced; id. § 341; see 40 Wisc. 440; 127 Ill. 652. As to which is the original, is said to "depend upon which party is responsible for its transmission across the line, or, in other words, whose agent the telegraph company is. The first communication in a transaction, if it is all negotiated across the wires, will only be effective in the form in which it reaches its destination." 29 V. V. 140. See 36 N. Y. 307; 40 Wisc. 440. See on this subject, an article in 14 Cent. L. J. 262. See CIPHER.

The signature of a clerk of a telegraph company to a despatch was held to be sufficient, under the statute of frauds, where the original instructions had been signed by the party; Gray, Com. by Tel. 138; 54 Md. 188; 11 Col. 103; L. R. 5 C. P. 295. See 6 U. C. C. P. 221.

Statutes in Oregon, Washington, and Nevada provide that when any notice, information, or intelligence, written or otherwise, is required to be given, it may be given by telegraph, and powers of attorney or other instruments in writing duly proved or acknowledged for record may, with the proper certificate, be sent by telegraph and the telegraph copy recorded; and so of checks, due bills, promissory notes, and bills of exchange. And in the same states writs and processes in legal proceedings can be transmitted by telegraph.

Notice of issue of an injunction may be transmitted by telegraph; 13 Ch. D. 110; 59 Ill. 58; 35 N. J. Eq. 422.

By act of Congress of July 24, 1866, any telegraph company organized under the laws of any state is granted the right, under certain restrictions, to construct and operate lines through and over any portion of the public domain, and along any of the military or post roads of the United States, and under or across navigable streams or waters, provided that they do not obstruct their navigation, or interfere with ordinary travel; R. S. § 5263.

A telegraph company acquires no right, under this act, to occupy the public streets of a city without compensation; 148 U. S. 92; 156 U. S. 210. See 71 Wis. 560. This act, so far as it declares that the erection of telegraph lines shall, as against state interference, be free to all who accept its terms and conditions, and that a telegraph company of one state shall not, after accepting them, be excluded by another state from prosecuting its business within her jurisdiction, is a legitimate regulation of commerce and is appropriate legislation to execute the powers of commerce over the postal service; 96 U. S. 1. It applies equally to telephone companies. The privileges granted must be exercised subject to the police power of the state, provided regulations are not oppressive and such as show an intent to control and perhaps defeat the company's existence; 85 Fed. Rep. 19. Since this act a railroad company, operating a post road over which interstate commerce is carried, cannot grant to a telegraph company the sole right to construct a line over its right of way so as to exclude other companies which have accepted the provisions of the said act, the lines of which would not obstruct the business of the first company; 180 U. S. 1. Cables laid across navigable streams or waters must not obstruct navigation; 20 U. S. App. 247.

Submarine telegraph lines are subordinate to navigation and must be so laid and maintained as not to interfere therewith, and the company is liable in damages to vessels injured by them; 59 Fed. Rep. 365; 43 id. 85; 60 N. Y. 510; but in England injury resulting from submarine telegraph lines is held to be a question of negligence; 15 C. B. N. s. 759. See 15 Am. L. Rev. 211.

An opinion of the attorney-general given at the request of the secretary of state in January, 1898, holds that, in the absence of legislation, the president may control the landing of foreign submarine cables, either preventing it, if necessary, or permitting it on conditions demanded by the public interest.

Telegraph Corporations. The highest court of California construed "telegraph" corporations as used in § 536 of the Civil Code of that State as not including "telephone" corporations. § 536 Civil Code of California. 224 U. S. 330.

TELEGRAPH COMPANIES. See TELEGRAPH.

TELEGRAPH COMPANIES, DISTRICT. See DISTRICT TELEGRAPH COMPANIES.

TELEPHONE. An instrument for transmitting spoken words. See 105 Ind. 261.

In law the owners and operators of telephones are in much the same position as telegraph companies. There appears to be no distinction between telephonic and telegraphic communication; 6 Q. B. Div. 244, approved in 62 Wis. 32; 66 Md. 410; 53 N. J. L. 341; 42 Fed. Rep. 273. They have been called "common carriers of articulate speech," that is to say, even though their liabilities do not in all respects resemble the liabilities of ordinary common carriers, yet, like common carriers, they are engaged in a semi-public occupation, and have duties and privileges accordingly; 24 Alb. L. J. 283; 22 id. 363. They are subject to the rules governing common carriers; 2 C. C. A. 1; 50 Fed. Rep. 677, affirming 47 id. 633; and are bound to furnish equal facilities to all persons or corporations belonging to the classes which they undertake to serve; 50 Fed. Rep. 677. See 61 Vt. 241; 76 N. W. Rep. (Neb.) 171; even to a rival company; 3 U. S. App. 30.

Statutes in some states provide that telephone companies shall serve all who apply as subscribers. Prior to the passage of such acts there was much litigation as to whether they could refuse their service under any circumstances. It was held that telephone companies are bound to furnish equal facilities to all telegraph companies; 66 Md. 399; see, also, 47 Fed. Rep. 683; 23

id. 539; 36 Ohio St. 296; but in 49 Conn. 353, the court held otherwise, upon the ground that the telephone company, a local company, was restricted under its license on the patents used by it and must be considered as doing business only within the lines of such restriction. Telephone companies are bound to furnish telephones to private individuals under ordinary circumstances; 105 Ind. 250. See 114 Pa. 592.

It has been held that the remedy against a subscriber for refusal to pay is to bring suit for the amount due; 17 Neb. 126.

It has been held that a telephone company must transmit despatches impartially for all who choose to send them; and may make no discriminations in favor of or against particular individuals. So a contract between a telephone company and the owner of patented telephone instruments, that in the use of such instruments by the telephone company discriminations should be made against certain telegraph companies was declared void; 36 Ohio St. 296.

In England, a message sent by telephone has been held to come within a statute placing the transmission of telegraphic messages and telegrams under the control of the postmaster-general, though the telephone was not invented or contemplated in 1869; 6 Q. B. Div. 244. Where the lessees of a tramway discharged electricity into the ground by uninsulated wires and the current interfered with the instruments of a telephone company; the tramway company was held liable; 68 L. T. 283. But an injunction will not lie at the suit of a telephone company to restrain an electric railway company from permitting the escape of electricity from its wires, where it appears that the former could obviate the trouble by the use of a return wire, and at a less expense than any the railway company could adopt; 42 Fed. Rep. 273.

A telephone company may enjoin the proprietor of a hotel from permitting his boarders to use an instrument in the hotel, for their private business, though they may use it to call for a carriage and such like; 32 Am. L. Rev. 736 (S. C. of D. C.).

A telephone company maintaining a line between different cities and towns with public stations therein is required to maintain a messenger service to notify persons at a reasonable distance when they are wanted, and is liable for the negligence of its messengers and a regulation to the contrary is void; 42 N. E. Rep. (Ind.) 1035. Such a company is also liable in damages to a traveller, who, during an electric storm, comes in contact with one of its wires, charged with electricity from the atmosphere, and is injured thereby; 2 U. S. App. 205.

An affidavit taken over the telephone has been made the basis of an attachment, but the question how far a telephone may be used for such purpose is at this date (1898) by no means settled. So far as indicated by litigation on the subject, the matter seems to turn upon the thorough identification of the voice; 56 Alb. L. J. 233.

A statute fixing the maximum rates which telephone companies may charge is constitutional; 105 Ind. 250. The power to determine what compensation it may exact is a legislative not a judicial function; 76 N. W. Rep. (Neb.) 171; and the power of state control is not lost by reason of the fact that the company's lines extend into another state; 118 Ind. 194. As to admissibility of telephone communications as evidence, see 24 Wkly. Law Bul. 245.

See, generally, 35 Am. & E. Corp. Cas. 1-94; 42 U. S. App. 686. See RATES.

Telephone Company. A "telephone company" is a common carrier of intelligence engaged in a public service, holding itself out to the public, in consideration of certain fees exacted, as able, ready and willing to enter into contracts that will place persons in direct communication with each other, and enable them to talk one to the other. It may also hold itself out as willing to render other services, such as the transmission of messages. 140 Ky. 165, 130 S. W. 995.

TELL-TALES. An instrument or device, usually automatic, for giving information as to number, position, condition, etc. For example, a row of dangling straps or ropes suspended above a railway-track so as to warn any one standing on a car-roof of the approach of a low overhead structure; also, a fender or other device to warn track-walkers of dangers, such as cavities, in the permanent way. Stand. Dict.

TELLER (tallier, one who keeps a tally). An officer in a bank or other institution. A person appointed to receive votes. A name given to certain officers in the English exchequer.

The duties of tellers in banks consist of the receiving of all sums of money paid into the bank, and the paying of all sums drawn out. The position ranks next in importance to that of cashier. The authority of a teller to certify that a cheque is "good," so as to bind the bank, has been denied; 9 Metc. 306; but is supported by the weight of decisions; 39 Pa. 92; 52 N. Y. 96; Morse, Bk. 201. See OFFICERS.

TEMPERANCE. It has no fixed legal meaning as contradistinguished from its usual import. It is habitual moderation in regard to the indulgence of the natural appetites and passions; restrained or moderate indulgence; moderation; as temperance in eating and drinking; temperance in the indulgence of joy or mirth. Web. Dict. in 84 Cal. 123. See LIQUOR LAWS.

TEMPEST. Strictly speaking, a storm of extreme violence, a current of wind rushing with great velocity. Anderson. Damage done by ice, at the time of high water, but in ordinary wind and weather, is not then the result of a tempest. Id.; 29 U. C. C. P. 84. See ACT OF GOD; LIGHTNING.

TEMPLE. See INNS OF COURT.

TEMPORAL LORDS. See PEERS; PARLIAMENT.

TEMPORALIS. (Lat.). Temporary; limited to a certain time.

TEMPORALITIES. Revenues, lands, tenements, and lay fees which bishops have from livery of the king, and in virtue of which they sit in parliament. 1 Rolle, Abr. 881.

See GUARDIAN OF THE TEMPORALITIES; GUARDIAN OF THE SPIRITUALITIES.

TEMPORALITIES, GUARDIAN OF THE. See GUARDIAN OF THE TEMPORALITIES.

TEMPORALITY. The laity.

TEMPORARY. That which is to last for a limited time. Approved in 70 Ill. 899. See PERMANENT.

TEMPORARY ESTATE DUTY. See DEATH DUTIES.

TEMPORIS EXCEPTIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. A plea of lapse of time in bar of an action, like our statute of limitations.

TEMPUS (Lat.). Time in general. A time limited; a season; e. g. tempus pestis, must time in the forest.

TEMPUS PINQUEDINIS. See FERMIONA.

TEMPUS SEMESTRE. In Old English Law. The period of six months or half a year consisting of one hundred and eighty-two days. Cro. Jac. 166.

TEMPUS UTILE (Lat.). In Civil Law. A period of time which runs beneficially; i. e. feast-days are not included, nor does it run against one absent in a foreign country, or on business of the republic, or detained by stress of weather. But one detained by sickness is not protected from its running; for it runs where there is power to act by an agent as well as where there is power to act personally; and the sick man might have deputed his agent. Calvinus.

TEN YEAR PLAN. The adoption of a "ten year plan" for the payment of street improvements by the owner of abutting property did not extend the period of limitation beyond five years from acceptance of the work in the absence of an agreement therefor. 138 Ky. 392, 128 S. W. 104.

TENANCY. The state or condition of a tenant; the estate held by a tenant.

See GENERAL TENANCY; JOINT TENANCY.

TENANCY IN COMMON. The holding of an estate in lands by several persons, by several and distinct titles, but by unity of possession. 2 Bl. Com. 191. A tenant in common, though owner of an undivided share only in the land, differs from a joint tenant (q. v.) in having a several and distinct estate therein, and, except for the fact that he has not the exclusive possession, he has the same rights in respect to his share as a tenant in severalty. (Litt. § 304; 2 Bl. Com. 186.) So distinct are the interests of tenants in common that if they join in a lease, it is regarded as the distinct lease of each, and a conveyance by one tenant to another must be made as if to a stranger, a deed of release being by the common law authorities, insufficient to convey his title. (Freeman, Cotenancy, § 189.)

It is immaterial, for the purpose of creating a tenancy in common, whether the cotenants obtain their titles simultaneously, or from the same person, as it is whether they have each the same quantum of estate; this class of tenancy differing in this respect from a joint tenancy. Accordingly, one tenant in common may have an estate in fee and another for life, and one may have acquired his title from one person by conveyance, and the other from another person by descent, and the title of one may have vested yesterday, and that of the other fifty years ago. (2 Bl. Com. 191.) Further, tenants in common, since they hold separate interests, need not have equal shares in the property. (2 Preston, Abstracts 76.) 1 Tiffany, Real Prop. 2nd ed., § 640. See JOINT TENANCY; CO-OWNERSHIP; COPARCENARY; TENANCY BY ENTIRETIES; COMMUNITY PROPERTY; PARTNERSHIP PROPERTY; ESTATE IN COMMON.

TENANCY BY ENTIRETIES. Tenancy by entireties (or by the entirety), is the tenancy by which husband and wife at common law hold land conveyed or devised to them by a single instrument, which does not require them to hold it by another character of tenancy. It is essentially a joint tenancy, modified by the common law theory that husband and wife are one person. (Litt. § 291.)

The most important incident of tenancy by entireties is that the survivor of the marriage, whether the husband or the wife, is entitled to the whole, which right cannot be defeated by a conveyance by the other to a stranger, as in the case of a joint tenancy, nor by a sale under execution against such other. (31 Ind. 1.) 1 Tiffany, Real Prop. 2nd ed., § 645. See ENTIRETY; CO-OWNERSHIP; JOINT TENANCY; TENANCY IN COMMON; CO-PARCENARY; COMMUNITY PROPERTY; PARTNERSHIP PROPERTY.

TENANCY BY SUFFERANCE. See SUFFERANCE, TENANCY BY.

TENANCY AT WILL. See SUFFERANCE, TENANCY BY.

TENANT. (Lat. tenere, to hold). One who holds or possesses lands or tenements by any kind of title, either in fee, for life, for years, or at will. In a popular sense, he is one who has the temporary use and occupation of lands or tenements which belong to another, the duration and other terms of whose occupations are usually defined by an agreement called a lease, while the parties thereto are placed in the relation of landlord and tenant. See LANDLORD AND TENANT; 5 M. & G. 54. The term is applied generally in connection with the names of the various estates in land to indicate the person entitled to a particular estate, as tenant in common, by the curtesy, in dower, in fee, for life, in severalty, at sufferance, in tail, at will, for years, from year to year, and joint tenants. See the several titles relating to these estates. Tenant of the demesne is one who is tenant of a mesne lord; Hamm. N. P. 392. Tenant by the manner is one who has a less estate than the fee in the land which remains in the reversion. He is so called because in avowries and pleadings it is specially shown in what manner he is tenant in contradistinction to vray tenant, who is called simple tenant. See Hamm. N. P. 393; VRAY. As to tenant paravail, see PARAVAIL. See ESTATE; LEASE; NOTICE TO QUIT; UNDER TENANT.

TENANT IN CAPITE. See IN CAPITE; TENANT, TENANT IN FEE.

TENANT BY THE COURTESY OF ENGLAND. A man who marries a woman siesed of an estate of an inheritance, that is, of lands and tenements in fee-simple or fee-tail, and has by her issue, born alive, which was capable of inheriting her estate. In this case, he shall, on the death of his wife, hold the lands for his life, as tenant by the curtesy of England. 2 Bl. Com. 127. See ESTATE BY THE CURTESY; INITIATE TENANT BY THE CURTESY.

TENANT TO THE PRÆCIPE. See RECOVERY.

TENANT RIGHT. In leases from the crown, corporations, or the church, it is usual to grant a further term to the old tenants in preference to strangers; and as this expectation is seldom disappointed, such tenants are considered as having an ulterior interest beyond their subsisting term; and this interest is called the tenant right. Bacon, Abr. Leases and Terms for Years (U).

TENANT FROM YEAR TO YEAR. One who holds lands or tenements under a lease from year to year. See ESTATE FOR YEARS.

TENDER. (Lat. tendere, to offer). An offer to deliver something, made in pursuance of some contract or obligation, under such circumstances as to require no further act from the party making it to complete the transfer.

Legal tender, money of a character which by law a debtor may require his creditor to receive in payment, in the absence of any agreement in the contract or obligation itself. See LEGAL TENDER.

In Contracts. It may be either of money or of specific articles.

Tender of money must be made by some person authorized by the debtor; 2 Maule & S. 86; to the creditor, or to some person properly authorized, and who must have capacity to receive it; 1 Camp. 477; 14 S. & R. 307; 11 Me. 473; 1 Gray 600 (but necessity will sometimes create exceptions to this rule; thus any one may make a tender for an idiot; 1 Inst. 206 b; an uncle, although not appointed guardian, has been permitted to make a tender on behalf of an infant whose father was dead; 1 Rawle 408); in lawful coin of the country; 5 Co. 114; 13 Mass. 285; 4 N. H. 290; or paper money which has been legalized for this purpose; 2 Mas. 1; as, U. S. treasury notes or "greenbacks;" 12 Wall. 457; 27 Ind. 426; or foreign coin made current by law; 2 Nev. & M. 519; but a tender in bank notes will be good if not objected to on that account; 3 B. & P. 536; 9 Pick. 559; 1 Johns. 476; 1 Rawle 408; 6 Harr. & J. 53. He who tenders must be ready to pay or have within his reach the means to pay and actually offer to pay; 10 East 101; 5 Esp. 48; 5 N. H. 440. The money need not always be brought forward as well as offered, especially if the party to whom the offer is made refuses to receive it; 2 M. & S. 86; 6 Pick. 336. The person making the tender need not have the money in his possession; 3 C. & P. 77; 13 E. C. L. 83. A refusal to accept a check for the sole reason that it was insufficient in amount, is a waiver of all objection to the form of the tender; 12 Colo. 490. A corporation is not bound to tender a certificate before it can maintain an action on a subscription for its stock; 46 Minn. 463. As to what has been held objection, see 2 Caines 116; 13 Mass. 235; 5 N. H. 298; 10 Wheat. 933. The exact amount due must be tendered; 5 Mass. 365; 41 Vt. 60; 23 Ia. 430; though more may be tendered, if the excess is not to be handed back; 5 Co. 114; 4 B. & Ad. 548; and asking change does not vitiate unless objection is made on that account; 1 Camp. 70; 5 Dowl. & R. 299; see 140 Ill. 123; and the offer must be unqualified; 1 M. & W. 810; 9 Metc. 162; 20 Wend. 47; 18 Vt. 324; 1 Wisc. 141. A tender accompanied with conditions which the party has no right to impose is of no avail; 94 Ala. 488. Though a conditional tender is not good, a tender under a protest, reserving the right of the debtor to dispute the amount due, is a good tender, if it does not impose any conditions on the creditor; [1892] 1 Ch. 1. Where a decree directed complainant to pay defendant, or into court, a certain sum, and defendant thereupon to deliver to the complainant, or into court, certain stock, held that the tender of the same with interest coupled with a demand for the surrender of the stock and a settlement of the pending appeal was bad as a conditional tender and did not stop the running of the interest; 68 Fed. Rep. 16. One who makes a tender in order to stop the running of the interest must show that he has kept on hand, so as to be constantly ready and able to pay, the amount of the tender in lawful money at any time the creditor should elect to take it; id. See 74 Fed. Rep. 52.

When a larger sum than is due is tendered, it is not necessary that the debtor pay or keep good the whole amount; for, although the tender of money is supposed to be an admission by the debtor that the entire sum tendered is due and payable, yet it is not conclusive evidence to that effect; 24 Ind. 250. But where tender was made after suit brought, and the amount supposed by defendant to be due was paid into court, it was decided that the full amount must be paid over to the plaintiff, notwithstanding a much less sum was found by arbitrators to be due; 82 Pa. 64.

It is said that the amount must be stated in making the offer; 80 Vt. 577. It must be made at the time agreed upon; 1 Saund. 33 a, n.; 5 Pick. 187, 240; but may be given in evidence in mitigation of damages, if made subsequently, before suit brought; 1 Saund. 33 a, n.; statutes have been passed in many of the states, permitting the debtor to make a tender at any time before trial, of the amount he admits to be due, together with all costs accrued up to date of tender, and compelling plaintiff, in case he do not recover more than the sum tendered, to pay all costs subsequently incurred. See 53 Fed. Rep. 153; 45 Ill. App. 151. In Pennsylvania, by statute of 1705, in case of a tender made before suit, the amount tendered must in the event of a suit be paid into court; 10 S. & R. 14; otherwise, the plea of tender is a nullity. If so paid, tender is a good plea in bar, and if followed up, protects the defendant; 66 Pa. 168. Tender may be made after suit brought by paying the amount tendered into court with the costs up to the time of payment; 1 T. & H. Pr. 744. At common law the tender of a mortgage debt on the day it falls due and at the appointed place discharges the mortgage; but if made after the maturity of the debt, it must be kept good, in order to have that effect; 86 Ill. 481; 27 Me. 237; 50 Cal. 650; but in New York and Michigan mere tender is sufficient to discharge the mortgage; 21 N. Y. 345; 12 Mich. 270. It must be at a suitable hour of the day, during daylight; 7 Me. 81; at the place agreed upon, or, if no place has been agreed upon, wherever the person authorized to receive payment may be found; 3 M. & W. 238; and, in general, all the conditions of the obligation must be fulfilled. Where a chattel mortgage runs to several mortgagees jointly, to secure a joint debt, a tender to either mortgagee is good; 53 Minn. 83. The money must have been actually produced and offered, unless the circumstances of the refusal amount to a waiver; 3 C. & P. 849; 15 Wend. 637; 6 Pick. 358; 1 Wisc. 141; or at least be in the debtor's possession ready for delivery; 5 N. H. 440; 3 Pa. 381. As to what circumstances may constitute a waiver, see 3 Maule & S. 86; 1 A. K. Marsh. 321; 57 Conn. 105. An actual tender is dispensed with if the party is ready and willing to pay it, but is prevented by the other's declaring that he will not receive it; 94 Ala. 438. Presence of the debtor with the money ready for delivery is enough, if the creditor be absent from the appointed place at the appointed time of payment; 4 Pick. 358; or if the tender is refused; 18 Conn. 18.

A tender may be made in the case of unliquidated damages, but it must be kept good, especially where there is a dispute as to the amount due; 44 Ill. App. 615.

Tender of specific articles must be made to a proper person, by a proper person, at a proper time; 2 Pars. Contr. 158. The place of delivery is to be determined by the contract, or, in the absence of specific agreement, by the situation of the parties and circumstances of the case; 7 Barb. 472; for example, at the manufactory or store of the seller on demand; 2 Den. 145; at the place where the goods are at the time of sale; 7 Me. 91; 3 W. & S. 295; 6 Ala. N. S. 326; 1 Wash. C. C. 328; the creditor's place of abode, when the articles are portable, like cattle, and the time fixed; 4 Wend. 377; 2 Pa. 63; 1 Me. 120. When the goods are cumbersome, it is presumed that the creditor was to appoint a place; 5 Me. 192; 3 Dev. 78; or, if he fails to do so upon request, the debtor may appoint a place, giving notice to the creditor, if possible; 13 Wend. 93; 1 Me. 120. Whether a request is necessary if the creditor be without the state, see 5 Me. 192; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 611. The articles must be set apart and distinguished so as to admit of identification by the creditor; 4 Cow. 452; 7 Conn. 110; 1 Miss. 401. It must be made during daylight, and the articles must be at the place till the last hour of the day; 19 Vt. 587; 5 T. B. Monr. 872; unless waived by the parties.

In Pleading. If made before action brought; 5 Pick. 106; 55 N. J. L. 41; tender may be pleaded in excuse; 2 B. & P. 550; 5 Pick. 291; it must be on the exact day of performance; 1 Saund. 33 a, n.; and if a tender is relied on as a defence, it must be pleaded; 7 D. C. 68. It cannot be made to an action for general damages when the amount is not liquidated; 2 Burr. 1120; as, upon a contract; 2 B. & P. 234; covenant other than for the payment of money; 1 Ld. Raym. 566; or; 2 Stra. 787; or trespass; 2 Wils. 115. It may be pleaded, however, to a quantum meruit; 1 Stra. 576; accidental or involuntary trespass, in the United States; 13 Wend. 390; 2 Conn. 659; 36 Me. 407; covenant to pay money; 7 Taunt. 456.

The effect of a tender is to put a stop to accruing damages and interest, and to entitle the defendant to judgment for his costs; 3 Bingh. 290; 3 Johns. Cas. 243; 17 Mass. 389; 10 S. & R. 14; 9 Mo. 697; and it may be of effect to prevent interest accruing, though not a technical tender; 5 Pick. 106.

It admits the plaintiff's right of action as to the amount tendered; 1 Bibb 272; 14 Wend. 221; 2 Dall. 190; 29 Neb. 587; at the date of the suit; 48 Mo. App. 185; but nothing more, and does not prevent the making of any defence inconsistent with the admissions of the original contract or cause of action, as to any claim beyond that of the sum tendered; 110 N. Y. 101; 74 Ia. 436. The benefit may be lost by a subsequent demand and refusal of the amount due; 6 B. & Ad. 680; 24 Pick. 168; but not by a demand for more than the sum tendered; 23 Vt. 440; or due; 8 Q. B. 915.

See LEGAL TENDER; PAYMENT INTO COURT.

A plea of tender, if defective, should be demurred to, and plaintiff cannot question its sufficiency after accepting the money paid into court under such plea; 98 Ala. 638.

TENDER OF AMENDS. See AMENDS.

TENDER OF ISSUE. A form of words in a pleading, by which a party offers to refer the question raised upon it to the appropriate mode of decision.

TENEMENT (from Lat. teneo, to hold). Everything of a permanent nature which may be holden.

House, or homestead. Jacob. Rooms let in houses.

Property held by a tenant. 87 W. Va. 778.

In its most extensive signification, tenement comprehends everything which may be holden, provided it to be of a permanent nature; and not only lands and inheritances which are holden, but also rents and profits à prendre of which a man has any frank tenement, and of which he may be seized à libero tenemento, are included under this term; Co. Litt. 6 a; 2 Bla. Com. 17; 1 Washb. R. P. 10. In its technical sense it will include an advowson; 3 A. K. Marsh. 320; (thence; 1 Stra. 100; 6 Ad. & El. 388; a dignity; 30 Ch. Div. 136; 2 Saik. 502. It includes a wharf; 14 Abb. Pr. 374. The word tenements simply, without other circumstances has never been construed to pass a fee; 10 Wheat. 204. See 1 B. & Ad. 161; Com. Dig. Grant (E 2); Trespass (A 2).

TENEMENTAL LAND. Land distributed by a lord among his tenants, as opposed to the demesnes which were occupied by himself and his servants. 2 Bla. Com. 60.

TENEMENTS, DOMINANT AND SERVIENT. In Real Property Law. The land in favor of which the privilege exists is called the dominant tenement, and that upon which the burden of servitude is imposed is called the servient tenement. Both have reference to the land, and not to the person, of the owner. 38 Cal. 111; Thomp. Real Prop. 367. Relation to EASEMENT, see id., 367, 368.

TENENDAS (Lat.). In Scotch Law. The name of a clause in charters of heritable rights, which derives its name from its first words, tenendas predictas terras, and expresses the particular tenure by which the lands are to be holden. Erskine, Inst. b. 2, t. 8, n. 10.

TENENDUM (Lat.). That part of a deed which was formerly used in expressing the tenure by which the estate granted was holden; but since all freehold tenures were converted into socage, the tenendum is of no further use even in England, and is, therefore, joined to the habendum in this manner,—to have and to hold. The words "to hold" have now no meaning in our deeds. 2 Bla. Com. 298. See HABENDUM.

TENERI (Lat.). That part of a bond where the obligor declares himself to be held and firmly bound to the obligee, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, is called the teneri. 8 Call 350.

TENET (Lat. he holds). In Pleading. A term used in stating the tenure in an action for waste done during the tenancy.

When the averment is in the tenet, the plaintiff on obtaining a verdict will recover the place wasted, namely, that part of the premises in which the waste was exclusively done, if it were done in a part only, together with treble damages. But when the averment is in the tenuit, the tenancy being at an end, he will have judgment for his damages only. 2 Greenl. Ev. § 652.

TENNESSEE. The name of one of the United States of America.

It was originally a part of North Carolina. In April, 1776, North Carolina passed an act ceding to the United States, upon certain conditions, all her territory west of the Appalachian or Alleghany Mountains. Before the cession was accepted by Congress, it was repealed by another act passed in October, 1784. In December, 1790, the legislature again ceded the territory to the United States; and the cession was accepted by Congress by act, April 3, 1790. A convention was called, and a constitution established on February 6, 1796. Tennessee was admitted by an act approved June 1, 1796. Prior to this time a legislature had been elected, the state government organized, and many important laws enacted.

The constitution of 1796 was not submitted to the people for ratification. The authority of the convention established it as the constitution of the state. A new constitution went into effect in 1855. Amendments were ratified in 1833 and 1856. The present constitution was framed, submitted to the people, and ratified in 1870, and went into effect May 5, 1870.

TENOR. A term used in pleading to denote that an exact copy is set out. 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 235; 1 Mass. 203; 1 East 180.

The tenor of an instrument signifies the true meaning of the matter therein contained. Cowel. In Scotland an action for proving the purport of a lost deed is called the action of proving the tenor.

In Chancery Pleading. A certified copy of records of other courts removed into chancery by certiorari. Gresh. Ev. 809.

TENORE INDICTAMENTI MITTENDO. A writ whereby the record of an indictment and the process thereupon was called out of another court into the Queen's bench. Reg. Orig. 69; Whart.

TENSE. A term used in grammar to denote the distinction of time.

The acts of a court of justice ought to be in the present tense; but the acts of the party may be in the perfect tense; and the continuances are in the perfect tense; 1 Mod. 81. The contract of marriage should be in language of the present tense; 6 Binn. 403. See 1 Saund. 393, n. 1.

TENT. A pavilion; or canvas house enclosed with walls of cloth and covered with the same material. 2 Tex. App. 222.

TENTERDEN'S ACT, LORD. Statute of 9 Geo. IV, c. 14, a supplement to the statute of frauds (q. v.), requiring the following promises and engagements to be in writing: (1) An acknowledgment of a debt barred by the statute of limitations; (2) a promise to pay a debt incurred, or a ratification of a contract made, during infancy; (3) a representation as to a person's character, ability, etc., made to enable him to obtain money or goods on credit; (4) executory contracts for the sale of goods. 28 A. & E. Ency. L. 2nd ed. 47. "Ability" held to mean pecuniary ability. 1 M. & W. 101. See FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

TENUIT (Lat. he held). A term used in stating the tenure in an action for waste done after the termination of the tenancy. See TENET.

TENURE (from Lat. tenere, to hold). The mode by which a man holds an estate in lands.

Such a holding as is coupled with some service, which the holder is bound to perform so long as he continues to hold.

The thing held is called a tenement; the occupant, a tenant; and the manner of his holding constitutes the tenure. Upon common-law principles, all lands within the state are held directly or indirectly from the king, as lord paramount or supreme proprietor. To him every occupant of land owes fidelity and service of some kind as the necessary condition of his occupation. If he fails in either respect, or dies without heirs upon whom this duty may devolve, his land reverts to the sovereign as ultimate proprietor. In this country, the people in their corporate capacity represent the state sovereignty; and every ruler must bear true allegiance to the state, and pay his share of the taxes required for her support, as the condition upon which alone he may hold land within her boundaries; Co. Litt. 65 a; 2 Bla. Com. 105; 3 Kent 467. In the earlier ages of the world the condition of land was probably allodial, that is, without subjection to any superior,—every man occupying as much land found unappropriated as his necessities required. Over this he exercised an unqualified dominion; and when he parted with his ownership the possession of his successor was equally free and absolute. An estate of this character necessarily excludes the idea of any tenure, since the occupant owes no service or allegiance to any superior as the condition of his occupation. But when the existence of an organized society became desirable to secure certain blessings only by its means to be acquired, then followed the establishment of governments, and a new relation arose between each government and its citizens,—that of protection on the one hand and dependence on the other,—necessarily involving the idea of service to the state as a condition to the use and enjoyment of lands within its boundaries. This relation was of course modified according to the circumstances of particular states; but throughout Europe it early took the form of the feudal system. See ALLOUVIUS.

The principal species of tenure which grew out of the feudal system was the tenure by knight's service (q. v.). Many arbitrary and tyrannical incidents or lordly privileges were attached to this tenure, which was abolished by statute 12 Charles II. c. 24, which declared that all such lands should thenceforth be held in free and common socage.

Tenure in socage is where a tenant holds his tenement by any certain service, in lieu of all other services, so that they be not services of chivalry or knight's service: as, to hold by fealty and twenty shillings rent, or by homage, fealty, and twenty shillings rent, or by homage and fealty without any rents, or by fealty and a certain specified service, as, to plough the lord's land for three days. Littleton 117; 2 Bla. Com. 78. See SOCAGE.

Other tenures have grown out of the two last mentioned species of tenure, and are still extant in England; although some of them are fast becoming obsolete.

Among these are tenures by copyhold and in frankalmoinage, in burgage and gavelkind, and gr-m and petit serjeanty; but their nature, origin, and history are given in the several articles appropriated to those tenures.

Tenures were distinguished, according to the quality of the service, into free or base; the former were such as were not unbecoming a soldier or a freeman to perform, as, to serve the lord in the wars; while the latter were only considered fit for a peasant, as, to plough the land, and the like. They were further distinguished with reference to the person from whom the land was held, as a tenure in capite, where the holding was of the person of the king, and tenure in gross, where the holding was of a subject. By the statute of Quia Emptores, 18 Edw. I., it was provided that if any tenant should alien any part of his land in fee, the alienor should hold immediately of the lord of the fee, and should be charged with a proportional part of the service due in respect of the quantity of land held by him. The consequence of which was that upon every such alienation the services upon which the estate was originally granted became due to the superior lord, and not to the immediate grantee; 4 Term 443; 4 East 271; Crabb, R. P. § 735.

In the United States every estate in fee-simple is held as absolutely and unconditionally as is compatible with the state's right of eminent domain. Many grants of land made by the British government prior to the revolution created socage tenures, which were subsequently abolished or modified by the legislatures of the different states. Thus, by the charter of Pennsylvania, the proprietary held his estate of the crown in free and common socage, his grantees being thereby also authorized to hold of him directly, notwithstanding the statute of Quia Emptores. The act of Pennsylvania of November 27, 1779, substituted the commonwealth in place of the proprietaries as the ultimate proprietor of whom lands were held. Pennsylvania titles are allodial not feudal; 44 Pa. 493. In New York there was supposed to have been some species of military tenure introduced by the Dutch previously to their surrender to the English, in 1664; but the legislature of that state in 1787 turned them all into a tenure in free and common socage, and finally, in 1830, abolished this latter tenure entirely, and declared that all lands in that state should thenceforth be held upon a uniform allodial tenure.

See Parliamentary Report (1870) on Tenures in the countries of Europe.

See MILITARY FEUDS; MILITARY TENURE.

TENURE OF OFFICE. By R. S. § 1765, etc., it was provided that federal officers appointed with the consent of the senate should only be removed during their terms with like consent or by a new appointment made by the consent of the senate; but it did not apply to certain suspensions during a recess of the senate. The law was repealed by act of March 3, 1887. See, as to the effect of the repeal, 167 U. S. 324; Office.

TENURE BY THEGNAGE. See THEGNAGE.

TERCE. In Scotch Law. A life-tenant competent by law to widows who have not accepted of special provisions in the third part of the heritable subjects in which the husband died infertile. It thus corresponds to dower.

TERM. In Estates. The limitation of an estate: as a term for years, and the like. The word term does not merely signify the term specified in the lease, but the estate, also, and interest that passes by that lease; and therefore the term may expire during the continuance of the time: as by surrender, forfeiture, and the like. 2 Bla. Com. 145; 8 Pick. 339.

In Practice. The space of time during which a court holds a session. Sometimes the term is a monthly, at others it is a quarterly period, according to the constitution of the court.

The whole term is considered as but one day: so that the judges may at any time during the term revise their judgments. In the computation of the term, all adjournments are to be included; 9 Watts 200. Courts are presumed to know judicially when their terms are required to be held by public law; 4 Dev. 427. A term of the circuit court may extend from the beginning of one term to the opening of the succeeding statutory term, and the beginning of another term in another district of the same circuit does not necessarily end the term of the first court; 37 U. S. App. 129. A court has power to extend the term until a trial can be concluded; 21 Pa. 109. In England Hilary term began January 3d, and ended February 12th; Easter term began the Wednesday fortnight after Easter Sunday and ended the Monday next after Ascension Day; Trinity term began the Friday next after Trinity Sunday and ended the Wednesday fortnight after; Michaelmas term began October 9th and ended November 28th. The long vacation was formerly from August 10th to October 24th, and to October 28th, in chancery; now it is from August 13th to October 23d. By the Judicature Acts (q. v.), the division of the legal year into the four terms of Hilary, Easter, Trinity, and Michaelmas has been abolished, so far as relates to the administration of justice.

TERM FEE. In English Practice. A certain sum which a solicitor is entitled to charge to his client, and the client to recover, if successful, from the unsuccessful party; payable for every term in which any proceedings subsequent to the summons shall take place. Whart. Lex.

TERM FOR YEARS. An estate for years and the time during which such estate is to be held are each called a term: hence the term may expire before the time, as, by a surrender.

See ESTATE FOR YEARS.

TERM IN GROSS. An estate for years which is not held in trust for the party entitled to the land on the expiration of the term.

TERM PROBATORY. In an ecclesiastical suit, the time during which evidence may be taken. Cootes' Eccl. Pr. 240.

TERMINAL CHARGES. Demurrage charged for the detention of cars in loading or unloading is a terminal charge, required to be shown by the schedules of rates filed and published by an interstate railroad company by the terms of the interstate commerce act of June 29, 1906. 188 Fed. 879.

TERMINARE (Lat.). To end or determine; to dispose of judicially; to decide.

TERMINUS (Lat.). A boundary or limit, either of space or time. A bound, goal, or borders parting one man's land from another's. It is used also for an estate for a term of years: e. g. "interesse termini." 2 Bla. Com. 143. See TERM.

Terminus a quo. The starting-point of a private way is so called. Hamm. N. P. 198.

Terminus ad quem. The point of termination of a private way is so called. In common parlance, the point of starting and that of termination of a line of railway are each called the terminus.

TERMOR. One who holds lands and tenements for a term of years, or life. Littleton § 100; 4 Tyrwh. 561.

TERMS OF COURT. Those stated periods of the year, during which courts sit for the dispatch of business.

TERMS, TO BE UNDER. A party is said to be under terms, when an indulgence is granted to him by the court in its discretion, on certain conditions. Thus, when an injunction is granted ex parte, the party obtaining it is put under terms to abide by such order as to damages as the court may make at the hearing. Moz. & W.

TERRA DOMINICALIS REGIS. Demesne land belonging to the crown. Abbott.

TERRA EXTENDENDA. Land to be valued. This phrase was the name of a writ addressed to an escheator, etc., that he inquire and find out the true yearly value of any land, etc., by the oath of twelve men, and to certify the extent into the chancery. Abbott; Reg. Orig. 293.

TERRA HYDATA. Land subject to the payment of hydate. Seld.

TERRA LUCRABILIS. Land that might be gained from the sea, or enclosed out of a waste, to particular use. Burrill; 1 Mon. Ang. 406.

TERRA NOVA. Land newly converted from wood ground or arable. Cow.

TERRA PUTURA. Land in forests, held by the tenure of furnishing food to the keepers therein. 4 Inst. 307.

TERRA TESTAMENTALIS. Land held by charter or writing; boc-land. Burrill; Spelman. Land that might be disposed of by will; devisable land. Id.; Cowell.

TERRÆ DOMINICALES REGIS. The demesne lands of the crown.

TERRAGES. An exemption from all uncertain services. Cowell.

TERRE-TENANT. One who has the actual possession of land; but, in a more technical sense, he who is seised of the land; and in the latter sense the owner of the land, or the person seised, is the terre-tenant, and not the lessee. 4 W. & S. 256; Bac. Abr. Uses and Trusts. It has been held that mere occupiers of the land are not terre-tenants. See 16 S. & R. 432; 2 Bla. Com. 91, 328; 114 Pa. 146.

Contribution among Terre-tenants. The question whether purchasers, at different times, of land bound by an incumbrance created by the grantor, stand in equal equity as regards this incumbrance, and if so, must each contribute proportionately to its discharge, has been settled in England in the affirmative, following the rule laid down in the Year Books and repeated in Coke's Reports; 3 Wms. Saund. p. 10, n. 3; 3 Rep. 14 b. In this country, the opposite view has been taken; 1 Johns. Ch. 447; 5 Ed. 235; 10 S. & R. 450; 20 Pa. 222. See Lecture before Phila. Law Acad. 1863, by G. W. Biddle, LL.D.

TERRIER. In English Law. A roll, catalogue, or survey of lands, belonging either to a single person or a town, in which are stated the quantity of acres, the names of the tenants, and the like.

One of the old records in the office of the recorder of deeds of Philadelphia County is still called the Germantown Terrier. In it will be found the Latin Dedication of Pastorius, quoted by Whittier, in the Pennsylvania Pilgrim.

By the ecclesiastical law, an inquiry is directed to be made from time to time of the temporal rights of the clergymen of every parish, and to be returned into the registry of the bishop; this return is denominated a terrier. 1 Phill. Ev. 602.

TERRITORIAL COURTS. The courts established in the territories of the United States. See UNITED STATES COURTS.

TERRITORIAL PROPERTY. The territorial property of a state consists of all land and water within its geographical boundaries, including all rivers, lakes, bays, gulf and straits lying wholly within them. As incidents to such territorial possessions must be added a state's jurisdiction over its marginal waters when its territory abuts upon the sea, and the right of its people to navigate such rivers as form boundaries between two or more states, or such as rising within one state traverse the territories of others on their way to the sea. The legal title to such territorial property may rest either upon (1) prescription, (2) conquest, (3) occupation, (4) accretion, or (5) cession.

The non-territorial property of a state consists of such possessions as it may hold in its public capacity beyond its own limits, whether within or without the jurisdiction of other states; of such as it may hold as a private individual within the jurisdiction of another state; of its public vessels; of its private vessels, covered by the national flag; and of the goods of its subjects embarked in foreign ships.

From their very nature and situation the right to use and enjoy certain classes of state property depends exclusively upon municipal law, while for a like reason the right to use and enjoy certain other classes depends entirely upon international law. A state may limit or qualify its sovereignty and jurisdiction over its territorial property by permitting a foreign state to perform within its bounds certain acts otherwise prohibited; or by surrendering the right to exercise certain parts of its domestic jurisdiction as a protection to others. Restrictions thus imposed upon the sovereignty of a state are known as servitudes which may be either positive or negative. Taylor, Int. Pub. Law, 263.

TERRITORIAL WATERS. It is difficult to draw any precise conclusion as to the distance to which a state may lawfully extend its exclusive dominion over the sea adjoining its territories, and beyond those portions of the sea which are embraced by harbors, etc., over which it has unquestioned jurisdiction. All that can reasonably be asserted is that it extends as far as may be requisite for its safety, and for some lawful end. According to the current of modern authority, it extends as far as a cannon shot will reach—i. e. a marine league; 1 Kent 29; this limit was fixed when that was the range of a cannon; 41 Ohio St. 81; it is said that it can be extended as the range of cannon increases; Hall, Int. L. 157. It may be extended for protection in time of war, or for revenue purposes; 139 U. S. 240; 41 Fed. Rep. 109. It has been said that the United States can attach to its coast an extent into the sea beyond the reach of cannon shot; 1 Kent 29; and congress has recognized this limit by legislation as to captures made within a marine league of the shore; id.

State legislation in Massachusetts which extends the territorial limit of a state three miles seaward from the shore is valid; 139 U. S. 240; i. e. it may extend its territorial limits and the boundaries of its counties to the extent of the limits of the United States. So of a California act relating to a crime committed within the same limit; 60 Fed. Rep. 42. Parliament "may extend the realm how far soever it may please;" 2 Ex. D. 152. Under the Behring Sea Arbitration, it was decided that the United States cannot protect seals in the open sea beyond the three-mile limit.

It would not be unreasonable for the United States to assume control of the waters on the coast included within distant headlands, as from Cape Ann to Cape Cod, Nantucket to Montauk Point, and from the latter to the Capes of the Delaware; 1 Kent 30.

"As between nations, the minimum limit of the territorial jurisdiction of a nation over tide waters is a marine league from the coast, and bays wholly within its territory which do not exceed two marine leagues at the mouth are within this limit." 189 U. S. 240. The Gulf of Mexico is part of the Atlantic Ocean; 121 U. S. 67; but, on the other hand, the exclusive right of the British crown to the Bristol Channel, to the channel between Ireland and Great Britain, and between Scotland and Ireland, is uncontested; 1 Phill. Int. L. § 189; and Chesapeake Bay and Delaware Bay are not a part of the high sea; 1 Whart. Int. L. § 28; Narragansett Bay is claimed, by usage, to be within the jurisdiction of Rhode Island; 16 Wall. 532; 9 R. I. 419; and Conception Bay in Newfoundland, though more than 20 miles wide at its mouth and nearly 50 miles long, is British territory; 2 App. Cas. 394. It is probable that the Delaware and Chesapeake bays are the property of the United States, and England claims complete jurisdiction over the bays of Chaleur, Fortune, and Conception, and some other bays of Newfoundland, as closed seas; Snow, Int. Law 27. The Zuyder Zee and Hudson's Bay are probably parts of the territory of the nations which surround them; while the bays of Fundy and Chaleur are public; 3 Whart. Int. L. 28, 304, 305 a. The claim of Russia to sovereignty over the Pacific Ocean north of the 51st degree of latitude has been considered by the United States as against the rights of other nations; 1 Kent 29. See 1895 Rep. Society for Reform and Codif. of the Laws, 17th meeting; 6 Eng. Rul. Cas. 946; Pilot; JURISDICTION.

TERRITORY. A part of a country separated from the rest and subject to a particular jurisdiction.

The regional areas—of land and adjacent water—over which the United States claims and exercises dominion and control as a sovereign power. 262 U. S. 122; 3 Wheat, 338, 390.

A portion of the country subject to and belonging to the United States which is not within the boundary of any state or the District of Columbia.

Relation to the United States. (1) The territories are not States, within the judicial clause of the Constitution giving jurisdiction in cases between citizens of different States. (2) They are not States, within the meaning of Revised Statutes, § 709, permitting writs of error from this court in cases where the validity of a state statute is drawn in question. (3) They are States, as that word is used in treaties with foreign powers, with respect to the ownership, disposition and inheritance of property. 182 U. S. 270. The same applies to the District of Columbia (q. v.).

The constitution of the United States, art. 4, s. 3, provides that the congress shall have power to dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property of the United States; and nothing in this constitution shall be construed so as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any state.

The United States has supreme sovereignty over a territory, and congress has full and complete legislative authority over its people and government; 136 U. S. 1.

Congress possesses the power to erect territorial governments within the territory of the United States: the power of congress over such territory is exclusive and universal, and their legislation is subject to no control, unless in the case of ceded territory, as far as it may be affected by stipulations in the cessions, or by the ordinance of 1787, under which any part of it has been settled; Story, Const. § 1322; Rawle, Const. 287; 1 Kent 243, 359; 1 Pet. 511. Congress has plenary legislative power over the territories of the United States, and upon the admission of a territory into the Union, may, if it so desires, effect a collective naturalization of its foreign-born inhabitants as citizens of the United States; 143 U. S. 135.

The power of the United States to acquire territory by any means known to international law would seem to be beyond question. An interesting historical reference to the subject was made by Henry Hitchcock in an address before the University of Michigan in 1889.

"It is a matter of history that when Mr. Jefferson, in 1803, purchased the Louisiana territory from France, his own belief was that he had (in his own words) 'done an act beyond the constitution,' and he was not only anxious that the acquisition of Louisiana should be sanctioned and the future annexation of Florida authorized by an amendment to the constitution, but privately submitted to his party friends the draft of such an amendment, though in his message to congress submitting the treaty for ratification he did not mention the constitutional difficulty. But the popularity of the measure secured the ratification of the treaty and all necessary legislation to enforce it without further question. Twenty-five years later, the question was presented in the supreme court in the American Insurance Company v. Canter, with reference to the validity and effect of the treaty of 1819, by which Spain had ceded Florida to the United States. Marshall answered it in these brief words: 'The constitution confers absolutely on the government of the Union the powers of making war and of making treaties; consequently that government possesses the power of acquiring territory, either by conquest or by treaty;' 1 Peters 511, 542."

In the case of the Alaska liquor laws the question was recently (1899) before the circuit court of appeals in the ninth circuit, and it was held as a "well-established doctrine" that "the territories of the United States are entirely subject to the legislative authority of congress. They are not organized under the constitution, nor subject to its complex distribution of the powers of government as the organic law, but are the creation, exclusively, of the legislative department, and subject to its supervision and control. . . . It [congress] may legislate in accordance with the special needs of each locality, and vary its regulations to meet the conditions and circumstances of the people. . . . In a territory all the functions of government are within the legislative jurisdiction of congress, and may be exercised though a local government or directly;" 86 Fed. Rep. 456, citing 16 How. 164; 101 U. S. 129; 114 id. 13; 136 id. 1; 141 id. 174; 152 id. 1.

When New Mexico was conquered by the United States it was only the allegiance of the people that was changed, their relation to each other and their property rights remained unchanged. The executive of the United States properly established a provincial government which ordained laws and instituted a judicial system, which continued in force until modified by the direct action of congress or by the territorial government established by it; 20 How. 176. See the articles on the various territories; 12 Harv. L. Rev. 205; STATE; SOVEREIGNTY; UNITED STATES.

TERROR. The state of the mind which arises from an event or phenomenon that may serve as a prognostic of some catastrophe; affright from apparent danger.

See RIOT; ROBBERY; PUTTING IN FEAR.

TERTIUS INTERVENIENS (Lat.). In Civil Law. One who, claiming an interest to the subject or thing in dispute in action between other parties, asserts his right to act with the plaintiff, to be joined with him, and to recover the matter in dispute, because he has an interest in it; or to join the defendant, and with him oppose the interest of the plaintiff, which it is his interest to defeat. He differs from the intervenor, or him who interpleads in equity. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3819, note.

TEST. Something by which to ascertain the truth respecting another thing. 7 Pa. 428.

TEST ACT. The act of 25 Car. II. c. 2, by which it was enacted that all persons holding any office, civil or military (excepting some very inferior ones), or receiving pay from the crown, or holding a place of trust under it, should take the oath of allegiance and supremacy, and subscribe a declaration against transubstantiation, and receive the sacrament according to the usage of the Church of England, under a penalty of £500 and disability to the office. 4 Bla. Com. 59. Abolished 9 Geo. IV. c. 17, so far as taking the sacrament is concerned, and a new form of declaration substituted. Mozl. & W.

TESTA DE NEVIL. An ancient and authentic record in two volumes, in the custody of the Queen's Remembrancer in the Exchequer, said to be compiled by Jollan de Nevil, a justice itinerant, in the eighteenth and twenty-fourth years of Henry III. Burrill; Cowell. These volumes were printed in 1807, under the authority of the commissioners of the Public Records; and contain an account of fees held either immediately of the king, or of others who held of the king in capite. Id.; Cowell.

TESTACY. The state or condition of leaving a will at one's death, as opposed to intestacy. See INTESTACY.

TESTAMENT. In Civil Law. The appointment of an executor or testamentary heir, according to the formalities prescribed by law. Domat, liv. 1, tit. 1, s. 1.

At first there were only two sorts of testaments among the Romans—that called calatis comitiis, and another called in procinctu. (See below.) In the course of time, these two sorts of testament having become obsolete, a third form was introduced, called per æt libram, which was a fictitious sale of the inheritance to the heir apparent. The inconveniences which were experienced from these fictitious sales again changed the form of testament; and the prætor introduced another, which required the seal of seven witnesses. The emperors having increased the solemnity of these testaments, they were called written or solemn testaments, to distinguish them from nuncupative testaments, which could be made without writing. Afterwards military testaments were introduced, in favor of soldiers actually engaged in military service.

A testament calatis comitiis, or made in the comitia,—that is, the assembly of the Roman people, was an ancient manner of making wills used in times of peace among the Romans. The comitia met twice a year for this purpose. Those who wished to make such testaments caused to be convoked the assembly of the people by these words, calatis comitiis. None could make such wills that were not entitled to be at the assemblies of the people. This form of testament was repealed by the law of the Twelve Tables.

A civil testament is one made according to all the forms prescribed by law. In contradistinction to a military testament, in making which some of the forms may be dispensed with. Civil testaments are more ancient than military ones; the former were in use during the time of Romulus, the latter were introduced during the time of Coriolanus. See Hist. de la Jurispr. Rom. de M. Tervæm, p. 119.

A common testament is one which is made jointly by several persons. Such testaments are forbidden in Louisiana, Civ. Code of La. art. 1868, and by the laws of France, Code Civ. 968, in the same words, namely: "A testament cannot be made by the same act, by two or more persons, either for the benefit of a third person, or under the title of a reciprocal or mutual disposition."

A testament ab irato is one made in a gust of passion or heated anger, and is not binding, rather than from a desire to benefit the devisee. When the facts of unreasonable anger are proved, the will is annulled as unjust and as not having been freely made. See Ab irato.

A nuptial testament (called a solemn testament, because it requires more formally than a nuncupative testament) is a form of making a will which consists principally in enclosing it in an envelope and sealing it in the presence of witnesses.

A nuncupative testament was one made verbally. See NUNCUPATIVE WILL.

An olographic testament is one which is written wholly by the testator. In order to be valid, it must be entirely written, dated and signed by the hand of the testator. It is subject to no other form. See La. Civ. Code, art. 1061.

See MILITARY TESTAMENT.

TESTAMENTARY. Belonging to a testament; as, a testamentary gift; a testamentary guardian.

TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY. Mental capacity sufficient for making a valid will. As to what constitutes, see WILLS; UNDUE INFLUENCE; 12 Am. L. Reg. 385.

TESTAMENTARY CAUSES. Causes relating to probate of testaments and administration and accounts upon the same. They are enumerated among ecclesiastical causes by Lord Coke. 5 Co. 1. See JUDICATURE ACTS.

TESTAMENTARY GUARDIAN. A guardian appointed by last will of a father to have custody of his child and his real and personal estate till he attains the age of twenty-one. In England, the power to appoint such guardian was given by 12 Car. II. c. 34. The principles of this statute have been generally adopted in the United States.

TESTAMENTARY PAPER. A document which is not in form a will, but is of that nature, and may, if allowed and acted on, regulate the disposal of the writer's property after death. Under modern statutes of wills, which preclude a paper from being admitted to probate at all unless fully and formally a will, the phrase has lost importance. Abbott.

TESTAMENTARY POWER. The power to make a will is neither a natural nor a constitutional right, but depends wholly upon statute. 100 Mass. 234. Such power has been expressly conferred by statute in most of the states, in some cases unrestricted, in others with various restrictions by reason of dower and homestead rights, and for other reasons; 3 Jarm. Wills 721, 731.

TESTAMENTI FACTIO (Lat.). In the Civil Law. The ceremony of making a testament, either as testator, heir, or witness.

TESTATE. The condition of one who leaves a valid will at his death.

TESTATOR. One who has made a testament or will.

See DEVISOR; DURESS; FEME COVERT; IDiot; WILL.

TESTATRIX. A woman who has made a will or testament.

TESTATUM (Lat.). The name of a writ which is issued by the court of one county to the sheriff of another county in the same state, when the defendant cannot be found in the county where the court is located; for example, after a judgment has been obtained, and a ca. sa. has been issued, which has been returned non est inventus, a testatum ca. sa. may be issued to the sheriff of the county where the defendant is. See Viner, Abr. Testatum 259.

In Conveyancing. That part of a deed which commences with the words "This indenture witnesseth."

TESTE MEIPSO. (Witness myself.) In Old English Law and Practice.

A solemn formula of attestation by the sovereign, used at the conclusion of charters, and other public instruments, and also of original writs out of chancery. Burrill; Spelman. Teste meipso, were the words used by a queen. The first writ in the Register is a writ of right patent, running in the name of Queen Elizabeth, and concluding with the clause, Teste meipso apud Westmonasterium, etc. Id.; Reg. Orig. 1.

TESTE OF A WRIT. In Practice. The concluding clause, commencing with the word witness, etc. A signature in attestation of the fact that a writ is issued by authority. A writ which bears the teste is sometimes said to be tested.

The act of congress of May 8, 1792, directs that all writs and process issuing from the supreme or a circuit court shall bear teste of the chief justice of the supreme court, or, if that office be vacant, of the associate justice next in precedence; and that all writs of process issuing from a district court shall bear teste of the judge of such court, or, if the said office be vacant, of the clerk thereof. See R. S. §§ 911, 912.

TESTES. Witnesses.

TESTIFY. To give evidence according to law. A witness testifying in regard to conversations had with a party must state either the language used, or the substance of it. The impression left upon his mind by the conversation is not evidence. 33 Md. 135.

TESTIMONIAL PROOF. In Civil Law. A term used in the same sense as parol evidence is used at common law and in contradistinction to literal proof, which is written evidence.

TESTIMONIO. See EXPEDIENTE.

TESTIMONIUM CLAUSE. The last clause of an instrument writing, usually containing the words "In witness whereof," English.

TESTIMONY. The statement made by a witness under oath or affirmation.

The word "testimony" more properly refers to oral evidence than to documentary, and it is reasonable that a distinction should be made between the two. 227 U. S. 592.

The statement of a witness under oath; yet it need not necessarily be made to a judicial tribunal. Thus, a deposition may contain testimony, although never used in the cause pending; 134 Ind. 35. It is a species of evidence by means of witnesses; 43 La. Ann. 1078, 1194.

Testimony and evidence are synonymous, but evidence includes testimony, as well as all other kinds of proof. It seems settled, both in England and this country, that a prisoner may be convicted on the testimony of an accomplice alone, though the court may, at its discretion, advise an acquittal unless such testimony is corroborated on material points; Tay. Ev. 830-832. See 11 Harv. L. Rev. 169; Whart. Cr. Ev. § 441. See EVIDENCE; EXPERTS.

TESTIS. A witness. Testari: to be a witness, bear witness to; to be witnessed, shown, certified. Anderson, L. Dict.

TESTMOIGNE. This is an old and barbarous French word, signifying, in the old books, evidence. Comyns, Dig. Testmoigne.

TEXAS. The name of one of the states of the American Union.

It was a province of Mexico until 1836, when the inhabitants established a separate republic. On March, 1845, the congress of the United States, by a joint resolution, submitted to the new republic a proposition providing for the erection of the territory of Texas into a new state, and for its annexation under the name of the state of Texas. This proposition was accepted by the existing government of Texas on the 23d of June, 1845, and was ratified by the people in convention on the 6th of July. On the 29th of December following, by a joint resolution of congress, the new state was formally admitted into the Union.

TEXTUS ROFFENSIS. The Rochester Text. An ancient manuscript containing many of the Saxon laws, and the rights, customs, tenures, etc. of the church of Rochester, drawn up by Ernulph, bishop of that see, from A. D. 1114, to 1124. Burrill; Cowell. Blount gives it a much greater antiquity. Id.

THAINLAND. In Old English Law. The land which was granted by the Saxon kings to their thains or thanes was so called.

THALWEG. In International Law. In definition of water boundaries between States, the middle or deepest or most navigable channel. Often styled "fairway" or "midway" or "main channel." 202 U. S. 49.

THANE. In Saxon Law. A word which sometimes signifies a nobleman, at others a freeman, a magistrate, an officer, or minister. A tenant of the part of the king's lands called the king's "thaneage." Termes de la Ley.

THAT. See THIS.

THAVIES INN. See INNS OF COURT.

THE. An article which particularizes the subject spoken of. "Grammatical niceties should not be resorted to without necessity; but it would be extending liberality to an unwarrantable length to confound the articles 'a' and 'the.' The most unlettered persons understand that 'a' is indefinite but 'the' refers to a certain object." 2 Binn. 516, per Tilghman, C. J. It will not be construed as equivalent to "this"; 24 S. W. Rep. (Tex.) 290.

THEATRE. A house for the exhibition of dramatic performances. 121 Pa. 225.

See 4 St. L. 188.

An edifice used for the purpose of dramatic, operatic, or other representations, plays, or performances for admission to which entrance money is received. The word does not import necessarily anything but the stage on which the actors play and the room in which the acting is done and seen.

Any edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays, or performances, for admission to which entrance-money is received, not including halls rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations. Id., 14 St. L. 126, 86 Ga. 477. Although the term has an extended signification and comprehends a variety of performances, yet it is conceived that all which it does legitimately comprehend partake more or less of the character of the drama. 22 Ala. 78. A music hall is not a theatre: 31 Q. B. D. 569. Theatrical performances may include negro minstrel performances; 4 Lea 812; but not tumbling or fencing; 6 T. R. 286. Where a statute prohibits the obstruction of passage-ways in a theatre, it should be literally construed, and does not give the proprietor any discretion to allow persons to stand in the passage-ways, even though the number be not so great as to prevent free exit in case of danger; 14 Daly 125. That a number of seats for a performance were sold after knowledge that the seats were filled is sufficient proof to sustain a judgment, in the absence of evidence that such sale was in opposition to defendant's wishes; id. A theatre ticket is a mere license to enter the house and witness the performance and may be revoked at the pleasure of the manager; 12 Gray 231; 51 N. Y. 246; 13 M. & W. 893; but see 93 Pa. 234, where it was held that the purchaser of a particular seat in a theatre acquired more than a mere license; that his right was more in the nature of a lease, entitling him to peaceful ingress and egress and exclusive possession of the designated seats during the performance.

Spectators may express their feelings by applause or hissing, but if any number of persons come to a theatre with a preconcerted design of making a disturbance, though no personal violence is offered, they are guilty of a riot; Wandell, Theatres 238.

A visitor is entitled to a seat. This right depends on the nature of his ticket. If it is for a reserved seat, he has a right to that particular seat; if not reserved, then to any one which he may find unoccupied and which has not been previously sold to another; 10 Phila. 180. A return check given to one after the performance commences may be transferred by the spectator to some other person; 12 Cent. L. J. 359; but the holder of a return check cannot transfer the same if the original ticket of admission was non-transferable; Wandell, Theatres 246. The proprietor has the right to annex to tickets of admission the condition that they shall not be transferable, and if transferred, that they shall be worthless; 19 Abb. N. C. 301; for a license is personal to the licensee and is not salable nor transferable; 51 N. Y. 250. It has been held that the proprietor is not liable to a patron for property left in his private box which was stolen; 39 N. Y. Supp. 1039.

THEFT. A popular term for larceny. Acts constituting embezzlement or swindling may be properly so called. 21 Tex. App. 133. See 1 id. 68.

In Scotch Law. The secret and felonious abstraction of the property of another for sake of lucre, without his consent. Alison, Cr. Law 260.

THEFT-BOTE. The act of receiving a man's goods from the thief, after they had been stolen by him, with the intent that he shall escape punishment. This is an offence punishable at common law by fine and imprisonment. Hale, Pl. Cr. 180.

THEGN. A thane (q. v.). English.

THEGNAGE, TENURE BY. A Northumbrian tenure of the thirteenth century and beyond. 2 Holdas. Hist. E. L. 3rd. ed., 168.

THEIR. In certain will, not rigidly given plurality to the pronoun "their." 203 U. S. 348.

THELONMANNUS. The toll-man or officer who receives toll. Cowell.

THELUSSON ACT. The stat. 39 & 40 Geo. III., passed in consequence of objections to a Mr. Thelussont's will for the purpose of preventing the creation of perpetuities. See PERPETUITY; 4 Ves. 231.

THEM. Another form of "theme" (q. v.).

THEME. The power of having jurisdiction over naves or villeins, with their suits or offspring, lands, goods and chattels. Burrill; Co. Litt. 116 a. Otherwise written "them" and "team." The word occurs in old Scotch law, and is defined by Skene, the power of having servants and slaves. Id.; De Verb. Signif.

THEMMAGIUM. A duty or acknowledgment paid by inferior tenants in respect of theme or team (q. v.). Wharton; Cowell.

THEN. As an adverb of time, means "at that time," referring to a time specified, past or future. It has no power of itself to fix a time; it refers to time already fixed. Anderson; 16 S. C. 329. As an adverb of contingency, means "in that event." Id.; 20 N. J. L. 505. Although, strictly, an adverb of time, it often intends an event or contingency, and is equivalent to "in that event," or "in that case." In this sense it designates a limitation of an estate, or a future contingency on which it is made to depend. Thus employed, it is a word of reference, not indicating any particular point of time. Id.; 6 Gray 24.

THEN AND THERE. In an indictment, refer to some foregoing averment by which their effect is determined. If that is a single act, and the indictment avers that "then and there" another act occurred, the necessary import is that the two acts were precisely co-existent, and the word "then" refers to a precise time. When the antecedent averment fixes no precise time, "then" used afterward, of course fixes no definite time. Anderson; 19 Pick. 126. When time and place have once been named with certainty it is sufficient to refer to them afterward by the words "then and there"; the effect being the same as if the time and the place were repeated. Id. Words of reference, and when the time and place have once been named with certainty, it is sufficient to refer to them afterwards by these words. 24 N. H. 148. Where an averment merely declares a legal conclusion, the words "then and there" need not be repeated to it. 78 Me. 74.

THENCE. In surveying, and in description of land by courses and distances, this word preceding each course given, imports that the following course is continuous with the one before it. 141 Mass. 66; 6 N. E. Rep. 702.

THEOCRACY. A species of government which claims to be immediately directed by God.

THEOWES, THEOROMEN, THEWS. Slaves, captives, or bondmen. Spelm. Feuda.

THEREUPON. Without delay or lapse of time; as, in a minute that a committee, having made its announcement, a motion was "thereupon made" and carried. Anderson; 133 Mass. 205. In a declaration, was taken to mean "in consideration thereof," where the context seemed to require it. Id. Immediately. 9 L. J. Ex. 373; 6 M. & W. 493. See 8 Q. B. 79, where the terms thereupon and thereby are distinguished.

THEREUNDER. "Thereunder" means under this or that. 152 Ky. 167, 153 S. W. 232.

THERewith. As used in the reform act; 2 W. IV. c. 45; referring to house, etc. That any land occupied, therewith has reference to time and not to locality. 23 L. J. C. P. 88; 60 id. 117.

THESAURUS. Treasure; a sum of money hidden or buried. Burrill; Inst. 2. 1. 39. A deposit or concealment of money made so long ago that no memory of it exists, so that it is now without an owner. Id.; Calv. Lex. In Old English Law. Treasury, or exchequer. Id.; Cowell.

THESAURUS INVENTUS. Treasure found; treasure-trove. Burrill; Bract. fol. 119 b, 122.

THESE OTHERS. See THIS.

THESMOTHETE. A law-maker; a law-giver. R. & L. Dict.

THIEF. One who has been guilty of larceny or theft. The term covers both compound and simple larceny. 1 Hill 25.

THINGS. By this word is understood every object, except man, which may become an active subject of right. Code du Canton de Berne, art. 332. In this sense it is opposed, in the language of the law, to the word persona. See CHOSE; PROPERTY; RES.

THINGS REAL (REALTY). Such things as are permanent, fixed and immovable, which cannot be carried out of their place, as lands and tenements. 2 Bl. Com. 16.

THINGS PERSONAL. Goods, money and all other movables, which may attend the owner's person wherever he thinks proper to go. 2 Bl. Com. 16.

THINGUS. In Saxon Law. Athane or nobleman; knight or freeman. Cowell.

THINK. To believe, consider, esteem. Anderson. A finding by a jury that they "think" that certain horses were not struck by a particular train was held to sufficiently express the finding of the fact. Id.; 59 Iowa 414.

THIRD-BOROW. In Old English Law. A constable. Lombard, Duty of Const. 6; 28 Hen. VIII. c. 10.

THIRD-CLASS MATTER. See MAIL MATTER.

THIRD-NIGHT-AWN-HINDE. By the laws of St. Edward the Confessor, if any man lay a third night in an inn, he was called a "third-night-awn-hinde," and his host was answerable for him if he committed any offence. The first night he was reckoned a stranger; the second night a guest; and the third night an awn-hinde. Bract. l. 3; Whart.

THIRD PARTIES. A term used to include all persons who are not parties to the contract, agreement, or instrument of writing by which their interest in the thing conveyed is sought to be affected. 1 Mart. La. N. s. 384.

But it is difficult to give a very definite idea of third persons; for sometimes those who are not parties to the contract, but who represent the rights of the original parties, as executors, are not to be considered third persons. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1835.

THIRD PENNY. Of the fines and other profits of the county courts (originally, when those courts had superior jurisdiction, before other courts were created) two parts were reserved to the king, and a third part or penny to the earl of the county. See Kennett, Paroch. Antiq. 418.

THIRD PERSON. A person who is a stranger to a transaction or proceeding; in other words, someone who is not a party at all. Byrne. One not a party or privy to a suit or instrument writing. English.

Contracts for the Benefit of. The right of a third person to sue on a contract made for his benefit between others, to the consideration of which he is a stranger, is a subject of great conflict in the authorities. 7 A. & Eng. Ency. 2nd ed., 104.

English Doctrine. It was early held that, whatever the general rule, where the person to be benefited was the child of the promisee the child could maintain an action against the promisor upon the contract. Id.; 2 Lev. 210. This general rule was reiterated in later cases, and has become the firmly established doctrine in England, admitting of no exception even in the case of parties nearly related to each other. Id.; 4 B. & Ad. 433.

American Doctrine. The doctrine that a third party for whose benefit a contract is made may sue upon it, is adopted in most of the United States, and is frequently referred to, therefore, as the "American doctrine." This principle has been most completely developed in New York, whereas in some of the states the English rule obtains. Id., 106.

The daughter of a donor, having only an expectancy in his estate, is not a "third person" in the meaning of a statute. 141 Ky. 816, 133 S. W. 1001.

THIRDED. The direction that she be "thirded" should be understood to mean that the wife should be entitled to a life estate in one-third of the estate. 4 Dana (Ky.) 162.

THIRLAGE. In Scotch Law. A servitude by which lands arestricted or thirled to a particular mill and the possessors bound to grind their grain there, for the payment of certain multures and sequels as the agreed price of grinding. Erskine, Inst. 2: 9, 18.

THIS. Used of things before state, refers to the thing last mentioned, while "that" refers to the thing first mentioned; but "these others" refers to others than those just mentioned. Anderson: 66 Pa. 251. It is a simple word of relation and its ordinary grammatical meaning will not be extended so as to include something else than that to which it relates. 14 Q. B. D. 720.

THOLEN AN ASSIZE. A plea in bar in Scotland in a criminal case to the effect that the accused has once been tried for the offence charged. 35 Am. L. Reg. 629.

THOROUGHFARE. A street or way opening at both ends to another street or public highway, so that one can go through and get out of it without returning. It differs from a cul de sac, which is open only at one end.

Whether a street which is not a thoroughfare is a highway seems not fully settled; 1 Vent. 189. In a case tried in 1790 where the locus in quo had been used as a common street for fifty years, but was no thoroughfare, Lord Kenyon held that it would make no difference; for otherwise the street would be a trap to make people trespassers; 11 East 375. This decision in several subsequent cases was much criticised, though not directly overruled; 5 Taunt. 126; 3 B. & Ald. 456; 3 Bingh. 447; 1 Camp. 260; 4 Ad. & E. 698. But in a recent English case the decision of Lord Kenyon was affirmed by the unanimous opinion of the court of queen's bench. The doctrine established in the latter case is that it is a question for the jury on the evidence, whether a place which is not a thoroughfare is a highway or not; 14 E. L. & E. 69. And see 28 id. 30. The United States authorities seem to follow the English; 8 Allen 242; 24 N. Y. 559 (overruling 28 Barb. 103); 87 Ill. 189; 8 C. 20 Am. Rep. 49 and note; contra, 2 R. I. 178. See HIGHWAY; STREET.

THOUSAND. This word may be custom or usage of trade acquire a peculiar meaning, as when applied to rabbits it has been held to denote one hundred dozen; 3 B. & Ad. 728.

THREAD. A figurative expression used to signify the central line of a stream or watercourse. See FILUM AQUÆ; WATERCOURSE; RIVER.

THREAT. A menace of destruction or injury to the lives, character, or property of those against whom it is made. To extort money under threat of charging the prosecutor with an unnatural crime has been held to be robbery; 1 Park. Cr. R. 199; but to extort money or other valuable thing by threat of prosecution for passing counterfeit money, or any prosecution except that for an unnatural crime, is not robbery; 7 Humph. 45; though it is a criminal offense; 11 Mod. 137; 2 Dall. 399, n. It must be under such circumstances as to operate, to some extent at least, on the mind of the one whom it is expected to influence. The meaning of the word implies that it is a menace of some kind, which in some manner comes to the knowledge of the one sought to be affected; 84 La. 478. See THREATENING LETTER.

In Evidence. Menace. See CONFESSION.

THREATENING LETTER. Sending threatening letters to persons for the purpose of extorting money is said to be a misdemeanor at common law. 4 Bla. Com. 126. The threat must be of a nature calculated to overcome a firm and prudent man; but this rule has reference to the general nature of the evil threatened, and not to the probable effect of the threat on the mind of the particular party addressed; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 512. The party who makes a threat may be held to bail for his good behavior. See Com. Dig. Battery (D).

By act of congress of Sept. 26, 1888, the sending of any postal card or mail matter with threatening language on the outside thereof is forbidden and made punishable by fine and imprisonment; R. S. 1 Supp. 631. Postal cards held within the act were: One from a creditor threatening to "place the claim with our law agency for collection"; 40 Fed. Rep. 684; demanding payment and threatening to place it in the hands of a lawyer for collection; id. Held not within the act: notice that a debt is past due and that a collector has called several times; id.; and notice that rent was due and if not paid would be placed in the hands of an officer; 51 id. 817. Extraneous evidence is not admissible to show that the language of a postal card on its face threatening or abusive, was not so intended by the sender, and not so understood by the recipient; 2 Mo. App. Repr. 980.

Statutes exist in many of the United States, though they vary somewhat in their provisions, some of them requiring the threatening to have been done "maliciously," others "knowingly." The indictment for this offence need not specify the crime threatened to be charged, for the specific nature of the crime which the prisoner intended to charge might intentionally be left in doubt; 3 Heisk. 262; 8 Barb. 547. The threat need not be to accuse before a judicial tribunal; 2 M. & R. 14; 30 Mich. 480. A person whose property has been stolen has himself no power to punish the thief without process of law, and cannot claim the right to obtain compensation for the loss of his property by maliciously threatening to accuse him of the offence, or to do an injury to his person or property, with intent to extort property from him; 24 Me. 71; 128 Mass. 55. A mere threat that the prosecutor would be indicted or complained of has been held to be within the statute, even though no distinct crime was spoken of in the letter, because of the likelihood of threatening letters being written with as much disguise and artifice as possible, but still being sufficient to accomplish the purpose intended; 68 Me. 473; 63 Mo. 66. See 3 Cr. L. Mag. 720; WHIPPING.

THREE-DOLLAR PIECE. A gold coin of the United States, of the value of three dollars.

The three-dollar piece was authorized by the seventh section of the act of Feb. 21, 1838, 10 Stat. at L. It is of the same fineness as the other gold coins of the United States. The weight of the coin is 77.4 grains.

The three-dollar piece is a legal tender in payment of any amount; R. S. § 9611.

THREE-MILE LIMIT. The effect of the Volstead Act upon shipping is modified by the terms of the Convention between the United States and Great Britain, ratified May 22, 1924, which recognizes the historic three-mile limit (low-water mark) as defining the territorial margin for ordinary purposes. Thorpe, National and State Prohibition, §63, p. 79. See SEAL FISHERIES; TERRITORIAL WATERS.

THREE-WEEKS COURT. What practically amounts to forfeiture is found in the Kentish custom of gavelkind. If the tenant of land held in gavelkind falls into arrears with his services and rents, the lord is to get permission of his own Three-Weeks Court to distrain the chattels of his tenant found upon the tenement. This attempt to distrain is to be continued for four sessions of this court of the lord, and if before the fourth court sufficient chattels cannot be found, the court then awards that the lord may take the tenement into his hands en noun de distresse ausi cum boef or vache, etc. 18 Harv. L. R. 40.

THRESHING MACHINE. The term includes the horse power by means of which the separator is propelled. 15 Neb. 428.

THRITHING. A third part of a county; a division of a county consisting of three or more hundreds. Burrill; Cowell. Corrupted to the form "riding," which was used later in Yorkshire. Id.

THROAT. In Medical Jurisprudence. The anterior part of the neck. Dunglison, Med. Dict.; 1 Chitty, Med. Jur. 97, n.

The word throat, in an indictment which charged the defendant with murder by cutting the throat of the deceased, does not mean, and is not to be confined to, that part of the neck which is scientifically called the throat, but signifies that which is commonly called the throat. 6 C. & P. 401.

THROUGH. Its primary meaning is from end to end, or from side to side; but its meaning is often qualified by the context, to mean simply "within". 170 U. S. 602, 603. In an act providing that no road shall be laid out "through" the grounds of a cemetery company, held to mean "over." Anderson; 119, 111. 147. See INTO.

THROUGH CARRIAGE. See THROUGH ROUTE.

THROUGH RATE. See THROUGH ROUTE.

THROUGH ROUTE. A "through route" is an arrangement, express or implied, between connecting railroads for the continuous carriage of goods from the originating point on the line of one carrier to destination on the line of another. Through carriage implies a "through rate." It may merely be an aggregation of separate rates fixed independently by the several carriers forming the "through route"; as where the "through rate" is "the sum of the locals" on the several connecting lines or is the sum of lower rates otherwise separately established by them for through transportation. 12 I. C. C. 163. Ordinary "through rates" lower than the "sum of the locals" are "joint rates." Prior to the amendment of the Act to Regulate Commerce (1906, c. 3591, § 4, 34 Stat. 584, 590) authorizing the Commission to establish through routes and joint rates, all "joint rates" were (as most still are) the result of agreements between carriers, which fix also the "divisions"; that is, the share of the "joint rate" to be received by each. 7 I. C. C. 323, 329. The bases of such divisions differ greatly in practice. Sometimes all the carriers participate in the joint rate in the proportions which their local rates bear to the sum of the locals; in other words, the percentage of reduction from the local rate is the same for each. The share of each being a matter of bargain, it may be fixed at an arbitrary amount. 21 C. C. 553, 567-8. In constructing the joint rates the charge per mile ordinarily decreases with the increase of the length of haul. But even where the through route and through rates are matters of express agreement between the carriers, a continuous "joint rate" does not always extend from the point of origin to point of destination. There may be, on the "through route," an intermediate point at which, in common railroad practice, the rate "breaks." That is, the "joint rate" from the point of origin ends at this "rate-breaking point" and there is charged for the distance beyond the same local rate or joint rate that would have been charged had the business originated at this intermediate point. That is, instead of a "joint through rate," there is a "combination." The so-called "Ohio River crossings" or "gateways" are among the "rate-breaking points." 245 U. S. 139.

THROW OUT A BILL. To ignore a bill, as a charge or bill of indictment. English.

THURINGIAN CODE. See CODE.

TICK. Credit: as, if a servant usually buy for the master upon tick, and the servant buy something without the master's order, yet if the master were trusted by the trader he is liable; 3 Kebl. 625; 10 Mod. 111.

TICKET. A railroad ticket may be a receipt or voucher, rather than a contract; 5 L. R. A. 818; 77 Mo. 663; 41 Ohio St. 560; it is the evidence of a contract, but does not constitute the whole contract; 84 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 219; Wheeler, Carriers 263; 15 Pac. Rep. (Kan.) 899; it may contain some condition or limitation which becomes a part of the contract; 13 Hun 359; 113 Pa. 519; 1 Harv. Law Rev. 17. The actual contract may be shown by parol testimony; 143 U. S. 80; 80 Ia. 92. The purchaser of a railroad ticket has a right to rely upon the statements of the agent; 21 Oreg. 121; 52 Fed. Rep. 197; 106 Mass. 153. Agents at intermediate stations and gatekeepers cannot vary the terms of the contract; 137 Mass. 293; 63 Md. 100.

A ticket good between two designated stations, upon trains which stop at such points, entitles the holder thereof to ride from intermediate stations to either of said stations, or from such stations to intermediate stations, regardless of conditions in the ticket to the contrary; 26 S. E. Rep. (Ga.) 358. But where a ticket provided that it should be forfeited if used for any other station than the one named, it was held that a passenger who rode on it to a point beyond the station named, paying his fare for the additional distance, was liable for the fare for the entire distance travelled; [1895] 1 Q. B. 562. One who takes the wrong train by mistake can leave it at the first stopping-place, without payment of fare; this rule does not apply to one who has a season ticket and takes a train believing that it is good on that train; 40 N. E. Rep. (Mass.) 20. Where a mileage book purchased by one person is sold to another who presents it, the conductor cannot take it up, but may collect full fare; 55 Alb. L. J. 164. As between a conductor and a passenger, a ticket is conclusive as to the right of the latter to travel; 15 Ill. App. 100; 50 Fed. Rep. 496; 15 Ind. App. 886. As a rule a passenger has a right to presume that a ticket agent will perform his whole duty and is not bound to examine his ticket to see that it is correct, unless put upon his inquiry; 70 Fei. Rep. 585; 166 Pa. 4; 77 Ga. 678. When a carrier has notified a connecting carrier that it will not recognize the tickets of the latter, it may refuse to accept such tickets; 157 U. S. 225.

A ticket defaced by a passenger so as to be unintelligible, may be refused; 78 Md. 207. A carrier may specify upon what trains a ticket is good; 61 Vt. 878; or charge fare for the actual distance travelled, if a passenger takes a wrong train; 40 Ind. 87; it must stop at a station for which it has sold a ticket; 79 Va. 180. A purchaser for value and without notice, of a ticket fraudulently obtained from a carrier, acquires no title thereto; 86 Ohio St. 647. A passenger who accepts a ticket and signs it is bound by the conditions expressed in it; 133 U. S. 146; 47 Ind. 79; if such conditions are reasonable; 100 U. S. 24; but not if he is unable to read, and no explanation is made by the agent who sells it; 28 Fed. Rep. 763; or if he is misled by the carrier; 30 N. W. Rep. (Ind.) 434. There is no presumption that the passenger has read a notice on his ticket; 13 Gray 886; 49 N. Y. 313. See 60 Fed. Rep. 634; but see 46 L. J. C. P. 768.

Where the conditions of a ticket are such that an innocent holder thereof may use it, it is the subject of embezzlement; 43 N. E. Rep. (Mass.) 499.

A passenger having lost his ticket cannot show by others that he purchased it; 14 Lea 128. The rule which requires the production of a ticket is reasonable; 97 Mich. 439; 15 N. Y. 455; 81 Ill. App. 485; [1898] 1 Q. B. 253; reasonable time to produce one should be given; 81 Ill. App. 435; a conductor is not bound to search the pockets of a passenger to find his ticket; 14 Lea 128. A passenger may be required to exhibit his ticket before entering a train; 1 Ill. App. 473, 449; 9 Tex. App. 206; and if he exhibits his ticket and demands a seat he has a right to a seat before he surrenders it; 53 Mo. 317.

A passenger cannot stop over at an intermediate station unless such right is conferred by his contract; 61 Cal. 425; 24 N. J. L. 435; 13 Hun 359; 84 Md. 582. A purchaser of a limited ticket over connecting lines is only bound to make a continuous trip over the part of the route covered by each coupon of the ticket, but must complete the trip within the time limited in the ticket; 49 Ark. 529; 67 Ill. 893; 18 L. R. A. 55.

When a carrier furnishes facilities, it may require a passenger to purchase a ticket before entering a train; 75 Ill. 125; 53 Me. 279; 17 Mo. App. 158; 46 Ind. 298; 132 Mass. 116. It must keep a ticket office open for a reasonable time before the departure of trains; 90 Ia. 562; 67 Ill. 816; 15 Minn. 496.

A statute regulating the issuance and taking up of tickets by carriers is an exercise of the police power; 63 Ind. 552; and does not impair the obligation of contracts nor interfere with commerce between the states; id.

A statute limiting the sale of passage tickets and tickets for sleeping accommodations on vessels and railway trains to authorized agents is not in violation of the provisions of the constitution of the United States prohibiting the depriving of citizens of the rights of liberty, property, or the equal protection of the law, nor does it confer a special privilege upon any class of persons; 145 U. S. 263; 19 N. Y. L. J. 1541; 149 Ill. 600; 67 Minn. 345; 63 Ind. 532; 14 Phila. 394; nor does it create a monopoly; 50 N. Y. S. 56; but see Tiedm. Lim. Pol. Pow. 293.

The Michigan supreme court holds that a railroad company cannot be compelled to sell mileage books at a flat two-cent rate; the company's right to fix its tolls is a vested right which the state must pay for if it takes it away; Asso. Press Despatch, Oct. 8, 1898.

A ticket sold at a reduced rate on condition that it is not transferable is not valid in the hands of a transferee; 43 S. W. Rep. (Tex.) 901.

The holder of a ticket from Trenton to Elmira was injured in Pennsylvania through defendant's negligence; it was held that his right to recover was governed by the law of Pennsylvania; 176 Pa. 45.

See BAGGAGE; PASSENGER; COMMON CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS; INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION; RATES.

TICKET OF LEAVE. In English Law. The colloquial name of the "license to be at large," which the Home Secretary may at any time grant, upon such condition as he may think fit and with power of revocation, to anyone undergoing penal servitude.

The conditions usually imposed are those specified in the Penal Servitude Act, 1864. They are merely such as are calculated to make the released convict lead a useful and honest life. Property acquired by the convict while on license does not vest in the administrator, if any, appointed by the crown to manage his property; and he can sue or contract like any ordinary person. He must keep the police informed of his residence for the time being; but even this condition is not onerous, as it may be complied with through the post. A well conducted convict can obtain a ticket of leave when he has served three-fourths of his sentence. Byrne.

TIDE LANDS. Lands covered and uncovered by the flow and ebb of the tide. The United States may grant, for appropriate purposes, titles or rights in the soil below high-water mark of tide waters. But they have never done so by general laws, and, unless in some case of international duty or public exigency, have acted upon the policy of leaving the administration and disposition of the sovereign rights in navigable waters, and in the soil under them, to the control of the states, respectively, when organized and admitted into the Union; 153 U. S. 278.

The words "public lands," as used in legislation, mean such as are subject to sale or other disposal under general laws, and not tide lands; 92 U. S. 761; 125 U. S. 618. Tide lands are not subject to the location of land scrip under the act of 1873; 153 U. S. 278, 287.

TIDE-WATER. Water which flows and reflows with the tide. All arms of the sea, bays, creeks, coves, or rivers, in which the tide ebbs and flows, are properly denominated tide-waters.

The term tide-water is not limited to water which is salt, but embraces, also, so much of the water of fresh rivers as is propelled backwards by the ingress and pressure of the tide; 5 Co. 107; 108 Mass. 486; which might be said to be within the ebb and flow; 7 Pet. 324. The flowing, however, of the waters of a lake into a river do not constitute such a river a tidal or, technically, navigable river; 20 Johns. 88.

The bed or soil of all tide-waters belongs, in England, to the crown, and in this country to the state in which they lie; and the waters themselves are public; so that all persons may use the same for the purpose of navigation and fishery, unless restrained by law; 5 B. & A. 804; 1 Macq. Hon. L. 49; 152 U. S. 1. See 23 Or. 410; id. 438. In England, the power of parliament to restrain or improve these rights is held to be absolute; 4 B. & C. 598. In this country, such a power is subject to the limitations of the federal constitution; and while both the general and state governments may adopt measures for the improvement of navigation; 4 Rawle 9; 9 Conn. 438; and the states may grant private rights in tide-waters, provided they do not conflict with the public right of navigation; 21 Pick. 344; yet neither the general nor the state governments have the power to destroy or materially impair the right of navigation. See BRIDGE; FISHERY; RIVER; RIPARIAN PROPRIETORS; TERRITORIAL WATERS; WHARF.

TIDES. See NEAP TIDES; SPRING TIDES.

TIE. When two persons receive an equal number of votes at an election, there is said to be a tie. Neither is elected. When the votes are given on any question to be decided by a deliberative assembly, and there is a tie, the question is lost. See MAJORITY.

TIEL. An old manner of spelling tel: such as, nul tiel record, no such record.

TIEMPO INHABIL. In Louisiana. A time when a man is not able to pay his debts.

TIERCE. A liquid measure, containing the third part of a pipe, or forty-two gallons.

TIGNI IMMITTENDI (Lat.). In Civil Law. A servitude which confers the right of inserting a beam or timber from the wall of one house into that of a neighboring house, in order that it may rest on the latter and that the wall of the latter may bear this weight. Dig. 8. 2. 86; 8. 5. 14.

TIMBER. The body, stem, or trunk of a tree, or the larger pieces or sticks of wood which enter the frame-work of a building or other structure, excluding the plank, boards, shingles, or lath which may be used to complete the structure. 47 Wis. 192. The term now seems to include all sorts of wood from which any useful articles can be made or which may be used to advantage in any class of manufacture or construction: 14 Fed. Rep. 824. Railroad ties are held to be timber; 52 Wis. 393; fence rails are not; 43 Tex. 374; nor are trees, when suitable only for firewood; 51 Me. 417. Generically, only such trees as are used in building ships or dwellings. When the trunk of a tree is severed from the root and felled to the earth it becomes "timber" or "lumber" according to the use to which it can be applied. Anderson; 6 McL. 37. The body, stem or trunk of a tree, or the larger pieces or sticks of wood which enter the frame-work of a building or other structure, excluding the plank, boards, shingles or lath used to complete the structure. Id.; 47 Wis. 192.

Does not mean "trees" when applied to a grant for purposes of railroad construction. 250 U. S. 21.

A federal act of 1897 makes it a penal offence to set fire to timber on the public domain.

TIMBER TREES. Oak, ash, elm, in all places, and, by local custom, such other trees as are used in building; 2 Bla. Com. 281; also beech, chestnut, walnut, cedar, fir, aspen, lime, sycamore, and birch trees; 6 George III. ch. 48; and also such as are used in the mechanical arts; Lewis, Cr. L. 508. Timber-trees, both standing, fallen, and severed and lying upon the soil, constitute a portion of the realty, and are embraced in a mortgage of the land; 1 Wash. R. P. 13; 18 Me. 53; and pass, by a judicial sale under such mortgage, to the purchaser; 1 Wall. 53; 54 Me. 313; 1 Den. 554; 61 Pa. 294. Some contracts for the sale of timber trees are contracts for the sale of an interest in lands; 10 N. Y. 117; 58 Pa. 208; 119 Ind. 7; and, as such, within the statute of frauds; 83 Pa. 266; 50 Ohio St. 57. The better action for damages for cutting and carrying away timber trees seems to be that of trespass quare clausum fregit et de bonis asportatis (unless otherwise designated by statute); 2 Greenl. 173, 387. See WASTE; SALE; TREE.

TIMBERING. Mining. By "timbering" is meant the protection against falls of the roof formation, by means of horizontal timbers or caps extending across the passageway just under the roof, the ends of such timbers resting upon vertical timbers or posts. 161 Ky. 335, 170 S. W. 960.

TIME. The measure of duration. Lapse of time often furnishes a presumption, stronger or weaker according to the length of time which has passed, of the truth of certain facts, such as the legal title to rights, payment of or release from debts.

Time in Great Britain, in any statute or legal instrument, means, by statute, Greenwich mean time, and in Ireland, Dublin time. The only standard of time recognized by the courts is the meridian of the sun; not any arbitrary standard; 84 Ga. 159; 3 H. & N. 866.

The general rule of law is that the performance of a contract must be completed at or within the time fixed by the contract; Leake, Contr., 8d ed. 772. Wherever, in cases not governed by particular customs of trade, the parties bind themselves to the performance of duties within a certain number of days, they have to the last minute of the last day to perform their obligations; 6 M. & G. 598. See PERFORMANCE.

Generally, in computing time, the first day is excluded and the last included; 4 T. B. Monr. 464; 26 Ala. N. S. 547; see 3 Harr. Del. 461; 5 Blackf. 819; 16 Ohio 408; 10 Rich. 395; 12 Colo. 285; excluding the day on which an act is done, when the computation is to be made from such an act; 15 Ves. Ch. 248; 18 Cow. 659; 1 Pick. 485; 19 Mo. 60; including it, according to Dougl. 463; 417; 15 Mass. 193; 18 How. 151; except where the exclusion will prevent forfeiture; 2 Camp. 294; 4 Me. 299. The rule which excludes the terminus a quo is not absolute, it may be included when necessary to give effect to the obvious intention; 147 U. S. 640. Time from and after a given day excludes that day; 1 Pick. 485; 1 N. & M'C. 505; 153 Pa. 465. But see 94 U. S. 580. A policy of insurance includes the last day of the term for which it is issued; L. R. 5 Exch. 290. Particular words, e. g. at, on, or upon a certain time, will be construed according to a reasonable interpretation of the contract; 10 A. & E. 870. The use of the word until generally implies an intention to exclude the day to which it refers, except it appears otherwise from the context; 10 Neb. 524; 120 Mass. 94; 87 Am. Dec. 692; ill is held to include the day referred to; 16 Barb. 352.

Sunday is a dies non, and a power that maybe exercised up to and including a given day of the month may generally, when that day happens to be Sunday, be exercised on the succeeding day; 183 U. S. 299; 147 id. 47. Sunday is said to be included in the computation when the time exceeds days and excluded when less than seven; 2 Mich. N. P. 108. See SUNDAY; DIES NON.

Deeds, bills of exchange, letters, and other written instruments are generally construed to have been made and issued at the time of their date, but the execution of a deed may be averred and proved according to the fact; 10 Exch. 40. Courts will always adopt that construction in the computation of time which will uphold and enforce, rather than destroy, bona fide transactions and titles, and whenever it is necessary to prevent a forfeiture or to effectuate the clear intention of the parties, the dies a quo will be included; otherwise it will be excluded; 5 Dak. 325.

The construction of contracts with regard to the time of performance is the same in equity as at law; but in case of mere delay in performance, a court of equity will in general relieve against the legal consequences and decree specific performance upon equitable terms notwithstanding the delay, if the matter of the contract admits of that form of remedy. In such cases it is said that in equity time is not considered to be of the essence of the contracts; L. R. 3 Ch. 67. Ordinarily time is not of the essence of the contract, but it may be made so by express stipulation of the parties; see 128 U. S. 403; or it may be so by implication, because of the nature of the property involved; 144 U. S. 394; or because of the avowed object of the seller or purchaser; 134 U. S. 68; 144 id. 394; or from the nature of the contract itself; or by one party giving the other notice that performance must be made within a certain reasonable time fixed in the notice; 3 Ohio St. 328; 5 C. E. Green 367; time is always of the essence of unilateral contracts; 51 N. Y. 629; 35 Md. 352; 50 Ill. 298. Completion of a contract within a reasonable time is sufficient, if no time is stipulated; 122 U. S. 300.

In determining whether stipulations as to the time of performance of a contract of sale are conditions precedent, the court will seek to discover the real intention of the parties in deciding whether time is of the essence of the contract; Benj. Sales § 598. If a thing sold is of greater or less value according to the lapse of time, stipulations with regard to it must be literally complied with both at law and in equity; 42 Barb. 320; 10 Allen 289. As to whether in English bicycle law requiring the use of a lamp "during the period between one hour after sunset and one hour before sunrise," has led to a controversy as to whether this is local or Greenwich time; see 59 Alb. L. J. 103. See YEAR.

In Pleading. A point in or space of duration at or during which some fact is alleged to have been committed.

In criminal actions, both the day and the year of the commission of the offence must appear; but there need not be an express averment, if they can be collected from the whole statement; 5 S. & R. 315. The prosecutor may give evidence of an offence committed on any day which is previous to the finding of the indictment; 5 S. & R. 316; but a day subsequent to the trial must not be laid; Add. Pa. 88.

In mixed and real actions, no particular day need be alleged in the declaration; 3 Chitty, Pl. 620; Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 89.

In personal actions, all traversable affirmative facts should be laid as occurring on some day; Steph. Pl. 292; but no day need be alleged for the occurrence of negative matter; Com. Dig. Pleader (C19); and a failure in this respect is, in general, aided after verdict; 13 East 407. Where the cause of action is a trespass of a permanent nature or constantly repeated, it should be laid with a continuando, which title see. The day need not, in general, be the actual day of commission of the fact; 13 Johns. 287; 3 N. H. 299; if the actual day is not stated, it should be laid under a videlicet; Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 63. The exact time may become material, and must then be correctly laid; 10 B. & C. 215; 4 S. & R. 576; 1 Stor. 523; as, the time of execution of an ex parte written document; Gould, Pl. § 67. The defence must follow the time laid in the declaration, if time is not material; 1 Chitty, Pl. 509; 1 Saund. 14, 82; need not when it becomes material; 2 Saund. 5 a, b (n. 3); or in pleading matter of discharge; 2 Burr. 944; 2 Stra. 944; or a record. Gould, Pl. § 63. See AT LEAST; INDEFINITE TIME; LOST TIME.

TIME BARGAIN. A contract for sale and delivery of stocks at a future day. Abbott. A time bargain is a contract for the sale of a certain amount of stock at a certain price on a future day, the vendor not in general having such stock to sell at the time of the contract, but intending to purchase it before the time appointed for the execution of the contract. Id.: M. & W. See FUTURES; OPTION; MARGIN.

TIME IMMEMORIAL, or OUT OF MIND. Time beyond legal memory.

See 14 L. R. A. 120, n.; OLD STYLE; REGAL YEARS; PRESCRIPTION; MEMORY; LIMITATIONS; MONTH; DAY; STATUTE.

TIME OUT OF MIND. See TIME IMMEMORIAL.

TIME POLICY. In Insurance. A policy in which the risk is limited to a certain fixed term or period of time specified.

TIME-TABLES. See PUNCTUALITY.

TIPLING-HOUSE. A place where spirituous liquors are sold and drunk in violation of law. Sometimes the mere selling is considered as evidence of keeping a tipling-house. 47 Ill. 870.

A public drinking-place, where liquor or other intoxicating drink is sold, to be drunk on the premises. 1 Colo. App. 289.

See KEEPING A TIPLING HOUSE.

TIPS. Small donations given and intended as personal gifts, in addition to the regular charge for the services rendered. 149 Ky. 377, 149 S. W. 828.

TIPSTAFF. An officer appointed by the marshal of the court of king's bench, to attend upon the judges with a kind of rod or staff tipped with silver.

In the United States, the courts sometimes appoint an officer who is known by this name, whose duty it is to attend on the court. Similar officers employed in the courts of Pennsylvania are so called.

TITHES. In English Law. A right to the tenth part of the produce of lands, the stock upon lands, and the personal industry of the inhabitants. These tithes are raised for the support of the clergy. Almost all the tithes of England and Wales are now commuted into rent charges, under 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 71, and the various statutes since passed; 8 Steph. Com. 731. In the United States there are no tithes.

TITHING. In English Law. Formerly, a district containing ten men, with their families. In each tithing there was a tithingman, whose duty it was to keep the peace, as a constable now is bound to do.

TITHINGMAN. In Saxon Law. The head or chief of a decennary of ten families; he was to decide all lesser causes between neighbors. Now tithingmen and constables are the same thing. Jacob, Law Dict.

In New England, a parish officer to keep good order in church. Webster, Dict.

TITLE. Estates. The means whereby the owner of lands hath the just possession of his property. Co. Litt. 345; 2 Bla. Com. 193. See 1 Ohio 349. This is the definition of title to lands only.

Either a naked possession, which is the most imperfect; a right of possession, either apparent or actual; or the mere right of property. Possession, the right of possession and the right of property joined, form a complete title. 2 Bla. Com. 195-198.

A bad title is one which conveys no property to the purchaser of an estate.

A doubtful title is one which the court does not consider to be so clear that it will enforce its acceptance by a purchaser, nor so defective as to declare it a bad title, but only subject to so much doubt that a purchaser ought not to be compelled to accept it; 1 J. & W. 508; 9 Cow. 344.

A good title is that which entitles a man by right to a property or estate, and to the lawful possession of the same.

A marketable title is one which a court of equity considers to be so clear that it will enforce its acceptance by a purchaser.

The doctrine of marketable titles is purely equitable and of modern origin; Atk. Tit. 26. At law every title not bad is marketable; 5 Taunt. 625; 6 id. 263; 1 Marsh. 238. See 2 Pa. L. J. 17.

Paramount Title. See EVICTION.

There are several stages or degrees requisite to form a complete title to lands and tenements. The lowest and most imperfect degree of title is a presumptive title or the mere possession, or actual occupation of the estate, without any apparent right to hold or continue such possession; this happens when one man disposes another. The next step to a good and perfect title is the right of possession, which may reside in one man while the actual possession is not in himself, but in another. This right of possession is of two sorts: an apparent right of possession, which may be defeated by proving a better, and an actual right of possession, which will stand the test against all opponents. The mere right of property, the jus proprietatis, without either possession or the right of possession. 2 Bla. Com. 193.

Title to real estate is acquired by two methods, namely, by descent and by purchase. See these words.

Title to personal property may accrue in three different ways: by original acquisition; by transfer by act of law; by transfer by act of the parties.

Title by original acquisition is acquired by occupancy, see OCCUPANCY; by accession, see ACCESSION; by intellectual labor. See PATENT; COPYRIGHT; TRADE-MARK.

The title to personal property is acquired and lost by transfer by act of law, in various ways: by forfeiture; succession; marriage; judgment; insolvency; intestacy. See those titles.

Title is acquired and lost by transfer by the act of the party, by gift, by contract or sale. See those titles.

In general, possession constitutes the criterion of title of personal property (q. v.), because no other means exist by which a knowledge of the fact to whom it belongs can be attained. A seller of a chattel is not, therefore, required to show the origin of his title, nor, in general, is a purchaser, without notice of the claim of the owner, compellable to make restitution; but it seems that a purchaser from a tenant for life of personal chattels will not be secure against the claims of those entitled in remainder; Cowp. 483; 1 Bro. C. C. 274.

As an exception to the rule that possession is the criterion of title of property may be mentioned the case of ships, the title of which can be ascertained by the register; 15 Ves. Ch. 60; 17 id. 251; 8 Price 256.

To convey a title, the seller must himself have a title to the property which is the subject of the transfer. But to this general rule there are exceptions. See SALE.

In Legislation. That part of an act of the legislature by which it is known and distinguished from other acts; the name of the act. While the title of a statute cannot be used to add to or take from the body thereof, yet in cases of doubt, it may be referred to as a help to the interpretation; 143 U. S. 457. See CONSTRUCTION.

Formerly the title was held to be no part of a bill, though it could be looked to when the statute was ambiguous; 3 Wheat. 610; 81 Wisc. 431; see 144 U. S. 550; 148 id. 447; 9 Q. B. D. 104; but it could not enlarge or restrain the provisions of the act itself; 5 Wall. 107. In later years constitutional provisions have required that the title of every legislative act shall correctly indicate the subject-matter of the act; Cooley, Const. Lim. 172. The object of this was mainly to prevent surprise in legislation. An act must have but one general object, which is fairly indicated by the title; a title may be general if it does not cover incongruous legislation; Endl. Interp. Stat. 59; 7 Ind. 631; 50 N. Y. 553; the use of the words "other purposes" have no effect; 23 Barb. 642; 8 Colo. App. 238. It is said that the courts will construe these provisions liberally rather than embarrass legislation by a construction, the strictness of which is unnecessary to the attainment of the beneficial purposes for which they were adopted; Cooley, Const. Lim. 178. In construing an act, the court will strike from it all that relates to the object not indicated by the title, and sustain the rest if it is complete in itself; id. 181; 92 Ala. 94. These provisions are usually considered mandatory, though they were held to be directory in 4 Cal. 388; 6 Ohio N. S. 187. In Pennsylvania, where an act of assembly is entitled a supplement to a former act, and the subject thereof is germane to that of the original act, its subject is sufficiently expressed; 77 Pa. 429; 88 id. 43.

See a paper in Rep. Am. Bar Association (1882) by U. M. Rose.

Personal Relations. A distinctive appellation denoting the rank to which the individual belongs in society. See RANK; NOBILITY.

Titles are assumed by foreign princes, and among their subjects they may exact these marks of honor; but in their intercourse with foreign nations they are not entitled to them as a matter of right; Wheat. Int. Law, 3d Eng. ed. § 159.

In Pleading. The right of action which the plaintiff has. The declaration must show the plaintiff's title, and if such title be not shown in that instrument the defect cannot be cured by any of the future pleadings. Bacon, Abr. Pleas, etc. (B 1).

In Rights. The name of a newspaper, a book, and the like. See TRADE-MARK.

TITLE OF ACT—Difference in Title Of and Body Of. Where the language of a statute in its ordinary meaning and grammatical construction leads to manifest contradiction of the apparent purpose of the enactment, or to some inconvenience or absurdity, hardship or injustice, presumably not intended, a construction may be put upon it which modifies the meaning of the words, and even the structure of the sentence. This is done sometimes by giving an unusual meaning to particular words, sometimes by altering their collocation or by rejecting them altogether, or by interpolating other words, under the influence, no doubt, or an irresistible conviction that the Legislature could not possibly have intended what its words signify, and that the modifications thus made are mere corrections of careless language, and really give the true intention. The ascertainment of the latter is the cardinal rule, or rather the end and object of all construction; and where the real design of the Legislature in ordaining a statute, although it be not precisely expressed, is yet plainly perceivable or ascertained with reasonable certainty, the language of the statute must be given such a construction as will carry that design into effect even if in so doing the exact letter of the law be sacrificed or though the construction be, indeed, contrary to the letter. 159 Ky. 194, 166 S. W. 1008. See FIRST-CLASS.

TITLE OF A CAUSE. The peculiar designation of a suit, consisting usually of the name of the court, the venue, and the parties. The method of arranging the names of the parties is not everywhere uniform. The English way, and that formerly in vogue in this country, and still retained in many of the states, is for the actor in each step of the cause to place his name first, as if he were plaintiff in that particular proceeding, and his adversary's afterwards. Thus the case of Upton v. White would, if taken from a county court to the supreme court on a writ of error by defendant, be entitled White v. Upton. In New York and many other states which have enacted codes of procedure, the rule now is that the original order of names of parties is retained throughout. See AD SECTAM.

TITLE, COVENANTS FOR. See COVENANT.

TITLE DEEDS. Those deeds which are evidences of the title of the owner of an estate. The person who is entitled to the inheritance has a right to the possession of the title-deeds; 1 Carr. & M. 633. As to a lien created by deposit of title-deeds, see LIEN.

TITLE OF ENTRY. The right to enter upon lands. Cowel. See ENTRY.

TITLE INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

TITLE, SUFFICIENCY OF. It is not necessary for the title to an act of the legislature to embrace an abstract of its contents. It is sufficient if the title contains a reasonable intimation of the matters under legislative consideration, to state the subject of the bill in general terms, and with fewest words, in accordance with the general custom, to which the framers of the Constitution intended the legislature to conform. Where there are numerous provisions having one general object, the title is sufficient if it fairly indicates the general purpose of the act. The details providing for the accomplishment of such purpose are to be regarded as necessary incidents. 6 Okl. Cr. 495.

TITULARS OF ERECTION. Persons who in Scotland, after the Reformation, obtained grants from the crown of the monasteries and priories then erected into temporal lordships. These grants were called "lords of erection" (q. v.) and "titulars of the lands." Bell.

TITULUS (Lat. from tueri, to protect). Title; the source or ground of possession; the means whereby possession of a thing is acquired, whether such possession be lawful or not: Burrill; 1 Mack. Civ. Law, 243.

In old English Law. Title; ground of ownership of land. A lawful cause or ground of possession. Id.; 8 Co. 153 b.

In old Ecclesiastical Law. A temple or church; the material edifice. Id.; Spelman. So called because the priest in charge of it derived therefrom his name and title.

TO. The word "to" has not a precise, fixed, legal meaning, but may signify within or into; as where a railroad is chartered to run to a city designated. Abbott; 52 G. 244. But generally "to" is a word of exclusion, unless the context clearly shows a different sense intended. Id.; 13 Me. 198. As commonly used, conveys the idea of moving toward and reaching a specified point; and the meaning is not satisfied unless the point or object is actually attained. But the word sometimes embraces a part of this idea only, or it is simply a word of direction, as we say "to the north" when we mean in that direction merely. In many cases the meaning is nearly synonymous with "toward." Id.; 54 Mich. 87.

An order extending the time for signing a bill of exceptions to a certain day, is inclusive of such day; 75 Md. 126; but "from" an object "to" an object excludes the terminus referred to; 84 Me. 459; 52 id. 252. See FROM.

TO WIT. That is to say; namely; scilicet; videlicet.

TOBACCO. In Iowa, Tennessee, Nebraska, and North Dakota the manufacture or sale of cigarettes and cigarette paper is absolutely prohibited. In Indiana, Minnesota, Maine, and Wisconsin the sale or gift of cigarettes, or any substitute therefor, to any minor is forbidden. In West Virginia, Nevada, and Maryland the method adopted is to impose a special license fee for selling cigarettes or cigarette paper at retail. In Washington a license is required and the sale is prohibited to minors under eighteen years of age. In Missouri any city or village is authorized to prohibit the sale to minors. In Iowa an act prohibiting the sale of cigarettes within the state by all persons save jobbers doing an interstate business, was held unconstitutional, so far as it amounts to a regulation of interstate commerce; 78 N. W. Rep. (La.) 1014. See ORIGINAL PACKAGE; UNMANUFACTURED TOBACCO.

TOBACCONIST. Any person, firm, or corporation whose business it is to manufacture cigars, snuff, or tobacco in any form. Act of Congress, July 13, 1896, § 9.

TOFT. A place or piece of ground on which a house formerly stood, which has been destroyed by accident or decay. 3 Broom & H. Com. 17.

TOGATI (Lat.). In Roman Law. Under the empire, when the toga had ceased to be the usual costume of the Romans, advocates were nevertheless obliged to wear it whenever they pleaded a cause. Hence they were called togati.

TOKEN. A document or sign of the existence of a fact.

Tokens are either public or general, or privy tokens. They are either true or false. When a token is false and indicates a general intent to defraud, and is used for that purpose, it will render the offender guilty of the crime of cheating; 12 Johns. 293; but if it is a mere privy token, as counterfeiting a letter in another man's name, in order to cheat but one individual, it would not be indictable; 9 Wend. 182; 1 Dall. 47. In England, this name is given to pieces of metal, made in the shape of money, passing among private persons by consent at a certain value. 2 Chitty, Com. Law 182. They are no longer permitted to pass as money.

TOKEN-MONEY. A tablet of metal once used in England by tradesmen and others as evidence of a sum due, the amount of which was specified thereon. English. See TOKEN.

TOLERATE. To allow so as not to hinder; to permit as something not wholly approved of; to suffer; to endure. 17 Blatchf. 890.

TOLERATION. In some countries, where religion is established by law, certain sects who do not agree with the established religion are nevertheless permitted to exist; and this permission is called toleration. They are permitted and allowed to remain rather as a matter of favor than a matter of right. By the Toleration Act of 1 W. & M. c. 18, and subsequent statutes down to the 35 & 36 Vict. c. 26, enabling any person to take any degree (other than a divinity degree) in the universities of Oxford, Cambridge, or Durham, the disabilities of the Roman Catholics, Jews, and Dissenters have been almost wholly removed; 2 Steph. Com. 707. See CATHOLIC EMANCIPATION ACT.

In the United States there is no such thing as toleration; all men have an equal right to worship God according to the dictates of their consciences. See CHRISTIANITY; RELIGION; RELIGIOUS TEST.

TOLERATION ACT. The statute 1 W. & M. exempting Protestant dissenters from the penalties of certain laws. Brown.

TOLL. A sum of money for the use of something, generally applied to the consideration which is paid for the use of a road, bridge, or the like, of a public nature. The compensation paid to a miller for grinding another person's grain. Cited 93 U. S. 458.

The rate of taking toll for grinding is regulated by statute in most of the states. See 2 Washb. R. P.; 6 Q. B. 81. See RATES.

A state has no power to regulate tolls upon a bridge connecting it with another state without the assent of congress and without the concurrence of such other state in the proposed tariff; 125 U. S. 1.

To bar, defeat, or take away: as, to toll an entry into lands is to deny or take away the right of entry.

To toll the statute of limitation is to show facts which remove its bar of the action. See REASONABLE REWARD.

TOLLBOOTH. A house or booth for collection of tolls or market charges; a custom-house; a prison; also the place where goods are weighed; a place where merchants met; a local tribunal for small civil cases held at the Guild Hall, Bristol. It has been conjectured that the word toll-booth, originally signifying a place of custom, was transferred in its application to the place of confinement for those who refused to pay custom, and thence to prisons generally. The Tollbooth of Edinburgh was built by the citizens in the year 1561, for the accommodation of the parliament and courts of justice, and for the confinement of debtors and malefactors. From the year 1640 this building was used solely for a jail, till its removal in 1817. Id.; M. & W.

TOLL-GATE. A gate where toll is taken. Webster. The proprietors of a Turnpike road have no authority to erect a gate upon an existing highway, unless specially authorized by the Legislature. 2 Mass. 143.

TOLL-TRAVERSE. A toll for passing over a private man's ground; a toll for passing over the soil of another or over soil which though now a public highway was once private and which was dedicated subject to a toll. It can be claimed by prescription. 87 L. J. Q. B. 209; 3 Q. B. 521.

TOLLS. In a general sense, tolls signify any manner of customs, subsidy, prestation, imposition, or sum of money demanded for exporting or importing of any wares or merchandise, to be taken of the buyer. Co. 2d Inst. 58.

TOLT. (Lat. tolla, from tollere, to remove). An ancient writ by which a cause pending in a court-baron was removed to the county court. Burrill; Cowell. So called, because it takes away and removes the cause from the court-baron. It was a precept directed by the sheriff to his bailiff, commanding him to go to the lord's court, and take away the plaintiff which was there into his county court. Id.; F. N. B.

TOLZEY COURT. This, originally, was the court of the bailiffs of the Hundred of Bristol. Subsequently it became merged in the court of the Lord Steward of the King's Household; Richard II. in 1395 revived its separate jurisdiction by charter; and it now sits under the authority of a charter of Anne, dated 24th July, 1710. Its jurisdiction includes mixed and personal actions to any amount, provided the cause of action arises within the city. Its procedure has been modernized by Orders in Council made 1871, 1873, 1878, 1883, and 1890. The recorder is ex officio the judge. Byrne.

TOMAD DE RAZON. See EXPEDIENTE; TOMAR RAZON.

TOMAR RAZON. To register, to take a memorandum of, to make a record of a thing. A term used in connection with Mexican land grants. 161 U. S. 219. See EXPEDIENTE.

TOMBSTONE. A gift or bequest to keep perpetually, a tombstone in repair offends against a rule as to perpetuities and is void, but such a condition to that effect attached to a bequest to a charity in case of failure to comply with condition is good. L. R. 3 Ch. 252. See MONUMENT.

TON. Twenty hundredweight, each hundredweight being one hundred and twelve pounds avoirdupois. See MEASURE.

TONNAGE. The capacity of a ship or vessel.

This term is most usually applied to the capacity of a vessel in tons as determined by the legal mode of measurement; in England reckoned according to the number of tons burden a ship will carry, but here to her internal cubic capacity; and as a general rule, in the United States the official tonnage of a vessel is considerably below the actual capacity of the vessel to carry freight. 40 N. Y. 229. The duties paid on the tonnage of a ship or vessel. For the rule for determining tonnage in the United States, see R. S. § 4150 et seq.

A foreign built vessel purchased by a citizen of the United States and brought into the waters thereof is not so taxable; 106 U. S. 110.

The constitution of the United States provides art. 1, § 10, n. 2, that no state shall, without the consent of congress, lay any duty on tonnage; 12 Wall 324; 94 U. S. 238. But a municipal corporation situated on a navigable river can, consistently with the constitution of the United States, charge and collect from the owner of licensed steamboats, which moor at a wharf constructed by it, wharfage proportioned to their tonnage; 95 U. S. 80; 46 La. 196. See COMMENCE.

The duty of tonnage prohibited by the constitution is a charge upon a vessel according to its tonnage as the instrument of commerce, for the privilege of entering or leaving a port or navigating public waters. 110 U. S. 548.

See TUNNAGE.

TONNAGE-RENT. When the rent reserved by a mining lease or the like consists of a royalty on every ton of minerals gotten in the mine, it is often called a "tonnage-rent." There is generally a dead rent in addition. R. & L. Dict.

TONNAGE TAX. See TONNAGE; OYSTERS.

TONNAGIUM. A custom or impost upon wines and other merchandise exported or imported, according to a certain rate per ton. Burrill; Spelman.

TONNETIGHT. The quantity of a ton or tun, in a ship's freight or bulk, for which tonnage or tunnage was paid to the king. Burrill; Cowell.

TONTINE INSURANCE.

A tontine contract of insurance is more than a policy of life insurance. In addition, it is an agreement on the part of the insurer to hold all the premiums collected on the policies forming that class for the specified period, which is called the tontine period or period of distribution, and, after paying death losses, expenses, and other losses out of the fund so accumulated, to divide the remainder among those who are alive at the end of the tontine period, and who have maintained their policies in force. 137 Ky 641, 126 S. W. 155. See INSURANCE.

TONTINE PERIOD. See TONTINE INSURANCE.

TOOK AND CARRIED AWAY. Technical words necessary in an indictment for simple larceny. Bac. Abr. Indictment (G 1). See CREDIT ET ASPORTAVIT; LARCENY.

TOOLS. The implements which are commonly used by the hand of one man in some manual labor, necessary for his subsistence. 18 S. Car. 241. It includes patterns used in manufacturing; 51 N. W. Rep. (la.) 1149; a mill-saw; 1 Fairf. 185; an instrument called a billy and jonnie; 8 Vt. 402; a gin and grist mill; 66 Tex. 494; a threshing machine; 23 Ia. 350. As used in exemption laws, it includes any instrument necessary for the prosecution of trade, including a lathe; 99 Cal. 203; sewing machines; 50 Minn. 327; a piano; 69 Ill. 337; a violin; 2 Allen 395; a cornet; 138 Mass. 93; a gun; 18 Tex. 581; a net and boat; 1 Th. & C. 444; cheese vats, presses, and knives; 27 Kan. 370; the surgical instruments of a physician; 3 Abb. Fr. 416; and the office furniture of a lawyer; 78 Ia. 111; an iron safe used by an insurance agent; 33 S. W. Rep. (Tex.) 71; 87 Colo. 292. It does not include the apparatus of a printing office; 10 Pick. 423. See TRADE; EXEMPTION.

TORRENS SYSTEM. A name commonly applied to the system of government registration of titles to land, so called from Sir Robert Torrens. The subject is treated under LAND TITLE AND TRANSFER. A Massachusetts act passed since that title was written is referred to under REGISTRATION. See 36 L. R. A. 105.

TORT (Fr. tort, from Lat. torquere, to twist, tortus, twisted, wrested aside). A private or civil wrong or injury. A wrong independent of contract. 1 Hill. Torts 1. The breach of a legal duty. Big. Torts 3. In admiralty it includes wrong suffered in consequence of the negligence or malfeasance of others, where the remedy at common law is by an action on the case; 46 Fed. Rep. 738; 10 App. Dec. 469. The right of action is very broad in France. Thus:

"Tout fait quelconque de l'homme, qui cause à autrui un dommage, oblige celui par la faute duquel il est arrivé à le réparer."

"Chacun est responsable du dommage qu'il a causé non seulement par son fait, mais encore par sa négligence ou par son imprudence." Civil Code of France, secs. 1382, 1383.

The law recognizes certain rights as belonging to every individual, such as the right to personal security, to liberty, to property, to reputation, to the services of a daughter or servant, to the companionship of a wife, etc. Any violation of one of these rights is a tort. In the like manner the law recognizes certain duties as attached to every individual, as the duty of not deceiving by false representations, of not persecuting another maliciously, of not using your own property so as to injure another, etc. The breach of any of these duties coupled with consequent damages to any one is also a tort. Underhill, Torts 4.

The performance of an act forbidden by a statute or the omission or failure to perform any act specifically imposed by law, is generally equivalent to an act done with intent to cause wrongful injury; Poll. Torts 23. No action will lie for doing that which the legislature has authorized, if it be done without negligence; id. 121.

The word torts is used to describe that branch of the law which treats of the redress of injuries which are neither crimes nor arise from the breach of contracts. All acts or omissions of which the law takes cognizance may in general be classed under the three heads of contracts, torts, and crimes. Contracts include agreements and the injuries resulting from their breach. Torts include injuries to individuals, and crimes injurious to the public or state. 1 Hill. Torts 1.

This division of the redress of injuries by civil suit into actions of tort and actions of contract is not thoroughly accurate. For often the party injured has his election whether he will proceed by tort or by contract, as in the case of a fraudulent sale or the fraudulent recommendation of a third person; 10 C. B. 83; 24 Conn. 392. But for general usage this division has been found sufficient, and is universally adopted;

Cooley, Torts 2.

As the same act may sometimes constitute the breach of a contract as well as a tort, so the same act may often constitute a tort and also a crime. For a tort may amount to, or may be likely to lead to, a breach of the peace, and thus become a matter of public concern. The torts which are usually at the same time crimes are assault, libel, and nuisance. In such cases it is the general rule of law that a public prosecution and a private action for damages can both be maintained either at the same or at different times; 1 B. & P. 191; 8 Bla. Com. 123. See 28 Fla. 80.

As to the doctrine of the merger of a tort in a crime, see MERGER.

The infringement of a right of the violation of a duty are necessary ingredients of a tort. If neither of these is present the act is not a tort, although damage may have resulted. Hence the maxim: Ex damno sine injuria non oritur actio.

A street railway company not having the right of eminent domain, is liable for special injury to another's property by the lawful operation of its works on its own land; the case of the negligent operation of a powerhouse; 182 Pa. 475. Where a corporation has no right of eminent domain, the operation of its works, causing special physical injury to another's property, is held an actionable nuisance; in the case of a gas company; 39 Pa. 257; and the case of a natural oil pipe company; 153 Pa. 386.

A wrongful or malicious intent is an essential element in some torts. As, for example, deceit, slander, and libel, malicious prosecution, and conspiracy. In general, however, it may be stated as a prominent distinction between torts and crimes, that in the former the party's intent is immaterial, while in prosecutions for the latter a criminal purpose must always be alleged and proved; Cooley, Torts 688. Thus one may be made liable in damages for what is usually called a mere accident. So insane persons and minors, under the age of discernment, are in general liable for torts. See MALICE.

A tort sounding in exemplary damages is one when there is an evasion of some right of person or property, maliciously, violently, wantonly, or with reckless disregard of social or civil obligations; 85 S. C. 493.

In general, it may be said that whenever the law creates a right, the violation of such right will be a tort, and wherever the law creates a duty, the breach of such duty coupled with consequent damage will be a tort also. This applies not only to the common law, but also to such rights and duties as may be created by statute; Cooley, Torts 650.

Torts may also arise in the performance of the duties of a ministerial officer, when such duties are due to individuals and not to the state; Cooley, Torts 376; but the act of a British officer in excess of his authority (burning certain barracks in Africa and releasing slaves therefrom), when approved by the government, becomes an "act of state" and is not a ground of action against him; 2 Ex. 167.

As to torts committed against property or in the relations of master and servant, husband and wife, parent and child, bailor and bailee, landlord and tenant, mortgagor and mortgagee, see these several titles.

In order to maintain an action of tort the relation of cause and effect between the act and the injury must be clearly shown. The damage must not be remote or indirect. See CAUSA PROXIMA, etc.

All who aid, advise, command, or countenance the commission of a tort, or approve of it after it is done, are liable, if done for their benefit, in the same manner as if done with their hands; 61 Vt. 399; but where two or more are acting lawfully together to make an arrest, one is not liable for the unlawful act of another done in furtherance of the common purpose, without his concurrence; 76 Ia. 612.

A child injured before birth has no right of action for the tort; 188 Mass. 14; 28 L. R. (Ir.) 69; 30 Chic. Leg. N. 833. Where there are several wrongdoers, each is liable for the entire damage; all are equal. But where the injured party has elected to sue one or more and obtains judgment, he cannot sue the others, even though his judgment remains unsatisfied; L. R. 7 C. P. 547; but it is held generally in this country that a judgment without satisfaction is not a bar; Cooley, Torts 188; 11 Harv. L. Rev. So a recovery by a husband for injuries sustained to himself is not a bar to a subsequent action for injuries to his wife sustained at the same time, as a result of the same negligence; 29 S. W. Rep. 78; but judgment is held to be a bar if satisfaction has been tendered; 89 Atl. Rep. (Md.) 502; contra, 12 Lea 595; 1 Barb. 379. But the recovery of damages for the killing of one horse is a bar to the recovery of damages for another, killed at the same time and place; 9 Tex. Civ. App. 6.

A party injured cannot generally maintain an action for the injury if caused in any degree by his own contributory negligence. See NEGLIGENCE.

When a workman employed by a shipowner is injured by the combined negligence of himself and those in charge of the ship, he may recover half damages; 87 Fed. Rep. 849.

Where a tort is committed partly on land and partly on water, the question whether admiralty has jurisdiction over it is determined by the locus of the damage and not that of the origin of the tort; as where the plaintiff working in the hold of a vessel was injured by a piece of lumber negligently sent down through a chute by a person working on the pier, it was held to be a case of admiralty jurisdiction; 69 Fed. Rep. 646.

See also OBLIGATION OF TORT; MARITIME TORTS.

TORTFEASOR. A wrong-doer; one who commits or is guilty of a tort. See JOINT TORTFEASOR.

TORTIOUS. Wrongful; having the quality of a tort.

TORTURE. The rack, or question, or other mode of examination by violence to the person, to extort a confession from supposed criminals, and a revelation of their associates. It is to be distinguished from punishment, which usually succeeds a conviction for offences; as it was inflicted in limine, and as part of the introductory process leading to trial and judgment. It was wholly unknown to the common and statute law of England, and was forbidden by Magna Charta, ch. 29; 4 Bla. Com. 326.

It prevailed in Scotland, where the civil law which allowed it obtained; Dig. 48. 18. It was, however, declared contrary to the claim of right, and was expressly prohibited; 7 Anne, c. 21, § 5, A. D. 1709. Several instances of its infliction may be found in Pitcairn's Criminal Trials of Scotland.

Although torture was confessedly contrary to the common law of England, it was, nevertheless, often employed as an instrument of state to wring confessions from prominent criminals, especially in charges of treason. It was usually inflicted by warrant from the privy council. Jardine, Torture 7, 15, 42.

Mr. Jardine proves from the records of the privy council that the practice was not infrequent during the time of Elizabeth, and continued to the close of the reign of the first two Stuarts. There is positive evidence that Guy Fawkes was directed to be tortured in regard to the Gunpowder Plot, in the warrant in the king's handwriting authorizing the commissioners, of whom Coke was one, to examine him upon the rack, "using the gentler tortures first, et sic per gradus ad ima tenditur;" 1 Jardine, Cr. Tr. Int. 17; 2 id. 106.

An attempt to torture a person to extort a confession of crime is a criminal offence. 2 Tyl. 880. See QUESTION; PEINE FORTE ET DURE; MUTE.

This absurd and cruel practice has never obtained in the United States, except in a few instances in New York under the Dutch rule.

TOTAL LOSS. See LOSS; and also a recent English case where it was held by the house of lords that a ship is totally lost when she goes to the bottom, no matter whether she is brought up again or not; [1898] A. C. 593. See 12 Harv. L. Rev. 213.

Under a policy insuring against "absolute total loss only," a partial loss cannot be converted into a constructive total loss, and evidence of abandonment is immaterial; 5 U. S. App. 179.

TOTIDEM VERBIS. In so many words.

TOTIES QUOTIES (Lat.). As often as the thing shall happen.

TOTTED. A good debt to the crown, i. e. a debt paid to the sheriff, to be by him paid over to the king. Cowel; Moz. & W. See FOREIGN APPOSER.

TOUCH AND STAY. Words frequently introduced in policies of insurance, giving the party insured the right to stop and stay at certain designated points in the course of the voyage. A vessel which has the power to touch and stay at a place in the course of the voyage must confine herself strictly to the terms of the liberty so given; for any attempt to trade at such a port during such a stay, as, by shipping or landing goods, will amount to a species of deviation which will discharge the underwriters, unless the ship have also liberty to trade as well as to touch and stay at such a place; 1 Marsh. Ins. 275.

TOUJOURS ET UNCORE PRIST (L. Fr.). Always and still ready. This is the name of a plea of tender: as, where a man is indebted to another, and he tenders the amount due, and afterwards the creditor brings a suit, the defendant may plead the tender, and add that he has always been and is still ready to pay what he owes, which may be done by the formula toujours et uncore prist. He must then pay the money into court; and if the issue be found for him the defendant will be exonerated from costs, and the plaintiff made liable for them; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2923. See TOUT TEMPS PRIST; TENDER.

TOUR D'ECHELLE. In French Law. A right which the owner of an estate has of placing ladders on his neighbor's property to facilitate the reparation of a party-wall or of buildings which are supported by that wall. It is a species of servitude. Lois des Bât. part 1, c. 3, sect. 2, art. 9, § 1.

The space of ground left unoccupied around a building for the purpose of enabling the owner to repair it with convenience: this is not a servitude, but an actual corporeal property.

TOURN. See SHERIFF'S TOURN.

TOURNAMENTS. See JOURS, or JOUSTS.

TOUT TEMPS PRIST (L. Fr. always ready). A plea by which the defendant signifies that he has always been ready to perform what is required of him. The object of the plea is to save costs: as, for example, where there has been a tender and refusal. 3 Bla. Com. 303. So, in a writ of dower, where the plea is detinue of charters, the defendant might reply, always ready; Rast. Entr. 229 b. See TOUJOURS ET UNCORE PRIST.

TOW-BOATS. According to the weight of authority, the owners of steamboats engaged in the business of towing are not common carriers; Lawson, Carriers 3. So held in 2 N. Y. 204; 18 Pa. 40; 14 Bush 698; 12 Fed. Rep. 446; 94 U. S. 494; 95 id. 297. See TOWAGE; contra, 5 Jones N. C. 174; 11 La. 48.

TOWAGE. The act of towing or drawing ships and vessels, usually by means of a small steamer called a tug.

Towage service is confined to vessels who have received no injury or damage; 9 Fed. Rep. 58.

Where towage is rendered in the rescue or relief of a vessel from imminent peril, it becomes salvage service, entitled to be compensated as such; 6 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 228. A tug sometimes called towing or tow-boat, while not held to the responsibility of a common carrier, is bound to exercise reasonable care and skill in everything pertaining to its employment; 9 Fed. Rep. 614; 67 id. 667; 84 Fed. Rep. 500; 14 U. S. App. 89; id. 603; 24 U. S. App. 49. Proof of a loss suffered by tow does not raise a presumption of negligence on the part of the tug; 14 Wall. 456; 87 Fed. Rep. 607. See TOW-BOATS; TUGS; SALVAGE.

Where two vessels, each in charge of a tug, came in collision from the faulty navigation of the tugs, whose masters gave directions to the vessels which were obeyed, the tugs alone were held liable; 11 U. S. App. 129. In every contract of towage there is an implied engagement that each party will use proper skill and diligence. Tugs cannot abandon their tows for slight causes; 13 id. 489; 14 id. 410. See TUG.

That which is given for towing ships in rivers. Guidon de la Mer, c. 16; Pothier, Des Avaries, n. 147; 2 Chitty, Com. Law. 18.

The burden of proving that a contract of towage was at the owner's risk, is on the tug; 34 Fed. Rep. 1010; 18 id. 178; 24 id. 292.

TOWARD. The word has been held to mean not simply "to" but to include "about." In the expression "insulting language toward a female relation," does not mean to, but about, respecting. Anderson; 6 Tex. App. 575. See TO.

TOWN. A term of somewhat varying signification, but denoting a division of a country next smaller in extent than a county.

It is generic, and includes cities; 132 Ind. 34; 117 Cal. 451.

In Pennsylvania and some other of the Middle states, it denotes a village or city. In the New England states, it is to be considered for many purposes as the unit of civil organization,—the counties being composed of a number of towns. Towns are regarded as corporations or quasi-corporations; 13 Mass. 198. In New York and Wisconsin, towns are subdivisions of counties; and the same is true of the townships of most of the Western states. In Ohio, Michigan, and Iowa, they are called townships. In Illinois it is synonymous with village; 119 U. S. 680. In England, the term town or vill comprehends under it the several species of cities, boroughs, and common towns. 1 Bla. Com. 114.

TOWN CAUSE. In English Practice. A cause tried at the sittings for London and Middlesex. 8 Steph. Com., 11th ed. 558.

TOWN-CLERK. A principal officer who keeps the records, issues calls for town meetings, and performs generally the duties of a secretary to the political organization.

TOWN MEETING. An assemblage of the voters of a town to select town officers and discuss other business of the town. R. & L. Dict.

TOWN-PLAT. The acknowledgment and recording of a town-plat vests the legal title to the ground embraced in the streets and alleys in the corporation of the town; therefore it is held that the proprietor who has thus dedicated the streets and alleys to the public cannot maintain trespass for an injury to the soil or freehold. The corporation alone can seek redress for such injury; 11 Ill. 554; 13 id. 54, 808. This is not so, however, with a highway; the original owner of the fee must bring his action for an injury to the soil; 18 Ill. 54. See HIGHWAY. If the streets or alleys of a town are dedicated by a different mode from that pointed out by the statute, the fee remains in the proprietor, burdened with the public easement; 18 Ill. 812. See DEDICATION.

TOWN RECORD. Matter written on the margin of a "town record" is a part of the record when duly signed, just as much as matter which is written on the page horizontally, and a town ordinance thus shown to have been adopted is valid. 145 Ky. 649, 140 S. W. 1043.

TOWN SITES. The federal statutes now in force as to town sites provide (1) for the reservation of town sites by the President from the public lands on the shores of harbors, etc. (U. S. Rev. Stat., § 2380); (2) for the entry of public lands by parties who have already founded or hereafter desire to found a city or town, and for the sale of such lands under prescribed regulations, and at a prescribed price (U. S. Rev. Stat., § 2382); (3) and for the entry of public lands not subject to entry under the agricultural pre-emption laws by the corporate authorities of an incorporated town, or by the judge of the county court for the county in which such town is situated, if it is not incorporated in trust for the several use and benefit of the occupants thereof. (U. S. Rev. Stat., § 2387.)

The original town site act of May 23, 1844, was repealed by the act of July 1, 1864. The subsequent acts are practically amendments of this act. 26 Am. & Eng. Encyc. 2nd ed., 308.

TOWNSHIP. The public lands of the United States are surveyed first into tracts called townships, being in extent six miles square. The subdivisions of a township are called sections, each a mile square and containing six hundred and forty acres; these are subdivided into quarter-sections, and from that into lots of forty acres each. This plan of subdividing the public lands was adopted by act of congress of May 18, 1796.

TOXICOLOGY. The science of poisons (q. v.).

TRACING. A tracing is a mechanical copy or fac simile of an original, produced by following its lines, with a pen or pencil, through a transparent medium, called tracing paper. 18 Fed. Rep. 540.

TRACT. A lot, piece, or parcel of land, of greater or less size, the term not importing in itself any precise dimensions. 28 N. J. L. 45.

TRADAS IN BALLIUM. You deliver to bail. The name of a writ which might be issued in behalf of a party who, upon the writ de odio et atia, had been found to have been maliciously accused of a crime; commanding the sheriff that if the prisoner found twelve good and lawful men of the county who would be mainperne for him, he should deliver him in bail to those twelve, until the next assize. Burrill; 1 Reeve, Eng. L. 252.

TRADE. Any sort of dealings by way of sale or exchange; commerce, traffic. 101 U. S. 231; 47 Kan. 89. The dealings in a particular business: as, the Indian trade; the business of a particular mechanic; hence boys are said to be put apprentices to learn a trade: as, the trade of a carpenter, shoemaker, and the like. Bac. Abr. Master and Servant (D 1). Trade differs from art.

In exemption laws it is usually confined to the occupation of a mechanic; 44 Conn. 93; but in its broader sense it is generally construed as equivalent to any occupation, employment, handicraft, or business; 101 U. S. 231; 47 Kan. 89. One cannot by multiplying his pursuits claim cumulatively several exemptions, but the fact that he carries on two or more pursuits concurrently does not deprive him of all exemptions, but the article exempted must belong to his principal business; 27 Kan. 582.

The term is also construed in cases arising under the "anti-trust" act forbidding trusts and combinations in restraint of trade, and it is held in that connection to have the broader sense; 47 Kan. 89, where the definition of the word is much discussed. The word is held to apply to the business of insurance; id.; 38 S. W. Rep. (Tex.) 710; of a telegraph company; 3 Exch. Div. 108; transportation of merchandise for hire; 3 Gall. 4; 7 Cra. 118; a blacksmith, who also builds wagons; 83 Mich. 39; a harness-maker, painter, and carriage-builder; 9 Allen 156; a dealer in ice who was also a farmer; 7 Gray 67; a tinner who owned and partly supported himself by playing a cornet; 123 Mass. 184; a saddle and harness-maker; 26 S. W. Rep. (Tex.) 859; keeping a home for working girls even though it appeared that no profits were made; 25 Ch. Div. 306; but maintaining a private lunatic asylum is held not a trade; 2 Ad. & El. 161. See TOOLS; EXEMPTION; RESTRAINT OF TRADE; TRADER; TRADESMAN; FOREIGN TRADE; ILLEGAL TRADE; ILLEGIT; USAGE OF TRADE.

TRADE ACCEPTANCE. A trade acceptance is a draft or bill of exchange drawn by the seller on the purchaser of goods sold and accepted by such purchaser. 241 N. Y. 231. Cf. BANKERS' ACCEPTANCE.

TRADE DOLLAR. See DOLLAR.

TRADE-MARK. A symbol, emblem, or mark, which a tradesman puts upon or attaches in some way to the goods he manufactures or has caused to be manufactured, so that they may be identified and known in the market. Brown, Trade-Marks, 2d ed. § 87.

"A particular mark or symbol used by a person for the purpose of indicating that the article to which it is affixed is sold or manufactured by him or his authority, or that he carries on business at a particular place." 35 L. J. Ch. 61.

Broadly defined, a trade-mark is a mark by which the wares of the owner are known in trade. 12 Fed. Rep. 707.

The office of a trade-mark is to point out distinctly the origin or ownership of the article to which it is affixed; or, in other words, to give notice who was the producer; 138 U. S. 537; 128 id. 598; 139 id. 540.

It may consist of a name, a device, or a peculiar arrangement of words, lines, or figures, or any peculiar mark or symbol not theretofore in use, adopted and used by a manufacturer, or a merchant for whom goods may be manufactured, to designate them as those which he has manufactured or sells. It may be put either upon the article itself or its case, covering, or wrapper, and is assignable with the business; 86 Ky. 331.

It may be in any form of letters, words, vignettes, or ornamental design. Newly coined words may form a trade-mark; Brown, Trade-Marks 151.

The exclusive right to a trade-mark or device rests not on invention, but on such use as makes it point out the origin of the claimant's goods and must be early enough for that, but absolute priority of invention is not required; 85 Fed. Rep. 774.

Property in a trade-mark is acquired by the original application to some species of merchandise manufactured of a symbol or device not in actual use, designating articles of the same kind or class; 13 Wall. 222.

The ownership of trade-marks is considered as a right of property; Upton, Trade-Marks 10. It is on this ground that equity protects by injunction against their infringement. Proof of fraud is not necessary, the mere fact of violating a right of property being sufficient; 1 De G. J. & S. 185.

Trade names should be distinguished from trade-marks. A trade-mark owes its existence to the fact that it is affixed to a commodity; a trade name is more properly allied to the good will of a business; Browne, Tr. Marks § 91. The same author divides the latter into classes: 1. of men, their business or their pseudonyms; 2. places famed for manufactures, etc.; 3. coaches and other vehicles for the transportation of passengers or merchandise.

The trade name of a firm, a corporate name, and the name of a publication, though not strictly trade-marks, are nevertheless a species of property of the same nature as trade-marks, and will be pro-TECTED in like manner; 83 Am. Rep. 885; 9 id. 831. See NAME.

So a tradesman may adopt a fictitious name, and sell his goods under it as a trade-mark, and the property right he thus acquires in the fanciful name will be protected; 6 Thomp. & C. 138.

Equity will protect a corporation in the exclusive possession of its name. State authorities will ordinarily not grant a charter to a new corporation under the name of an existing corporation. But equity will not restrain a corporation of the state of the forum from the use of its corporate name at the suit of a foreign corporation; Thomp. Corp. §§ 296, 7908; 143 Ill. 494. See 10 L. R. A. 758.

In a bill by the "Sun Life Assurance Company," long established in London, to enjoin the "Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada" from doing business under that name in London, it was held that the defendant's use of its full name was lawful, but that the use of the "Sun Life" alone could be enjoined; [1894] 1 Ch. 537.

The names of hotels and stores are protected; 21 Cal. 448; L. R. 13 Ch. D. 512; 3 Sandf. 725; as, the "Mechanic's Store," against "Mechanical Store"; 42 Pac. Rep. (Cal.) 142.

In the following the titles of newspapers and periodicals have been protected (the name in italics being held to infringe): Hagerstown Almanac—Hagerstown Town and Country Almanac; 50 Md. 591; The Real John Bull—The Old Real John Bull; Cox, Man. 33; Minnie—Minnie Dale and Minnie Dear Minnie; 2 K. & J. 123; 8 De G. M. & G. 1; Payson, Dunton & Scribner's National System of Penmanship—Independent National System of Penmanship; 21 Hun 539; Our Young Folks—Our Young Folks' Illustrated Paper; Fed. Cas. 10, 603; Birthday Scripture Textbook—The Children's Birthday Textbook; L. R. 14 Eq. 431; Chatterbox—Chatterbook; 31 Fed. Rep. 154; 21 id. 189; 27 id. 22; The United States Investor—The Investor; 72 id. 603; Social Register—Howard's Social Register; 60 id. 270; Good Things of Life—Spice of Life; 2 N. Y. S. 648; Bell's Life in London and Sporting Chronicle—Penny Bell's Life and Sporting News; 1 Giff. 98; The National Police Gazette—The United States Police Gazette; 2 Abb. Pr. n. s. 459; The Times—Times; 25 Sol. Jour. 742.

Protection has been refused in the following cases:

Old Sleuth Library—New York Detective Library; 129 N. Y. 38, 619, reversing 13 N. Y. S. 79; Electric World—Electric Age; 14 N. Y. S. 803; Good Things of Life—The Spice of Life; 9 N. Y. S. 846; The New North West—The Northwest News; 11 Ore. 322; Republican New Era—New Era; 9 Paige 75; Splendid Misery or East End and West End, by C. H. Hazlewood—Splendid Misery, by the author of Lady Audley's Secret, Vixen, etc., published as a serial in periodicals; 18 Ch. D. 76; Mail—Morning Mail; 54 L. J. Ch. 1059; Morning Post—Evening Post; 37 Ch. D. 449; The Canadian Bookseller—The Capada Bookseller and Stationer; 27 Ont. 325; Punch—Punch and Judy; 39 L. J. Ch. 67; The American Grocer—The Grocer; 51 How. Pr. 402.

Where the title of a book shows that it is adopted for unfair competition with another work, though the conflicting titles are not identical, it will be restrained; 84 Fed. Rep. 224.

The names of springs are protected, even against those who are rightfully selling the genuine product under the true name; 24 Am. Rep. 895; 45 N. Y. 291; 95 Ky. 503; 78 Fed. Rep. 469; but there are other cases in which an injunction against the honest use of a geographical name has been refused; 13 Wall. 311; 54 Ill. 439; 75 Pa. 467; 128 id. 1. While a geographical name is not a good trade-mark, technically speaking, yet where one has been used to indicate the goods of a particular maker, no one else may employ such name even truthfully in a geographical sense, in connection with the sale of the same class of goods; L. R. 5 H. L. 508; 64 L. T. 748; Fed.

Cas. 13, 784; 90 N. Y. 457; 28 Atl. Rep. 788. A manufacturer will be protected in the use of a geographical name as against one who does not carry on business in the district; 85 Fed. Rep. 806; 86 Ky. 331; 81 N. Y. S. 103; 80 of "Chicago Waists" as against one who makes similar waists in a different state; 83 Fed. Rep. 213.

See a note on geographical names in 17 C. C. A. 657.

A number of competing millers in Minneapolis can maintain a joint bill on behalf of themselves and others similarly situated, to enjoin a grocer from selling flour made in Wisconsin, and marked with his own name and the word "Best Minnesota Patent, Minneapolis, Minn."; 86 Fed. Rep. 603, reversing 82 id. 816.

Generic names, or names merely descriptive of an article, are not valid trade-marks; Browne, Trade-Marks § 84. Thus: Club-house Gin; 7 B. s. 222; Desiccated Codfish; 8 Daly 53; Liebig's Extract of Meat; 28 How. Pr. 206; Cough Remedy; 122 Mass. 139; Rock and Rye; 82 N. Y. 630.

Nor can the name of the party be a valid trade-mark, as others may, under some circumstances, use the same name; but see infra.

No property can be acquired in words, marks, or devices which denote the mere nature, kind, and quality of articles; 101 U. S. 51; L. R. 17 Eq. 29; see 35 Fed. Rep. 150; 128 U. S. 508; 138 id. 537; and where a device, mark, or symbol is adopted for any purpose other than a reference to, or indication of its ownership, it cannot be sustained as a valid trade-mark; 150 U. S. 460.

Numerals can be used as trade-marks; 12 Fed. Rep. 717; contra, 81 Ky. 73; but not if they indicate quality or grade; 138 U. S. 537; and the same is true of letters when used as trade-marks. See 138 U. S. 587.

Marks that simply indicate the quality of articles do not constitute a valid trade-mark; so of words, etc., which indicate the peculiar excellence of goods, for instance "Ne Plus Ultra" for needles; 13 L. T. n. s. 746; "Nourishing" Stout; L. R. 17 Eq. 59. Words which indicate the purpose and character of medicines or articles cannot be exclusive property for a trade-mark, thus: "Cramp" Cure; 46 Fed. Rep. 625; "Microbe Killer"; 77 Tex. 539. Words which are simply descriptive of the quality or appearance of an article or the place where it was manufactured cannot be monopolized as a trade-mark; 139 U. S. 540. Thus, "Acid Phosphate"; 35 Fed. Rep. 524; "Cherry Pectoral"; 7 Daly 9.

The color of a label or package does not constitute a valid trade-mark. See 149 U. S. 562; 37 Ch. Div. 112; nor can a form of package be a trade-mark; 138 N. Y. 245; 4 Hughes 449.

The following are instances of valid trade-marks: "Celluloid"; 47 Fed. Rep. 712; "Kaiser" beer; 74 id. 222; "Royal Baking Powder"; 70 id. 876; "Bromo-Caffeine"; 142 N. Y. 467; "La Favorita" flour; 128 U. S. 514; "Star" shirts; 51 Fed. Rep. 829; "Saponifier" soap; 79 id. 87; "Vulcan" matches; 139 N. Y. 384; "Ideal" pens; 130 id. 301; "Elk" cigars; 37 Fed. Rep. 359; "Bromidia"; 50 id. 106; "Swans Down" complexion powder; 85 id. 774; "Moxie" nerve food; 33 Fed. Rep. 188; "Charter Oak" for a stove; 16 Blatchf. 876; "Nickie In" cigars; 63 Hun 830; "Valvoline" lubricating oil; 38 Fed. Rep. 922; "Tin Tag" tobacco; 28 Fed. Rep. 434; "Sapolio" soap; 55 How. Pr. 87; "Syrup of Figs" of a medicinal preparation; 7 U. S. App. 588.

The following have been held invalid: "Instantaneous" tapioca; 65 Fed. Rep. 505; "Black Package Tea"; 188 N. Y. 244; "International Banking Company"; 122 N. Y. 63; "Sarsaparilla and Iron"; 100 Cal. 672; "Taffy Tolu" chewing gum; 35 Fed. Rep. 150; "Imperial" beer; 20 C. C. A. 405; acid phosphate; 35 Fed. Rep. 524; "Goodyear Rubber Company"; 128 U. S. 596; "Snowflakes" as applied to bread; 67 Ga. 561.

A few instances may be given of the use of words which have been held to infringe existing trade-marks:

Shrimpton & Hoover is infringed by Shrimpton Turvey; 18 Beav. 184; Julicks by Josephs; L. J., Notes of Cases (1867), 184; Stephens' by Steelpens for ink; 16 L. T. n. s. 145; Cocaine by Cocoin; 8 Keyes 594; The Hero by The Heroine; 7 Phila. 39; Bovlene by Bovina; 2 Daly 531; Hostetter & Smith by Hostelter & Smyte; 1 Dill. 829; Cuticura soap by Curative (the package being also imitated); 73 Fed. Rep. 676; but "No-to-bac" is not infringed by "Baco-Curo"; 82 Fed. Rep. 105.

In technical trade-mark cases, if the plaintiff proves that the defendant has used his trade-mark or a colorable imitation of it, he has established his right to relief.

Numerous cases have arisen where a party, by imitating the labels and packages used in connection with an article already on the market, has attempted to "pass off" his spurious goods on the public as the real article. In this country this is usually called unfair competition; in England, passing off, and in France, concurrence déloyale. The doctrine has been thus stated: The grounds on which unfair competition in trade will be enjoined are either that the means used are dishonest, or that, by false representation or imitation of a name or device, there is a tendency to create confusion in the trade, and work a fraud upon the public, by inducing it to accept a spurious article; 83 Fed. Rep. 30.

The only difference between such cases and technical trade-mark cases lies in the proof required to make out a case. Where a technical trade-mark is imitated there is a presumption of an intent to deceive the public. Where a label or style of package is imitated, it is necessary to show by evidence an intent to deceive the public and to steal the plaintiff's market. This intent may be shown by proof of actual deception, but it may be inferred from an examination of the real and spurious labels, etc.

Under this doctrine will come most of the cases referred to above where geographical names were used. In this class of cases it is held that it is not necessary to show actual deception. That the defendant's method of doing business tends to deceive the public, or that there is a probability of deception, is sufficient; 52 Mo. App. 10; 56 Fed. Rep. 830; 76 id. 959; 96 U. S. 245.

A fraudulent intent is presumed whenever a false statement is used in order to approximate the mark of the competitor; 77 Fed. Rep. 180; 74 id. 225; and also when a word identical with or resembling an important word is placed in the same position on a label or wrapper of the same shape; 26 Fed. Rep. 410; 41 N. W. Rep. 56; or catch words are printed in conspicuous type; L. R. 5 H. L. 508.

If the intent to deceive is established, it will be inferred that the mark is calculated to deceive; 52 Mo. App. 10; L. R. 18 Eq. 138.

The placing of spurious goods upon the market is prima facie evidence of damage to the plaintiff; 5 D. G. & S. 126; 6 Hare 325.

It is not necessary to prove that any customer or plaintiff had been deceived; it is sufficient to show that defendant knowingly put it in the power of retail dealers to deceive their customers; 70 Mo. App. 424. The fact that the defendants, who formerly used a label not imitative of complainant's, adopted a new one much resembling his, shortly after a former infringer of complainant's trade-mark came into their employ, is most suggestive of an intentional imitation; 74 Fed. Rep. 225. The similarity must be such as to mislead the ordinary purchaser; 150 U. S. 460. The test of infringement is whether the alleged infringing article is so dressed up as to be likely to deceive persons of ordinary intelligence, exercising the slight care ordinarily used, into purchasing one man's goods for the goods of another; 80 Fed. Rep. 105.

Cases of passing off frequently involve the use of a person's own name on his goods.

It is generally said that every man has an inherent, natural right to the free employment of his own name in his business; 78 Fed. Rep. 473; 64 id. 841; 76 id. 959; 77 id. 184; 70 id. 1017; 22 id. 41; 13 Beav. 209; 7 id. 84; 63 How. Pr. 453; 147 Ill. 462; 39 N. Y. S. 903; 80 Fed. Rep. 889; 6 L. R. A. 823. But the doctrine has its limitations. Where one uses his own name to identify the origin of his goods which are made at a particular place, no other person by the same name will be permitted to use his name on his own goods if he does it in such a way as to injure the trade and business of another, or so as to represent his goods as the goods of another; 6 L. R. A. (Fla.) 823; 122 Mass. 139. And one who uses his name in competition with an established business carried on by another of the same name, must avoid putting up his goods in such a way as to resemble the goods of the other; 80 Fed. Rep. 889. And one is not entitled to use his name as part of the name of a corporation in order to compete with another of the same name; 70 Fed. Rep. 1017; 78 Fed. Rep. 473; 37 N. Y. S. 203; 66 Fed. Rep. 50. One who uses his name will be protected against the use of that name, even by a person bearing it, in such form as to constitute a false representation of the origin of the goods; 22 Fed. Rep. 41. One cannot use his own name to deceive the public; 64 Fed. Rep. 841; 1 Ch. App. 192. One may trade honestly in his own name, but he must be careful not to trade under his own name in such a manner as to take away that which lawfully belongs to another; he must be careful not to deceive; 4 R. P. C. 215.

One should not, it is submitted, be allowed to lend his name to a firm for the purpose of competing with another of the same name, for, it being settled that he cannot lend it to a corporation (which is merely an association with limited liability), there is no reason why he should associate himself with others under a partnership and lend his name to the concern.

Where the long and successful use of a trade-mark or name is clearly established, the fact that the owner has recognized and permitted the limited use thereof by another which does not appear to have misled anybody, is not sufficient to defeat the owner's right to prevent others from using it; 85 Fed. Rep. 774.

A party may affect his right to a trade-mark by non-use, by a forbearance in suing protectively, and by adopting a new one. But the question of abandonment is always a question of intention; Brown, Trade-Marks 530; equity, however, will not in general refuse an injunction on account of delay in seeking relief where the proof of infringement is clear, even though the delay may be such as to preclude the party from any right to an account for past profits; 31 L. T. 285; 45 L. Jour. 505.

An injunction against the use of terms which cannot be protected as trade-marks, will not be granted, where the defendant has persistently warned the public that it has no connection with the plaintiff; 128 U. S. 598. But it is obvious that such a "warning" might be a more efficient cause of injury to the plaintiff.

A foreigner selling medicinal preparations in his own country, under a registered trade-mark, has no common-law right to such trade-mark here, as against a domestic firm which had an established business under a similar trade-mark, adopted in good faith, before the other had sold any goods in this country; 52 Fed. Rep. 455.

Where a patent was obtained for a medical preparation called "Castoria," under which it had attained a large sale, upon the expiration of the patent, the word "Castoria" became the property of the public; 84 Fed. Rep. 955 (C. C. A.).

So of a patented article of manufacture to which the name "Linoleum" had been given; 7 Ch. Div. 834; and of a patented article known as "Granite"; 33 N. Y. Suppl. 448. See PATENT.

Trade-mark treaties with various countries will be found in the official gazette of the patent office.

An act of March 3, 1881, provides for the registration of trade-marks, if the article is used in commerce with foreign nations or Indian tribes. It reserves to the owner all common-law rights; R. S. § 4946. The general trade-mark act of congress was declared unconstitutional in 100 U. S. 83.

In England all trade-marks must be registered, and after five years the registration is conclusive evidence of the title.

The members of a voluntary union of oligar-makers are entitled to protection in the exclusive use of a label to designate the exclusive product of their labor, though they are only employed for wages; 43 S. W. Rep. 180; contra, 144 Pa. 235; and so in a recent decision by the Vice-Chancellor in New Jersey, holding an act unconstitutional.

The courts will not grant relief where there is a false representation, calculated to deceive the public, as to the manufacture of an article, and the place where it is manufactured; 96 Cal. 518. See supra. Where a complainant uses a geographical name to represent untruthfully the place of his manufacture he cannot obtain relief; 108 U. S. 218; 123 Mass. 477; 8 Fed. Rep. 29; 70 id. 376; [1891] 2 Ch. 166.

A trade-mark is not subject to execution, unless under authority of statute; 20 N. Y. Sup. 462.

See Brown, Trade Marks; as to unfair competition, 4 Harv. L. Rev. 321, by Grafton D. Cushing.

TRADE NAME. See TRADE-MARK.

TRADE, RESTRAINT OF. See RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

TRADE SECRETS. An employee who, in consideration of an increase in his wages, agrees not to reveal the secrets of his master's trade which are revealed to him, has no right to reveal the secrets so obtained, for his own private use, or reveal them to others. In such case equity will interfere to protect the master; 165 Pa. 24. See PRIVACY; INJUNCTION.

TRADER. One who makes it his business to buy merchandise, or goods and chattels, and to sell the same for the purpose of making a profit. See 80 N. C. 481; 76 Me. 500. The quantum of dealing is immaterial, when an intention to deal generally exists; 2 C. & P. 135; 1 Term 572. The principal question is whether the person has the intention of getting a living by his trading; if this is proved, the extent or duration of the trading is not material; 3 Camp. 233.

Questions as to who is a trader most frequently arise under the bankrupt laws; and the most difficult among them are those cases where the party follows a business which is not that of buying and selling principally, but in which he is occasionally engaged in purchases and sales.

A farmer who, in addition to his usual business, occasionally buys a horse not calculated for his usual occupation, and sells him again to make a profit, and who in the course of two years had so bought and sold five or six horses, two of which had been sold, after he had bought them, for the sake of a guinea profit, was held to be a trader; 1 Term 537, n.; 1 Price 20. Another farmer, who bought a large quantity of potatoes, not to be used on his farm, but merely to sell again for a profit, was also declared to be a trader; 1 Stra. 513. See 5 B. & P. 78; 11 East 274. A butcher who kills only such cattle as he has reared himself is not a trader, but if he buy them and kill and sell them with a view to profit, he is a trader; 4 Burr. 21, 47. A brick-maker who follows the business for the purpose of enjoying the profits of his real estate merely is not a trader; but when he buys the earth by the load or otherwise, and manufactures it into bricks, and sells them with a view to profit, he is a trader; 7 East 449; 3 C. & F. 500; so is a brewer; 47 Minn. 71; and one who is engaged in the manufacture and sale of lumber is a trader; 1 B. R. 281; so is one engaged in buying and selling goods for the purpose of gain, though but occasionally; 3 id. 15; but the keeper of a livery stable is not; 3 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 283; nor is one who buys and sells shares; 2 Ch. App. 406.

TRADESMAN. Primarily, one who trades. But usually means a shopkeeper. Anderson; 7 Biss. 155. In England, a shopkeeper; in the United States, a mechanic or artificer of any kind, whose livelihood depends on the labor of his hands; 4 Pa. 472; a farmer is not a tradesman; 33 L. J. M. C. 80; a laundryman is not; 5 D. R. (Pa.) 43.

TRADES UNIONS. See LABOR UNION.

TRADING PARTNERSHIP. Whenever the business, according to the usual mode of conducting it, imports, in its nature, the necessity of buying and selling, the firm is then properly regarded as a trading partnership, and is invested with all the powers and subject to all the obligations incident to that relation. 145 U. S. 516, citing 22 How. (U. S.) 268, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 561. See NON-TRADING PARTNERSHIP. PARTNERSHIP.

TRADING STAMPS. The current name for a scheme which consists of "an agreement between a number of merchants and a corporation that the latter shall print the names of the former in its subscribers' dictionary and circulate a number of copies of the book, and that the merchants shall purchase of the corporation a number of so-called trading stamps, to be given to purchasers with their purchases, and by them preserved and pasted in the books aforesaid until a certain number have been secured, when they shall be presented to the corporation in exchange for the choice of certain articles kept in stock by the corporation." 56 Alb. L. J. 488. In a case brought upon an act of congress of February 17, 1873, which forbids the sale of real estate or any article of merchandise or taking of payment with a promise to give any article or thing, in consideration of the purchase by any person of any other article or thing, etc., it was held that the business was nothing more nor less than a gaming device; id.

TRADITIO BREVIS MANUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. The delivery of a thing by the mere consent of the parties.

TRADITIO LONGA MANU. A species of delivery which takes place where the transferor places the article in the hands of the transferee. Mackeld. Rom. L. § 284.

TRADITION (Lat. trans, over, do, dare, to give). The act by which a thing is delivered by one or more persons to one or more others.

The delivery of possession by the proprietor with an intention to transfer the property to the receiver. Two things are, therefore, requisite in order to transmit property in this way: the intention or consent of the former owner to transfer it, and the actual delivery in pursuance of that intention.

Tradition is either real or symbolical. Real tradition takes place where the res corpora of movables are put into the hands of the receiver. Symbolical tradition is used where the thing is incapable of real delivery, as, in immovable subjects, such as lands and houses, or such as consist in jura (things incorporeal), as, things of fishing, and the like. The property of certain movables, though they are capable of real delivery, may be transferred by symbol. See DELIVERY; SYMBOLICAL DELIVERY.

TRADITOR (Lat. from tradere, to betray). A traitor; one guilty of high treason. Burrill; Fleta, 1. 21. 8.

TRAFFIC. Commerce; trade; sale or exchange of merchandise, bills, money, and the like. The passing of goods or commodities from one person to another for an equivalent in goods or money; and a trafficker is one who traffics or a trader, a merchant. 44 Ohio St. 678.

TRAFFIC RATES. See RATES.

TRAHERENS (Lat. from trahere, to draw). In French Law. The drawer of a bill. Burrill; Story on Bills, § 12, n.

TRAJECTITIA. See NAUTICA PECUNIA.

TRAIL-BASTON. See JUSTICE OF TRAIL-BASTON.

TRAIN. A number of cars coupled together and moving from point to point, under an impetus imparted by a locomotive which had been detached, is a train. 164 Mass. 23. In the Hours of Service Act, § 1: A locomotive and seven or eight cars moving at one time by switching crews between the docks and the warehouses or team tracks of a terminal company constitute a train. 249 U. S. 307.

In the Safety Appliance Acts: A moving locomotive with cars attached is not a train where the operation is that of switching, classifying and assembling cars within railroad yards for the purpose of making up trains. 254 U. S. 254, 255.

TRAIN-WRECKING. A conviction is not justified, where no actual wrecking occurred, unless the intention of the defendant to do so is shown; 21 S. E. Rep. 591. The indictment need not specify the passengers who were endangered; 18 S. W. Rep. 783. See CRIMES.

TRAITOR. One guilty of treason. See TREASON.

TRAITOROUSLY. In Pleading. A technical word, which is essential in an indictment for treason in order to charge the crime, and which cannot be supplied by any other word or any kind of circumlocution. Having been well laid in the statement of the treason itself, it is not necessary to state every overt act to have been traitorously committed.

TRAJECTITIA PECUNIA. See PECUNIA TRAJECTITIA.

TRAMP. One who roams about from place to place, begging or living without labor or visible means of support; a vagrant. Many of the states have recently adopted suitable legislation upon the subject, corresponding to the English vagrant acts. The object of these statutes is accomplished by arresting offenders and setting them to work on municipal improvements, or hiring them out to private employers, for a limited time, in Delaware for a month, for which they receive food, lodging, and reasonable wages. In some states the punishment is by imprisonment. It is doubtful if mere vagrancy was indictable at common law; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 515. Where there is no statutory definition of vagrancy, it will depend upon the common-law meaning; 90 Mich. 8.

TRANSACT. In common parlance, equivalent to carry on, when used with reference to business; 6 Mont. 140. In Scotch Law, to compound. English.

TRANSACTION. The settlement of a suit or matter in controversy, by the litigating parties, between themselves, without referring it to arbitration. Burrill; Halifax, Anal. 3. 8. 14. An agreement by which a suit, either pending or about to be commenced, was foreborne or discontinued on certain terms. Id., Calv. Lex.

One of the innumerate contracts of the Roman Law, equivalent to the transaction of French law. R. & L. Dict.

TRANSACTION (from Lat. trans, and ago, to carry on). The doing or performing of any business; the management of an affair. 91 Tenn. 173. The term transaction is a broader one than contract; 70 Cal. 118.

In Civil Law. An agreement between two or more persons, who, for the purpose of preventing or putting an end to a lawsuit, adjust their difference, by mutual consent, in the manner which they agree on. In Louisiana this contract must be reduced to writing. La. Civ. Code, art. 3088.

To transact, a man must have the capacity to dispose of the things included in the transaction. In the common law this is called a compromise. See COMPROMISE.

TRANSCRIPT. A copy of an original writing or deed.

TRANSCRIPT OF RECORD. The printed record as made up in each case for the supreme court of the United States is so called.

TRANSFER (Lat. trans, over, fero, to bear or carry). The act by which the owner of a thing delivers it to another person, with the intent of passing the rights which he has in it to the latter. See 16 Neb. 238; 1 Ala. 669; STOCK; ELECTION.

TRANSFERABLE. The word includes every means by which property may be passed from one person to another. 17 Ch. Div. 9.

TRANSFEE. He to whom a transfer is made.

TRANSFEROR. One who makes a transfer.

TRANSGRESSION (Lat. trans, over, pressus, a stepping). The violation of a law.

TRANSGRESSIONE. In Old English Law. A writ or action of trespass.

TRANSHIPMENT. The act of taking the cargo out of one ship and loading it in another.

When this is done from necessity, it does not affect the liability of an insurer on the goods; Abbott, Shipp. 240. But when the master transships goods without necessity, he is answerable for the loss of them by capture by public enemies; 1 Gall. 443.

TRANSIENT. Going or passing over; moving about.

Within the meaning of a poor-law a "transient person" is not exactly a person on a journey from one place to another, but rather a wanderer ever on the tramp. 51 Vt. 423. A transient foreigner is one who visits the country, without the intention of remaining; 10 Tex. 170. A doctor's office is not merely "transient," where he rents it by the year, and there keeps regular hours on three certain days per week; 7 D. R. Pa. 413.

Transient foreigner. One who visits a country without intention of remaining. Id.; 10 Tex. 170.

Transient person. Not exactly a person on a journey from one known place to another, but rather a wanderer ever on the tramp. Id.; 6 Vt. 203.

TRANSITIVE COVENANT. An obligation which devolves also upon the covenantor's representatives. Anderson.

TRANSIRE. A warrant for the custom-house to let goods pass; a permit. See for a form of a transire, Hargr. L. Tr. 104.

TRANSITIVE COVENANT. An obligation which binds not only the covenantor, but also his representatives.

TRANSITORY ACTION. An action the cause of which might have arisen in one place or county as well as another.

In general, all personal actions, whether ex contractu; 5 Taunt. 25; 2 Johns. Cas. 835; 8 S. & R. 500; or ex delicto; 1 Chitty, Pl. 248; are transitory; and may be maintained in a state other than the one in which the injuries were inflicted, where the cause of action is grounded on the principles of the common law, recognized in both states; 66 N. W. Rep. (Wis.) 684.

Such an action may at common law be brought in any county which the plaintiff elects. See JURISDICTION; LOCAL ACTIONS.

TRANSITUS (Lat.). A transit. See STOPPAGE IN TRANSIT.

TRANSLATION. The reproduction in one language of what has been written or spoken in another.

In pleading, when a libel or an agreement written in a foreign language must be averred, it is necessary that a translation of it should also be given.

"Making a translation [of a contract in a foreign language] is not a mere question of trying to find out in a dictionary the words which are given as the equivalent of the words of the document; a true translation is the putting into English that which is the exact effect of the words used under the circumstances. To get at this in the present case you must get the words in English which in business have the equivalent meaning of the words in Brazilian, as used in Brazil, under the circumstances. Therefore you want a competent translator, competent to translate in that way, and if the words in Brazil had in business a particular meaning different from their ordinary meaning, you would want an expert to say what was that meaning. Amongst those experts you might want a Brazilian lawyer—and a Brazilian lawyer for that purpose would be an expert." [1891] 1 Q. B. 82, per Lord Esher, M. R.

In evidence, when a witness is unable to speak the English language so as to convey his ideas, a translation of his testimony must be made. In that case an interpreter should be sworn to translate to him, on oath, the questions propounded to him, and to translate to the court and jury.

See INTERPRETER.

The bestowing of a legacy which had been given to one, on another: this is a species of ademption; but it differs from it in this, that there may be an ademption without a translation, but there can be no translation without an ademption. Bacon, Abr. Legacies (C).

The transfer of property; but in this sense it is seldom used. 2 Bla. Com. 204.

In Ecclesiastical Law. The removal from one place to another; as, the bishop was translated from the diocese of A to that of B.

In the Civil Law, translation signifies the transfer of property. Clef des Lois Rom.

See COPYRIGHT.

TRANSMISSION (Lat. trans, over, mittere, to send). In Civil Law. The right which heirs or legatees may have of passing to their successors the inheritance or legacy to which they were entitled, if they happen to die without having exercised their rights. Domat, liv. 3, t. 1, s. 10; 4 Toullier, n. 186.

TRANSPORTATION. In the Interstate Commerce Act of 1887 as amended 1906: Includes all the instrumentalities and facilities of shipment and all services in connection with the receipt, delivery, and handling of property transported. In English Law. A punishment inflicted by virtue of sundry statutes; it was unknown to the common law. 2 H. Blackst. 238.

Transportation comprehends any real carrying about or from one place to another. It is not essential that the carrying be for hire, or by one for another; nor that it be incidental to a transfer of the possession or title. If one carries in his own conveyance for his own purposes it is transportation no less than when a public carrier at the instance of a consignor carries and delivers to a consignee for a stipulated charge. 262 U. S. 122; 252 U. S. 465.

Definition as enlarged by the Hepburn Act. Includes cars and other vehicles and all instrumentalities and facilities of shipment or carriage, irrespective of ownership or of any contract, express or implied, for the use thereof and all services in connection with the receipt, delivery, elevation, and transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration, or icing, storage, and hauling of property transported 250 U. S. 467.

Transportation of a commodity prohibited "into" a State does not preclude transportation of it through such a State to another, 249 U. S. 374.

Transportation means not only the physical instrumentalities, but all services in connection with receipt, delivery and handling of property transported. 222 U. S. 440.

TRANSVAAL. A Republic of South Africa. The president is elected for five years, and has a council of four members. The legislature is in a dual chamber, the first Volksraad and second Volksraad. The Dutch Reformed Church is the dominant religion.

TRASH. Railroad ties would not fall within the meaning of the term "trash," as it is usually understood, nor would iron or steel rails be understood to pass by this term, trash. 149 Ky. 580, 149 S. W. 960.

TRAVAIL. The act of child-bearing. A woman is said to be in her travail from the time the pains of child-bearing commence until her delivery. 5 Pick. 63.

TRAVELING AGENT. A "traveling agent" is not a "peddler." 150 Ky. 634, 150 S. W. 814. Cf. PEDDLER.

TRAVELING SALESMAN. A traveling salesman has been held not to be a clerk, laborer, or tradesman within an act giving preference to wages. 28 Am. & Eng. Encyc. 2nd ed., 455; 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 363.

The term "traveling salesman" used in the act of Dec. 14, 1896, means to include only that class of persons engaged in selling goods, either by sample or otherwise, who travel on this business from city to city and from town to town, and whose business relations are connected with those who in such cities or towns are likewise engaged in business which contemplates a resale of the goods sold, or consumption in large quantities. The provisions of that act do not contemplate another and entirely different class of persons who, in a given town, city, or county, go from house to house in their effort to take orders for goods. Id.; 105 Ga. 367.

It was held that an agent of a firm or corporation who goes from town to town in the state exhibiting samples of goods, and taking orders on his employer or employers for such goods from consumers, was a traveling salesman. Id.; 110 Ga. 312. See COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER.

TRAVELLER. One who passes from place to place, whether for pleasure, instruction, business, or health; 47 Ala. 45; 5 C. B. N. S. 442; 10 id. 429. The term is used to designate those who patronize inns; the distance which they travel is not material; 35 Conn. 185.

The question whether one is or is not a bona fide traveller is one of fact; [1893] 1 Q. B. 522. One would be a traveller if he came abroad from any legitimate motive and needed refreshment, but not if he came abroad merely to go to a public house and obtain a drink; 17 C. B. N. S. 539. Walking for exercise is not travelling; 14 Allen 475. Within the meaning of a policy of insurance, one who has been carried by a steamboat and walked eight miles from the landing to his home is not, whilst walking, a traveller by public or private conveyance; 16 Wall. 336. Within the meaning of a law allowing a person travelling to carry concealed weapons, the travelling must be on a journey beyond the ordinary habit, business, or duties of a person, and beyond the circle of his friends and acquaintances; 53 Ala. 520; 42 Tex. 464. See SUNDAY.

Traveler's Insurance. "Traveler's insurance" is a distinct branch of insurance relating to the insurance of lives of persons engaged in traveling. It is a generic term. 142 Ky. 529, 134 S. W. 877.

TRAVERSE (L. Fr. traverser, to turn over, to deny). To deny; to put off.

In Civil Pleading. To deny or controvert anything which is alleged in the previous pleading. Lawes, Pl. 116. A denial. Willes 224. A direct denial in formal words: "Without this, that, etc." (abque hoc). 1 Chitty, Pl. 523, n. a. A traverse may deny all the facts alleged; 1 Chitty, Pl. 525; or any particular material fact; 20 Johns. 406.

A common traverse is a direct denial, in common language, of the adverse allegations, without the abque hoc, and concluding to the country. It is not preceded by an inducement, and hence cannot be used where an inducement is requisite; 1 Saund. 103 b.

A general traverse is one preceded by a general inducement and denying all that is last before alleged on the opposite side, in general terms, instead of pursuing the words of the allegation which it denies; Pepper, Pl. 17. Of this sort of traverse the replication de injuria sua propria abque tali causa, in answer to a justification, is a familiar example; Steph. Pl. 17.

A special traverse is one which commences with the words abque hoc, and pursues the material portion of the words of the allegation which it denies; Lawes, Pl. 116. It is regularly preceded by an inducement consisting of new matter; Steph. Pl. 188. A special traverse does not complete an issue, as does a common traverse; 20 Vin. Abr. 339.

A traverse upon a traverse is one growing out of the same point or subject-matter as is embraced in a preceding traverse on the other side; Gould, Pl. c. 7, § 42, n. It is a general rule that a traverse well intended on one side must be accepted on the other. And hence it follows, as a general rule, that there cannot be a traverse upon a traverse if the first traverse is material. The meaning of the rule is that when one party has tendered a material traverse the other cannot leave it and tender another of his own to the same point upon the inducement of the first traverse, but must join in that first tendered; otherwise the parties might alternately tender traverses to each other in unlimited succession, without coming to an issue; Gould, Pl. c. 7, § 42. The rule, however, does not apply where the first traverse is immaterial, nor where it is material if the plaintiff would thereby be ousted of some right or liberty which the law allows; Cro. Eliz. 99, 418; Bacon, Abr. Heas (H 4).

In Criminal Practice. To put off or delay the trial of an indictment till a succeeding term. More properly, to deny or take issue upon an indictment. 4 Bla. Com. 351.

TRAVERSE JURY. See JURY.

TREASON. In Criminal Law. This word imports a betraying, treachery, or breach of allegiance. 4 Bla. Com. 75. In England, treason was divided into high and petit treason. The latter, originally, was of several forms, which, by 25 Edw. III. st. 5, c. 2, were reduced to three: the killing by a wife, of her husband; by a servant, of his master; and the killing of a prelate by an ecclesiastic owing obedience to him. These kinds of treason were abolished in 1828. In America they were unknown; here treason means high treason.

"Treason it has been said is not felony but a grade of crime by itself." 29 N. J. L. 453, 464.

The constitution of the United States, art. 3, s. 3, defines treason against the United States to consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort. By the same article of the constitution, no person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court.

It is "the only crime defined by the constitution. . . . The clause was borrowed from an ancient English statute, enacted in the year 1353. Previous to the passage of that statute there was great uncertainty as to what constituted treason. Numerous offences were raised to its grade by arbitrary construction of the law. The statute was passed to remove this uncertainty and to restrain the power of the crown to oppress the subject by constructions of this character. It comprehends all treason under seven distinct branches. The framers of our constitution selected one of these branches, and declared that treason against the United States should be restricted to the acts which it designates. "Treason against the United States," is the language adopted, "shall consist only in levying war against them, or adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort." No other acts can be declared to constitute the offence. Congress can neither extend, nor restrict, nor define the crime. Its power over the subject is limited to prescribing the punishment. Field, J., in 4 Sawy. 465.

By the same article of the constitution, no "attainer of treason shall work corruption of blood except during the life of the person attainted." Every person owing allegiance to the United States who levies war against them, or adheres to their enemies giving them aid and comfort within the United States or elsewhere, is guilty of treason; R. S. § 5331. The penalty is death, or, at the discretion of the court, imprisonment at hard labor for not less than five years and a fine of not less than ten thousand dollars; and every person convicted of treason is rendered incapable of holding any office under the United States; R. S. § 5332.

The term enemies, as used in the constitution, applies only to subjects of a foreign power in a state of open hostility with us. To constitute a "levying of war" there must be an assemblage of persons with force and arms to overthrow the government or resist the laws. All who aid in the furtherance of the common object of levying war against the United States, in however minute a degree, or however remote from the scene of action, are guilty of treason; 4 Sawy. 457.

Treason may be committed against a state; 4 Story 614; 11 Johns. 549.

See, generally, 3 Story, Const. § 1796; Sergeant, Const. c. 30; Cooley, Const. Lim. 880; Rawls, Const. c. 1; Bish. Cr. Law; 20 Wall. 92; 16 id. 147; 92 U. S. 202; 93 id. 274.

As to the Law of Treason under the Roman Empire, see 22 Law Mag. and Rev. 33; 15 Cr. Law Mag. 191; 46 Alb. Law J. 345.

TREASURE. A thing hidden or buried in the earth which no one can prove as his property, and which is discovered by chance. La. Civ. C. art. 8423, par. 2.

TREASURE TROVE. Found treasure.

This name is given to such money or coin, gold, silver, plate, or bullion, which, having been hidden or concealed in the earth, or other private place, so long that its owner is unknown, has been discovered by accident. Should the owner be found, it must be restored to him; and in case of not finding him, the property, according to the English law, belongs to the king. In the latter case, by the civil law, when the treasure was found by the owner of the soil he was considered as entitled to it by the double title of owner and finder; when found on another's property, one-half belonged to the owner of the estate and the other to the finder; when found on public property, it belonged one-half to the public treasury and the other to the finder. Lecons du Dr. Rom. §§ 350-352. This includes not only gold and silver, but whatever may constitute riches: as vases urns, statues, etc.

If the owner is known it is not technically treasure-trove; 74 Me. 456. The crown is prima facie entitled to treasure-trove and there need not be an inquest to inform the crown of its rights; 41 W. R. 294.

TREASURER. An officer intrusted with the treasures or money either of a private individual, a corporation, a company, or a state. See OFFICER; SURETYSHIP; LORD HIGH TREASURER; LORD TREASURER.

TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES. An officer is appointed by the president by and with the advice and consent of the senate. He is required to give bond, with sufficient sureties, approved by the secretary of the treasury and the first comptroller, in the sum of $150,000, payable to the United States, for the faithful performance of the duties of his office and for the fidelity of the persons by him employed.

His principal duties are—to receive and keep the moneys of the United States, and disburse the same upon warrants drawn by the secretary of the treasury, countersigned by either comptroller and recorded by the register; to take receipts for all moneys paid by him; to render his account to the first comptroller quarterly, or oftener if required, and transmit a copy thereof, when settled, to the secretary of the treasury; to lay before each house, on the third day of every session of congress, fair and accurate copies of all accounts by him from time to time rendered to and settled with the first comptroller, and a true and perfect account of the state of the treasury; to submit at all times to the secretary of the treasury and the comptroller, or either of them, the inspection of the moneys in his hands. R. S. §§ 801-811. See DEPARTMENT.

TREASURER'S REMEMBRANCE. An official of the Exchequer who prepared the financial business which was to be brought before the barons at the time when they and the treasurer managed the king's revenues. He whose charge was to put the lord treasurer and the rest of the judges of the exchequer in remembrance of such things as were called on and dealt in for the sovereign's behoof. There is still one in Scotland. Whart.

TREASURY. The place where treasure is kept; the office of a treasurer. The term is more usually applied to the public than to a private treasury. The word is held not to be understood in the sense of locality as descriptive of a particular building, but whenever and where moneys are in the official custody of the treasurer or subject to his direction they are to be considered as in the state treasury. 10 Mich. 86. See DEPARTMENT.

TREASURY CHEST FUND. A fund in England originating in the unusual balances of certain grants of public money, and which is used for the purpose of banking and loan companies by the commissioners of the treasury. Whart. A fund not exceeding £1,000,000, which the treasury may employ to make advances for any public service, to be repaid out of moneys appropriated by parliament to such service. Byrne.

TREASURY NOTES. The treasury notes of the United States payable to holder or to bearer at a definite future time are negotiable commercial paper, and their transferability is subject to the commercial law of other paper of that character. Where such a paper is overdue a purchaser takes subject to the rights of antecedent holders to the same extent as in other paper bought after its maturity; 31 Wall. 188. See LEGAL TENDER.

TREASURY STOCK. See STOCK.

TREATY. A compact made between two or more independent nations with a view to the public welfare. Treaties are for a perpetuity, or for a considerable time. Those matters which are accomplished by a single act and are at once perfected in their execution are called agreements, conventions, and pactions.

A treaty is primarily a compact between independent nations. It depends for the enforcement of its provisions on the interest and the honor of the governments which are parties to it. If these fail, its infraction becomes the subject of international negotiations and reclamations, so far as the injured party chooses to seek redress, which may in the end be enforced by actual war. With all this the judicial courts have nothing to do and can give no redress. But a treaty may also contain provisions which confer certain rights upon the citizens or subjects of one of the nations residing in the territorial limits of the other, which partake of the nature of municipal law, and which are capable of enforcement as between private parties in the courts of the country. An illustration of this character is found in treaties, which regulate the mutual rights of citizens and subjects of the contracting nations in regard to rights of property by descent or inheritance, when the individuals concerned are aliens. The Constitution of the United States places such provisions as these in the same category as other laws of Congress by its declaration that "this Constitution and the laws made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made or which shall be made under authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land." A treaty, then, is a law of the land as an act of Congress is, whenever its provisions prescribe a rule by which the rights of the private citizen or subject may be determined. And when such rights are of a nature to be enforced in a court of justice, that court resorts to the treaty for a rule of decision for the case before it as it would to a statute. 112 U. S. 598, 599.

Personal treaties relate exclusively to the persons of the contracting parties, such as family alliances, and treaties guaranteeing the throne to a particular sovereign and his family. As they relate to the persons, they expire of course on the death of the sovereign or the extinction of his family.

Real treaties relate solely to the subject-matters of the convention, independently of the persons of the contracting parties, and continue to bind the state, although there may be changes in its constitution or in the persons of its rulers. Boyd's Wheat. Int. Law § 29.

On the part of the United States, treaties are made by the president, by and with the consent of the senate, provided two-thirds of the senators present concur. Const. art. 2, s. 2, n. 2.

No state shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation; Const. art. 1, s. 10, n. 1; nor shall any state, without the consent of congress, enter into any agreement or compact with another state or with a foreign power; id. art. 1, sec. 10, n. 2.

A treaty is declared to be the supreme law of the land, and is, therefore, obligatory on courts; 1 Cra. 108; 1 Paine 55; 124 U. S. 190; 119 id. 407; whenever it operates of itself without the aid of a legislative provision; but when the terms of the stipulation import a contract, and either of the parties engages to perform a particular act, the treaty addresses itself to the political, not to the judicial, department, and the legislature must execute the contract before it can become a rule of the court; 2 Pet. 814. A treaty is a law of the land whenever its provisions prescribe a rule by which the rights of the private citizen or subject may be determined; 148 U. S. 472. So an award by arbitrators under a treaty between the United States and another nation, by which the contracting nations agree that the decision of the tribunal of arbitration shall be a final settlement of all questions submitted, becomes the supreme law of the land and is as binding on the courts as an act of congress; 75 Fed. Rep. 513, reversing 45 id. 575.

It need hardly be said that a treaty cannot change the constitution or be held valid if it be in violation of that instrument. A treaty may supersede a prior act of congress, and an act of congress may supersede a prior treaty; and this is true both of treaties with Indians and foreign nations; 11 Wall. 620; 8 Op. Atty-Gen. 354; 43 Fed. Rep. 17; 55 id. 50; 148 U. S. 427; 149 id. 698; 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340.

A treaty providing that aliens may inherit lands is controlling, though in conflict with the laws of a state; 71 N. W. Rep. (Ia.) 204.

The question whether the United States is justified in disregarding its engagements with another nation is not one for the determination of the courts; 130 U. S. 581.

Treaties should be liberally construed, so as to carry out the apparent intention of the parties to secure equality and reciprocity between them; 133 U. S. 258.

So far as a treaty can be made the subject of judicial cognizance in the courts of this country, it is subject to such acts as congress may pass for its enforcement, modification, or repeal; 124 U. S. 190; 180 id. 238, 581, 143 id. 570.

Treaties are agreements between nations of a general nature bearing upon political or commercial questions, and are distinguished from conventions which are agreements relating to minor or specific subjects, such as consular conventions and postal conventions. The right to negotiate treaties is one of the tests of sovereignty. The king is usually the treaty-making power in a monarchy, though in modern times more or less restricted, and in a republic, the chief executive or some part of the legislature. After treaties have been negotiated and signed they must be ratified by the proper authorities of each state. Treaties usually provide for their own termination, but independently of that it has been held that when a treaty becomes dangerous to the life or incompatible with the independence of a state or a permanent obstacle to the development of its constitution or the rights of its people, it can be abrogated, and also when the condition of affairs which formed the basis of the treaty has become so modified by time that its execution has become contrary to the nature of things and the original intention of the parties; 22 Ct. Cls. 408. When war is declared between two states all treaties of specific relations between them cease. Snow, Int. L. 72. A treaty with a state is considered by the United States as abrogated when such state is conquered by or incorporated into another state. But England has taken an opposite position. War may affect existing treaties in various ways, but only those binding upon one or both belligerents; where they expressly provide for matters that relate only to a condition of war, they are not affected. Such was the Geneva Convention, 1864, as to the treatment of the wounded. Similarly those which create some permanent state affairs by an act done once for all; e. g. the settlements made by the Treaty of Vienna, 1815. So of a treaty ceding territory. But treaties which regulate commercial and social relations between the belligerents are at least suspended and possibly annulled by a war between them. That which relates to a continuous course of conduct, binding upon one or more belligerents and one or more third powers, will be continued, suspended, or annulled, according to the provisions. Risley, Law of War 85. But the practice has been so various and inconsistent that there is no basis for any general rule as to the effect of war on treaties; id. On breach of a treaty by one party to it, the other may declare a breach, or waive the breach and let the treaty remain in force; 1 Kent 175. Unless otherwise stipulated the breach of any one article of a treaty is a violation of the whole; id. Private rights may be sacrificed by treaty, for the public safety, but the government should compensate the individuals whose rights are affected; 1 Kent 167; 8 Dall. 199.

As affecting the rights of contracting governments, a treaty is binding from the date of its signature, and the exchange of signatures has a retroactive effect, confirming the treaty from its date; but a different rule prevails when the treaty operates on individual rights; 9 Wall. 82.

The law of the interpretation of treaties is substantially the same as in the case of other contracts; Wools. Int. L. 185. See 23 Ct. Cls. 1.

See Herstlet, collection of Commercial Treaties; PRECEDENCE; SIGNATORY.

TREATY OF PEACE. A treaty of peace is an agreement or contract made by belligerent powers, in which they agree to lay down their arms, and by which they stipulate the conditions of peace and regulate the manner in which it is to be restored and supported. Vattel, h. 4, c. 2, § 9.

Peace may be restored between belligerents by the cessation of hostilities; by the submission of one belligerent to another; and by a treaty of peace between the belligerents; 8 Phill. Int. L. 772; a formal declaration that war has ceased is not necessary; id. The belligerents may agree that possession shall be restored as it was before the war, that is, according to the status quo ante bellum; or that they shall remain as they were at the end of the war, which is expressed by the formula, uti possidetis (q. v.).

Overtures of peace may be made by either belligerent; or by a neutral; or by a state acting as a passive ally of either belligerent; or a neutral power may act as a mediator or interpose its good offices; 8 Phill. Int. L. 775.

Peace renders unlawful every act of force or violence between the states, and a capture, though made by a person ignorant of the completion, must be restored; 8 Phill. Int. L. 777; but it is said not to bind the subjects of the belligerent states until it is notified to them; Vattel 24. Where a period has been fixed by the treaty of peace for the cessation of hostilities, there is a difference of opinion as to whether a capture made before that period, but with knowledge of the peace, is lawful; that it is, see 1 Kent *172; 3 Phill. Int. L. 779. Where a capture was made before the period fixed for a cessation of hostilities, and in ignorance of the peace, and after the period, but in ignorance of the peace, there was a recapture, the recapture was held unlawful; the intervention of peace barred the title of the owner; 1 Kent 178; 6 C. Rob. 138.

TREBLE COSTS. In English Practice. The taxed costs and three-fourths the same added thereto. It is computed by adding one-half for double costs, and in addition one-half of one-half for treble costs. 1 Chitty, Pr. 27.

In American Law. In Pennsylvania the rule is different: when an act of assembly gives treble costs, the party is allowed three times the usual costs, with the exception that the fees of the officers are not to be trebled when they are not regularly or usually payable by the defendant; 2 Rawle 201.

And in New York the directions of the statute are to be strictly pursued, and the costs are to be trebled; 2 Duml. Fr. 731.

TREBLE DAMAGES. See MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

TREBUCKET. The name of an engine of punishment, said to be synonymous with tumbrel.

TREE. A woody plant, which in respect of thickness and height grows greater than any other plant.

A woody plant, the branches of which spring from, and are supported upon, a trunk or body. It may be young or old, small or great; 70 Miss. 411.

Trees are part of the real estate while growing and before they are severed from the freehold; but as soon as they are cut down they are personal property. Some trees are timber trees, while others do not bear that denomination. See TIMBER.

Trees belong to the owner of the land where they grow; but if the roots go out of one man's land into that of another, or the branches spread over the adjoining estates, such roots or branches may be cut off by the owner of the land into which they thus grow; Rolle 394; 6 Ves. Ch. 109; 78 Cal. 611. See 107 Mass. 234; Wood, Nuis. § 112.

When the roots grow into the adjoining land, the owner of such land may lawfully claim a right to hold the tree in common with the owner of the land where it was planted; but if the branches only overshadow the adjoining land, and the roots do not enter it, the tree wholly belongs to the owner of the estate where the roots grow; 1 Ld. Raym. 737. See 1 Pick. 224;

6 N. H. 480. When the tree grows directly on the boundary-line, so that the line passes through it, it is the property of both owners, whether it be marked as a boundary or not; 12 N. H. 454; 88 Ia. 301; 34 Barb. 547; 88 Vt. 115. As to sales of standing timber, see 6 Harv. L. Rev. 367; SALE. See TIMBER TREES; NUISANCE.

An electric company may, in the observance of a statute, trim trees, if necessary, but not so as to do unnecessary damage; Crow. Electr. 209; 89 La. Ann. 996. The subject is regulated by statute in Connecticut, Maryland, Michigan, New Hampshire, and Vermont.

Where the branches of a tree growing upon the land of one person overhang that of his neighbor, one may, without notice, cut off so much of a tree as overhangs his land, if he can do so without going upon the land of the owner, and such owner cannot acquire, either by prescription or the statute of limitations, the right to overhang his neighbor's land; [1895] App. Cas. 1, affg. [1894] 3 Ch. 1; and where a tree stands on the dividing line between adjoining lots, either owner may cut off branches or roots extending over his own land; 65 Conn. 365, distinguishing 11 id. 177; but it has been held that an injunction will lie to restrain an adjoining owner of a rural lot from destroying a tree growing on the division line; 85 W. N. C. Pa. 864. The owner of land on which a partially decayed tree is permitted to stand in such position that by falling it would damage the house of another, is liable for damages caused by its falling after he has been notified that it was dangerous; 4 App. Div. N. Y. 198. See STANDING TREES.

TRESAILE, or TRESAYLE. The grandfather's grandfather. 1 Bla. Com. 186.

TRESPASS. Any misfeasance or act of one man whereby another is injuriously treated or damaged. 7 Conn. 125.

Any unlawful act committed with violence, actual or implied, to the person, property, or rights of another.

Any unauthorized entry upon the realty of another to the damage thereof.

The word is used oftener in the last two somewhat restricted significations than in the first sense here given. In determining the nature of the act, neither the amount of violence or the intent with which it is offered, nor the extent of the damage accomplished or the purpose for which the act was committed, are of any importance; since a person who enters upon the land of another without leave, to lead off his own runaway horse, and who breaks a blade of grass in so doing, commits a trespass; 3 Humph. 325; 5 Johns. 5.

It is said that some damage must be committed to make an act a trespass. It is undoubtedly true that damage is required to constitute a trespass for which an action will lie; but, so far as the tort itself is concerned, it seems more than doubtful if the mere commission of an act affecting another, without legal authority, does not constitute trespass, though until damage is done the law will not regard it, inasmuch as the law does not regard trifles.

The distinction between the different classes of trespass is of importance in determining the nature of the remedy.

A trespass committed with force is said to be done vi et armis; one committed by entry upon the realty, by breaking the close.

In Practice. A form of action which lies to recover damages for the injury sustained by the plaintiff, as the immediate consequence of some wrong done forcibly to his person or property, against the person committing the same.

The action lies for injuries to the person of the plaintiff, as, by assault and battery, wounding, imprisonment, and the like; 9 Vt. 352; 6 Blackf. 375.

It lies, also, for forcible injuries to the person of another, whereby a direct injury is done to the plaintiff in regard to his rights as parent, master, etc.; 3 Caines 292; 8 S. & R. 86. It does not lie for mere non-feasance, nor where the matter affected was not tangible.

An action of trespass at common law will lie in a state court by the owner of one vessel against the owner of another for damages by fire at a wharf; 128 U. S. 182.

The action lies for injuries to personal property, which may be committed by the several acts of unlawfully striking, chasing if alive, and carrying away to the damage of the plaintiff, a personal chattel; 1 Wms. Saund. 84; Cro. Jac. 869; of which another is the owner and in possession; 5 Vt. 97; and for the removal or injury of inanimate personal property; 18 Pick. 189; 5 Johns. 348; of which another has the possession, actual or constructive; 81 Pick. 369; 18 Johns. 141; 6 W. & S. 828; without the owner's assent. A naked possession or right to immediate possession is sufficient to support this action; 7 Johns. 585; 17 S. & R. 361; 11 Mass. 70; 10 Vt. 165.

An action lies for an unintentional act of trespass, even if there is no malice; 19 Johns. 88; but a man who accidentally shoots another, without negligence, is not liable in an action of trespass; [1891] 1 Q. B. 86. See 153 U. S. 39; TRESPASSER.

The action lies also for injuries to the realty consequent upon entering without right upon another man's land (breaking his close). The inclosure may be purely imaginary; 1 D. & B. 371; but reaches to the sky and to the centre of the earth; 19 Johns. 381.

In an action of trespass, or trespass on the case, on land, the courts cannot try the title to the land; 96 Fed. Rep. 269. An action for trespass on land is a local action and can be brought only within the state in which the land lies; 158 U. S. 105.

An injunction will lie to restrain a trespass when the injury is irreparable, or when the trespass is a continuing one, as by cutting trees on forest land; 84 Fed. Rep. 546; Pom. Eq. Jur. 165, § 1857. See INJUNCTION.

The plaintiff must be in possession with some title; 5 East 435; 9 Johns. 81; 4 Watts 377; 4 Pick. 803; 31 Pa. 804; 6 Harring. 320; 11 Fed. 417; see 45 Mo. App. 270; though mere title is sufficient where no one is in possession; 1 Wend. 466; 1 Vt. 485; as in case of an owner to the centre of a highway; 4 N. H. 86; and mere possession is sufficient against a wrongdoer; 9 Ala. 82; or a stranger; 38 Minn. 123; 71 Wis. 276; and the possession may be by an agent; 8 M'CORD 423; but not by a tenant; 8 Pick. 293; other than a tenant at will; 15 Pick. 102. But a person holding lands under a contract of sale without any possessory rights before payment, cannot maintain an action; 95 Mich. 140.

An action will not lie unless some damage is committed; but slight damage only is required; 2 Johns. 337; 65 Vt. 678. Some damage must have been done to sustain the action; 2 Bay 421; though it may have been very slight; as, breaking glass; 4 Mass. 140; 50 Ark. 65; 11 Colo. 226.

The action will not lie where the defendant has a justification sufficient to excuse the act committed, though he acted without authority from the owner or the person affected; 8 Law Rep. 77. See JUSTIFICATION; TRESPASSER. Accident may in some cases excuse a trespass; 7 Vt. 62; 4 M'CORD 61; 12 Me. 67.

The declaration must contain a concise statement of the injury complained of, whether to the person, personal or real property, and it must allege that the injury was committed vi et armis and contra pacem. See CONTINUANDO.

The plea of not guilty raises the general issue, and under it the defendant may give in evidence any facts which show that the property was not in possession of the plaintiff rightfully as against the defendant at the time of the injury, or that the injury was not committed by the defendant with force.

Other matters must, in general, be pleaded specially. See TRESPASS QUARE CLAUSUM. Matters in justification, as, authority by law; 4 Mo. 1; defence of the defendant's person or property, taking a distress on premises other than those demised, etc.; 1 Chitty, Pl. 439; custom to enter; 4 Pick. 145; right of way; 7 Mass. 383; etc., must be specially pleaded. In trespass at common law the declaration need not describe the close on which the trespass was committed; 43 Ill. App. 180.

Judgment is for the damages assessed by the jury when for the plaintiff, and for costs when for the defendant. See JUSTIFICATION.

TRESPASS DE BONIS ASPORTATIS (Lat. de bonis asportatis, for goods which have been carried away).

A form of action brought by the owner of goods to recover damages for unlawfully taking and carrying them away. 1 Me. 117. It is no answer to the action that the defendant has returned the goods; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 36 (H).

TRESPASS ON THE CASE. The form of action by which a person seeks to recover damages caused by an injury unaccompanied with force or which results indirectly from the act of the defendant. It is more generally called, simply, case. See CASE.

TRESPASS FOR MESNE PROFITS. A form of action supplemental to an action of ejectment, brought against the tenant in possession to recover the profits which he has unlawfully received during the time of his occupation. 8 Bla. Com. 205; 4 Burr. 1668. See MESNE PROFITS.

TRESPASS QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT (Lat. quare clausum fregit, because he had broken the close). The form of action which lies to recover damages for injuries to the realty consequent upon entry without right upon the plaintiff's land.

Close means the interest a person has in any piece of ground, whether enclosed or not; when the plaintiff had not an interest in the soil, but an interest in the profits only, trespass may be maintained; 2 Wheat. Selw. [1340].

Mere possession is sufficient to enable one having it to maintain the action; 12 Wend. 488; 22 Me. 350; 133 Ind. 147; 61 Vt. 119; except as against one claiming under the rightful owner; 6 N. H. 9; 2 Ill. 181; 7 Mo. 333; 8 Utah 406; and no one but the owner can have the action; 19 Wend. 507; except in case of tenancies at will or by a lease secure holding; 8 Pick. 833. It cannot be maintained if defendant was in possession of the locus in quo at the time of the alleged trespass, and for some years before; 143 Pa. 65. See CLOSE.

The action lies where an animal of the defendant breaks the plaintiff's close, to his injury; 7 W. & S. 387; 31 Pa. 328.

TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE. The name of the action used in South Carolina for the recovery of the possession of real property and damages for any trespass committed upon the same by the defendant.

TRESPASS VI ET ARMIS (Lat. vi et armis, with force and arms). The form of action which lies to recover damages for an injury which is the immediate consequence of a forcible wrongful act done to the person or personal property; 3 Const. 294. It is distinguished from case in this, that the injury in case is the indirect result of the act done. See CASE.

TRESPASSER. One who does an unlawful act, or a lawful act in an unlawful manner, to the injury of the person or property of another. Any act which is injurious to the property of another renders the doer a trespasser, unless he has authority to do it from the owner or custodian; 14 Me. 44; or by law; 2 Conn. 700; 10 Johns. 138; 13 Me. 350; 6 Ill. 401; and in this latter case any defect in his authority, as, want of jurisdiction by the court; 11 Conn. 95; 8 Cow. 206; defective or void proceedings; 16 Me. 38; 2 Dev. 370; misapplication of process; 6 Monr. 296; 14 Me. 312; renders him liable as a trespasser.

So, too, the commission of a legal act in an illegal manner, as, the execution of legal process illegally; 2 Johns. Cas. 27; abuse of legal process; 16 Ala. 67; exceeding the authority conferred by the owner; 13 Me. 116; or by law; 13 Mass. 620; 10 S. & E. 899; renders a man a trespasser. A ministerial officer, where it is his duty to act, cannot be made a trespasser; 137 U. S. 43; and acting in obedience to process regular on its face, and issued by a tribunal having jurisdiction and power to issue the process, is not liable for its regular enforcement, although errors may have been committed by the tribunal which issued it; 142 U. S. 298. See FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

In all these cases where a man begins an act which is legal by reason of some authority given him, and then becomes a trespasser by subsequent acts, he is held to be a trespasser ab initio (from the beginning), q. v.

A person may be a trespasser by ordering such an act done as makes the doer a trespasser; 14 Johns. 406; or by subsequently assenting, in some cases; 1 Rawle 121; or assisting, though not present; 2 Litt. 240.

It seems that a verdict for the plaintiff in quare clausum fregit does not operate as an estoppel in a subsequent action of ejectment; 31 Pa. 381.

TRESPASSER AB INITIO. A term applied to denote that one who has commenced a lawful act in a proper manner, has performed some unlawful act, or some lawful act in an unlawful manner, so connected with the previous act that he is to be regarded as having acted unlawfully from the beginning. See 6 Carpenters' Case, 8 Co. 146; s. c. 1 Sm. L. C. *216; Webb's Poll. Torts. See AB INITIO.

TRIAL. In Practice. The examination before a competent tribunal, according to the laws of the land, of the facts put in issue in a cause, for the purpose of determining such issue. 4 Mass. 232.

The examination of the matter of fact in issue is a cause. The decision of the issue of fact; Steph. Pl. 77; 22 Or. 167.

Cf. TENANCY BY SUFFERANCE.

The word "trial" as used in § 724, Rev. Stat., refers to the final examination and decision of matter of law as well as facts, for which every antecedent step is a preparation. 221 U. S. 533. See RIGHT TO JURY TRIAL.

"Trial," as used in the acts of congress of July 17, 1864, and March 2, 1867, appropriately designates a trial by the jury of an issue which will determine the facts in an action at law; and "final hearing," in contradistinction to hearings upon interlocutory matters, the hearing of a cause upon its merits by a judge sitting in equity; 119 Mass. 349; 19 Wall. 214.

Trial by certificate is a mode of trial allowed by the English law in those cases where the evidence of the person certifying is the only proper criterion of the point in dispute.

Trial by grand assize is a peculiar mode of trial allowed in writs of right. See ASSIZE; GRAND ASSIZE.

Trial by inspection or examination is a form of trial in which the judges of the court upon the testimony of their own senses decide the point in dispute.

This trial takes place when, for the greater expedition of a cause, in some point or issue being either the principle question or arising collaterally out of it, being evidently the object of sense, the judges of the court, upon the testimony of their own senses, shall decide the point in dispute. For where the affirmative or negative of a question is matter of such obvious determination, it is not thought necessary to summon a jury to decide it,—who are properly called in to inform the conscience of the court in respect of dubious facts; and, therefore, when the fact from its nature must be evident in the court either from ocular demonstration or other irrefragable proof, there the law departs from its usual resort, the verdict of twelve men, and relies on its judgment alone.

Judges of courts of equity frequently decide facts upon mere inspection. The most familiar examples are those of cases where the plaintiff prays an injunction on an allegation of piracy or infringement of a patent or copyright; 5 Ves. Ch. 709, and the cases there cited.

To insure fairness, this mode of trial must be in public; the parties to the suit, or, in a criminal trial, the prisoner, must be present; but the continuance of the trial and the taking of testimony during the brief absence of the prisoner from the court-room on business connected with the trial, has been held not to be error; 25 Alb. L. J. 303; 43 N. Y. 1; but the absence of the trial judge from the court-room for any considerable time during the trial of a cause or the arguments to the jury without the consent of the parties is a material error for which the judgment will be reversed and a new trial ordered; 95 Wis. 558. Suggestions by the trial judge to the jury that in default of agreement they be kept to the end of the term, to save expense to the county, are ground for reversal; 35 S. W. Rep. (Tex.) 1080. There ought to be no communication between a judge and a jury after the latter have retired unless in open court and if practicable, in the presence of counsel. 4 U. S. App. 290. See PRESENCE.

It is within the discretion of the trial court to allow the introduction of evidence out of the usual order, and in the absence of gross abuse its exercise of this discretion is not reviewable; 160 U. S. 70. It is also discretionary with the court to admit evidence to prove a point after the testimony is closed; 10 U. S. App. 98; and to refuse to allow the examination of witnesses for the purpose of elaborating previous testimony; 16 U. S. App. 30.

Where objection is made in a criminal trial to comments on facts not in evidence or exaggerated expressions of the prosecuting officer, the court should interfere and put a stop to them if they are likely to be prejudicial to the accused; 150 U. S. 118.

An objection of disorderly conduct of a trial is within the sound discretion of the trial court; and it is only when such discretion has been abused to the prejudice of the complaining party that the appellate court will interfere; 27 U. S. App. 663.

It is generally held that the prosecuting attorney has the power to enter a nolle prosequi in a criminal case without the consent of the court; 23 Colo. 466. It is properly said, however, that "the power is not unlimited."

The stages in a criminal prosecution: (1) The inauguration or preliminary stage, when the indictment is absolutely under the control of the prosecuting officer; (2) The trial of the cause and its incidents, during which the court has control, and the power of the prosecuting officer is suspended; and (3) The period between the verdict of the jury and sentence by the court; when the pardoning power of the governor attaches. State v. Moise (La.), 18 So. Rep. 943, 1895. Accordingly, the power of the district attorney to enter a nolle prosequi is subject to the following limitations: (1) After the jury has been impaneled and the charge read, he cannot discontinue if the defendant insists upon a verdict; and (2) After verdict and refusal to grant a new trial, he cannot dismiss the prosecution without the leave of the court. 18 So. Rep. (La.) 942; 84 Am. L. Reg. n. s. 7.

Trial at nisi prius. Originally, a trial before a justice in eyre. Afterwards, by Westm. 3, 13 Edw. I. c. 80, before a justice of assize; 3 Bla. Com. 853. See NISSI PRIUS.

Trial by the record. This trial applies to cases where an issue of nisi tunc record is joined in any action.

The trial by record is not only in use when an issue of this kind happens to arise for decision, but it is the only legitimate mode of trying such issue; and the parties cannot put themselves upon the country; Steph. Pl. And. ed. 171; 3 Bla. Com. 880.

Trial by wager of battle. See WAGER OF BATTLE.

Trial by wager of law. See OATH DEFERORY; WAGER OF LAW.

Trial by witnesses is a species of trial by witnesses, or per testes, without the intervention of a jury. This is the only method of trial known to the civil law.

In England, when a widow brings a writ of dower and the tenant pleads that the husband is not dead, this, being looked upon as a dilatory plea, is in favor of the widow, and, for greater expedition, allowed to be tried by witnesses examined before the judges; and so, says Finch, shall no other case in our law; Finch, Law 423. But Coke mentions others: as, to try whether the tenant in a real action was duly summoned; or, the validity of a challenge to a juror; so that Finch's observation must be confined to the trial of direct and not collateral issues.

Trial at bar. A species of trial now seldom resorted to, and, as to civil causes, abolished by the Judicature Act, 1875, was one held before all the judges of one of the supreme courts of Westminster, or before a quorum representing the full court. The celebrated case of Reg. v. Castro, otherwise Tichborne v. Orton, L. R. 9 Q. B. 850, was a trial at bar; Brown, Dict. See POSTULATION; OPEN COURT; PUBLIC TRIAL; WITNESS.

See, for an elaborate article on the conduct of counsel at trial, 45 Cent. L. J. 292.

See FORMER TRIAL.

TRIAL LIST. A list of cases marked down for trial for any one term.

TRIBES. See FIVE CIVILIZED NATIONS.

TRIBUNAL. The seat of a judge; the place where he administers justice. The whole body of judges who compose a jurisdiction. The jurisdiction which the judges exercise.

The term is Latin, and derives its origin from the elevated seat where the tribunes administered justice.

Any court, forum, or judicial body. Anderson's L. Dict.

TRIBUNAL OF THE HAGUE. See HAGUE CONFERENCE.

TRIBUNAUX DE COMMERCE. In French Law. Certain courts composed of a president, judges, and substitutes, which take cognizance of all cases between merchants, and of disagreements among partners. Appeals lie from them to the courts of justice. Brown, Dict.

TRIBUTARY. All streams flowing directly or indirectly into a river. [1895] 1 Q. B. 237.

TRIBUTARY. Offered as a tribute. Inferior. Subordinate. One paying tribute. English.

TRIBUTE. A contribution which is sometimes raised by the sovereign from his subjects to sustain the expenses of the state. It is also a sum of money paid by one nation to another under some pretended right. Wolff § 1145.

TRIENNIAL ACT. An act passed by the Long Parliament, 1640-1, and repealed by the Convention Parliament, 1660, and more particularly the Act 6 Will. & M. c. 2, whereby every parliament, unless sooner dissolved, came to an end in three years. It was repealed on the accession of Geo. I by the Septennial Act. R. & L. Dict.

TRIGAMUS. In Old English Law. One who has been thrice married; one who, at different times and successively, has had three wives.

TRIGILD (Sax. from thry, three, and gelde, a payment). A triple gild, gold or payment; three times the value of a thing, paid as a composition or satisfaction. Burrill; Spelman.

TRINA ADMONITIO. A triple admonition. Chase's Blackstone, App. This was given, for instance, to a prisoner before the infliction of the old English punishment, peine forte et dure. 4 Bla. Com. 325.

TRINEPOS (Lat.). In Roman Law. Great-grandson of a grandchild.

TRINEPTIS (Lat.). Great-granddaughter of a grandchild.

TRINITY HOUSE. See ELDER BRETHREN.

TRINITY SITTINGS. See LONDON AND MIDDLESEX SITTINGS.

TRINITY TERM. See TERM.

TRINIUMGELDUM (Sax. tri-nigun-geld). An extraordinary kind of composition for an offense, consisting of three times nine, or twenty-seven times the single gold or payment. Burrill; Spelman.

TRINKETS. Small articles of personal adornment or use when the object is essentially ornamental. 28 L. J. C. P. 626. See JEWELRY.

TRINODA NECESSITAS (Lat.). The threefold necessary public duties to which all lands were liable by Saxon law, viz. for repairing bridges, for maintaining castles or garrisons, and for expeditions to repel invasions. 1 Bla. Com. 263.

TRIOBS. In Practice. Persons appointed according to law to try whether a person challenged to the favor is or is not qualified to serve on the jury. They do not exceed two in number, without the consent of the prosecutor and defendant, or unless some special case is alleged by one of them, or when only one juror has been sworn and two triors are appointed with him. Co. Litt. 158 a; Bacon, Abr. Juries (E 12).

The method of selecting triors is thus explained. Where the challenge is made to the first juror, the court will appoint two indifferent persons to be triors; if they find him indifferent, he shall be sworn and join the triors in determining the next challenge. But when two jurors have been found impartial and have been sworn, then the office of the triors will cease, and every subsequent challenge will be decided upon by the juryman. If more than two juryman have been sworn, the court may assign any two of them to determine the challenges. To the triors thus chosen no challenges can be admitted.

The triors examine the juryman challenged, and decide upon his fitness; 8 Park. Cr. Cas. 467. Their decision is final. They are liable to punishment for misbehavior in office; 4 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 858; 15 S. & R. 156; 21 Wend. 509. The office is abolished in many of the states, the judge acting in their place; 23 Ga. 57; 43 Me. 11; 98 U. S. 157.

The lords also chosen to try a peer, when indicted for felony, in the court of the Lord High Steward, q. v., are called triors. Moz. & W.

TRIPARTITE. Consisting of three parts: as, a deed tripartite, between A of the first part, B of the second part, and C of the third part.

TRIPLE ALLIANCE. The alliance between England, Holland and Sweden, formed by Sir William Temple on January 23, 1668, in order to check the aggressive policy of Louis XIV, whose purpose to invade the Netherlands was then manifest. Taylor, Int. Pub. Law. 102.

An Alliance between Germany, Austria, and Italy, formed in 1882. This powerful combination caused France to form a Dual Alliance with Russia, and later a Triple Entente (q. v.) with Russia and England. Charles Downes Hozen—Fifty Years of Europe, 325.

TRIPPLICATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. The reply of the plaintiff (actor) to the rejoinder (duplicatio) of the defendant (reus). It corresponds to the surrejoinder of common law. Inst. 4, 14; Bracton, G. l. 5, t. 5, c. 1.

TRIPPLICATION. A pleading in admiralty, second in order after a replication; now obsolete. In Civil Law, the surrejoinder; In Canon Law, the rejoinder. English. See PLEADING.

TRISTIS SUCCESSIO. See HERED-

ITS LITIGIOSA.

TRITAVUS (Lat.). In Roman Law. The male ascendant in the sixth degree. For the female ascendant in the same degree the term is trifavia. In forming genealogical tables this convenient term is still used.

TRITHING (Sax. trithinga). The third part of a county, consisting of three or four hundreds.

A court within the circuit of the trithing, in the nature of a court-leet, but inferior to the county court. Camd. 102. The ridings of Yorkshire are only a corruption of trythings. 1 Bla. Com. 116; Spelm. Gloss. 52.

TRIUMVIRI CAPITALE, or TREVIRI, or TRESVIRI. In Roman Law. Officers who had charge of the prison, through whose intervention punishments were inflicted. Sallust, in Catilin.

TRIVIAL. Of small importance. It is a rule in equity that a demurrer will lie to a bill on the ground of the triviality of the matter in dispute, as being below the dignity of the court. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4237. See MAXIMS, De minimis, etc.

TRONAGE. A customary duty or toll for weighing wool: so called because it was weighed by a common trona, or beam. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12.

TROOPS. Soldiers collectively; a body of soldiers. The term does not embrace any of the following classes of persons, when traveling separately and not as part of a moving body or detachment of soldiers, viz: Discharged soldiers, discharged military prisoners, and rejected applicants for enlistment; applicants for enlistment, provisionally accepted, but subject to final examination and not sworn in; retired enlisted men; and furloughed soldiers en route back to their stations. 249 U. S. 354.

Land-Grant Acts. The military force of the United States is, and always has been a unit, although divided for purposes of administration into several branches; and there is nothing in the land-grant acts to indicate an intention on the part of Congress to differentiate between the several branches in respect to transportation charges. It was held that the term "troops" is not confined to land forces, and that it includes men and officers in every branch. Since those in the Navy and Marine Corps are to be deemed troops within the meaning of those acts, members of the Coast Guard should also be deemed such when serving as part of the Navy. But at other times members of the Coast Guard are not troops; for then it operates under, and at the expense of, the Treasury Department. 258 U. S. 376.

See FOREIGN TROOPS.

TROUBLE MAN. The business of a "trouble man" imposes on him the duty of inspection and examination, and he has no right to assume that wires at places where he is sent to repair telephones are properly insulated or protected when he knows, or has reasonable grounds to know, that the trouble he is sent to adjust was caused by the fact that the wires were not properly insulated at a point where they were liable to come in contact with heavily charged electric wires. 156 Ky. 331, 160 S. W. 1061.

TROVER (Fr. trouver, to find). In Practice. A form of action which lies to recover damages against one who has, without right, converted to his own use goods or personal chattels in which the plaintiff has a general or special property. A generic name, applied to those torts, arising from the unlawful conversion of any particular piece of personal property owned by another; 358 C. 475.

In form it is a fiction: in substance, a remedy to recover the value of personal chattels wrongfully converted by another to his own use. 1 Burr. 81.

The action was originally an action of trespass on the case where goods were found by the defendant and retained against the plaintiff's rightful claim. The manner of gaining possession soon came to be disregarded, as the substantial part of the action is the conversion to the defendant's use; so that the action lies whether the goods came into the defendant's possession by finding or otherwise. If he fails to deliver them upon the rightful claim of the plaintiff. It differs from detinue and replevin in this, that it is brought for damages and not for the specific articles; and from trespass in this, that the injury is not necessarily a forcible one, as trover may be brought in any case where trespass for injury to personal property will lie; but the converse is not true. In case possession was gained by a trespass, the plaintiff by bringing his action in this form waives his right to damages for the taking, and is confined to the injury resulting from the conversion; 17 Pick. 1; 17 Me. 434.

The action lies for one who has a general or absolute property; Bull. N. P. 33; 25 Me. 220; 23 Ga. 484; together with a right to immediate possession; 1 Ry. & M. 99; 22 Pick. 585; 19 N. H. 419; 6 Houst. 344; see 82 Ill. 409; 97 Mass. 37; 105 Ind. 81; as, for example, a vendor of property sold upon condition not fulfilled; 1 Meigs 76; or a special property, including actual possession as against a stranger; 2 Saund. 47; 6 Johns. 195; 15 Mass. 242; 4 Blackf. 995; as, for example, a sheriff holding under rightful process; 7 Johns. 32; 2 Murph. 19; a mortgagee in possession; 5 Cow. 823; a simple bailee; 15 Mass. 252; Wright, Ohio 744; see 76 N. C. 402; 95 Pa. 243; 61 Ga. 147; or even a finder merely; 9 Cow. 670; 2 Ala. 320; and including lawful custody and a right of detention as against the general owner of the goods or chattels; 8 Wend. 445; 3 Blackf. 419. An executor or administrator is held an absolute owner by relation from the death of the decedent; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 641; 7 Metc. 503; and he may maintain an action for a conversion in the lifetime of the decedent; T. U. P. Charlt. 261; 6 Mass. 394; and is liable for a conversion by the decedent; 1 Hayw. 21, 308, 362.

Trustees having title to chattels with an immediate right of possession may sue in trover for the chattels, although they may never have taken actual possession, but have allowed the goods to remain in the occupation of their cestui que trust; [1891] 3 Ch. 172.

The property affected must be some personal chattel; 3 S. & R. 513; specifically set off as the plaintiff's; 4 B. & C. 948; 3 Pick. 38; including title deeds; 2 Yeates 537; a copy of a record; 11 Pick. 492; money, though not tied up; 4 E. D. Smith 162; negotiable securities; 3 B. & C. 45; 8 Johns. 432; 1 Root 125, 221; 3 Vt. 99; 27 Ala. N. S. 228; animals feræ naturæ, but reclaimed; 10 Johns. 102; trees and crops severed from the inheritance; 3 Mo. 137, 393; 15 Mass. 204; 4 Cal. 184. It will lie by a surviving partner to recover possession of the firm assets as against the representatives of the deceased partners; 17 R. I. 679. It will not lie for property in custody of the law; 9 Johns. 381; or rightfully held; see 2 Ala. 570; or to which the title must be determined by a court of peculiar jurisdiction only; 1 Cam. & N. 115; or where the bailee has lost the property, or had it stolen, or it has been destroyed by want of due care; 2 Ired. 98. Unless an actual conversion by bailee be shown, an action of trover against him will not lie without a previous demand for the goods; 79 Ga. 134. See CONVERSION.

There must have been a conversion of the property by the defendant; 8 Ark. 204. And a waiver of such conversion will defeat the action; 20 Pick. 90. Non-delivery of goods by a vessel is not a conversion of the goods; 85 U. S. App. 369. See CONVERSION; 15 Am. L. Rev. 803; 6 So. L. Rev. 822.

The declaration must state a rightful possession of the goods by the plaintiff; Hempst. 160; but need not show the nature or evidence of plaintiff's title; 91 Mich. 414; it must describe the goods with convenient certainty, though not so accurately as in detinue; Bull. N. P. 32; 6 Gray 12; must formally allege a finding by the defendant, and must aver a conversion; 12 N. Y. 313. It is not indispensable to state the price or value of the thing converted; 2 Wash. Va. 192; and where there is an actual conversion of property, demand before action is not necessary; 155 Mass. 376; 107 Mo. 663.

The plea of not guilty raises the general issue.

Judgment, when for the plaintiff, is that he recover his damages and costs, or, in some states, in the alternative, that the defendant restore the goods or pay, etc.; 19 Ga. 579; when for the defendant, that he recover his costs. The measure of damages is the value of the property at the time of the conversion, with interest; 26 Ala. N. S. 213; 30 Vt. 307; 19 Mo. 467. 133 Mass. 158, 273; see 6 Houst. 344; 64 Vt. 286.

TROY WEIGHT. See MEASURES; WEIGHT.

TRUCE. In International Law. An agreement between belligerent parties by which they mutually engage to forbear all acts of hostility against each other for some time, the war still continuing. Burlamaqui, N. & P. Law 1.

There is said to be no authoritative distinction between a truce and an armistice; perhaps the latter is generally considered a truce of a restricted character, limited as to the forces and the local area to which it applies. It may be entered into by a general or an admiral in command of an army or fleet; while a general truce can be entered into only by a commander-in-chief and requires the ratification of the state for its validity; Risley, Law of War 153.

Truces are of several kinds: general, extending to all the territories and dominions of both parties; and particular, restricted to particular places; as, for example, by sea, and not by land, etc. Id. They are also absolute, indeterminate, and general; or limited and determined to certain things; for example, to bury the dead. Id. See 1 Kent 159; Halleck, Int. Law 654.

A particular or partial truce may be made by a subordinate commander; a general truce only by the sovereign power or by its authority; 1 Kent 159.

During the continuance of a truce, either party may do within his own territory or the limits prescribed by the armistice, whatever he could do in time of peace, e. g. levy and march troops, collect provisions, receive reinforcements from his allies, or repair the fortifications of a place not actually besieged; but neither party can do what the continuance of hostilities would have prevented him from doing, e. g. repair fortifications of a besieged place; and all things, the possession of which was especially contested when the truce was made, must remain in their antecedent places; Hall, Int. Law 500; Vattel, Dr. des Gens §§ 245, 251; Boyd's Wheat. Int. Law § 408.

TRUCE. See FLAG OF TRUCE.

TRUCE OF GOD (Law L. treuza Dei; Sax. treuge or trewa, from Germ. treu; Fr. trêve de Dieu). In the middle ages, a limitation of the right of private warfare introduced by the church. This truce provided that hostilities should cease on holidays, from Thursday evening to Sunday evening of each week, the whole season of Advent and Lent, and the octaves of great festivals. The penalty for breach of the truce was excommunication. The protection of this truce was also extended constantly to certain places, as, churches, convents, hospitals, etc., and certain persons, as, clergymen, peasants in the field, crusaders, and, in general, all defenseless persons. It was first introduced into Aquitaine in 1041, and into England under Edward the Confessor. 1 Rob. Charles V. App. n. xxi.

TRUCK ACTS. The Truck Act, 1831, was passed to abolish what is commonly called the "truck system." Under that system employers were in the practice of paying the wages of their employees in goods, or of requiring them to purchase goods at certain shops, which led to laborers being compelled to take goods of inferior quality at a high price. The act made payment in money compulsory; and it applied to all artificers, workmen and laborers, except those engaged in certain trades, especially iron and metal works, quarries, cloth, silk and glass manufactories. It did not apply to domestic or agricultural servants. The Truck Act Amendment Act, 1887, s. 2, now, however, provides that the Act of 1831 shall apply to workmen as defined by the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, s. 10, that is to say, to all persons (other than domestic servants) under a contract to perform manual labor. This brought in agricultural laborers, but s. 4 of the act of 1887, provides that a contract may be made with an agricultural laborer "for giving him food, drink, not being intoxicating, a cottage or other allowances or privileges in addition to money wages." Byrne. See LIBERTY OF CONTRACT; POLICE POWER.

TRUE. That only is true which is conformable to the actual state of things. In that sense, a statement is untrue which does not express things exactly as they are. But in another and broader sense, the word "true" is often used as a synonym of honest, sincere, not fraudulent. 111 U. S. 845. Prima facie "untrue" means inaccurate, not necessarily wilfully false. 113 E. C. L. *929.

TRUE BILL. In Practice. Words indorsed on a bill of indictment when a grand jury, after having heard the witnesses for the government, are of opinion that there is sufficient cause to put the defendant on his trial. Formerly the indorsement was Billa vera when legal proceedings were in Latin; it is still the practice to write on the back of the bill Ignoramus when the jury do not find it to be a true bill; the better opinion is that the omission of the words a true bill does not vitiate an indictment; 11 Cush. 473; 18 N. H. 488. See GRAND JURY.

TRUE COPY. A true copy, does not mean an absolutely exact copy but means that the copy shall be so true that anybody can understand it. 51 L. J. Ch. 905.

TRUE, PUBLIC, AND NOTORIOUS. These three qualities used to be formally predicated in the libel in the ecclesiastical courts, of the charges which it contained, at the end of each article, severally. Whart.

TRUNK RAILWAY. An electric railroad company authorized to perform the duties of a carrier of freight and passengers between two cities in different States and all intermediate points is a "trunk railway." 117 Ky. 146, 77 S. W. 674.

TRUST. A right of property, real or personal, held by one party for the benefit of another.

In its technical sense, is the right, enforceable solely in equity, to the beneficial enjoyment of property of which the legal title is in another. 7 J. C. R. 90, cited by Bispham, Prin. of Eq. 83.

A trust is merely what a use was before the statute of uses. It is an interest resting in conscience and equity, and the same rules apply to trusts in chancery now which were formerly applied to uses; 10 Johns. 506. A trust is a use not executed under the statute of Hen. VIII.; 8 Md. 505. The words use and trust are frequently used indifferently. See 3 Jarm. Wills, 6th Am. ed. *1139-1140.

Trust implies two estates or interests, — one equitable and one legal; one person as trustee holding the legal title, while another as the cestui que trust has the beneficial interest. 48 Minn. 174.

Sometimes the equitable title of the beneficiary, sometimes the obligation of the trustee, and, again, the right held, is called the trust.

But the right of the beneficiary is in the trust; the obligation of the trustee results from the trust; and the right held is the subject-matter of the trust. Neither of them is the trust itself. All together they constitute the trust.

An equitable right, title, or interest in property, real or personal, distinct from its legal ownership.

A personal obligation for paying, delivering, or performing anything where the person trusting has no real right or security, for by that act he confides altogether to the faithfulness of those intrusted.

An obligation upon a person, arising out of a confidence reposed in him, to apply property faithfully and according to such confidence. Tiedm. Eq. Jur. § 258; 4 Kent 295; 1 Saunders, Uses & Tr. 6; 8 Bla. Com. 431.

A late writer shows clearly the distinction between the fidei commissum and a trust, that in the former there was no separation of the equitable and legal title, but there was simply a request, which afterwards became a duty imposed upon the gravatus to convey the inheritance to another person, either immediately or after a certain event; whereas, in the trust, the perfect ownership is decomposed into its constituent elements of legal title and beneficial interest, which are vested in different persons at the same time. Besides the fidei commissum arose out of testamentary dispositions; whereas English trusts, until the statute of wills, were created only by conveyances inter vivos; Bisph. Eq. 893, § 50. See 15 How. 387.

Active or special trusts are those in which the trustee has some duty to perform, so that the legal estate must remain in him or the trust be defeated.

Express trusts are those which are created in express terms in the deed, writing, or will. The terms to create an express trust will be sufficient if it can be fairly collected upon the face of the instrument that a trust was intended. Express trusts are usually found in preliminary sealed agreements, such as marriage articles, or articles for the purchase of land; in formal conveyances, such as marriage settlements, terms for years, mortgages, assignments for the payment of debts, raising portions, or other purposes; and in wills and testaments, when the bequests involve fiduciary interests for private benefit or public charity. They may be created even by parol; 6 W. & S. 97; except so far as forbidden by the statute of frauds.

A written instrument though inefficacious as a will, from a want of compliance with statutory requisitions, may yet operate as a declaration of a trust; 149 U. S. 608.

Implied trusts are those which, without being expressed, are deducible from the nature of the transaction as matters of intent, or which are superinduced upon the transaction by operation of law, as matters of equity, independently of the particular intention of the parties. The term is used in this general sense, including constructive and resulting trusts (q. v.), and also in a more restricted sense, excluding those classes.

Implied trusts do not come within the statute of frauds; 66 Pa. 287.

Constructive trusts are those which arise purely by construction of equity, and are entirely independent of any actual or presumed intention of the parties. Such trusts have not, technically, any element of fraud in them; Bisph. Eq. § 91. Under this branch of trusts it has been said that "wherever one person is placed in such relation to another, by the act or consent of that other, or the act of a third person, or the law, that he becomes interested for him, or interested with him in any subject of property or business; he is prohibited from acquiring rights in that subject antagonistic to the person with whose interest he has become associated." 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. 62. The rule as to such trusts applies not only to persons standing in a direct fiduciary position towards others, such as trustees, attorneys, etc., but also to those who occupy any position out of which a similar duty ought in equity and good morals to arise: as against partners; 4 Eld. 236; tenants in common, 73 Pa. 442; mortgagees; 43 Mo. 231; as against agent, buying goods with the principal's money; 6 Mackey 421; Bisph. Eq. § 98.

If one obtains a title to land by artifice or concealment, equity will enforce a trust in favor of the party justly entitled thereto; 145 U. S. 817. Whoever comes into possession of trust property, with notice of the trust, is bound to the execution of the trust; 25 Ill. 78.

A trustee who buys at his own sale, even if public, will still be considered, at the option of the cestui que trust, a trustee.

See 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. 248. This is not upon the ground of fraud, but of public policy. See 18 Allen 419. So if a person obtains from a trustee trust property without paying value for it, although without notice of the trust, he will in such case be held a trustee by construction; Bisph. Eq. § 95; Tiedm. Eq. Jur. § 812. And in case of a contract for the sale of land, equity considers the vendor as a trustee of the legal title for the purchaser; ibid.

A passive or dry or simple trust is one which requires the performance of no duty by the trustee to carry out the trust, but by force of which the mere legal title rests in the trustee.

As to executory and executed trusts, see those titles.

An executed trust is one explicitly declared in writing, duly signed, stating the conditions upon which the legal title is held, and the final intention of the creditor, so that the trustee can carry that intention into effect. 115 Ind. 423.

Trusts may also be distinguished as public and private trusts. The former are constituted for the benefit either of the public at large or some particular portion of it answering to a particular description; while the latter are those wherein the beneficial interest is vested absolutely in one or more individuals who are, or may be within a certain time, definitely ascertained. Bisph. Eq. § 59.

A trust arises when property has been conferred upon one person and accepted by him for the benefit of another. The former is a trustee, and holds the legal title, and the latter is called the cestui que trust, or beneficiary. In order to originate a trust, two things are essential, — first, that the ownership conferred be connected with a right, or interest, or duty for the benefit of another; and, second, that the property be accepted on these conditions.

The modern trust includes not only those technical uses which were not executed by the statute of uses, but also equitable interests which never were considered uses, and did not, therefore, fall within the provisions of this statute. These equitable interests, in common with the unexecuted uses, received the name of trusts; Bisph. Eq. § 52. The statute of uses provided that where one was seized to the use of another, the cestui que use should be deemed to be in lawful seisin and possession of the same estate in the land itself as he had in the use.

A trust which at the time of its creation is a passive trust will be executed by this statute, although the word trust instead of use is employed. But where a trust which has once been active becomes passive, such a trust is not necessarily executed by the statute. If the mere fact that the trustee had active duties to perform was the only circumstance that prevented the statute from operating, the trust will be executed when the active duties have ceased. But if the non-execution of the trust by the statute did not originally and solely depend upon the activity of the trust, the fact that the trust has ceased to be active will not of itself cause the statute to apply; but the trustee is then bound to convey the legal estate at the request of the cestui que trust; and after a great lapse of time, and in support of long-continued possession on the part of the person holding the beneficial interest, such a conveyance will be presumed; Bisph. Eq. § 55. A bequest of personality to a trustee for the use and benefit of another, without words of restriction, vests the absolute property of the fund in the beneficiary; 83 Fed. Rep. 19.

When active duties are to be performed by the trustee, it will, generally, not be executed; Bisph. Eq. § 56; 5 Wall. 119, 168; though where there was a separate use for a feme sole not in contemplation of marriage, it was held that as this separate use was void, the trust fell, although the trustee had active duties to perform; 70 Pa. 201. Where an estate is given in trust to pay one-half the income to each of two persons, it is not a gift of one-half the principal to be held for each, but of all to be held jointly for both, and it should remain intact until the period of distribution arises; 119 Pa. 32; 105 Md. 131.

Before the statute of frauds, a trust, either in regard to real or personal estate, might have been created by parol as well as by writing. The statute required all trusts as to real estate to be in writing; 4 Kent 303; Adams, Eq. 8th ed. 27.

Trusts as to partnership interests in real estate are not within the statute of uses and trusts. See 111 N. Y. 438.

No particular form of words is requisite to create a trust. The court will determine the intent from the general scope of the language; Beach, Eq. Jur. § 161; 10 Johns. 495; 4 Kent 305; 127 U. S. 800.

The facts, however, to warrant the inference of a trust, must be more than loose and general declarations; but, on the other hand, parol declarations will not be received to contradict the inference of a trust in land fairly deducible from written declarations; 5 Johns. Ch. 2.

A party who acquires title to property wrongfully may be adjudged a trustee ex maleficio in respect to that property; 151 U. S. 1.

A trust, as to personal property, may be proved by parol evidence; 1 Hare 155; 8 Bla. Com. 431; 148 Mass. 289; and parol evidence is admissible against the face of a deed itself to show all the facts out of which a resulting trust arises; 37 W. Va. 507. A cestui que trust cannot, generally, hold the beneficial enjoyment of property free from the rights of his creditors; 1 Sm. L. C. 119; though a limitation over to another in case of the insolvency of the cestui que trust is valid; Bisp. Eq. 61; 5 Wall. 441. See SPEND-THrift.

Equity will follow trust moneys as far as they can be identified; 19 U. S. App. 256; but the right fails when the means of ascertainment fail; 22 Pa. 16. See EAB-MARK.

Trust funds held for a charitable object are not liable for the torts of a trustee; 120 Pa. 624.

If a trustee dies, or fails or refuses to execute or accept the trust, or no trustee is named, the trust does not for that reason fail. It is a settled rule that the court of chancery will provide a trustee or attend to the execution of the trust; 10 Sim. 256; Adams, Eq. 36.

Trusts are interpreted by the ordinary rules of law, unless the contrary is expressed in the language of the trust; 15 Ind. 269; 3 Des. 258.

The rules for the devolution of equitable estates are the same as those for the descent of legal titles, and fall under the operation of the various intestate acts; Bisp. Eq. § 60. If the legal title to real estate cannot be taken by an alien, the beneficial ownership cannot be enjoyed by him; 5 How. 270. In some states, as New York, Michigan, and Louisiana, the operation of trusts has been much narrowed; Bisp. Eq. § 56.

An assignment in trust for the benefit of creditors is valid without assent on the part of the creditors; 25 Wash. L. Rep. 622; contra, in England, [1897] 3 Q. B. 19; and in Massachusetts; 8 Mass. 144. In [1897] 3 Q. B. 19, it was held that an assignment in trust for particular persons is irrevocable, while one for creditors in general is revocable. See TRUSTEE.

As to those combinations of capital now known as "Trusts," see RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Since the title RESTRAINT OF TRADE was in print the supreme court has handed down a decision in United States v. Joint Traffic Association. The court was of opinion that the contract in suit was substantially the same as that involved in the Trans-Missouri Case, 166 U. S. 800; and also that the latter case had decided that the contract involved was in restraint of trade. It further held that the anti-trust act is valid and a proper exercise of the powers of congress.

In Sherman Act. Contract, combination, confederation or undertaking, express or implied, between two or more persons, to control the price of a commodity or service for the benefit of the parties thereto, and to the injury of the public, and which tends to create a monopoly. Thorn., Anti-Tr. Act 93, citing 152 Mo. 1. Any form of combination between corporations, or corporations and natural persons, for the purpose of regulating production and repressing competition by means of the power thus centralized. Id., citing 29 Mont. 428.

TRUST. See NAKED TRUST.

TRUST COMPANY. The business of such companies consists largely in the administration of trusts of various kinds, and particularly those arising under corporate mortgages. It is a common practice for them to become surety on bonds in legal proceedings and in various other ways, and they usually also transact a safe deposit business. See SAFE DEPOSIT COMPANIES. As to the administration of trusts by such companies in England, see 5 L. Quart. Rev. 395. It has been held in the orphans' court of Philadelphia that an act was unconstitutional which permits an accountant to pay a trust company for becoming surety on his official bond, and charges the cost to the estate.

TRUST DEED. A deed given to a trustee for the purpose of securing a numerous class of creditors, as the bondholders of a railroad corporation, with power to sell on failure of the payment of their bonds, notes, or other claims.

It is the practice in many states to secure loans by a trust deed instead of a mortgage. See DEED OF TRUST.

TRUST ESTATES AS BUSINESS COMPANIES. Voluntary associations organized or doing business under written instruments or declarations of trust. Mass. Acts and Resolves 1911, 1058, c. 55.

General Nature of Trusts. "Trustees" take the place of "directors" in corporations; "cestui que trust" or "beneficiaries" occupy the nearly relative position of "stockholders"; the "declaration" or "agreement of trust" supplants the certificate of incorporation or charter. Sears' Trust Estates as Business Companies 1912, 1.

There are four essential elements of a valid trust of personal property: (1) "A designated beneficiary; (2) a designated trustee, who must not be the beneficiary; (3) a fund or other property sufficiently designated or identified to enable title thereto to pass to the trustee; and (4) the actual delivery of the fund or other property, or of a legal assignment thereof to the trustee, with the intention of passing legal title thereto to him as trustee." Id. 364; 180 N. Y. 201, 73 N. E. 14.

Advantages. "The advantages which it claimed accrue to the industrial and real estate trusts have principally to do with the greater freedom of managing the affairs of the trust. They may be stated generally as follows: (1) These associations have been found by the experience of twenty-five years to be a convenient, safe and unobjectionable method of co-operative ownership and management. They are for the interest alike of the investor and the public. (2) The form of organization insures a continuity of management and control, which appeals strongly to investors in real estate, which cannot be secured by a corporation with changing officers. The trustees who are the managing officers of a trust are not so likely to be changed as are the officers of a corporation. (3) It affords a more economical and more convenient and flexible form of management than does a corporation. Trustees can transact business with more ease and rapidly than directors." Report of tax commissioner in 1912 to the Senate and House of Representatives of Massachusetts. Quoted by Sears, 360.

TRUST FUND DOCTRINE. See STOCKHOLDER.

TRUST POWER. See BENEFICIAL POWER.

TRUSTEE. A person in whom some estate, interest, or power in or affecting property of any description is vested for the benefit of another.

One to whom property has been conveyed to be held or managed for another.

To a certain extent, executors, administrators, guardians, and assignees are trustees, and the law of trusts so far is applicable to them in their capacity of trustees; Hill, Trust. 48.

Trusts are not strictly cognizable at common law, but solely in equity; 16 Pet. 25.

Any reasonable being may be a trustee. The United States or a state may be a trustee; 15 How. 867; 15 Fla. 455, 690; 87 Fed. Rep. 748. So may a corporation; 7 Wall. 1; Perry, Trusts § 42.

"Whoever is capable of taking the legal title or beneficial interest in property may take the same trust for others." Perry, Trusts § 80. Non-resident natural persons are not disqualified from acting as trustee; 4 Am. Ry. Rep. 291; an act which declares such person disqualified is in conflict with the federal constitution; 37 Fed. Rep. 146, arguendo; 3 N. E. Rep. (Ind.) 1093; 52 Fed. Rep. 857; but this constitutional provision does not extend to foreign corporations.

A foreign corporation may be a trustee; Cook, Stock, etc. § 813.

A foreign corporation must comply with local statutes; 68 Ill. App. 666; contra, 49 Pac. Rep. (Wash.) 1068; 87 Atl. Rep. (R. I.) 948. See 150 Mass. 271; 147 id. 224. In 68 Fed. Rep. 413, where a statute of Illinois declared any trust unlawful when vested in a foreign trust company unless it had complied with certain requirements of the statute, it was held that a trust under a railroad mortgage vested in such a company merely a naked legal title, while the beneficial title was in the bondholders; and that the court would enforce the security by a judicial sale. But a non-resident trust company was removed as trustee under an Illinois railroad mortgage; 173 Ill. 439.

A mortgage upon railroad property in Illinois executed to a foreign trust corporation as trustee, to secure bonds made payable outside of the state, is not prohibited by the laws or public policy of that state; 28 Fed. Rep. 160.

The legislature of a state alone has the power to accept a bequest to the state in trust; 69 Conn. 64.

The trustee of a railroad mortgage represents the bondholders who are bound by his assent; 65 Fed. Rep. 351. See MORTGAGE: INTERVENTION.

A trustee after having accepted a trust cannot discharge himself of his trust or responsibility by resignation or a refusal to perform the duties of the trust; but he must procure his discharge either by virtue of the provisions of the instrument of his appointment, or by the consent of all interested, or by an order of a competent court; 4 Kent 811.

Trustees are not allowed to speculate with the trust property, or to retain any profits made by the use of the same, or to become the purchasers upon its sale. See TRUST. If beneficial to the parties in interest, the purchase by the trustee may be retained or confirmed by the court. And the trustee may be compelled to account for and pay over to the cestui que trust all profits made by any use of the trust property; 4 Kent 488. A trustee cannot become a purchaser at his own sale, without special permission; 127 U. S. 569. A purchase by a trustee of trust property for his own benefit is not absolutely void, but voidable; and may be confirmed by the parties interested either directly or by long acquiescence; 143 U. S. 224.

A court of equity never allows a trust to fail for want of a trustee; 5 Paige, Ch. 46; 6 Whart. 571; 5 B. Monr. 118; 2 How. 188; 75 Ia. 429. See 116 Ind. 189.

Whenever it becomes necessary, the court will appoint a new trustee, and this though the instrument creating the trust contain no power for making such appointment. The power is inherent in the court; 7 Ves. Ch. 480; 2 Sandf. Ch. 536; 1 Beav. 487; 85 Me. 79. See 44 N. J. Eq. 349. So the court may create a new trustee on the resignation of the former trustee; 11 Paige, Ch. 314; 8 Barb. Ch. 76; Hill, Trust. 190. A court will not allow a trust to fail or to be defeated by the refusal or neglect of the trustee to execute a power, if such a power is so given that it is reasonably certain that the donor intended it to be exercised; 85 Va. 966.

The power of equity to remove a trustee and to substitute another in his place is incidental to its paramount duty to see that trusts are properly executed, and may properly be exercised whenever his continuance in office would be detrimental to the trust, and even if for no other reason than that human infirmity would prevent the co-trustees or their beneficiaries from working in harmony, and although charges against him are either not made out or are greatly exaggerated; 167 U. S. 310. A trustee is entitled to all reasonable expenses in carrying out the trust and all expenses reasonably necessary for the security, protection, and preservation of the property as well as for the prevention of a failure of the trust; 142 id. 326.

The mere naming a person trustee does not constitute him such. There must be an acceptance, express or implied; see 14 Wall. 139; as the acceptance is essential to the vesting of title in the trustee; 119 Mo. 572. But if the person named trustee does not wish to be held responsible as such, he should, before meddling with the duties of a trustee, formally disclaim the trust; 7 Gill & J. 157; 1 Pick. 370.

Ordinarily, no writing is necessary to constitute the acceptance of a trust in writing; 12 N. H. 432.

The duties of trustees have been said, in general terms, to be: "to protect and preserve the trust property, and to see that it is employed solely for the benefit of the cestui que trust." Bisp. Eq. § 138.

He must take possession of the trust property, and call in debts, and convert such securities as are not legal investments. Personal securities are not legal investments although the investment was made by the testator himself; 40 N. Y. 76; 18 Pa. 303; unless, by the terms of the trust, they are allowed; Bisp. Eq., 5th ed. (1893) § 159.

He will not be liable for the failure of a bank in which he has deposited trust funds, unless he has permitted them to be there for an unreasonable length of time; 29 Beav. 211; or has deposited them in his own name; 119 Ind. 599; as he must not mix them with his own funds; 8 Pa. 431; 41 Ala. 709. The addition of the word "trustee" to the signature of the drawer of a check constitutes such notice of a trust as to put the payee upon inquiry; 26 App. Div. N. Y. 615.

Investments by executors contrary to the requirements of the will, upon mere personal security, are at their risk; 49 N. J. Eq. 559. A trustee is personally liable for trust funds invested in personal securities; 2 Con. Sur. 458, and if invested in his own business, or for his own benefit, he becomes an insurer of the fund; 85 Me. 129; and is guilty of neglect if he loans money on an unsecured note; 36 S. C. 322. See 9 L. R. A. 279.

A trustee should not invest trust funds in trade or speculation; nor in bank stock, or stock of public companies; 4 Barb. 626; 18 Pa. 303; but see 9 Pick. 446; or in personal securities; 2 Con. Sur. (N. Y.) 458; he may invest in mortgages.

A trustee, though remunerated for his services, is not liable to the trust estate for loss caused by the thefts of a servant employed by him, where he has exercised due care in the selection of the servant; [1893] 1 Ch. 71.

Ordinarily the law will not permit a trustee to contract with his cestui que trust for a pecuniary advantage; to do so, he must first dissolve the fiduciary relation; 128 Ill. 480; and every such contract is open to suspicion; 70 Ind. 508.

A writer has deduced the following rules as to investments by trustees (13 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 210): Where there is no express power of sale in the instrument creating a trust, and none is necessarily implied, and the discretion of the trustee is the sole restriction upon investments, he will generally be protected where he has acted bona fide and with reasonable diligence and prudence. But in a state where the trustee is protected from loss which may arise from certain specified and so-called legal investments, the rule is much more stringent, and extraordinary care and diligence are required of the trustee as well as bona fides, and it is dangerous to invest trust funds in any other securities than those thus indicated.

But where there is no express power of sale given, and where none such can necessarily be implied from the nature of the trustee's duties, the only safe means of changing an insecure investment, left so by the creator of the trust, is to make the change under the direction of the proper court, and if done without such authority, the trustee will be liable to the cestui que trust for breach of trust.

Where there is no such power of sale and the trustee leaves unchanged an investment made by the testator and loss ensues, he will generally be protected if acting with bona fides, even in cases where, if there had been a power of sale and he had neglected to sell, he would have been liable under the first rule laid down above.

A trustee will not be surcharged for a loss which has occurred to the estate if he has exercised common skill, prudence, and caution, but he will be held responsible for supine negligence or wilful default; 132 Pa. 407. Where a trustee held on to mortgages on agricultural land in hopes that an apparently temporary depression would pass away, it was held that he had committed only an error of judgment and was not liable for loss; [1896] 1 Ch. 323.

An act of 1896 in England provides that if a trustee acts honestly and reasonably, he may be relieved wholly or partly from personal liability for loss through investments; [1897] 1 Ch. 536.

The office and duties of trustees being matters of personal confidence, they are not allowed to delegate these powers unless such a power is expressly given by the authority by which they were created; and where one of several trustees dies, the trust, as a general rule, in the United States, will devolve on the survivor, and not on the heirs of the deceased; 8 Mer. 412; 11 Paige, Ch. 314; but a trustee may appoint an agent where it is usual to do so in the ordinary course of business; 10 Pa. 285; 8 Cow. 543. Where a trustee has delegated his trust, there is no question of primary and secondary liability in respect of a breach of trust, but all are equally liable; 68 Law T. 18.

While the law allows any person named as trustee to disclaim or renounce, he cannot, if he has by any means accepted and entered upon the trust, rid himself of the duties and responsibilities after such acceptance, except by a legal discharge by competent authority; 4 Johns. Ch. 136; 1 My. & K. 195. Disclaimer of a trust may be established by acts, or by non-action long continued; 119 Mo. 572. Where trustees who hold church property have seceded from the church, and also been expelled, they have divested themselves of all control of the church property and cannot maintain a bill to enjoin any one from doing anything which affects the property; 5 Super. Ct. Pa. 475.

The trustee is in law generally regarded as the owner of the property, whether the same be real or personal; Hill, Trust. 229. Yet this rule is subject to material qualifications when taken in connection with the doctrines of powers and uses, and the legislation of the several states; 1 How. 184; 4 Kent 321.

The quality and continuance of the estate of a trustee will be determined by the purpose and exigency of the trust, rather than by the phraseology employed in the description of the estate conveyed; and, therefore, if the language be that the estate goes to the trustee and his heirs, it may be limited to a shorter period, if thereby the purposes of the creation of the trust are satisfied; 8 Hare 156; 4 Den. 385.

Where there are several trustees, they are considered to hold as joint-tenants, and on the death of any one the property remains vested in the survivor or survivors; and on the death of the last, the property, if personal (at common law), went to the heir or personal representative of the last-deceased trustee. But the rule as to trust property going to heirs and executors is changed in most of the states, so that in theory the court of chancery assumes the control, and it appoints a new trustee on the decease of former trustees. If power be committed to two or more trustees, it is regarded as coupled with an interest, and will still exist in the surviving trustee on the death of any or all of the co-trustees. 2 Prob. Rep. Ann. (Ind.) 28. If the power is confided to several trustees, nominatim, it imports a personal discretion or confidence of a personal nature, and on the death of one of these donees the power dies with him and cannot be exercised by the survivors; id.; 18 Sim. 91; 4 Kent 311; Beach, Eq. Jur. § 240.

Each trustee has equal interest in and control over the trust estate; and hence, as a general rule, they cannot (as executors may) act or bind the trust separately, but must act jointly; 4 Ves. Ch. 97; 3 Ark. 384; 8 Cow. 544; 20 Me. 504; 11 Barb. 527.

Unlike joint executors, joint trustees cannot act separately, but must join both in conveyances and receipts; for one cannot sell without the others, or receive more of the consideration-money or be more a trustee than his partner. The trust having been given to the whole, it requires their joint act to do anything under it. They are not responsible for money received by their co-trustees, if the receipt be given for the mere purposes of form. But if receipts be given under circumstances purporting that the money, though not received by both, was under the control of both, such a receipt shall charge, and the consent that the other shall misapply the money, particularly where he has it in his power to secure it, renders him responsible; 11 S. & R. 71.

A trustee is, generally, not responsible for the conduct of his co-trustee; see 2 Lead. Cas. Eq. 859; where several trustees join in a receipt, prima facie, all will be considered to have received the money, but one of them may show that he did not in fact receive the money, but joined in the receipt for conformity; Bisp. Eq. § 146. A trustee who stands by and sees a fraud on the trust committed by his co-trustee will be held responsible for it; 17 Pa. 268. But trustees are not liable for the conversion of money collected by their co-trustee, in course of administration of the trust, without their knowledge or consent; 72 Hun 272.

Where there are several trustees, all must concur in any business of the trust; otherwise if it be a public trust, where the acts of a majority are binding; Bisp. Eq. § 147.

A trustee may come into equity to obtain advice and assistance in the execution of his trust; Hill, Trust. 298.

One trustee may be held responsible for losses which he has enabled a co-trustee to cause, though there was no actual participation by him; 18 Ohio 509; 5 How. 238. It is the duty of each trustee to carry out the trust, and a trustee cannot relieve himself of the duty by agreement with his co-trustees to look after only certain parts of the trust property; 147 U. S. 557.

Where the legal estate is vested in trustees, all actions at law relative to the trust property must be brought in their name, but the trustee must not exercise his legal powers to the prejudice of a cestui que trust, and third persons must take notice of this limitation of the legal rights of a trustee; 2 Vern. 197.

The trustee (and also his personal representatives to the extent of any property received from the trustee) is responsible in suit for any breach of trust, and will be compelled to compensate what his negligence has lost of the trust estate. He is not only chargeable with the principal and income of the trust property he has received, but is liable for an amount equal to what, with good management, he might have received; and this includes interest on a sum he has needlessly allowed to remain where it earned no interest; 2 Beav. 430; 4 Russ. 195.

A court of equity has power to remove a trustee, independently of any statutory provisions or of directions contained in the instrument of appointment; 8 Ind. App. 27. The rule as to the right of a trustee to contribution from his co-trustees for loss by a breach of trust for which both are equally to blame, does not apply where one of the trustees is also a cestui que trust and has received an exclusive benefit by the breach of trust; in that case the rule to be applied is that under which the share or interest of a cestui que trust who has assented to, and profited by a breach of trust has to bear the whole loss; and the trustee who is a cestui que trust must, therefore, indemnify his co-trustee to the extent of his share or interest in the trust estate, and not merely to the extent of the benefit he has received; [1896] 1 Ch. D. 685.

On the death of a trustee, the legal title passes to his heirs, and it becomes their duty to care for trust property, or have a new trustee appointed; 113 Mo. 188.

Commissions upon the corpus of a trust estate are never allowed except when the fund is in course of distribution; 161 Pa. 457; except under extraordinary circumstances; id.

See BARE TRUSTEE; PUBLIC TRUSTEE.

TRUSTEE PROCESS. A legal process used in the New England states, and similar to the garnishee process of others.

All goods, effects, and credits so intrusted or deposited in the hands of others that the same cannot be attached by ordinary process of law, may, by an original writ or process, the form of which is given by the statute, be attached in whose hands or possession soever they may be found, and they shall, from the service of the writ, stand bound and be held to satisfy such judgment as the plaintiff may recover against the principal defendant; Cushing, Trustee Pr. 2. It is issued as part of the original writ.

TRUSTEES OF CHARITIES. See OFFICIAL TRUSTEES OF CHARITIES.

TRUSTING AND WHOLLY CONFIDING. In Will. The phrase "trusting and wholly confiding" as used in a will is considered sufficient to raise a trust where the subject and object are sufficiently certain. 78 Ky. 123.

TRY. To examine or investigate judicially; counsel are frequently said to try the causes in which they are engaged. Courts are said to "try prisoners" charged with crimes.

TUAS RES TIBI HABETO (Lat.). Have (or take) your things to yourself.

TUB. A measure containing sixty pounds of tea, and from fifty-six to eighty-six pounds of camphor. Jacob.

TUB-MAN. In Old English Law. A barrister who has a pre-audience in the exchequer, and also one who has a particular place in court, is so called.

TUCKER ACT. The act of March 3, 1887, relating to the jurisdiction of the court of claims. Garl. & Ralston, Fed. Pr. 413. See UNITED STATES COURTS.

TUG. A steam vessel built for towing; practically synonymous with towboat. Tugs are subject to the ordinary rules of navigation touching collisions. Where a schooner was being towed by a tug lashed to her port side, the fact that the schooner had a pilot on board did not make the tug the more servant of the schooner, so as to exempt the tug from responsibility; 11 Fed. Rep. 319; 98 U. S. 302.

A tug is not a common carrier or insurer, and is bound only to reasonable care and skill; 80 Fed. Rep. 153; 68 Pa. 51; 94 U. S. 494. See TOWBOAT.

A tug and tow while being slowly navigated are held not to blame in a collision with a steam ship in a fog, although they do not stop where there are indications of danger. It is not subject to the same rule as two steamships approaching each other under like circumstances; [1897] P. 28. A contribution in general average cannot be had against a steam tug for casting off the tow of barges in order to save the tug; the tug and barges do not constitute a single maritime adventure; 167 U. S. 599. Towage contracts are within admiralty jurisdiction; 5 Bened. 720. See TOWAGE.

TUMBREL. An instrument of punishment made use of by the Saxons, chiefly for the correction of scolding women by ducking them in water, consisting of a stool or chair fixed to the end of a long pole.

TUMULTUOUS PETITIONING. Under stat. 18 Car. II. st. 1, c. 5, this was a misdemeanor, and consisted in more than twenty persons signing any petition to the crown or either house of parliament for the alteration of matters established by law in church or state, unless the contents thereof had been approved by three justices, or the majority of the grand jury at assizes or quarter sessions. No petition could be delivered by more than ten persons. 4 Bla. Com. 147; Moz. & W.

TUN. A measure of wine or oil, containing four hogsheads.

TUNGREVE. A reeve or bailiff. Spelman, Gloss.

TUNNAGE, OR TONNAGE. Anciently a duty in England on imported wines, imposed by parliament, in addition to pri-sage. The duty was at the rate of so much for every ton or cask of wine. It was first levied in the fourteenth century and was granted for life to several kings. It became practically a fixed tax in the reign of Anne. It was finally abolished by 27 Geo. 3, c. 13. The present duties on wines are regulated by the Customs Acts. Byrne.

TUNNEL. A municipal corporation, authorized by law to improve a street by building on the line thereof a tunnel under a navigable river, incurs no liability for damages unavoidably caused to adjoining property by obstructing the street or river, unless such liability be imposed by statute. 99 U. S. 685.

TURBARY. In English Law. A right to dig turf; an easement. It cannot be dug for sale; Noy 145.

TURF AND TWIG. Formerly, in a delivery of land, the feoffee delivered to the feoffee as a symbol a clod or turf, or a twig or bough growing on the land, with words to this effect: "I deliver these to you in the name of seisin of all the lands and tenements contained in this deed." 2 Bl. Com. 315.

TURN, or TOURN. See SHERIFF'S TOURN.

TURN TABLE DOCTRINE. The "Turn Table Doctrine" was established upon the idea that something dangerous to children had been constructed at a place where children were in the habit of passing or congregating, or at a place easy of access and inviting to children, and that these facts were known to the owner of the dangerous structure. 151 Ky. 335, 151 S. W. 941.

TURNKEY. A person under the superintendence of a jailor, whose employment is to open and fasten the prison-doors and to prevent the prisoners from escaping. It is his duty to use due diligence; and he may be punished for gross neglect or wilful misconduct in permitting prisoners to escape.

TURNOUT. A short side-track on a railroad which may be occupied by one train while another is passing on the main track; a siding. 19 Atl. Rep. (Pa.) 856. See RAILROAD.

TURNPIKE. See TURNPIKE ROAD.

TURNPIKE-ROAD. A road or highway over which the public have the right to travel upon payment of toll, and on which the parties entitled to such toll have the right to erect gates and bars to insure its payment. 6 M. & W. 426; 85 Ky. 244.

Turnpike-roads are usually made by corporations under legislative authority; and, the roads being deemed a public use, such corporations are usually armed with the power to take private property for their construction. The title to the soil remains in the owners of the adjoining land; 27 N. J. L. 76; and, after the franchise for the construction of the turnpike has expired, the road reverts to the public; 104 Pa. 588; 10 Nev. 155. The legislature may authorize the conversion of an existing highway into a turnpike-road; 18 Conn. 32; 3 Barb. 159; without any pecuniary equivalent to the owner of the fee, such road still remaining a public highway; 2 Ohio St. 419; but no matter how bad the condition of a public road, its condition is no justification to a turnpike company for taking it as the line of a turnpike; 128 Pa. 621. A turnpike-road being a highway, any obstruction placed thereon renders the author of it liable as for a public nuisance; 16 Pick. 175; 8 Wend. 555.

A turnpike company cannot be deprived of its road or its franchise by the extension of the limits of a municipal corporation to include the road; 183 Ind. 80. It is held that municipal authorities may require the grade of a turnpike within its limits to be changed to conform to that of a street; 39 N. J. L. 500; and the municipality may require the turnpike to be kept in repair, but the city is not liable for a failure to do so; 32 N. J. L. 548; and a municipality may, by legislative authority, tax itself in aid of a turnpike company; 1 Wall. 175; 20 Gratt. 661; 41 Conn. 211.

A statute attempting to authorize a court, without a jury, to declare a turnpike-road abandoned and its franchise forfeited because the road has been out of repair for six months, violates the constitution guaranty of trial by jury and against the deprivation of property without due process of law; 60 Ohio St. 568.

Turnpike companies, so long as they continue to take toll, are bound to use ordinary care in keeping their roads in suitable repair, and for any neglect of this duty are liable to action on the case for the damages to any person specially injured thereby; 6 Johns. 90; 10 Pick. 85; see 29 Atl. Rep. (Pa.) 731; and to an indictment on the part of the public; 4 Ired. 16; 10 Humphr. 97; 26 Ala. n. s. 88; 1 Harr. N. J. 223; 9 Barb. 161; 2 Gray 58.

Travellers are liable for toll though they avoid the gates; 2 Root 524; 10 Vt. 197; but not for travel between the gates without passing the same; Elliot, Roads 70; 2 B. Monr. 80; 10 Ired. 30; 11 Vt. 281. In an action by a company to enforce the statutory penalty for illegally passing its tollgate, it is no defence that the road was not in good condition; 95 Mich. 873. Exemptions from toll are construed most liberally in favor of the community; Ang. High. § 359; and are usually created by special statute in relation to different kinds of vehicles; 24 N. Y. 658; going to or from mills; 15 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 510; in favor of husbandry; 24 N. J. L. 205; going to church; 2 B. & Ald. 206; ordinary domestic business of family concerns; 12 Vt. 212. Mail coaches are subject to toll, but may not be delayed for non-payment; 2 W. & S. 168.

A turnpike company authorized to collect toll from designated carriages, etc.,

may collect toll from bicycles, although the amount of toll cannot be exactly determined by the method designated for other vehicles; 167 Pa. 582; a contrary result has recently been reached in New Jersey in a case noted in the public press.

A "shunpike" is a road or turnpike laid out by an individual or by the selectmen of the town to facilitate the evasion of toll by travellers upon a turnpike road and will entitle the turnpike company to an action on the case for the damages, or to an injunction ordering the same to be closed; Elliot, Roads, p. 74; 10 N. H. 188; 18 Conn. 451; 1 Johns. Ch. 815; 36 S. W. Rep. 979; unless made necessary by the lay of the land and the wants of the community; 11 Pet. 420. And such company has been held entitled to compensation for the injury to their franchise by a highway which intersects their road at two distinct points and thereby enables travellers to evade the payment of tolls, though such highway be regularly established by the proper authorities to meet the necessities of public travel; 1 Barb. 286.

TURPILLIANUM See LEX PETRONIA.

TURPIS CAUSA (Lat.). A base or vile consideration, forbidden by law, which makes the contract void: as, a contract the consideration of which is the future illegal cohabitation of the obligee with the obligor.

TURPIS CONTRACTUS (Lat.). An immoral or iniquitous contract.

TURPITUDE (Lat. turpitudine, from turpis, base). Everything done contrary to justice, honesty, modesty, or good morals, is said to be done with turpitude.

TUTELA (Lat.). A power given by the civil law over a free person to defend him when by reason of his age he is unable to defend himself. Women by the civil law could only be tutors of their own children. A child under the power of his father was not subject to tutela, because not a free person, caput liberum.

Legitima tutela was where the tutor was appointed by the magistrate.

TUTELAGE. See TUTELA.

TUTEUR OFFICIEUX. In French Law. A person whose duties are analogous to those of a guardian in English law; he must, however, be over fifty years of age, and appointed with the consent of the parents, or, in their default, of the council de famille, and is only appointed for a child over fifteen years of age.

TUTEUR SUBROGE. In French Law. The title of a second guardian appointed for an infant under guardianship; his functions are exercised in case the interests of the infant and his principal guardian conflict. Code Nap. 420; Brown, Dict.

TUTOR. In Civil Law. One who has been lawfully appointed to the care of the person and property of a minor.

By the laws of Louisiana, minors under the age of fourteen years, if males, and under the age of twelve years, if females, are, both as to their persons and their estates, placed under the authority of a tutor. Above that age, and until their majority or emancipation, they are placed under the authority of a curator.

TUTOR ALIENUS (Lat.) In English Law. The name given to a stranger who enters upon the lands of an infant within the age of fourteen, and takes the profits.

He may be called to an account by the infant and be charged as guardian in socage; Littleton, s. 124; Co. Litt. 89 b, 90 a.

TUTOR PROPRIUS (Lat.). The name given to one who is rightly a guardian in socage, in contradistinction to a tutor alienus.

TUTORSHIP. The power which an individual, sui juris, has to take care of the person of one who is unable to take care of himself. Tutorship differs from curatorship. See PROCURATOR; PROTUTOR.

TUTRIX (Lat.). A woman who is appointed to the office of a tutor.

TWELFHINDI. The highest rank of men in the Saxon government, who were valued at 1,200s. For any injury done to them, satisfaction was to be made according to their worth. Cowel; Whart. Dict.

TWELF HINDMEN. See HINDENI HOMINES.

TWELVE-DAY WRIT. A writ for summary procedure on bills of exchange and promissory notes. Whart. The popular title for the writ issued in pursuance of Keating's Act. The plaintiff was entitled to judgment unless the defendant within twelve days from service obtained leave to defend. Byrne.

TWELVE O'CLOCK IN THE DAY TIME. "Twelve o'clock in the day time" means "noon," "mid-day," "twelve o'clock at noon." 120 Ky. 764, 87 S. W. 1155, 98 S. W. 3.

TWELVE TABLES, LAWS OF THE. Laws of ancient Rome, composed in part from those of Solon and other Greek legislators, and in part from the unwritten laws and customs of the Romans. See CODE; 1 Kent 522.

TWELVEMONTH, in the singular, includes the whole year, but in the plural, twelve months of twenty-eight days each. 6 Co. 82; Bish. Writ. Laws 97. See MONTH.

TWICE IN JEOPARDY. See JEOPARDY.

TWYHINDI. The lower order of Saxons, valued at 200s. Cowel. See TWELFHINDI.

TWYHINDMEN. See HINDENI HOMINES.

TYBURN TICKET. In English Law. A certificate given to the prosecutor of a felon to conviction. By the 10 & 11 Will. III. c. 28, the original proprietor or first assignee of such certificate is exempted from all and all manner of parish and ward offices within the parish or ward where the felony shall have been committed; Bacon, Abr. Constable (C).

TYPEWRITING. In the administration of the post-office department typewriting is treated as writing, and letter postage is charged therefor. So in some states where wills are required to be "in writing" a typewritten paper is treated as sufficient. Such is a constant practice in Delaware. A typewritten memorial presented to the house of commons (1897) was refused, and it is not to be received in British courts or in some British offices. Typewriting is not used between the state department and foreign legations, nor in the important original documents of the department. It is expressly legalized by statute in New York, by all state and municipal officers in all records (March 28, 1894); in Connecticut, for taking evidence in courts of common pleas in the same way as stenographers (May 7, 1895); in Oregon for wills (April 17, 1896); while in Pennsylvania it is more comprehensively declared to be of equal force with writing except for signatures (June 18, 1895). The implication from these few statutes and the instances given, where as mere matter of conservative custom, uncontrolled by law, its use is not permitted, are entirely insufficient to countervail the fact of its general, it may be said universal, use without question as a substitute for and equivalent of writing, indicated by the fact that a diligent search of digests, law dictionaries, and encyclopedias and annotated cases fails to disclose any judicial rejection of it.

TYRANNY. The violation of those laws which regulate the division and the exercises of the sovereign power of the state. It is a violation of its constitution. See DESPOTISM.

UBERRIMA FIDES (Lat. most perfect good faith). A phrase used to express the perfect good faith, concealing nothing with which a contract must be made; for example, in the case of insurance, the insured must observe the most perfect good faith towards the insurer. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 817. See GOOD FAITH.

UBI JUS, IBI REMEDIUM. See MAXIM; REMEDY.

UDAL. Allodial. See ALLODIUM.

UFFER. See HUISERIUM.

UKAAS, UKASE. The name of a law or ordinance emanating from the czar of Russia.

ULNAGE. Alnage. See ALNAGER.

ULTIMATE FACTS. Facts in issue as opposed to probative or evidential facts, the latter being such as serve to establish or disprove the issue. 2 Utah 379.

ULTIMATUM (Lat.). The last proposition made in making a contract, a treaty, and the like: as, the government of the United States has given its ultimatum, has made the last proposition it will make to complete the proposed treaty. The word also means the result of a negotiation, and it comprises the final determination of the parties concerned in the object in dispute.

ULTIMUM SUPPLICIUM (Lat.). The last or extreme punishment; the penalty of death.

ULTIMUS HAERES (Lat.). The last or remote heir; the lord. So called in contradistinction to the haeres proximus and the haeres remotior. Dair. Feud. Pr. 110.

ULTRA MARE. Beyond seas (q. v.). One of the old essons or excuses for not appearing in court at the return of process. Burnell; Bract. fol. 338.

ULTRA VIRES. The modern technical designation, in the law of corporations, of acts beyond the scope of their powers, as defined by their charters or acts of incorporation.

A term used to express the action of a corporation which is beyond the powers conferred upon it by its charter, or the statutes under which it was instituted. 13 Am. L. Rev. 632.

This doctrine is of modern growth; its appearance dates from about the year 1845, being first prominently mentioned in 10 Beav. 1 and 11 C. B. 775. See Green's Brice, Ultra Vires v. 729.

The general rule is that a contract by which a railroad company renders itself incapable of performing its duties to the public or attempts to absolve itself from those obligations without the consent of the state, or a contract made by a corporation beyond the scope of its powers, express or implied, on a proper construction of its charter, cannot be enforced, or rendered enforceable by the application of the doctrine of estoppel; but where the subject-matter of the contract is not foreign to the purposes for which the corporation is created, a contract embracing whatever may fairly be regarded as incidental to, or consequential upon, these things which the legislature has authorized, ought not, unless expressly prohibited, to be held, by judicial construction, to be ultra vires; 163 U. S. 664.

When acts of corporations are spoken of as ultra vires, it is not intended that they are unlawful, or even such as the corporation cannot perform, but merely those which are not within the powers conferred upon the corporation by the act of its creation, etc.; 68 N. Y. 68. A corporate act is said to be ultra vires when it is not within the scope of the powers of the corporation to perform it under any circumstances, or for any purpose; or, with reference to the rights of certain parties, when the corporation is not authorized to perform it without their consent; or, with reference to some specific purpose, when it is not authorized to perform it for that purpose, though fully within the scope of the general powers of the corporation, with the consent of the parties interested, or for some other purpose; 43 La. 48. See 35 L. J. Ch. 156; 125 Mass. 833; 37 Cal. 548.

As a general rule, such acts are void, and impose no obligation upon the corporation although they assume the form of contracts; inasmuch as all persons dealing with a corporation, especially in the state or country in which and under whose laws it was created, are chargeable with notice of the extent of its chartered powers. It is otherwise as to laws imposing restraints upon it not contained in its charter where the contract is made or the transaction takes place without the limits of the state or country under whose laws the corporation exists; 8 Barb. 233.

Perhaps the most general statement of the doctrine of ultra vires is that a contract of a corporation which is unauthorized by, or in violation of, its charter or other governing statute, or entirely outside of the scope of the purpose of its creation, is void in the sense of being no contract at all, because of a total want of power to enter into it; such a contract will not be enforced by any species of action in a court of justice; being void ab initio, it cannot be made good by ratification, or by any succession of renewals; and no performance on either side can give validity to the unlawful contract, or form the foundation of any right of action upon it; 5 Thomp. Corp. § 5968.

The artificial body—the corporation—is liable to be proceeded against by quo warranto for the usurpation of powers in its name by its officers and agents, and its charter may be taken away as a penalty for permitting such acts—the defence of a want of power to bind the corporation not being available in such cases, since it would lead to entire corporate irresponsibility; Moraw. Pri. Corp. § 649.

A corporation has all the capacities for engaging in transactions and for management which are given it expressly by its charter, etc., or impliedly given it by reasonable implication from the language thereof. Capacities or powers for management may be given by wide general language. Beyond these powers, they have no capacities or powers, and cannot legally engage in other transactions.

In the United States the defence of ultra vires interposed against a contract wholly or in part executed has very generally been looked upon with disfavor. The result has been that in some cases a liberal construction has been applied so as to destroy the foundation of the defence; in others the courts have allowed the recovery of the money paid, not upon the contract, but because of the money received and the benefits enjoyed; while in still another class of cases, the doctrine of estoppel in pais has been applied to exclude the defence. The courts may be said, generally, to be tending towards the doctrine—certainly so far as business corporations are concerned—that corporations are to be held liable upon executed contracts, where the contracts involved are not expressly or by necessary implication prohibited by their charters or the general law; Brice Ultra Vires 720.

There is said to be a tendency of the courts, based upon the strongest principles of justice, to enforce contracts against corporations, although in entering into them they have exceeded their chartered powers, where they have received the consideration and the benefit of the contract; 7 Wall. 892; 98 U. S. 621; see 51 Fed. Rep. 1; 46 Kan. 524; and the rule that the charter of a corporation is to be construed strictly against the grantee does not apply to a case where the corporation seeks to repudiate contracts whereof it has enjoyed the benefits, or where such contracts are attacked by creditors after the corporation became insolvent; 57 Fed. Rep. 47; 47 id. 23. The doctrine of ultra vires, when invoked for or against a corporation, should not be allowed to prevail where it would defeat the ends of justice or work a legal wrong; 98 U. S. 258. The executed dealings of corporations should be allowed to stand for and against both parties, when good faith so requires; 23 N. Y. 258, 494; 63 N. Y. 62. Where a corporation has entered into a contract which has been fully executed on the other part, and nothing remains but the payment by the corporation of the consideration, it will not be allowed to set up that the contract was ultra vires; 83 Pa. 180. Corporations should be restricted so far as courts can, in the exercise of their powers, limit them; but the plea is not a gracious one, that a contract which they have deliberately made, and of which they have received the full benefit, is void for want of power in them to make it.

A contract of a corporation which is ultra vires is not voidable only, but wholly void; 160 U. S. 514, citing 189 id. 24. The ultra vires contracts of corporations when malum in se or malum prohibitum will not be enforced,—but as to contracts not thus objectionable justice requires that the doctrine of ultra vires should be limited, and when a corporation, ultra vires, leases its property and the lessee has occupied the same, the lessee is liable for the rent for the time of his occupation; though, as to the public, such lease would be void; N. Y. Ct. of App., in 54 Alb. L. J. 889. It is a much disputed question whether unauthorized contracts neither malum in se nor malum prohibitum, or where the restriction is implied from the grant of specified powers, are absolutely void and non-enforceable, even where the other party has received the consideration for his promise. It is held in special English cases that ultra vires contracts are under no circumstances enforceable; 11 C. B. 775; L. R. 18 Q. B. 618; 7 Eng. & Ir. App. 652. It has also been held that where leases of railroads were made without legislative sanction they were void as between the parties, and no action could be maintained to recover the rent even during the occupation by the lessee under the lease; 101 U. S. 71; 118 U. S. 290.

A corporation may not avail itself of the defence of ultra vires where a contract which it has entered into has been in good faith, fully performed by the other party, and the corporation has had the full benefit of the performance of the contract; 163 Pa. 206. As where a bank caused property owned by it to be conveyed by a deed, regular in form, to a worthless corporation organized by its own directors and then lent money to such corporation and took its notes and discounted them with strangers, by representing them as prime paper and on the strength of such corporation's apparent ownership of such property, it was held to be thereafter estopped as against the holders of the notes to assert that the conveyance was ultra vires; 73 Fed. Rep. 946.

In no way and through no channels, directly or indirectly, will courts allow an action to be maintained for the recovery of property delivered under an illegal contract, where, in order to maintain such recovery, it is necessary to have recourse to the contract; recovery must rest upon a disaffirmance of the contract and the recovery of what in justice should be recovered, but without breaking this rule. Where a sleeping-car company made a void lease of its property and business to another sleeping-car company, it was held that the value of the property transferred to the lessee when the lease took effect, with interest, could be recovered by the lessor, as that had substantially disappeared and could not now be returned. But that the value of contracts with railroad companies transferred by the lease and the value of the expired patents formed no part of the sum which the lessor was entitled to recover for the breaking up of its business by reason of the contract being adjudged illegal; 171 U. S. 138. See 8 Harv. L. Rev. 15.

It has been held ultra vires for a railway company to guarantee to the shareholders of a steam packet company a dividend upon capital; 10 Beav. 1; to engage in the coal trade; 6 Jur. N. S. 1006; for a company to assume the debt of another; 34 Vt. 144; or to make or indorse accommodation paper; 11 Ind. 104; or to engage as surety for another in a business in which it has no interest; 26 Barb. 568, or to guaranty, for accommodation, the obligations of another corporation; 37 Fed. Rep. 47; for one railroad company to unite with another like company, and both conduct their business under one management; 21 How. 441; or to run a line of steamboats in connection with its road; 39 Mo. 451; or for a mutual benefit society to undertake to pay the death losses of another insurance company; 70 Ia. 542; 87 id. 788; but a railway company may contract to carry beyond its own lines; Wood, Railr. 619; 54 Pa. 77; 96 U. S. 258; but see 23 Conn. 502. Where a corporation is incompetent to take real estate, a conveyance to it is only voidable; Morawetz, Corp., 2d ed. 678. A railroad company has implied authority to erect a refreshment room; L. R. 7 Eq. 116; a corporation authorized to erect a market has authority to purchase land for that purpose; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 447; where a corporation had authority to keep steam vessels for the purposes of a ferry, they could use these vessels, when otherwise unemployed, for excursion trips; 30 Beav. 40; 11 Allen 326. Corporations generally have authority to borrow money to carry out the objects for which they were created, and to execute their obligations therefor; Field, Corp. § 249; including irredeemable bonds; 21 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 713; they may, generally, by virtue of implied powers, make promissory notes; 13 Am. L. Rev. 641; 15 Wall. 566; 35 N. Y. 503. Where a railroad company, without legislative authority, leased its road to three persons, for twenty years, this was held ultra vires; 101 U. S. 71. See LEASE. A railroad company cannot guarantee the expense of a musical festival; 131 Mass. 258; the same ruling applies to a company organized to manufacture and sell organs; ibid.

It is said to be now well settled that a power granted to a corporation to engage in certain business carries with it the authority to act precisely as an individual would act in carrying on such business, and that it would possess for this purpose the usual and ordinary means to accomplish the objects of its creation, in the same manner as though it were a natural person; Field, Corp. § 271. A manufacturing corporation may purchase a large tract of land for the purpose of erecting thereon its factories and residences for its employees, and contribute toward the establishment thereof of a church, a school, a free library, and a free bath for its employees; 17 Misc. Rep. 43. The contrary has just been decided in the Pullman's Company case in Illinois.

The doctrine of ultra vires ought to be reasonably understood and applied; and whatever may be fairly regarded as incidental to and consequential upon those things which are authorized by the charter of the company, ought not, unless expressly prohibited, to be held by judicial construction, to be ultra vires; 49 N. J. Eq. 217.

The result of the English authorities is, that corporations—certainly those for commercial purposes, and probably all corporations to which the doctrine applies—have by implication all capacities and powers which, being reasonably incidental to their enterprise or operations, are not forbidden, either expressly by their constituting instruments or by necessary inference therefrom; Green's Brice, Ultra Vires 40. The American decisions seem to be tending towards this doctrine; id. note a. Prima facie, all the contracts of a corporation are valid, and it lies on those who impeach any contract to make out that it is void; 96 U. S. 267; 8 Macq. 382; 49 N. J. Eq. 217.

A court of equity, at the suit of the stockholders of the corporation, will restrain the commission of acts beyond the corporate power, by injunction operating upon the individual officers and directors as well as the corporation. This is now an acknowledged head of equity jurisdiction; Wood, R. 633; Redf. Railw. 400; 18 Wall. 626; 10 Beav. 1; creditors are said to have the same right in this respect as stockholders; 13 Am. L. Rev. 659.

Acquiescence for any considerable time in the exercise of excessive powers, after they come to the knowledge of the stockholders, would, however, be a decisive objection to such a remedy; 19 E. L. & E. 7.

In regard to municipal corporations, the rule is stricter against the validity of ultra vires contracts. See Dill. Mun. Corp. § 381.

It has been said that a corporation is liable for the negligence and other torts of its agents and servants, even when related to and connected with the acts of the corporation that are ultra vires; even if done in the execution of usurped powers and of purposes clearly ultra vires; Beach, Pr. Corp. § 444; but as to whether a corporation is liable for such wrongs by its agents as are beyond the scope of corporate authority, see L. R. 2 Q. B. 534; 7 H. & N. 172; 47 N. Y. 122.

ULTRONEUS WITNESS. A witness who offers his testimony without being regularly cited. Bell, Dict. Evidence.

UMPIRAGE. The decision of an umpire. 4 Lea 288.

UMPIRE. A third person appointed to decide between two other judges or referees who differ in opinion. 1 Harr. Del. 260. The jurisdiction of the umpire and arbitrators cannot be concurrent; Morse, Arb. & Aw. 241; if the arbitrators make an award, it is binding; if not, the award of the umpire is binding; T. Jones 167. If the umpire sign the award of the arbitrators, it is still their award, and vice versa; 6 Harr. & J. 403. He determines the issue submitted to the arbitrators on which they have failed to agree, which is his sole award; and neither of the original arbitrators is required to join in the award; 11 Allen 384; 75 Ill. 80. Arbitrators may appoint an umpire after their term of service has expired, if the time is not gone within which the umpire was to make his award; 2 Johns. 57. Subsequent dissent of the parties, without just cause, will have no effect upon the appointment; but they should have notice; 12 Metc. 283. If an umpire refuse to act, another may be appointed toties quoties; 11 East 387.

UNA CUM OMNIBUS ALIIS (Lat.). Together with all other things.

UNA VOCE (Lat.). With one voice; unanimously.

UNADJUSTED. Uncertain; not agreed upon. 43 Me. 214.

UNALIENABLE. Incapable of being transferred.

Things which are not in commerce, as, public roads, are in their nature unalienable. Some things are unalienable in consequence of particular provisions in the law forbidding their sale or transfer; as, pensions granted by the government. The natural rights of life and liberty are unalienable.

UNANIMITY (Lat. unus, one, animus, mind). The agreement of all the persons concerned in a thing, in design and opinion. See JURY; MAJORITY.

UNAPPROPRIATED LANDS. See STATE LANDS.

UNASCERTAINED DUTIES. Payment in gross on an estimate as to amount. 5 Blatchf. 374.

Where the merchant, on a final liquidation, will be entitled by law to allowances or deductions which do not depend on the rate of duty charged, but on the ascertainment of the quantity of the article subject to duty. Abbott; 5 Blatchf. 274.

UNAVOIDABLE. See UNAVOIDABLE DELAY.

UNAVOIDABLE ACCIDENT. Does not mean an accident which it is physically impossible in the nature of the things to prevent; but an accident not occasioned in any degree, remotely or directly, by the want of such care or skill as the law holds every man bound to exercise. Anderson; 8 Wend. 473.

UNAVOIDABLE CASUALTY. Events or accidents which human prudence, foresight, and sagacity cannot prevent. 6 U. S. App. 42; 3 Gray 325. If by any care, prudence, or foresight a thing could have been guarded against, it is not unavoidable; 60 Ga. 509. An unavoidable accident is synonymous with inevitable accident. See INEVITABLE ACCIDENT; ACT OF GOD; FORTUITOUS EVENT.

UNAVOIDABLE CAUSE. An accidental or unavoidable cause which cannot be avoided by the exercise of due diligence and foresight (in the meaning of Twenty-eight Hour Law, Act June 29, 1906) is a cause which reasonably prudent and careful men, under like circumstances, do not and would not ordinarily anticipate, and whose effects under similar circumstances they do not and would not ordinarily avoid. 194 Fed. 344, citing 61 Fed. 120 et al. See DUE DILIGENCE AND FORESIGHT.

UNAVOIDABLE DELAY. A delay caused by negligence is not "unavoidable." "Unavoidable" means inevitable; a condition of affairs, impossible to avert. To delay without cause, or, when the cause is completely within the control of the party charged with the duty to act, the failure to so act is neglect, and negligence is antithetical to unavoidableness. 186 Fed. 518, 520.

UNBORN CHILD. See EN VENTRE SA MERE; TWENTY; 13 Harv. L. Rev. 206.

The mother's right to the damages she suffers for the defendant's wrongful act in causing her to bring forth a deformed and sickly child, instead of a well developed and healthy one, does not depend on the question whether at the time of the injury the foetus is deemed in law a person, or whether after birth it may maintain an action, to recover for the wrong done to it before its birth. She cannot recover in her own right for the child's injuries for which, if it were deemed a person in law, it would have a right of action; and if it is deemed not to be a person at the time of the injury, but pars viscerum matris, she suffers no damage for its deformity merely; that is, the fact alone that it is deformed is a misfortune to the child, for which she is not entitled to damages, unless it causes her special physical pain and suffering. If the child cannot recover, it does not follow she can. There is no legal connection between their rights of action for their respective damages. But while the injuries suffered by each are distinct and independent, the mother's anxiety before the birth of the child, in view of the reasonable probability that the defendant's act will cause her to produce an abnormal child, is peculiarly an element of damage to her. 74 N. H. 463. See COMPENSATORY DAMAGES. Doctrine of.

UNCERTAIN EVENT. An event depending on mere efflux of time is not an "uncertain event" for the period fixed is sure to be reached whether the person attain it in living or not. 110 Ky. 889, 62 S. W. 1036.

UNCERTAINTY. That which is unknown or vague. See CERTAINTY.

UNCIA TERRÆ (Lat.). This phrase often occurs in charters of the British kings, and denotes some quantity of land. It was twelve modii, each modius possibly one hundred feet square. Mon. Ang. tom. 3, pp. 198, 205.

UNCIARIUS HERES. In Civil Law. An heir to one-twelfth of an estate or inheritance. Calv. Lex.

UNCLE. The brother of a father or mother. See AVUNCULUS; PATRUS.

UNCONDITIONAL OWNERSHIP. Ownership is unconditional when the quality of the estate is not limited or affected by any condition. Richards, Ins. Law., 3rd ed., 336, n; 179 Pa. St. 381.

UNCONSCIONABLE BARGAIN. A contract which no man in his senses, not under delusion, would make, on the one hand, and which no fair and honest man would accept, on the other. 2 Ves. 125; 4 Bouv. Inst. n. 3848. See USURY; EXPECTANCY; POST ORBIT.

UNCONSTITUTIONAL. See CONSTITUTIONAL; STATUTE.

UNCORE PRIEST (L. Fr. still ready). A plea or replication that the party pleading is still ready to do what is required. Used in connection with the words tout temps priest, the whole denotes that the party always has been and still is ready to do what is required, thus saving costs where the whole cause is admitted, or preventing delay where it is a replication, if the allegation is made out. 3 Bla. Com. 908.

UNDE NIHIL HABET. See DOWER.

UNDEFENDED. A term sometimes applied to one who is obliged to make his own defence when on trial, or in a civil cause. A cause is said to be undefended when the defendant makes default, in not putting in an appearance to the plaintiff's action; in not putting in his statement of defence; or, in not appearing at the trial either personally or by counsel, after having received due notice. Lush's Prac. 548.

UNDEB. The term is sometimes used in its literal sense of "below in position," but more frequently in its secondary meaning of "inferior" or "subordinate." 8 How. 363.

Elected Under the Constitution. The phrase, "elected under the Constitution," means "elected since the adoption of the Constitution." 132 Ky. 54, 116 S. W. 313.

UNDEB CHAMBERLAINS OF THE EXCHEQUER. Two officers who cleaved the tallies written by the clerk of the tallies and read the same. They also made searches for records in the treasury, and had the custody of the domesday book. Cowel.

UNDER AND SUBJECT. Words frequently used in conveyances of land which is subject to a mortgage, to show that the grantee takes subject to such mortgage. See MORTGAGE; 27 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 337, 401.

UNDER TENANT. One who holds by virtue of an under lease, from a lessee.

UNDER WAY. It was held that a steam tug was under way when she was fast alongside of a vessel which she was moving up to her anchor preparatory to towing her away. 29 Am. & Eng. Encyc. 2nd ed., 99; The Romance (1901), p. 15. It was held that a vessel with her anchor down, but not actually held by or under control of it, was under way. Id.; L. R. 2 A. & E. 350.

UNDERGROUND BODIES OF WATER. See WATERS.

UNDERGROUND WATER COURSES. See WATERS.

UNDERGROUND WATERS. See SUBTERRANEAN WATERS.

UNDERGROWTH. A term applicable to plants growing under or below other greater plants. 70 Miss. 411.

UNDERLEASE. An alienation by a tenant of a part of his lease, reserving to himself a reversion; it differs from an assignment, which is a transfer of all the tenant's interest in the lease. 3 Wils. 234; W. Blackst. 766. And even a conveyance of the whole estate by the lessee, reserving to himself the rent, with a power of re-entry for non-payment, was held to be not an assignment, but an underlease; 1 Stra. 405; Woodf. L. & T. 731. The transfer of a part only of the lands, though for the whole term, is an underlease; 2 Ohio 216; contra, 4 Bibb 538. See LEASE; ASSIGNMENT.

UNDERLIE THE LAW. In Scotch criminal procedure, an accused person, in appearing to take his trial, is said "to compare and underlie the law." Moz. & W.

UNDERSTANDING. It may denote an informal agreement or a concurrence as to its terms. 47 Wis. 507. A valid contract engagement of a somewhat informal character. 32 Minn. 238. In the law of contracts it is a loose and ambiguous term, unless accompanied by some expression to show that it constituted a meeting of the minds of the parties upon something respecting which they intended to be bound. 25 Conn. 529.

UNDERSTOOD. Agreed. 14 Gray 165. It falls short of alleging a distinct express contract; 19 S. C. 419. See UNDERSTANDING.

UNDERTAKER. A contractor. A bondsman. One who undertook to collect the revenue or supply the necessities of the English royal family. One who undertook to elect members of the parliament of 1614 favorable to the king. A Scotch adventurer of the 17th century who undertook to hold crown lands in Ireland. One who undertakes to bury the dead. English.

UNDERTAKING. An engagement by one of the parties to a contract to the other, and not the mutual engagement of the parties to each other: a promise. 5 East 17; 2 Leon. 224; 4 B. & Ald. 595, followed in 28 Tex. App. 186. It does not necessarily imply a consideration; 3 N. Y. 335.

UNDERTOOK. Assumed; promised. This is a technical word which ought to be inserted in every declaration of assumpsit charging that the defendant undertook to perform the promise which is the foundation of the suit; and this though the promise be founded on a legal liability or would be implied in evidence. Bacon, Abr. Assumpsit (F); 1 Chitty, Pl. 68, note p.

UNDERWRITER. The party who agrees to insure another on life or property, in a policy of insurance. He is also called the insurer.

The title is almost exclusively confined to insurers of marine risks, and is derived from the method of obtaining such insurance formerly in vogue, usually as follows: A premium having been agreed upon between the insured and an insurance broker, a statement of such premium and of the ship or cargo, and the voyage or time, was written at the head of a sheet which was laid on the broker's table. Then such merchants as were willing to insure such property on such terms subscribed their names to the statement above mentioned, stating the amount they were willing to insure; and so on until the desired amount of insurance was obtained 1 Pars. Mar. Ins. 14.

UNDERWRITING. An agreement made in forming a company and offering its stocks or bonds to the public, that if they are not all taken up, the underwriter will take what remains. An underwriter is held liable in England on the stock subscribed for by him. See 42 Ch. D. 1.

Underwriting contract. An agreement to take shares in a company forming, so far as the same are not subscribed to by the public. Palmer, Company Precedents 107.

UNDERWRITING OF STOCK. See STOCK.

UNDISPOSED OF. "Undisposed of," used in a will, means what remains after paying a legacy. 7 Ky. Opinions 401.

UNDIVIDED. Held by the same title by two or more persons, whether their rights are equal as to value or quantity, or unequal. See 16 Pick. 98.

UNDUE INFLUENCE. The use by one, in whom a confidence is reposed by another who holds a real or apparent authority over him, of such confidence or authority for the purpose of obtaining an unfair advantage of his weakness of mind, or of his necessities or distress. 94 Cal. 642; or to constrain him to do that which he would not have done without the exercise of such control. 50 N. J. Eq. 439.

That influence which compels one to do that which is against his will from fear, the desire of peace, or some feeling which is tantamount to force or fear. 65 Ala. 495; 86 Md. 494.

Influence gained by kindness and affection will not be regarded as undue, if no imposition or fraud be practised, even though it induce one to make an unequal and unjust distribution of his property, if such disposition is voluntarily made; 135 U. S. 187; 88 N. Y. 837; but the question of the boundary of legitimate influence must be determined by the consideration of the relation between the parties, the character, strength, and condition of each of them, and the application of sound sense to each given case; 44 N. J. Eq. 154; 82 Va. 225; the mental and physical condition of the testator, the provisions of the will itself; 98 Mo. 433; 117 Ill. 14; 23 App. Div. 411; 83 Fed. Rep. 33; and the conduct of the testator after its execution; 66 Pa. 283. The questions of capacity and undue influence are closely connected and must be considered together; 29 Ark. 151.

On principles of public policy, there is a presumption of undue influence in voluntary settlements between parent and child; 1 Ves. 401; 84 Beav. 457; 15 id. 278; guardian and ward; 10 L. R. Eq. 405; trustee and cestui que trust; 50 Beav. 89; legal adviser and client; 2 Atk. 25; or between one and his spiritual adviser; 2 L. C. Eq. 597, n.; 8 c. 14 Ves. 273; and so there is said to be a presumption of undue influence in case of wills made where these relations exist between the parties; 14 Fed. Rep. 905; 88 N. Y. 871; but see 71 Hun 27, where it was held that undue influence could not be presumed from the fact that the beneficiary stood in a confidential relation to the testator. See 5 Misc. Rep. 68; 114 Mo. 35; 98 Ala. 267.

Undue influence will not invalidate a will if, at the time of making it, the testator's freedom of will was not overcome; 118 Pa. 259; 184 U. S. 47; but it is held that where it is exercised by any one, even if not a beneficiary, undue influence is ground for setting the will aside; 74 Cal. 52. See DURESS; FRAUD; INFLUENCE.

UNFAIR COMPETITION. See COMPETITION, UNFAIR; TRADE-MARK.

UNFORESEEN REASON. The words "unforeseen reason" in a contract, permitting one of the parties for any "unforeseen reason" to excuse himself from performance, left it with him to assign any reason he might see proper for declining to perform the contract. It was not necessary that the reason should be a good reason or a reasonable reason. 156 Ky. 7, 160 S. W. 777.

UNGELD. An outlaw. Toml.

UNGOVERNABLE PASSIONS. The phrase, excite "ungovernable passions," is substantially the same as the expression "excite the passions beyond control"; for, if "ungovernable passions" have been excited, they are necessarily beyond control. If the passions are beyond control, they are certainly ungovernable. 72 S. W. 284.

UNICA TAXATIO (Lat.) The ancient language of a special award of venire, where of several defendants one pleads, and onelets judgment go by default, whereby the jury who are to try and assess damages on the issue are also to assess damages against the defendant suffering judgment by default. Lee, Dict.

UNIFORM. A tax is uniform when it operates with the same force and effect in every place where the subject of it is found. 112 U. S. 594. See GENERAL LAW.

UNIFORM RATES. See INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT.

UNIFORMITY OF LAWS. Commissions have been appointed by the legislatures of nearly all states and territories who hold annual conferences in connection with the American Bar Association. See the recent reports of the American Bar Association. See ROLLING STOCK, as to an instance of uniform laws in almost all the states.

UNIFORMITY OF PROCESS ACT. An act providing for uniformity of process in personal actions in the courts of law at Westminster, 28d May, 1832. The improved system thus established was more fully amended by the Procedure Acts of 1852, 1854, and 1860, and by the Judicature Acts of 1873 and 1875.

UNILATERAL CONTRACT. In Civil Law. When the party to whom an engagement is made makes no express agreement on his part, the contract is called unilateral, even in cases where the law attaches certain obligations to his acceptance. La. Civ. Code, art. 1758. A loan of money and a loan for use are of this kind. Pothier, Obl. part 1, c. 1, s. 1, art. 2; Lec. Elémén. § 781.

In the Common Law. According to Professor Langdell, every binding promise not in consideration of another promise is a unilateral contract. For example, simple contract debts, bonds, promissory notes, and policies of insurance. A bilateral contract, which consists of two promises to give in exchange for and consideration of each other, becomes a unilateral contract when one of the promises is fully performed; Langdell, Sum. Cont. § 183.

UNINTELLIGIBLE. That which cannot be understood. See CONSTRUCTION.

UNIO PROLIUM (Lat. union of offspring). A species of adoption used among the Germans, which takes place when a widower having children marries a widow who also has children. These parents then agree that the children of both marriages shall have the same rights to their succession as those which may be the fruits of their marriage. Lec. Elém. § 187.

UNION. A popular term for the United States of America.

In English Poor Law. Two or more parishes that have been consolidated for the better administration of the poor law therein.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. The republic whose organic law is the constitution adopted by the people of the thirteen states which declared their independence of the government of Great Britain on the fourth day of July, 1776.

When dealing with foreign sovereignties, the term "United States" has a broader meaning than when used in the Constitution, and includes all territories subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal government, wherever located. In its treaties and conventions with foreign nations this government is a unit. This is so not because the territories comprised a part of the government established by the people of the States in their Constitution, but because the Federal government is the only authorized organ of the territories, as well as of the States, in their foreign relations. 182 U. S. 263.

When they are said to constitute one nation, this must be understood with proper qualifications. Our motto, E pluribus unum, expresses the true nature of that composite body which foreign nations regard and treat in all their communications with our people. No state can enter into a treaty, nor make a compact with any foreign nation. To foreigners we present a compact unity, an undivided sovereignty. No state can do a national act nor legally commit the faith of the Union.

In our interstate and domestic relations we are for some purposes one. We are, so far as our constitution makes us, one, and no further; and under this we are to far a unity that one state is not foreign to another. Art. 4, § 4. A constitution, according to the original meaning of the word, is an organic law. It includes the organization of the government, the grant of powers, the distribution of these powers into legislative, executive, and judicial, and the names of the officers by whom these are exercised. And with these provisions a constitution, properly so-called, terminates. But ours goes further. It contains restrictions on the powers of the government which it organizes.

The writ of habeas corpus, the great instrument in defence of personal liberty against the encroachment of the government, shall not be suspended but in case of rebellion or invasion, and when the public safety requires it. No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed; no money shall be drawn from the treasury where there is not a regular appropriation; title of nobility shall be granted and granted, and no person holding office shall receive a present from any foreign government. Art. 1, § 9. To these, which are in the original constitution, may be added the eleven first amendments. These, as their character clearly shows, had their origin in a jealousy of the powers of the general government. All are designed more effectually to guard the rights of the people, and would properly, together with the restrictions in the original constitution, have a place in a bill of rights. Any act or law of the United States in violation of these, with whatever formality enacted, would be null and void, as an excess of power.

The restrictions on state sovereignty, besides those which relate to foreign nations, are that no state shall coin money, emit bills of credit, make anything but gold and silver a tender in the payment of debts, pass any bill of attainder or ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, or grant any title of nobility. These prohibitions are absolute. In addition to these restrictions, the results of the rebellion of 1861-1865 caused the adoption of the 13th, 14th, and 15th amendments, which lay still further restrictions upon the power of the states, so far as relates to slavery and the regulation of the right of suffrage. The 13th amendment provides that neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to its jurisdiction, and confers power upon congress to enforce this article by appropriate legislation; the 14th amendment provides that no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, and defines who shall be so considered; the 15th amendment specifically provides that the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any state on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Without the consent of congress no state shall lay any duties on imports or exports, or any duty on tonnage, or keep troops or ships of war in time of peace, or enter into any agreement or compact with another state, or engage in war, unless actually invaded, or in imminent danger of being so.

What constitutes a duty on exports or imports has been a matter of frequent litigation in the supreme court. It has been finally decided that the term "imports," as used in the constitution, does not refer to articles imported from one state to another, but only to articles imported from foreign states; 8 Wall. 123; but the prohibition contained in those provisions of the constitution which ordain that congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states; that no state shall lay any imports or duties on imports or exports; that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the immunities and privileges of citizens of the several states, have been construed together by the supreme court; and various statutes of the different states have been declared unconstitutional because they violated them. Thus a statute allowing an additional fee to port-wardens for every vessel entering a port; 6 Wall. 31; a tax on passengers introduced from foreign countries; 7 How. 289; a tax on passengers going out of a state; 8 Wall. 25; a tax levied upon freight brought into or through one state into another; 15 Wall. 262; a tonnage tax on vessels entering the harbors of a state, either from foreign or domestic ports; 12 Wall. 204; 19 id. 281; 20 id. 577; 100 U. S. 434; have all been so decided. It is said that wherever subjects, in regard to which a power to regulate commerce is asserted, are in their nature national, or admit of one uniform system or plan of regulation, they are exclusively within the regulating control of congress. But the mere grant of the commercial power to congress does not forbid the states from passing laws to regulate the same. The power to regulate commerce includes various subjects, upon which there should be some uniform rule, and upon which there should be different localities. The power is exclusive in congress in the former, but not so in the latter class; 12 How. 277. See COMMERCE.

Wherever these restrictions are, they operate on all states alike, and if any state law violates them, the laws are void; and without any legislation of congress the supreme court has declared them so; 6 Cra. 100; 4 Wheat. 122, 518; 16 How. 304; cases supra; Cooley, Const. Lim. 729.

The United States have certain powers, the principal of which are enumerated in Art. I, § 8, running into seventeen specific powers. Others are given to particular branches of the government: as, the treaty-making power to the president and senate. These have an equal effect in all the states, and so far as an authority is vested in the government of the Union or in any department of it, the laws of the states are prohibited from the exercise of certain powers, so far in our domestic affairs we are a unity.

The United States is a sovereign and independent nation, vested with the entire control of international relations, and with all the powers of government necessary to maintain that control and make it effective; 149 U. S. 598; and see 130 id. 600.

Within these granted powers the sovereignty of the United States is supreme. The constitution, and the laws made in pursuance of it, and all treaties, are the supreme law of the land, Art. 6. And they not only govern in their words, but in their meaning. If the sense is ambiguous or doubtful, the United States, through their courts, in all cases where the rights of an individual are concerned, are the right and the last resort. For without the authority of explaining his meaning, the United States would not be sovereign.

In these matters, particularly in the limitation put on the sovereignty of the states, it has been sometimes said that the constitution executes itself. This expression may be understood; but with as much propriety these may be said to be laws which the people have enacted themselves, and no laws of congress can either take from, add to, or confirm them. They are rights, privileges, or immunities which are granted by the people, and are beyond the control of congress, and the legislature of the state. They require no law to give them force or efficacy. The members of congress are exempted from arrest, except for treason, felony, and breach of the peace, in going to and returning from the seat of government. Art. 1, § 6. It is obvious that no law can take away this immunity. On these points, no laws are purely nugatory, because if they go beyond or fall short of the provisions of the constitution, that may always be appealed to. An individual has just what that gives him,—no less and no more. It may be laid down as a principle, that the admitting of an exception, that when the constitution has established a disability or immunity, a privilege or a right, these are precisely as that instrument has fixed them, and can be neither augmented nor curtailed by any act or law either of congress or a state legislature. We are more particular in stating this principle because it has sometimes been forgotten both by legislatures and theoretical expositors of the constitution.

It has been justly thought a matter of importance to determine from what source the United States derive their authority. When the original constitution was framed, the people of this country were not an unformed mass of individuals. They were united into regular communities under state governments, and to these had confided the whole mass of sovereign power which they had intrusted out of their own hands. The question here proposed is whether our bond of union is a compact entered into by the states, or the constitution is an organic law established by the people. To this question the preamble gives a decisive answer: We, the people, ordain and establish this constitution. The members of the convention which formed it were indeed appointed by the states. But the government of the states had only a delegated power, and, if they had an inclination, had no authority to transfer the allegiance of the people from one sovereign to another. The great men who formed the constitution were sensible of this want of power, and recommended it to the people themselves. They assembled in their own convention, as individuals, and as representatives of the states. The state governments are passed by in silence. They had no part in making it, and, though they have certain duties to perform, as the appointment of senators, are properly not parties to it. The people in their capacity as sovereigns made and adopted it, and it binds the state governments without their consent. The United States as a whole, therefore, emanates from the people, and not from the states, and the constitution and laws of the states, whether made before or since the adoption of that of the United States, are subordinate to it and its laws made in pursuance of it. See Fisher, Evolution of Const.

It has very truly been said that out of the mass of sovereignty intrusted to the states was carved a part and deposited with the United States. But this was taken by the people, not by the states as organized communities. The people are the fountain of sovereignty. The whole was originally with them as their own. The state governments were but trustees acting under a derived authority, and had no power to delegate what was delegated to them. But the original fountain of sovereignty might take away what they had lent and intrust it to whom they pleased. They had the whole title, and, as absolute proprietors, had the right of using or abusing, — visendi et abutendi.

A consequence of great importance flows from this fact. The laws of the United States act directly on individuals, and they are directly responsible, and not mediately through the state governments. This is the most important improvement made by our constitution over all previous confederacies. At the same time, if not more properly a part of it, the laws act only on states through individuals. They are supreme over persons and cases, but do not touch the state: they act through them; 1 Wheat. 398. If a state passes an ex post facto law, or passes a law impairing the obligation of contracts, or makes anything but gold or silver a tender in payment of debts, congress passes no law which touches the state: it is sufficient that these laws are void, and when a case is brought before the court, it, without any law of congress, will declare them void. They give no person an immunity, nor deprive any of right. Again: would a state pass a law declaring war against a foreign nation, grant letters of marque and reprisal, arm troops or keep ships of war in time of peace, individuals acting in such wars would be respected by the United States. They might be treated and punished as traitors or pirates. But congress would and could pass no law against the state; and for this simple reason, because the state is sovereign. And it is a maxim consecrated in public law, and confirmed by the necessity of the case, that a sovereign is answerable for his acts only to his God and to his own conscience.

The constitution and laws made in pursuance of it, that is, laws within their grant and power, — and treaties, are the supreme law of the land, art. 6; and the judicial power, art. 3, § 1, gives to the supreme court the right of interpreting them. But this court is but another name for the United States, and this power necessarily results from their sovereignty; for, without it, they could not be truly sovereign unless their interpretation as well as the letter of the law governed. But this power of the court is confined to cases brought before them, and does not embrace principles independent of these cases. They have no power analogous to that of the Roman praetor or decreeing the ius civile, the constitution by edict. And opinion, however strongly expressed, has no authority beyond the reasoning by which it is supported, and binds no one. But the point embraced in the case is as much a part of the law as though embraced in the letter of the law or in the constitution, and the parties, functionaries, whether of the states or United States, as well as private persons; and of this necessity, as there is no authority above a sovereign to which an appeal can be made.

Another question of great practical importance arose at an early period of our government. The natural tendency of the states was to grow and to augment itself. Limitations of authority are not to be expected from those to whom power is intrusted; and such is the infirmity of human nature that those who are most jealous when out of power are seeking of power when in it, and will usurp it as any other. A general abrogation commonly precedes a real usurpation, to lull suspicion if for no other purpose. When the constitution was new, and before it had been fully considered, this diversity of opinion was not unnatural, and was the subject of earnest argument, but is, we think, now settled, and rightly, both on technical reasoning and on that of expediency. The question is between incidental and constructive or implied powers. The government of the United States is one of delegated powers. No general words are used from which a general power can be inferred. Incidental and implied are sometimes used as synonymous; but in accurate reasoning there is a plain distinction between them, and the latter, in common use, comes nearer to constructive than to incidental.

The interpretation of powers is familiar to courts of justice, as a great part of landed property in England and much in this country is held under powers. A more frequent example is that of common agency, every agent is created by a power. Courts who are professedly bound to effect the intentions of parties have, on this subject, established general rules. Among these no one is more immovably fixed than this, that the interpretation is strict and not liberal. 2 Kent 617; 4 id. 88. But this strictness does not exclude incidental powers. These are included in a general and express power, both in the common and technical use of language. To take a familiar example. A merchant of Philadelphia or Boston has a cargo of tea arrive at New York and by letter authorizes his correspondent to sell it. This is the whole extent of the power. But it necessarily and properly includes that of advertising, of removing and exhibiting the goods, &c. It would not authorize the sale of sugar, a horse, and much less a store or real estate. These powers are not incidental to the general power, nor included in it. Or we may take an example directly from the constitution itself. The United States has power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States." This includes the power to create and appoint all inferior officers and to do all subordinate acts necessary and proper to execute the general power; and to appoint assessors, collectors, keepers, and disbursers of the public treasures. Without these subordinate powers the general power could not be executed. And when there is more than one mode by which this general power may be executed, it includes all the means which are necessary to any one, unless a particular mode is pointed out. 4 Wheat. 410. All that the constitution requires is that it should be necessary and proper. One consequence of this doctrine is that there must be a power expressly granted as a basis to build on, which either, or otherwise it would be ingrafted on nothing.

A constructive power is one that is inferred, not from an express power, but from the general objects to be obtained from the grant, and, perhaps, in private powers sometimes from the general language in which they are granted. The broad distinction between them may be illustrated by two cases that came before the United States Court. The first is one we have already quoted, 4 Wheat. 417. The question in that case was whether the act incorporating the Bank of the United States was constitutional, or whether it lay beyond the limits of the delegated powers and was, therefore, merely void as usurped or an excess of power. The authority to create a corporation is nowhere expressly given, and if it exists it must be brought incidentally under a grant that is specifically granted. The court decided that it was incidental to that of laying taxes as a keeper and disbursing of the public treasure. This power could be executed only by the appointment of agents; and the United States might, as we saw, create an artificial person, keeping and disbursing the public money as appoint a natural person or an artificial one already created. In the case of Osborn v. The United States Bank, 9 Wheat. 836, the general question was presented again, and, as requested, the court reaffirmed their former decision, and added no more than before, adding an important qualification. They might not only create an artificial person, but clothe it with such powers and qualities as would enable it to perform its specific duties. The question in that case was whether the country and paid out at another, and the bank instead of removing the specie might pay it where collected, and repay themselves by purchasing a bill of exchange in another place, and this could be conveniently and economically done only by a power of dealing in exchange, which had been reduced to its last analysis, — merely buying specie at one place and paying for it at another. It is in this way, and this only, that the bank got its general power of dealing in exchange, — that it is essential and proper to enable it to perform its principal duty, that of transferring the funds of the United States. Thus, the authority to create a bank is incidental to that of receiving, keeping, and paying out the taxes, and is comprehended under the specific power. The argument is principally derived from Hamilton and a bank, which is now satisfactory to Washington, as that of Chief Justice Marshall has to the public at large.

This is very different from a constructive power which is inferred not as included in any special grant, but from the general tenor of the power and the general objects to be obtained. The objects of the constitution are collected from the preamble, and they are to promote the common weal. But this is followed by the grant of specific powers. And it is the dictate of common sense as well as technical reasoning that this object is to be obtained by the due exercise of these powers. Where these fail short, no more can be obtained, and if they are inadequate, the same consequence follows. No one would infer from a power to sell a ship one to sell a store, though the interest of the principal would thereby be promoted. The general power to regulate commerce is not sufficient to authorize a duty to be carried to its whole extent by having incidental powers ingrafted upon it. A general power to regulate the descent and distribution of intestate estates and the execution and proof of wills would be on any accounts useful, but it is not granted. The utility of a power is never a question. It must be expressly granted, or incidental to an express power, — that is necessary and proper to carry into execution one expressly granted, — or it does not exist.

The other illustrative case is that of 16 Pet. 890. It will be found on a careful examination that in this a constructive power only is claimed. The only point involved in the case was the constitutionality of the statute of Pennsylvania under which Frigg was indicted as a kidnapper. The court decided this to be unconstitutional; and here its judicial functions properly terminated. But to arrive at this conclusion it was deemed necessary to determine that the general power of arresting and returning fugitives from labor and service was intrusted to the United States, and that it was not pretended that this power was expressly given, nor that it was incidental to any that was expressly given, — that is, conducive or proper to the execution of such a power. The court say that "in the exposition of this part of the constitution we shall limit ourselves to the considerations which appropriately and exclusively belong to it, without laying down any rules of interpretation of a more general nature." 16 Pet. 910. They do not, as in McCulloch's case, quote the express authority to which this is incidental; but a general argument is offered to prove that this power is most safely lodged with the United States, and that, therefore, it has been placed there exclusively. If the canon of criticism which we have endeavored to establish, and which is generally admitted, is correct, the existence of such a power cannot be inferred from its utility.

It will be seen, also, that this case stands in strong contrast with that of Marble v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. 305, in which the court delivered for the same judge. This was on the validity of the twenty-fifth section of the Judiciary Act, authorizing an appeal from a final judgment of a state court to the supreme court of the United States; and the case is no case, as the extent of the powers granted by the constitution being more fully and profoundly examined. In this case the court say that "the government of the United States can claim no powers which are not granted by the constitution, and the powers actually granted must be such as are expressly given, or given by necessary implication." — that is to say, as the reasoning of the court in the whole opinion proves, such as are included in the express powers, and are necessary and proper to carry them into execution. Such was the uniform language of the court whenever the question was presented previously to the rebellion. The doctrine as now held, however, is somewhat broader, finding its exposition in the decision of the supreme court in the Legg v. Under Cases, 19 Wall. 491. It is there said that it is not indispensable to the existence of any power claimed for the federal government that it can be found specified in the words of the constitution, or clearly and directly traceable to some one of the specified powers. Its existence may be deduced fairly from more than one of the substantial powers expressly defined, or from them all combined. It is allowable to group together any number of them and infer from them all that the power claimed has been conferred. Before any act of congress can be held to be unconstitutional, the court must be convinced that the means adopted were not appropriate or conducive to the execution of any or all of the powers of congress, or of the government, — not appropriate in any degree; and of this degree, the court is not to judge, but congress.

We have seen that the constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance of it are the supreme law of the land, and that of the true meaning of these the supreme court, which is nothing else than the United States, is the final expositor. This necessarily results from their sovereignty. But the United States government is one of delegated powers; and nothing is better established, both by technical reasoning and common sense, than this, — that a delegation of power is that power which is delegated to him. All acts beyond are simply void, and create no obligation. It is a maxim also of constitutional law that the powers of sovereignty not delegated to the United States are reserved to the states. But so complex an affair as that of government, controversies will arise as to what is given and what is reserved, — doubts as to the dividing line. When this is the case, who is to decide? This is a difficulty which the convention did not undertake to settle. To avoid all controversy, the constitution uses the plainest words in granting powers to the United States were used which the language affords. Still further to preclude doubts, the convention added, at the close of the seventeen powers expressly given, this clause: "To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this constitution in the government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof." Art. 1, § 8. This clause contains no grant of power. But in the Articles of Confederation, which was a compact between the states as independent sovereignties, the word expressly was used; and a doubt troubled congress how far incidental powers were included. Articles of Confederation, art. 2. This clause was introduced to remove all doubt. It covered incidental, but not constructive, powers.

Strange as it may appear, both those who wished larger powers granted to the United States, and, in the language of that day, thought that things must be worse before they could be better, and those who were in favor of the states, and who power was granted, fixed their eyes on this clause; and perhaps no part of the constitution gave greater warmth to the controversy than this. To disarm the designing and counteract the fears of the timid, the amendment was framed, and was made by the friends of the constitution. But so jealous were parties of each other that it was offered in the convention of Massachusetts by Governor Hancock, who favored and had the confidence of the opposition, though it was the handwriting of Mr. Parsons, afterwards chief justice, and was of Chief Justice Parsons. That amendment is in these words: "The powers not delegated to the United States by the constitution, nor prohibited to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or the people." Were the words of the original constitution, and the amendment both stricken out, it would leave the true construction unaltered. Story, Const. § 1282. Both are equally nugatory, a fact; but they have an important popular use. The amendment formally admits that certain rights are reserved to states, and these rights must be sovereign.

We have seen that, within their limited powers, the United States are the natural expositors of the constitution and laws; that when a case affecting individual rights arises, the supreme court stands for the United States, and that they have the right to explain and enforce the laws and constitution. But their power is confined to the facts before them, and they have no power to explain them in the form of an edict to affect other rights and conditions. Beyond these powers, they are sovereign, and their acts are equally unexamable. Of the separating line between the powers granted and the powers withheld, the constitution provides no judge. Between sovereigns there can be no common judge, but an arbitrator mutually agreed upon. If that power is given to one party, that may draw all power to itself, and it establishes a relation not of equal sovereignty, but of sovereign and subject. On this subject the constitution is silent. The great men who formed it did not even solve a question that in its own nature could not be solved. Between equals it made neither superior, but trusted to the mutual forbearance of both parties. A larger confidence was placed in an enlightened public opinion than in the wisdom of men not until the war of the rebellion was this conflict between the two sovereignties finally settled by the ultima ratio regum. The status of the states and their political rights under the constitution have been considered at large by the supreme court in the case of Texas v. White, 7 Wall. 700. It is there held that authority to suppress rebellion is found in the constitutional power to suppress insurrection, and carry on war; authority to provide for the restoration of state governments under the constitution when suspended and overthrown is derived from the obligation of the United States to guarantee to every state in the Union a republican form of government. The unity of the states never was a purely artificial and arbitrary relation. It began among the colonies, and grew out of common origin, mutual sympathies, kindred principles, similar interests, and geographical relations. It was confirmed and strengthened by the necessities of war, and received definite form and character and sanction from the Articles of Confederation. By these the Union was solemnly declared to be perpetual; and when these articles were found to be inadequate to the exigencies of the country, the constitution was ordained "to form a more perfect union." But the perpetuity and indissolubility of the Union by no means imply the loss of distinct and individual existence, or of the right of self-government by the states. On the contrary, it may, not unnecessarily be said that the preservation of the states and the maintenance of their government are as much within the design and care of the constitution as the preservation of the union and the maintenance of the national government. The constitution, in all its provisions, looks to an indestructible Union composed of indestructible states.

The United States is not a corporation under the New York statutes, in the sense that it will be exempted from an inheritance tax on personal property bequeathed to it by will; 163 U. S. 625.

If the nation comes down from its position of sovereignty and enters the domain of commerce, it submits itself to the same laws that govern individuals therein. It assumes the position of an ordinary citizen and it cannot recede from the fulfillment of its obligations; 74 Fed. Rep. 145, following 91 U. S. 398.

See SOVEREIGNTY; ARTICLES OF CONFEDERATION; STATE; TERRITORY; COMMERCE; CONSTITUTIONAL; titles of the several states; Fisher, Evol. of the Const.

UNITED STATES COMMISSIONERS. Each district court of the United States may appoint, in different parts of the district for which it is held, as many discreet persons as it may deem necessary, who shall be called "commissioners of the district court," and shall exercise the powers which are or may be conferred upon them; R. S. § 627.

Officers, formerly appointed by each United States circuit court, now by each district court, to whom are committed some of the preliminary duties which must otherwise be performed by the court itself, or the judge thereof, each of whom has the functions of an arresting, examining, and committing magistrate, bound to hear all complaints of the commission of any public offense against the laws of the United States in the district assigned to him, to cause the offender to be arrested, to examine into the matters charged, to summon witnesses for both sides, and to commit for trial or discharge from arrest according as the evidence tends or fails to support the accusation. 29 A. & E. Ency. L. 2nd ed., 182, 183; 2 Abb. (U. S.) 523.

These officers are authorized to hold to security of the peace and for good behavior in cases arising under the constitution and laws of the United States; R. S. § 797. They have power to carry into effect, according to the true intent and meaning thereof, the laws of extradition or decree of any consul, vice-consul, or commercial agent, to sit as judges or arbitrators in such differences as may arise between the captains and crews of vessels, application for the exercise of such power being first made by petition of such consul, etc.; R. S. § 728.

They have also power to take bail and affidavits when required or allowed in any circuit or district court of the United States; R. S. § 945. They may imprison or bail offenders; R. S. § 1010; may discharge poor convicts imprisoned; R. S. § 1049; may administer oaths and take acknowledgments; R. S. § 1778; may institute proceedings under the civil rights laws; R. S. 1 Supp. 66; may issue warrants for the arrest of foreign seamen, in case of dispute or desertion; R. S. § 679; may summon the master of a vessel in case of seamen wages; may apprehend fugitives from justice; R. S. § 520.

The district court of the United States may appoint commissioners before whom appraisers of vessels or goods and merchandise seized for breaches of any law of the United States may be sworn; and when taken as effectual as if taken before the judge in open court; R. S. § 570. The court of claims has power to appoint commissioners, before whom examinations may be made upon oath of witnesses touching all matters pertaining to claims; R. S. § 1071, 1080.

UNITED STATES, CONSTITUTION OF. See CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

UNITED STATES COURTS. Except in the case of impeachments the judicial power of the United States is vested by the constitution in a supreme court and such other inferior courts as may be from time to time established by congress. All the judges are appointed by the president, with the advice of the senate, to hold office during good behavior, and their compensation cannot be diminished during their terms of office. The judges, other than those of the supreme court, are circuit judges and district judges, by whom are held the inferior courts of law and equity.

[For a detailed description of the various courts and their rules of practice, jurisdiction, etc., it is suggested that reference be made to some recent book on the subject such as Dewhurst's Rules of Practice in the United States Courts, Montgomery's Federal Procedure, or Foster's Federal Practice. Ed. Note.]

The judicial power under the constitution shall extend to:—1. Cases arising under the federal constitution, laws, or treaties. 2. Those affecting ambassadors and other public ministers and consuls. 3. Admiralty and maritime cases. 4. Controversies to which the United States is a party. 5. Those between two or more states. 6. Or between a state and a citizen of another state. (By the 11th amendment this grant of power was so limited as not to permit a state to be sued by citizens of another state, but a state may sue citizens of another state; 10 Wall. 553; 91 U. S. 687.) 7. Or between citizens of different states. 8. Or between a state or its citizens and foreign states, citizens, or subjects. This is construed to be an absolute grant of power; 1 Wheat. 308.

The nature of the federal government which distributes the functions of government between two powers, each being sovereign within its sphere, but operating within the same territorial jurisdiction and upon the same persons and property, makes necessary the adjustment of two classes of independent tribunals with great care, both in legislation and the administration of justice, to avoid conflicts of jurisdiction. That such have occurred is true, but their rare occurrence in more than a century bears testimony as well to the tact and discretion of the judiciary, federal and state, as to the perfection of the system which they administer under the constitution.

As respects criminal proceedings, the courts of each jurisdiction generally confine themselves to the administration of the laws of the government which created them. In civil cases, however, as the constitution has conferred jurisdiction upon the federal courts in cases, for example, where a citizen of one state sues a citizen of another state, it is manifest that the court which tries such a case must administer the laws of the state in which the action is brought, subject to the constitution of the United States in cases which conflict with its provisions.

In the organization of the federal system of courts, there were two objects to be accomplished. The first was to prevent a clashing between the state and United States courts, by imposing restrictions upon the United States courts. The second was to carry out the mandates of the constitution, by clothing the latter with all the powers necessary to execute its provisions. This organization was commenced by the act of 1789, familiarly known as the Judiciary Act; 1 Stat. at Large 921.

To accomplish the first object, the right to issue writs of habeas corpus was by the fourteenth section limited to cases arising under the federal constitution and laws; R. S. § 758. See HABEAS CORPUS.

This important restriction was intended to leave to the state authorities the absolute and exclusive administration of the state laws in all cases of imprisonment; and no instance has ever occurred in which this act has been disregarded. On the contrary, its observance has been emphatically enjoined and enforced; 21 How. 523. See 4 Dill. 823; 24 Am. L. Reg. 523. See infra.

By the thirty-fourth section of the same act (R. S. § 721), it was enacted that the laws of the several states, except where the constitution, treaties, or statutes of the United States should otherwise require or provide, were to be regarded as rules of decision in trials at common law, in the courts of the United States, in cases where they applied. This provision has received examination and interpretation in the following, among the many cases: 7 How. 40; 8 id. 189; 14 id. 504; 17 id. 476; 18 id. 502, 507; 20 id. 393, 584; 18 Wall. 71; 17 id. 44; 98 U. S. 170, 242, 470; 3 Wash. C. C. 813; 17 Fed. Rep. 731. In all cases depending upon the construction of a state statute, federal courts will follow the construction of the court of last resort of the state, when that construction is well settled, without respect to its original soundness; 9 Cra. 87; 100 U. S. 47; 60 Fed. Rep. 718; 22 id. 20; even when, in ignorance of a decision by the state court, the supreme court had construed the statute differently; 100 U. S. 47; or when, if it were an original question, the federal court would be of a different opinion; 154 id. 177.

And while the United States courts follow the interpretation given to the laws of the state by their highest tribunals, yet in case of conflicting decisions, or in the absence of decisions at the time of consideration by the United States courts, the rule is, of course, modified; 5 How. 139; 18 id. 589. In the leading case of Burgess v. Seligman the limitations of the doctrine were thus stated by Bradley, J.: "The federal courts have an independent jurisdiction in the administration of state laws, co-ordinate with, and not subordinate to, that of the state courts, and are bound to exercise their own judgment as to the meaning and effect of those laws. The existence of two co-ordinate jurisdictions in the same territory is peculiar, and the results would be anomalous and inconvenient but for the exercise of mutual respect and deference. Since the ordinary administration of the law is carried on by the state courts, it necessarily happens that by the course of their decisions certain rules are established which become rules of property and action in the state, and have all the effect of law, and which it would be wrong to disturb. This is especially true with regard to the law of real estate and the construction of state constitutions and statutes. Such established rules are always regarded by the federal courts, no less than by the state courts themselves, as authoritative declarations of what the law is. But where the law has not been thus settled, it is the right and duty of the federal courts to exercise their own judgment, as they also always do in reference to the doctrines of commercial law and general jurisprudence. So when contracts and transactions have been entered into, and rights have accrued thereon under a particular state of the decisions, or when there has been no decision of the state tribunals, the federal courts properly claim the right to adopt their own interpretation of the law applicable to the case, although a different interpretation may be adopted by the state courts after such rights have accrued. But even in such cases, for the sake of harmony and to avoid confusion, the federal courts will lean toward an agreement of views with the state courts if the question seems to them balanced with doubt. Acting on these principles, founded as they are on comity and good sense, the courts of the United States, without sacrificing their own dignity as independent tribunals, endeavor to avoid, and in most cases do avoid, any unseemly conflict with the well-considered decisions of the state courts. As, however, the very object of giving to the national courts jurisdiction to administer the laws of the states in controversies between citizens of different states was to institute independent tribunals, which, it might be supposed, would be unaffected by local prejudices and sectional views, it would be a dereliction of their duty not to exercise an independent judgment in cases not foreclosed by previous adjudication." 107 U. S. 80, approved id. 541. See, also, for a good statement of the doctrine, 134 id. 348. Ordinarily, they will follow the latest settled decisions; 1 Dill. 555; 6 Pet. 291; 2 Black 599. But a change of decision by a state court in regard to the construction of a statute will not be allowed to affect rights acquired under the former decision; 101 U. S. 677; 128 id. 538; otherwise, when no rights have been acquired under the former decision; 100 U. S. 47; 107 id. 30; 147 id. 91; or where the decision of the state court was made long after the rights in question accrued; 120 U. S. 759; 119 id. 690; 148 id. 393. The federal courts will not follow the decision of an inferior court; 2 Woods 395.

In controversies concerning the title to real property, the federal court always administers the law as if it were sitting as a local court; 17 Wall. 44, 98 U. S. 244; 39 Fed. Rep. 719; 153 U. S. 17. So also of statutes of limitation; 157 U. S. 177.

Questions of international law must be decided as matters of general law, uncontrollable by local decisions; 146 U. S. 657. Decisions of the state court on questions of local law, affecting solely the internal police of the state or the construction of a municipal ordinance, must control; 145 U. S. 421.

Local law or custom, established by repeated decisions of the highest courts of the state, becomes also the law governing courts of the United States sitting in that state; 125 U. S. 555; 185 id. 492. This is particularly true as to decisions which establish a rule of property, and the rule is observed even as to points upon which the states are at variance among themselves; 133 U. S. 670; 135 id. 467; 136 id. 233; 148 id. 80; and where the same statute receives a different interpretation in different states, each will be followed by the federal courts as the true interpretation for the particular state in question; 62 Fed. Rep. 363. The supreme court will follow the construction given by the state court to a state statute of limitations, even in a case decided the other way by the circuit court before the decision of the state court; 147 U. S. 647; and the lower federal courts will reverse their decision holding a state statute unconstitutional, when the state subsequently decides that it is constitutional, if a final decree had not been entered in the federal court; 64 Fed. Rep. 9. In 71 Fed. Rep. 443, however, the circuit court of appeals declined to follow the decision of the latter was rendered after argument and before decision in the federal court. As to the organization or composition of a tribunal established by the fundamental law of the state, the settled course of decisions in its highest court is at least entitled to great weight; 120 U. S. 364.

The provision of § 721 making the state law the rule of decision embraces state rules of evidence in civil cases at common law; 1 Black 427; 18 Wall. 436; 98 U. S. 1; 16 Fed. Rep. 435; but not in equity cases; 8 Blatch. 11; it does not apply to questions of general jurisprudence; 147 U. S. 101; or of general commercial law; 18 How 620; 16 Pet. 1; 2 Fed. Rep. 265, 848; 4 Ems. 473; 100 U. S. 239; see COMMERCIAL LAW (but they should have due weight given to them; 52 Fed. Rep. 191); or to the general principles of equity; 13 How. 271; 13 id. 361; or to criminal cases; id.; or questions of a general nature, not based upon a local statute; 100 U. S. 218; 107 id. 100. It is sometimes said, somewhat vaguely, that questions of general law are to be uncontrolled by decisions of the state courts, except to give them such weight as may be deemed proper, with due respect to their character as co-ordinate tribunals. It is difficult to deduce from the cases any general rule or principle, but among cases thus held to be questions of general law are:—what is or is not a navigable stream; 67 Fed. Rep. 285; whether a carrier may stipulate for exemption from liability for its own negligence; 62 id. 908; whether two employees of the same master are fellow-servants; 149 U. S. 368. In the section last referred to, the word "laws" does not include the decisions of the local tribunals, for these are only evidence of what the laws are; 16 Pet. 1.

If a contract when made is valid under the laws of the state as then interpreted by the courts of the state, subsequent decisions putting a different interpretation upon such laws are not binding on the federal courts as to that contract; 1 Wall. 175; 10 id. 678. And where contracts are based upon laws then believed to be constitutional, there being at the time no adjudication on such laws in the state courts declaring them invalid, the federal courts will not follow subsequent decisions of state courts thereon, but will construe such statute for themselves; 19 Wall. 66.

In clothing the United States courts with sufficient authority to carry out the mandates of the constitution, their powers are made in certain cases to transcend those of the state courts; various provisions exist for the removal of causes from the state to the federal courts. See REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

And while the rule is thoroughly settled that remedies in the courts of the United States are, at common law or in equity, according to the essential nature of the case, uncontrolled in that particular by the practice of the state courts; 129 U. S. 45, 46; yet an enlargement of equitable rights by the state statute may be administered by federal courts as well as by the courts of the state; and when the case is one of a remedial proceeding, essentially of an equitable character, there can be no objection to the exercise of the jurisdiction; 31 Wall. 503, 520; 110 U. S. 15, 25; 121 id. 553, 557.

The original jurisdiction of the circuit court in certain cases, and the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court to review the decisions of state courts, depend upon the existence in the case of what is termed a federal question. This is a question arising in a litigated case, and necessary to its decision, involving the construction of the constitution, or a law or treaty of the United States.

If, from the questions involved in a case, it appears that some title, right, privilege, or immunity, on which the recovery depends, will be defeated by one construction of the constitution, or of a law or treaty of the United States, or sustained by the opposite construction, the case will be one arising under the constitution or laws of the United States, and involves a federal question; 115 U. S. 267; 114 id. 641; 112 id. 416; 111 id. 463.

The supreme court has no jurisdiction of a writ of error to review the judgment of a state court unless a real, and not a fictitious, federal question is involved; 142 U. S. 79; 147 id. 531; 6 Wall. 258; and where it does not appear from the record that a federal question was actually presented or in any way relied on before final judgment below, the supreme court is without jurisdiction; 116 U. S. 54; as it must appear on the record that it was raised and decided, or that its decision was necessary to the judgment or decree rendered; 114 U. S. 133; 91 id. 578; 111 id. 200; 171 id. 38. See 143 id. 254. If another question, not federal, has also been raised and decided against the same party, and the decision of the latter question is sufficient to sustain the judgment, the supreme court will not review it; 171 id. 38; 150 id. 683. It has been held that federal questions are involved in suits brought by corporations created by acts of congress; 115 U. S. 2; to determine the validity of a railroad consolidation authorized by act of congress; 111 U. S. 449; to enjoin the erection of a bridge across a navigable river authorized by act of congress; 18 Blatch. 479; whether full faith and credit were given to a judgment in another state; 146 U. S. 107; where the supreme court of a state failed to give proper effect to a decree of the circuit court of the United States; 152 id. 327; where a federal officer is sued in trespass on real estate which he claims to have possession for and under authority of the United States; 147 id. 508. So, of course, are suits for infringement of patents and copyrights, cases in which it is claimed that a state law is invalid because in conflict with the constitution or laws of the United States, or as depriving one of some right, privilege, or immunity thereby guaranteed, and criminal prosecutions for violations of federal laws.

The judicial power of the federal government is administered under existing laws, by four courts. The supreme court, which is created by the constitution, from which it derives its original jurisdiction; the circuit court of appeals; the circuit court; and the district court.

There are also various administrative tribunals, such as the court of claims; see infra; the interstate commerce commission; and the private land claims court; which titles see. There are also separate judicial systems provided by congress for the territories and the District of Columbia. The system of appeals, as at present organized, provides for the review of decisions on questions of law in most, if not all, of the federal tribunals either by the supreme court or the circuit court of appeals, as the case may be.

As to the Senate as a court of impeachment, see IMPEACHMENT.

The Supreme Court now consists of the chief justice and eight associates, of whom six constitute a quorum. They have precedence according to date of appointment, or, of two appointed at the same time, then according to their ages. In the absence of the chief justice, the associate first in precedence performs his duties. There is a single term which begins on the second Monday of October. In the absence of a quorum, any of the judges may adjourn from day to day for twenty days, but if at the expiration of that period no quorum attends, the business shall be set aside until the next appointed session. The clerk, marshal, and reporter are appointed by the court.

The jurisdiction is original and appellate, civil and criminal, defined by the constitution, which establishes the court; 11 Wheat. 467.

By the act of September 24, 1789, sec. 13, the supreme court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all controversies of a civil nature where a state is a party, except between a state and its citizens, or between a state and citizens of other states, or aliens, in which latter cases it shall have original, but not exclusive, jurisdiction. It shall have exclusively all such jurisdiction of suits or proceedings against ambassadors or other public ministers, or their domestics or domestic servants, as a court of law can have consistently with the law of nations; and original, but not exclusive, jurisdiction of all suits brought by ambassadors or other public ministers, or in which a consul or vice-consul is a party; R. S. § 867. The court has no jurisdiction except that given it by the constitution or law; 4 Cra. 83.

Many cases have occurred of controversies between states, amongst which may be mentioned that of Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 4 How. 591, in which the attorney-general of the United States was authorized by act of congress, 11 Stat. at Large 382, to intervene; Missouri v. Iowa, 7 How. 680, and 10 How. 1; Alabama v. Georgia, 23 How. 505; Florida v. Georgia, 17 How. 478; Pennsylvania v. Wheeling & Belmont Bridge Company, 18 How. 421. See 186 U. S. 479; s. c. 163 id. 520; 147 id. 1; 148 id. 508; 165 id. 118; 12 Pet. 167. In a pending case the state of New Jersey on bill filed obtained a preliminary injunction against the enforcement by the state of Delaware of certain laws regulating fisheries in the river Delaware, the question involved being one of boundary.

To give jurisdiction a state must be a party on the record; 9 Wheat. 904; or substantially a party; 8 Dall. 411; it must have a direct interest in the controversy; 13 How. 518. A state may bring an original action against a citizen of another state, but not against one of its own; 10 Wall. 558. A question of boundary between states is within its original jurisdiction; 7 How. 660; 17 id. 478; 28 id. 505; 15 Pet. 233; 1 Kent 823, 850.

The court has no jurisdiction over questions of a political and not judicial nature; 6 Wall. 50; a state cannot maintain a bill to enjoin the president in his official duties; 4 Wall. 475. It has no original jurisdiction over suits brought by any other political communities than states; 7 Wall. 700. An Indian tribe cannot institute original proceedings in it; 5 Pet. 1. Service on the governor and attorney-general of a state is sufficient; 8 Dall. 320. The bill should be filed by the governor on behalf of the state; 24 How. 86. When a state is a party the practice in chancery is adopted; 17 How. 478. In cases of boundary a bill and cross-bill is the appropriate mode of procedure; 7 How. 660. Leave of the court to file a bill must first be obtained; 4 Wall. 497; Phil. Pr. 21; 17 How. 478.

In consequence of the decision in the case of Chisholm v. Georgia, where it was held that assumpsit might be maintained against a state by a citizen of another state, the eleventh article of the amendments of the constitution was adopted; 3 Dall. 378.

The supreme court has power to issue writs of prohibition to the district courts as courts of admiralty; and writs of mandamus to any inferior federal courts, or to persons holding office under the authority of the United States, where a state, or an ambassador or other public minister, or a consul, or vice-consul is a party; R. S. § 688. This does not apply to bankruptcy; 3 How. 292.

The supreme court has also the power to issue writs of habeas corpus; R. S. § 751; scire facias, and all other writs not especially provided for by statute, which may be necessary for the exercise of its jurisdiction and agreeable to the principles and usages of law; R. S. § 716; and the justices have, individually, the power to grant writs of habeas corpus, of ne exeat, and of injunction; R. S. §§ 717, 719, 752.

As to whether the grant of original jurisdiction to this court precludes a grant of jurisdiction over like cases to other courts, is a mooted question, not yet fully decided. See 2 Dall. 297; 1 Cra. 187; 11 Wheat. 467. In 111 U. S. 449, the court said: "We are unable to say that it is not within the power of congress" to grant such jurisdiction to the inferior courts; and in 123 id. 32, it is said that it is competent for congress to authorize suits by a state to be brought in the inferior federal courts. See 1 Garland & Ralston, Fed. Pr. 9.

Congress cannot vest in the supreme court original jurisdiction in a case in which the constitution has clearly not given that court original jurisdiction; 1 Cra. 187. See 5 Pet. 1, 284; 12 id. 657; 6 Wheat. 264; 9 id. 738.

The appellate jurisdiction was first regulated by the act of Sept. 24, 1789, but radical changes were effected in it by the act of March 3, 1891, which created the circuit court of appeals. See infra. The appellate jurisdiction now includes:

1. (1) "The final judgment" or decree in any suit in the highest court of a state in which a decision could be had where the validity of the treaty, or statute of, or authority exercised under, the United States is in question and the decision is against their validity. (2) Where the validity of a statute of, or authority exercised under, a state is in question on the ground of being repugnant to the constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States and the decision of the state court is in favor of its validity. (3) Where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is claimed under the constitution under any treaty or statute of, or commission held or authority exercised under, the United States and the decision of the state court is against such claim. The act of March 3, 1891, expressly provides that nothing contained in it shall affect this jurisdiction of the supreme court for the review of decisions of state courts.

2. The review on appeal or writ of error of decisions of the district and circuit courts of the United States in the following cases: (1) Cases in which the jurisdiction of the court is in issue; in such cases the question of jurisdiction alone shall be certified to the supreme court for decision. (2) Final sentences and decrees in prize causes. (3) Cases of conviction of a capital crime. (See 2 Supp. 541.) (4) Cases which involve the construction or application of the constitution of the United States. (5) Cases in which the constitutionality of any law of the United States, or the validity or construction of any treaty made under its authority, is drawn in question. (6) Cases in which the constitution or law of a state is claimed to be in contravention of the constitution of the United States.

In all cases in which the decision of the circuit court of appeals is not made final there is a writ of error or appeal to the supreme court, if taken within one year, and the matter in dispute exceeds one thousand dollars.

To give the supreme court jurisdiction in cases determined by the state court, the jurisdiction must appear from the record itself in the court below and the appellate court, and the point which gives jurisdiction must have been decided or necessary to the decision; 7 How. 744; 91 U. S. 578; 96 id. 432; the question need not have been raised in the subordinate court; 99 U. S. 291; the federal question must have been controlling in the cause; 98 U. S. 140. It need not appear that the state court erred in its judgment; it is enough if a federal question was in the case, as the ground of decision, and that the decision was adverse to the party claiming under the statute, etc.; 8 Wall. 44. No writ of error lies where the decision is in favor of the right, privilege, etc.; 4 Wall. 603; nor where a case is decided on general principles of commercial law; 98 U. S. 332. An allowance of the writ by a judge of the state or supreme court must first be obtained; 9 Wall. 779.

It is no objection to this appellate jurisdiction that one party is a state and the other a citizen of that state; 6 Wheat. 264. A writ of error is the foundation of this jurisdiction; 9 Wall. 779; no appeal can be taken from the state court; 22 How. 192; it applies as well to criminal as to civil suits; 7 Wall. 821; the judgment must be final; 91 U. S. 1, 487; 94 id. 514; 93 id. 320, 108. The writ of error issues to the highest court in which a decision of the cause can be had, though it be not the highest court of the state; 9 Wall. 659; 93 U. S. 274; 94 Mass. 301; if the record remains in the inferior court, the writ of error will issue to that court instead of to the appellate court; if the first writ of error does not succeed in reaching the record, a second will issue; 91 U. S. 143. The criminal jurisdiction of the supreme court is derived from the constitution and the act of September 24, 1789, sect. 13, which gives the supreme court exclusively all such jurisdiction of suits or proceedings against ambassadors, or other public ministers, or their domestics or domestic servants, as a court of law can have consistently with the law of nations. But the act of April 30, 1790, sections 25 and 26, declares void any writ or process whereby the person of any ambassador, or other public minister, their domestics or domestic servants, may be arrested or imprisoned; R. S. § 4063.

The Circuit Court of Appeals. This court was created by act of March 3, 1891, R. S. 1 Supp. 901. Its jurisdiction is appellate merely, and includes the right of review by appeal or writ of error of final decisions in the district courts and the existing circuit courts in all cases other than those in which the same act provides an appeal or writ of error direct to the supreme court. See supra. It may also of its own motion certify to the supreme court questions or propositions of law arising in a pending case "concerning which it desires the instruction of the supreme court for its proper decision;" and the decision thereon is binding on it. The supreme court may also in its discretion issue certiorari to the circuit court of appeals to secure the review and determination of any case pending before the latter court in which its decision would be final. This power may be exercised in cases of habeas corpus; 144 U. S. 47. These two provisions were designed to secure uniformity in the final decision of questions of law in the federal courts, and to avoid the disadvantage which would otherwise result from the existence of nine coordinate courts of last resort.

Among the subjects of jurisdiction which authorize an appeal or writ of error directly to the supreme court are all cases involving the construction or application of the constitution or the question whether any statute, state or federal, is contrary to the federal constitution; 68 Fed. Rep. 726; and in such cases the circuit court of appeals has no jurisdiction; 19 U. S. App. 233. In such case an appeal or writ of error can only be taken from a final judgment on the merits, and then the defeated party may elect to take the question of jurisdiction alone to the supreme court or the whole case on the merits to the circuit court of appeals; 141 U. S. 661; but if the case has been taken to the circuit court of appeals and the only question is that of jurisdiction of the court below, it will be dismissed for want of jurisdiction; 24 U. S. App. 571.

UNITY. An agreement or coincidence of certain qualities in the title of a joint-estate or an estate in common.

In a joint-estate there must exist four unities: that of interest, that of title, and, therefore, their estates must be created by one and the same act; that of time, for their estates must be vested at one and the same period; and, lastly, the unity of possession: hence joint-tenants are seized per my et per tout, or by the half or moiety and by all: that is, each of them has an entire possession as well of every parcel as of the whole; 2 Bla. Com. 170. Coparceners must have the unities of interest, title, and possession. In tenancies in common, the unity of possession is alone required; 2 Bla. Com. 192. See ESTATE IN COMMON; ESTATE IN COPARCENARY; ESTATE OF JOINT-TENANCY; TENANT.

UNITY OF POSSESSION. This term is used to designate the possession by one person of several estates or rights. For example, a right to an estate to which an easement is attached, or the dominant estate, and to an estate which an easement incomburs, or the servient estate, in such case the easement is extinguished; 3 Mas. 173; see Cro. Jac. 121. But a distinction has been made between a thing that has its being by prescription, and one that has its being ex jure nature: in the former case unity of possession will extinguish the easement; in the latter, for example, the case of a watercourse, the unity will not extinguish it; Pothier, Contr. 166.

UNIVERSAL AGENT. One appointed to do all the acts which the principal can personally do, and which he may lawfully delegate the power to another to do. Such an agency may potentially exist; but it is difficult to conceive of its practical existence, since it puts the agent completely in the place of the principal; Story, Ag. § 21.

UNIVERSAL LEGACY. In Civil Law. A testamentary disposition by which the testator gives to one or several persons the whole of the property which he leaves at his decease. La. Civ. Code, art. 1808.

UNIVERSAL MALICE. See PARTICULAR MALICE.

UNIVERSAL PARTNERSHIP. The name of a species of partnership by which all the partners agree to put in common all their property, universorum bonorum, not only what they then have, but also what they shall acquire. Pothier, Des Contr. de Société, n. 29. See PARTNERSHIP.

UNIVERSAL REPRESENTATION. In Scotch Law. The heir universally represents his ancestor, i. e. is responsible for his debts. Originally, this responsibility extended only to the amount of the property to which he succeeded; but afterwards certain acts on the part of the heir were held sufficient to make him liable for all the debts of the ancestor. Bell, Dict. Passive Titles.

UNIVERSAL SUCCESSION. Succession implying the acquirement of the entire property, rights, and duties of a deceased person is called universal succession, as distinguished from singular succession which implies the acquirement merely of some particular object or objects. Stand. Dict.

UNIVERSITAS. A universitas or corporate body exists when a number of persons are so united that the law takes no notice of their separate existence, but recognizes them only under a common name, which is not the name of any one of them. Hunter, Rom. L. 2nd ed., 314.

UNIVERSITAS FACTI. A plurality of corporeal things of the same kind, which are regarded as a whole; e. g. a herd of cattle, a stock of goods. Burrill; 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 154, § 149.

UNIVERSITAS JURIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A quantity of things of various kinds, corporeal and incorporeal, taken together as a whole, e. g. an estate. It is used in contradistinction to universitas facti, which is a whole made up of corporeal units. Mackeld. Civ. Law § 149.

UNIVERSITAS REI (Lat.). In Civil Law. Several things not mechanically united, but which, taken together, in some legal respects are regarded as one whole. Mackeld. Civ. Law § 149.

UNIVERSITY. The name given to certain societies or corporations which are seminaries of learning where youth are sent to finish their education. Among the civilians, by this term is understood a corporation. See CHANCELLOR'S COURTS IN THE TWO UNIVERSITIES; STUDENTS.

UNJUST. That which is done against the perfect rights of another; that which is against the established law; that which is opposed to a law which is the test of right and wrong. Hein. Lec. El. § 1080.

UNJUST ENRICHMENT. The prevention of the unjust enrichment of one person at the expense of another is said to be the equitable principle which lies at the foundation of the great bulk of quasi-contracts. Ames, Lectures on Leg. Hist. 162.

UNKNOWN. When goods have been stolen from some person unknown, they may be so described in the indictment; but if the owner be really known, an indictment alleging the property to belong to some person unknown is improper. 8 C. & P. 778; 13 Pick. 174.

In an indictment, where the name of the defendant is unknown, and he refuses to disclose it, he may be described as a person whose name is to the jurors unknown, but who is personally brought before them by the keeper of the prison; 7 Ind. 37; but an indictment against him as a person to the jurors unknown, without something to ascertain whom the grand jury meant to designate, will be insufficient; R. & B. 439. The practice is to indict the defendant by a specific name, as John M. name, and if he pleads in abatement, to send in a new bill, inserting the real name, which he then discloses, by which he is bound. This course is in some states prescribed by statute; 5 La. 481.

UNLAGE (Sax.). An unjust law. Cowel.

UNLAW. In Scotch Law. A witness was formerly inadmissible who was not worth the king's unlag, i. e. the sum of £10 Scots, then the common fine for absence from court and for small delinquencies. Bell, Dict.

UNLAWFUL. That which is contrary to law.

See CONDITION; VOIP.

UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY. A disturbance of the public peace by three or more persons who meet together with an intent mutually to assist each other in the execution of some unlawful enterprise of a private nature, with force and violence.

An assembly of three or more persons:—1. With intent to commit a crime by open force. 2. With intent to carry out a common purpose, lawful or unlawful, in such a manner as to give firm and courageous persons in the neighborhood of such assembly reasonable grounds to apprehend a breach of the peace in consequence of it. Steph. Dig. Cr. Law, art. 75. If they move forward towards its execution, it is then a riot; and if they actually execute their design, it amounts to a riot; 4 Bla. Com. 140.

In England public meetings held for political purposes are not unlawful as such, but may, by their conduct when assembled, become unlawful, and will be so from the outset if held for purposes of addition. In such cases all those who use seditious words or openly applaud those who use them will be participants in the unlawful assembly, but not those who attend a meeting which they suppose to be lawful and who take no part in the unlawful conduct. Magistrates and the police may use whatever force is necessary to disperse an unlawful assembly. The degree of force to be exercised will depend on the circumstances of each case; 9 C. & P. 481.

See RIOT; ROUT; PUBLIC MEETING.

UNLAWFUL IMPRISONMENT. Unlawful deprivation of an alien's right to enter the country constitutes "unlawful imprisonment" to obtain freedom from which habeas corpus lies. 193 Fed. 228.

UNLAWFULLY. Illegally; wrongfully. 92 N. Y. 584. See 97 N. C. 463. This word is frequently used in indictments in the description of the offence; it is necessary when the crime did not exist at common law, and when a statute, in describing an offence which it creates, uses the word; 1 Mood. C. C. 589; but is unnecessary whenever the crime existed at common law and is manifestly illegal; 1 Chit. Cr. L. *241.

UNLAWFULLY DETAINING. In order to constitute the offence of "unlawfully detaining" a woman against her will it must be against the will of the woman and for the purpose of carnally knowing her. 145 Ky. 450, 140 S. W. 658.

UNLIMITED OWNER. See LIMITED OWNER.

UNLIQUIDATED DAMAGES. Such damages as are unascertained. In general, such damages cannot be set off. No interest will be allowed on unliquidated damages. See LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

UNMAILABLE MATTER. See MAILABLE.

UNMANUFACTURED TOBACCO. "Unmanufactured tobacco," as used in the Tariff Act of 1883, included sweepings of factories and warehouses used after importation in manufacturing cigarettes and stogies. 223 U. S. 501.

UNMARRIED. Its primary meaning is "never having been married;" 9 H. L. Cas. 601; 87 L. J. Ch. 576; but the term is a word of flexible meaning and it may be construed as not having a husband or wife at the time in question. 9 H. L. Cas. 601; 32 Beav. 328.

UNMARRIED AND WITHOUT ISSUE. "Unmarried and without issue" should be construed as synonymous with "without lawful issue." 3 Ky. Opin. 466.

UNOCCUPIED. A house cannot be said to be "unoccupied" though the family be absent for some time, if they left with the intention of returning. The absence must not extend beyond a reasonable time. 53 S. W. 298.

UNOCCUPIED TERRITORY. In International Law. That territory which is not in the possession of any civilized people. Maxey, Int. Law 138.

UNQUES (L. Fr.). Still; yet. This barbarous word is frequently used in pleas; as, Ne unques executor, Ne unques guardian, Ne unques accouple, and the like.

UNREASONABLE SEARCHES. See CORPORATION.

UNSEATED LAND. A phrase used in Pennsylvania to designate uncultivated land subject to taxation. A tract of land ceases to be unseated as soon as it is actually occupied with a view to permanent residence; 7 W. & S. 248; 6 Watts 382.

UNSEAWORTHY SHIP. See SEAWORTHINESS.

UNSHIPMENT. Throwing goods overboard protected in such manner that they may be recovered, may constitute unshipment. 1 Heisk. 146.

UNSOLENN WAR. That war which is not carried on by the highest power in the states between which it exists, and which lacks the formality of a declaration. Grotius, de Jure Bel. ac Pac. l. 1, c. 8, § 4. A formal declaration to the enemy is now disused, but there must be a formal public act proceeding from a competent source; with us, it must be an act of congress; 1 Kent 65. See WAR.

UNBOUND MIND, UNSOUND MEMORY. See INSANITY; PERSON OF UN SOUND MIND.

UNBOUNDNESS. See SOUNDNESS.

UNSYSTEMATIZED DELUSION. See SYSTEMATIZED DELUSION.

UNTIL. When a charter continues the incorporation of a company until a day named, until is exclusive in its meaning, unless the context show that the contrary is intended; 17 N. Y. 502; 120 Mass. 94. It is inclusive of the date; 18 N. J. Eq. 815; 70 Ga. 717; contra, 118 Mass. 502; 91 N. Y. 681; 87 Ind. 189.

UNTRUE. Prima facie inaccurate, but not necessarily wilfully false. 8 B. & S. 929. See TRUE.

UNVALUED POLICY. In Insurance Law. An unvalued policy, sometimes called an open policy, is one in which the value of the subject insured is not specified but is left to be ascertained in case of loss. 3 Richards, Law of Ins. 21. Cf. VALUED POLICY.

UNWHOLESOME FOOD. Food not fit to be eaten; food which if eaten would be injurious. See ADULTERATION; HEALTH; POLICE POWER.

UNWRITTEN LAW. See LEX NON SCRIPTA.

UPLIFTED HAND. When a man accused of a crime is arraigned, he is required to raise his hand, probably in order to identify the person who pleads. Perhaps for the same reason when a witness adopts a particular mode of taking an oath, as when he does not swear upon the gospel, but by Almighty God, he is to hold up his hand.

UPON AND ACROSS. The words "upon and across," as used in a statute relating to use of streets by railroads, are to be construed as synonymous terms when applied to a railroad company's occupation and use of a street or sidewalk with its tracks. 168 Ky. 136, 164 S. W. 329.

UPPER BENCH. The king's bench was so called during Cromwell's protectorate, when Rolle was chief-justice. 8 Bla. Com. 202.

UPSET PRICE. The price at which any subject, as lands or goods, is exposed to sale by auction, below which it is not to be sold. In a final decree in foreclosure, the decree should name an upset price large enough to cover costs and all allowances made by the court, receiver's certificates and interest, liens prior to the bonds, amounts diverted from the earnings, and all undetermined claims which will be settled before the confirmation and sale; 25 Fed. Rep. 232.

URBAN SERVITUDES. All servitudes are established either for the use of houses or for the use of lands. Those of the first kind are called urban servitudes, whether the buildings to which they are due be situated in the city or in the country. Those of the second kind are called rural servitudes.

The principal kinds of urban servitudes are the following: the right of support; that of drip; that of drain, or of preventing the drain; that of view or of lights, or of preventing the view or lights from being obstructed; that of raising buildings or walls, or of preventing them from being raised; that of passage; and that of drawing water. See 3 Toullier 441.

URBS (Lat.). A walled city. Often used for civitas. Ainsworth, Dict. It is the same as oppidum, only larger. Urbs, or urbs aurea, meant Rome. Du Cange. In the case of Rome, urbs included the suburbs. Dig. 50. 16. 2. pr. It is derived from urbum, a part of the plough by which the walls of a city are first marked out. Ainsworth, Dict.

USAGE. Uniform practice.

This term and custom are now used interchangeably, though custom seems to have been originally confined to local usages immemorially existing; Browne, Us. & Cust. 13.

A usage must be established; that is, it must be known, certain, uniform, reasonable, and not contrary to law; but it may be of very recent origin; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 251; 9 Pick. 428; 4 B. & Ald. 210; 69 Pa. 374; 80 Ill. 493; 49 N. Y. 464; 8 N. Dak. 107; 100 Ala. 355; and no usage is good which conflicts with an established principle of law; 85 Ala. 565; 159 Mass. 522. Parties who contract on a subject-matter concerning which known usages prevail incorporate such usages by implication into their agreements, if nothing is said to the contrary; 137 U. S. 30.

The usages of trade afford ground upon which a proper construction may be given to contracts. By their aid the indeterminate intention of parties and the nature and extent of their contracts arising from mere implications or presumptions, and acts of an equivocal character may be ascertained; and the meaning of words and doubtful expressions may become known; 13 Pick. 182; 5 Wheat. 328; 2 C. & P. 523; 1 N. & M'C. 519; 5 Ohio 486; 15 Ala. 123; 126 Ind. 176; 48 Fed. Rep. 921. Among commercial and business men in a locality, it need not be so ancient "that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary," nor that it should contain all the other elements of a common-law custom, as defined in the books; 3 Ind. App. 299. One seeking to avoid the effect of a notorious and uniform usage of trade must show that he was ignorant of it; 139 N. Y. 416.

A local usage must be one known to both contracting parties; 144 U. S. 476. See 75 Ala. 596; 64 Mich. 603; 65 Me. 105; 51 Wis. 224; 16 Mo. App. 383.

Modern English cases incline to extend the functions of usages, but in America the authorities vary greatly; Lawson, Us. & Cust. 25; 7 E. & B. 266; 82 Vt. 616; 10 W. N. C. (Pa.) 347.

See CUSTOM; LAWSON; BROWNE, US. & CUST.; IMMEMORIAL USAGE.

USAGE OF TRADE. A course of dealing; a mode of conducting transactions of a particular kind. 115 Mass. 585.

The custom or usage of a trade is the law of that trade, and obligatory if ancient (sufficiently old to be generally known), certain, uniform, and reasonable. Anderson; 3 Wash. 150.

USANCE. In Commercial Law. The time which, by usage or custom, is allowed in certain countries for the payment of a bill of exchange. Pothier, Contr. du Change, n. 15.

The time of one, two, or three months after the date of the bill, according to the custom of the places between which the exchanges run.

Double or treble is double or treble the usual time, and half usance is half the time. Where it is necessary to divide a month upon a half usance (which is the case when the usance is for one month or three), the division, notwithstanding the difference in the length of the months, contains fifteen days. Byles, Bills § 80, § 905.

USE. A confidence reposed in another, who was made tenant of the land, or tenant, that he would dispose of the land according to the intention of the cestui que use, or him to whose use it was granted, and suffer him to take the profits. Plowd. 352; Gilb. Uses 1; Saund. Uses 2; 2 Bla. Com. 328.

A right in one person, called the cestui que use, to take the profits of land of which another has the legal title and possession, together with the duty of defending the same and of making estates thereof according to the direction of the cestui que use.

Uses have been said to have been derived from the fidei commissum of the Roman law; but see TRUST. It was the duty of a Roman magistrate, the praetor fidei commissarius, whom Bacon terms the particular chancellor for uses, to enforce the observance of this confidence. Inst. 2. 23. 2. They were introduced into England by the ecclesiastics in the reign of Edward III., before 1377, for the purpose of avoiding the statutes of mortmain; and the clerical chancellors of that time held them to be fidei commissum, and binding in conscience. To obviate many inconveniences and difficulties which had arisen out of the doctrine and introduction of uses, the Statute of 27 Henry VIII. c. 10, commonly called the Statute of Uses, or in conveyances and pleadings, the statute for transferring uses into possession, was passed. It enacts that "when any person shall be seized of lands, etc., to the use, confidence, or trust of any other person or body politic, the person or corporation entitled to the use in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life, or years, or otherwise, shall from thenceforth stand and be seized and possessed of the land, etc., of and in the like estate as they have in the use, trust, or confidence; and that the estates of the persons so seized to the uses shall be deemed to be in him or them that have the use, in such quality, manner, form, and condition as they had before in the use." The statute thus executes the use,—that is, it conveys the possession to the use, and transfers the use to the possession, and, in this manner, making the cestui que use complete owner of the lands and tenements, as well at law as in equity; 2 Bla. Com. 338.

A modern use is an estate of right which is acquired through the operation of the statute of 27 Henry VIII. c. 10; and when it may take effect according to the rules of the common law, is called the legal estate, and when it may not be denominated a use, with a term descriptive of its modification; Cornish, Uses 35.

The common-law judges decided, in the construction of this statute, that a use could not be raised upon a use; Dy. 135 (A); and that on a feoffment to A and his heirs to the use of B and his heirs in trust for C and his heirs, the statute executed only the first use, and that the second was a mere nullity. Th. he judges also held that as the statute mentioned only such persons as were seized to the use of others, it did not extend to a terms of years, or other chattel interests, of which a term is not seized but only possessed; 2 Bla. Com. 336. Tiedm. Eq. Jur. § 268. The rigid literal construction of the statute by the courts of law again opened the doors of the chancery courts; 1 Madd. Ch. Pr. 448.

Uses and trusts are often spoken of together by the older and some modern writers, the distinction being those trusts which were of a permanent nature and required no active duty of the trustee being called uses; those in which the trustee had an active duty to perform, as, the payment of debts, raising portions, and the like, being called special or active trusts, or simply trusts; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 448.

For the creation of a use, a consideration either valuable, as, money, or good, as relationship in certain degrees, was necessary; 3 Swanst. 591; 7 Co. 40; 17 Mass. 257; 14 Johns. 210. See RESULTING USE. The property must have been in esse, and such that seisin could be given; Cro. Eliz. 401. Uses were alienable, although in many respects resembling choses in action, which were not assignable at common law; 2 Bla. Com. 381; when once raised, it might be granted or devised in fee, in tail, for life, or for years; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 456.

The effect of the statutes of uses was much restricted by the construction adopted by the courts; it practically resulted, it has been said, in the addition of these words, to the use, to every conveyance; Will. R. P. 138. The intention of the statute was to destroy the estate of the feoffee to use, and to transfer it by the very act which created it to the cestui que use, as if the seisin or estate of the feoffee, together with the use, had, uno flatu, passed from the feoffor to the cestui que use. A very full and clear account of the history and present condition of the law of uses is given in 2 Wash. R. P. 91, 156. See, as to a use upon a use, Tud. L. Cas. R. Pr. 335. Consult Spence, Eq. Jur.; Bisph. Eq. See CHARITABLE USES; TRUSTS.

It is said that the word used is not derived from the Latin usus but comes from the Latin opus; 3 L. Quart. Rev. 115.

In its untechnical sense, the word use has been variously constructed; 20 Ind. 393; 59 Me. 582; 107 Mass. 290, 324; 11 Rich. 621; thus, "to use a port" means to enter it, so as to derive advantage from its protection; 48 N. Y. 624.

In Civil Law. A right of receiving so much of the natural profits of a thing as is necessary to daily sustenance. It differs from usufruct, which is a right not only to use, but to enjoy. 1 Bro. Civ. Law 184.

See PUBLIC USE; PUBLIC UTILITY; SECONDARY USE.

USE AND MANAGE. The words "use and manage," considered in connection with the right to sell and invest the proceeds for the interest of a testator's family conferred upon her no right to consume and sell the property for her own support and maintenance alone. The only right to sell is for the purpose of reinvestment. 161 Ky. 394, 170 S. W. 950.

USE AND OCCUPATION. When a contract has been made, either by express or implied agreement, for the use of a house or other real estate, where there was no amount of rent fixed and ascertained, the landlord can recover a reasonable rent in an action of assumpsit for use and occupation; 2 Aik. 252; 4 Day 228; 18 Johns. 240, 297; 15 Mass. 270; 10 S. & R. 251. This is under the Stat. of Westm. 2. See 2 Harv. L. Rev. 377.

The action for use and occupation is founded not on a privity of estate, but on a privity of contract; Wood, L. & T. 1282; 8 S. & R. 500; therefore it will not lie where the possession is tortious; 2 N. & M'C. 156; 8 S. & R. 500; 6 Ohio 371; 149 U. S. 569; or where the party is in possession by the license of the owner; 48 Minn. 397. It will lie for the occupation of land in another state; 8 S. & R. 502.

USE BY THE PUBLIC. Streets. "Use by the public" means all the uses to which the public, including pedestrians, have a right to put them, and to which the city may reasonably expect the public, including pedestrians, to put them. 157 Ky. 648, 163 S. W. 1101.

USE OF WORD. Where Congress has not expressly declared a word to have a particular meaning, it will be presumed to have used the word in its well-understood public and judicial meaning, and cases based on a declaration made by Parliament that the word has a certain meaning are not in point in determining the intent of Congress in using the word. 216 U. S. 439.

USEFUL. That which may be put into beneficial practice. See PATENT.

USEFULNESS. Capabilities for use. The word pertains to the future as well as to the past. 11 S. W. Rep. (Tenn.) 943.

USER. The enjoyment of a thing.

USES, STATUTE OF. See TRUSTS; USE.

USHER. This word is said to be derived from hussier, and is the name of an inferior officer in some English courts of law. Archb. Pr. 25. The office of usher of the court of chancery was abolished in 1838.

USING FOR HIRE. "Using for hire" was intended to apply to cases where persons, the hirers, did not take temporary possession, but where the owners handled the wagon and team for pay. 82 S. W. 386.

USQUE AD MEDIUM FILUM VIM (Lat.). To the middle thread of the way. See AD MEDIUM FILUM; 7 Gray 23.

USUAL TERMS. A phrase in the common-law practice, which meant pleading usually, rejoining gratis, and taking short notice of trial. When a defendant obtained further time to plead, these were the terms usually imposed. Wharton.

USUCAPION, OR USUCAPTION. In Civil Law. The manner of acquiring property in things by the lapse of time required by law.

It differs from prescription, which has the same sense, and means, in addition, the manner of acquiring and losing, by the effect of time regulated by law, all sorts of rights and actions. Merlin, Report. Prescription. See PRESCRIPTION.

USUFRUCT. In Civil Law. The right of enjoying a thing the property of which is vested in another, and to draw from the same all the profit, utility, and advantage which it may produce, provided it be without altering the substance of the thing. 18 Tex. 28; 79 Cal. 6.

Perfect usufruct is of things which the usufructuary can enjoy without altering their substance, though their substance may be diminished or deteriorated naturally by time or by the use to which they are applied; as, a house, a piece of land, animals, furniture, and other movable effects.

Imperfect or quasi usufruct is of things which would be useless to the usufructuary if he did not consume and expend them or change the substance of them; as, money, grain, liquors. In this case the alteration may take place; Pothier, Tr. du Donataire, n. 194.

USUFRUCTUARY. In Civil Law. One who has the right and enjoyment of a usufruct.

Domat points out the duties of the usufructuary, which are—to make an inventory of the things subject to the usufruct, in the presence of those having an interest in them; to give security for their restitution when the usufruct shall be at an end; to take good care of the things subject to the usufruct; to pay all taxes and claims which arise while the thing is in his possession as a ground rent; and to keep the thing in repair at his own expense.

USURA MARITIMA. See FÆNUS NAUTICUM.

USURIOUS CONTRACT. See USURY.

USURPATION. The unlawful assumption of the use of property which belongs to another; an interruption or the disturbing a man in his right and possession. Toml.

According to Lord Coke, there are two kinds of usurpation: first, when a stranger, without right, presents to a church and his clerk is admitted; and, second, when a subject uses a franchise of the king without lawful authority. Co. Litt. 277 b.

In Governmental Law. The tyrannical assumption of the government by force, contrary to and in violation of the constitution of the country.

Of Office. For one to be a usurper, of an office, he must have assumed not only to exercise some of the functions of the office, but must have assumed to do so as an officer entitled to do the act in question. 131 Ky.

385, 115 S. W. 249.

USURPED POWER. In Insurance. An invasion from abroad, or an internal rebellion, where armies are drawn up against each other, when the laws are silent, and when the firing of towns becomes unavoidable. These words cannot mean the power of a common mob; 2 Marsh. Ins. 390. By an article of the printed proposals which are considered as making a part of the contract of insurance, it is provided that "no loss of damage by fire, happening by any invasion, foreign enemy, or any military or usurped power whatsoever, will be made good by this company."

USURPER. One who assumes the right of government by force, contrary to and in violation of the constitution of the country. Toull. Droit. Civ. n. 32.

One who intrudes himself into an office which is vacant, and ousts the incumbent without any color of title whatever; his acts are void in every respect; 83 Gratt. 518; 48 Me. 80.

USURY. The excess over the legal rate charged to a borrower for the use of money. Originally, the word was applied to all interest reserved for the use of money; and in the early ages taking such interest was not allowed. In the later Roman law, usury was sanctioned; and it is said that taking usury was not an offense at common law; Tyler, Usury 64; but see Ord. Usury 17.

Unless there is a law limiting the rate of interest that can be charged for money, there can be no usury; 81 Ark. 484; 91 Ga. 609; 148 Mass. 231. The enactment of a usury law cannot affect prior contracts; 76 Ga. 322; 54 Neb. 161. If a contract is usurious, no custom can legalize it; 85 Ala. 379. A note void for usury in its inception cannot be enforced by an innocent purchaser for value; 19 U. S. App. 456.

"The shifts and devices of usurers to evade the statutes against usury have taken every shape and form that the wit of man could devise, but none have been allowed to prevail. Courts have been astute in getting at the true intent of the parties and giving effect to the statute." 62 N. Y. 346.

There must be a loan in contemplation of the parties; 7 Pet. 109; 14 N. Y. 93; 6 Ind. 232; and if there be a loan, however disguised, the contract will be usurious, if it be so in other respects. Where a loan was made of depreciated bank-notes, to be repaid in sound funds, to enable the borrower to pay a debt he owed, dollar for dollar, it was considered as not being usurious; 1 Meigs 585. The bona fide sale of a note, bond, or other security at a greater discount than would amount to legal interest is not per se a loan, although the note may be indorsed by the seller and he remains responsible; 1 Ia. 30; 6 Ohio St. 19; 29 Miss. 212. But if a note, bond, or other security be made with a view to evade the laws of usury, and afterwards sold for a less amount than the interest, the transaction will be considered a loan; 15 Johns. 44; 12 S. & R. 46; 6 Ohio St. 19; and a sale of a man's own note indorsed by himself will be considered a loan. Usury cannot arise from the purchase from brokers of a note at a discount; 72 Hun 878. Nor is there usury in a transaction for the sale and repurchase of securities, where there is no loan; 122 U. S. 457. It is a general rule that a contract which in its inception is unaffected by usury can never be invalidated by any subsequent usurious transaction; 7 Pet. 109; 10 Md. 87. On the other hand, when the contract was originally usurious, and there is a substitution by a new contract, the latter will generally be considered usurious; 15 Mass. 96; but a note or other contract for the payment of money is not usurious and void for providing for the payment of more than the statutory interest after maturity; 23 Misc. Rep. 276.

There must be a contract for the return of the money at all events; for if the return of the principal with interest, or the principal only, depend upon a contingency, there can be no usury; 1 Wall. 604; but if the contingency extend only to interest, and the principal be beyond the reach of hazard, the lender will be guilty of usury if he receive interest beyond the amount allowed by law. Where the principal is put to hazard in insurances, annuities, and lottery, the parties may charge and receive greater interest than is allowed by law in common cases, and the transaction will not be usurious; 2 Pet. 537. See 18 Wall. 875.

To constitute usury, the borrower must not only be obliged to return the principal at all events, but more than lawful interest: this part of the agreement must be made with full consent and knowledge of the contracting parties; 3 B. & P. 154. The fact that the usurious interest is paid in notes of another party, instead of money, is immaterial; 98 N. C. 244; 99 Ga. 291.

When the contract is made in a foreign country, the rate of interest allowed by the laws of that country may be charged, and it will not be usurious, although greater than the amount fixed by law in this; Story, Conf. of Laws § 292. Parties may contract for interest according to the place of the contract or the place of performance; 1 Wall. 298; 64 N. C. 83. Where there is no agreement made, the law of the place of the contract governs, in the absence of any intent to evade the usury laws; 72 N. Y. 473; 82 Ind. 16. A note made, dated, and payable in New York, without intent of maker that it should be elsewhere discounted, if negotiated in another state at a rate of interest lawful there, but excessive in New York, is usurious; Rorer, Int. St. Law 112; 77 N. Y. 573. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

To constitute usury, both parties must be cognizant of the facts which make the transaction usurious; 44 Barb. 521; see 80 S. C. 61; but a mistake in law will not protect the parties; 9 Mass. 49; though a miscalculation will, it seems; 3 Cow. 770. If a contract be usurious in itself it must be taken to have been so intended; 100 N. C. 389. An agreement by a mortgagor to pay taxes on the mortgage debt is not necessarily usurious; 24 Md. 62; nor is a clause in a bill of exchange, providing attorney fees for collection; 84 Ind. 149; and so of a mortgage; 80 Ia. 181; and so of a note; 142 Ill. 589. See 80 Ga. 53. In some states the usurious excess above the lawful rate, alone, is void; 8 Phila. 84; Biaph. Eq. § 222.

A bona fide sale by one person of a bond of another, at an exorbitant rate of discount, is not illegal; 8 Stockt. 362. A sale of a note or mortgage for less than its face, with a guarantee of payment in full, is not usurious; 35 Barb. 484; nor is a contract to pay a bushel and a half of corn within a year, for the loan of a bushel; 12 Fla. 552. An agreement to pay interest on accrued interest is not invalid; 10 Allen 82; 55 N. Y. 621; but it has been held that compounding interest on a note is usurious; 76 N. C. 314; but see 46 Ill. App. 139.

Interest may be collected on coupons; 84 Neb. 181. See 36 id. 148; 5 Tex. Civ. App. 167.

The ordinary commissions allowed by the usages of trade may be charged without tainting a contract with usury; but it must plainly appear that the commissions are charged for other services, and are not merely a device to evade the law; 2 Pat. & H. 110. A bonus paid to an agent in addition to legal interest renders the loan usurious, when it enures to the benefit of the principal under the agent's contract; 153 U. S. 318. Commission may be charged by a merchant for accepting a bill; 18 Ark. 456; but a commission charged in addition to interest for advancing money is usurious; 13 Ia. Ann. 660. Where a banker discounts a bill payable in a distant place, he may charge the usual rate of exchange on that place; but if such charge be an excess of the usual rate it will be considered a device to cover usurious interest; 8 Ind. 58. See 93 U. S. 344. Where a gratuity is given to influence the making of a loan, it will be considered usurious; 7 Ohio St. 887.

The fact that an agent, authorized to lend money for lawful interest, exacts for his own benefit, and without his principal's knowledge, more than the lawful rate, does not render the loan usurious; 53 Fed. Rep. 410; 116 U. S. 96. The burden of proof is on the person pleading usury; 22 Ga. 193; 57 Ark. 251; and where the contract is valid on its face, affirmative proof must be made that the agreement was corruptly made to evade the law; 97 U. S. 18. Where parties exchange their notes for mutual accommodation, and both or either are sold at a higher than the legal rate, they are usurious; Hill & D. 65.

The common practice of reserving the interest on negotiable paper at the time of making the loan is very ancient, and is sanctioned by law; Sewell, Banking. An agreement to pay annually in advance is not usurious; 38 Neb. 148; 49 Ill. App. 564.

The offence of taking usury is not condoned by the absence of intent to violate the statute; 50 N. Y. 437; but see 20 Wisc. 407.

The one who has contracted to pay usury may set up the defence; 55 Ind. 341; 17 Kans. 353; and so may his privies; 49 N. Y. 636; 47 Ala. 302; and his legal representatives; 100 Ala. 465; and his surety; 39 Ind. 106 (but see 50 Vt. 105; 35 N. J. L. 285); or a guarantor; 20 Me. 28; but one who buys an equity of redemption cannot set up the defence against the mortgage; 24 N. J. Eq. 120; nor can a second mortgagee set up usury as a defence to a prior mortgage; 17 Kans. 353 (but see 26 Ind. 94; 59 Barb. 239).

The defence of usury must be supported by clear proof; Perl. Int. 282; 57 Ill. 158; 36 Wisc. 390; 138 N. Y. 623; which may be extrinsic to the contract; 9 Pet. 418; an express agreement for usury need not be proved; 2 Pick. 145.

Usurious interest does not render a mortgage void; 92 Ga. 675; 81 id. 276; and where a loan is originally usurious, the defence of usury applies to all renewals; and when action is brought on any renewal note, no matter how remote, all payments of interest on such usurious loan may be applied on the principal; 39 Neb. 485; 24 id. 630; 37 Minn. 441; id. 182; and a second note renewing a former one, but including an additional sum, is usurious; 101 N. C. 99. National banks may charge interest at the rate allowed by the laws of the state, territory, or district where the bank is located, and no more, except that where, by the laws of any state, a different rate is limited for banks of issue organized under state laws, they may charge such rate. When no rate is fixed by the laws of the state, territory, or district, the bank may charge a rate not exceeding seven per centum, and such interest may be taken in advance. And the purchase, discount, or sale of a bona fide bill of exchange, payable at another place than the place of such purchase, at not more than the current rate of exchange for sight drafts, in addition to the interest, shall not be considered as usurious; R. S. § 5197.

The charging a rate of interest greater than is allowed when knowingly done shall be deemed a forfeiture of the entire interest. In case the greater rate of interest has been paid, the person by whom it has been paid, or his legal representatives, may recover back, in an action in the nature of an action of debt, twice the amount of the interest thus paid, provided such action is commenced within two years from the time the usurious action occurred; R. S. § 5198.

It is now conclusively settled that the penalty declared in R. S. § 5198 is superior to and exclusive of any state penalty; 91 U. S. 29; 72 Pa. 209; 44 Ind. 296; 115 Mass. 539; contra, 57 N. Y. 100. A national bank is not justified in charging a usurious rate of interest because the statutes of the state permit usurious interest to be taken only by certain specified banks; 11 Bank. Mag. 787. See also 141 U. S. 384; 3 U. S. App. 7; 18 Sup. Ct. R. 390.

See INTEREST. 9 L. R. A. 292.

UTAH. One of the states of the United States, to which it was admitted July 4, 1896, under the act of January 16, 1896.

UTERINE (Lat. uterus). Born of the same mother.

UTERINUS (Lat.). Uterine; born of the same mother; a sister or brother from one and the same mother, but a different father, may be called a uterine sister and uterine brother. See UTERINE.

UTFANGENETHEF, UTFANG-THEF. The right of a lord to punish a thief dwelling out of his liberty, and committing theft without the same, if taken within the jurisdiction of the manor. Cowel. See INFANGENETHEF.

UTI POSSIDETIS (Lat. as you possess). A phrase used to signify that the parties to a treaty are to retain possession of what they have acquired by force during the war. Boyd's Wheat. Int. Law § 545.

A treaty which terminates a war may adopt this principle or that of the status quo ante bellum (q. v.), or a combination of the two. In default of any treaty stipulation, the former doctrine prevails. See TREATY OF PEACE.

UTILITY. See PUBLIC UTILITY PATENT.

UTRUBI. In Scotch Law. An interdiction as to movables, by which the colorable possession of a bona fide holder is continued until the final settlement of a contested right; corresponding to uti possidetis as to heritable property. Bell. Dict.

UTRUMQUE NOSTRUM (L. Lat.). Both of us.

UTTER. In Criminal Law. To offer; to publish.

To utter and publish a counterfeit note is to assert and declare, directly or indirectly, by words or actions, that the note offered is good. It is not necessary that it should be passed in order to complete the offence of uttering; 3 Binn. 888; Cl. Cr. L. 301. It seems that reading out a document, although the party refuses to show it, is a sufficient uttering; Jebb, Cr. Cas. 282. The merely showing a false instrument with intent to gain a credit, when there was no intention or attempt made to pass it, it seems, would not amount to an uttering; Russ. & R. 200. Using a forged instrument in some way, in order to get money or credit upon it, or by means of it, is sufficient to constitute an uttering; 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 475.

The word uttering, used of notes, does not necessarily import that they are transferred as genuine; it includes any delivery of a note for value (as by a sale of the notes as spurious) with the intent that they should be passed upon the public as genuine; 1 Abb. U. S. 135.

The offence is complete when a forged instrument is offered; it need not be accepted; 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 605. Recording a forged deed is uttering it; 27 Mich. 358; so is bringing suit on a forged paper; 20 Gratt. 733. The legal meaning of the word utter is in substance to offer; Bish. Cr. L. § 607.

Forged Check. To constitute the offence of "uttering a forged check," the check must be a forgery and be also put into circulation. 151 Ky. 517, 152 S. W. 574.

UTTER BARRISTER. In English Law. Those barristers who plead without the bar, and are distinguished from benchers, or those who have been readers and who are allowed to plead within the bar, as the king's council are. See BARRISTER.

UTTOL. See INTOL AND UTTOL.

UXOR (Lat.). In Civil Law. A woman lawfully married.

UXORCIDE. The killing of a wife by her husband; one who murders his wife. It is not a technical term of the law. Black, L. Dict.

V.

V. A common abbreviation of versus, in the titles of causes, and reported cases.

V. L. O. L. Violating Local Option Law. The letters were held to be sufficient when used in an indictment, instead of the words they represent. 73 S. W. 1028.

VACANCY. A place which is empty. The term is principally applied to cases where the office is not filled. As applied to an office, it has no technical meaning; 93 Cal. 153; 96 Ind. 874.

By the constitution of the United States, the president has the power to fill vacancies that may happen during the recess of the senate. See TENURE OF OFFICE; OFFICER; RESIGNATION; 1 So. L. Rev. N. S. 184.

VACANT. See OFFICER.

VACANT LANDS. See STATE LANDS.

VACANT POSSESSION. A term applied to an estate which has been abandoned by the tenant; the abandonment must be complete in order to make the possession vacant, and, therefore, if the tenant has goods on the premises it will not be so considered. 2 Chitty, Bail. 177; 2 Stra. 1064.

A dwelling-house furnished throughout, from which the owner has removed for a season, intending to return and resume possession, was held not vacant, within the meaning of a policy of insurance; 81 N. Y. 184.

VACANT SUCCESSION. An inheritance for which the heirs are unknown.

VACANTIA BONA. In Civil Law. Goods without an owner. Such goods escheat.

VACATE. To annul; to render an act void; as, to vacate an entry which has been made on a record when the court has been imposed upon by fraud or taken by surprise.

VACATION. That period of time between the end of one term and beginning of another. During vacation, rules and orders are made in such cases as are urgent, by a judge at his chambers. See TERM.

VACATION BARRISTER. See BARRISTER.
